He was well known as an author and journalist before he took up his African work. Attracted by the enterprise of commerce, he published 'Famous London Merchants' (1872), 'The Romance of Trade' (1876), 'English Merchants' Memoirs: Progress of Commerce' (1886), and 'The Story of our Colonies,' new edition (1888). He also produced an excellent life of 'Sir Philip Sidney' in the "Heroes of the Nations" Series (1891), and two volumes on 'English Newspapers' (1887), which were a great advance on the work of James Grant on 'The Newspaper Press.' To this book he contributed a good deal of his own knowledge. He was editor both of The Examiner and The Weekly Dispatch, and his dismissal from the latter and claim for a year's salary were the subject of a legal decision of considerable importance to journalists, six months' notice being settled as usual.

Mr. Fox Bourne was a writer of marked fluency and ability, with a wide knowledge of English history and letters, pleasant to work with, and always trustworthy. Untainted by the prevailing commercialism of to-day, devoted to his work, and ever ready to help others, he will be much missed by his friends and all who know the importance of the work he did so well. His modesty prevented him from taking the place in the public eye occupied by several persons of inferior talents who do not object to self-advertisement.

THE BRITISH MUSEUM READING-ROOM.

Wimbledon Park, Feb. 2, 1909.

As one of the most ancient among those persons who enjoy the privileges of admission to the Reading-Room of the British Museum, I beg the favour of your giving insertion in an early number of The Athenæum to this my protest against the tone adopted by "An Editor and Author" in his letter appearing in your issue of the 30th ult., regarding the treatment of students of the Library. Your correspondent airs his grievances under two heads.

First.—That being a reader of long standing and well known to the officials of the Reading-Room, it was an unnecessary and offensive action on the part of a responsible janitor to require "An Editor and Author" to produce his ticket of admission on a certain occasion. The reply to this complaint is that admission to the Library is only granted on the express conditions, printed on the face of the ticket, that the same "must be carefully preserved by the reader; it must be produced when asked for at the Museum, and must be returned on expiry, or when no longer required." However eminent the "Editor and Author" may be, it is clear he has no ground for pretending to be exempted from the operation of these most necessary, but simple requirements; and if he is so careless or forgetful on this point, he has only himself to blame, and has no more claim to our sympathy than one of those querulous and annoying persons who as railway or tramway passengers so frequently create scenes by refusing to show their travelling vouchers. Having due regard to the known danger of persons who are not duly authorized finding their way among the priceless treasures of the Library, it is obvious that any one custodian who allowed a person not in possession of the requisite permit to pass into the Library, would be unworthy of the post of janitor.

Second.—As to this, the most offensive of the charges made by "Editor and Author," I beg to state that although I have not the honour of being personally acquainted with the eminent Director-General of the Museum, or with any of his highly trained subordinates of the Library, I confidently and without reserve attest that the same ready courtesy and assistance to readers on the part of all ranks engaged in the control and service of the Library, which was extended to me as a reader from my first admission about the year 1858, is still manifested to readers by all of the overworked officials of whom "Editor and Author" writes so strangely. H. W. B.

THE letter of "An Editor and Author" in The Athenæum of January 30th calls attention to the existence of a real grievance, and one which the Trustees should take steps to remove. The case of "An Editor and Author" is by no means an isolated case. I have been a reader in the National Library for over forty years. During this period I have continuously used the Library, and have but once (some years ago) been asked if I had a ticket, when I replied in the affirmative. For the last two years I have been engaged almost exclusively in the MS. Department, but in December last, after leaving this department, wished to consult a work in the Printed Book Department, and proceeded to the door of entrance to the General Library. Here I was stopped by a demand to produce my ticket. Though I come to London every few weeks, I do not carry about a ticket issued forty years ago, and never previously demanded. I have never renewed my forty years' old ticket, conceiving that the regulations as to renewals were not applicable to the early tickets issued not subject to any such restriction or limitation. In short, I was refused admittance, and am never likely to visit the Library again. I am personally known to several of the Trustees, to the Principal Librarian, and to many of the senior officials; but as I am not known to the "man with buttons," my word as to being a reader is disregarded.

It is clear the official mind does not realize the true position, or grasp the fact that literary men (and I venture humbly to claim to come under this description as an author of some forty or fifty different works), and men of established position, will not submit to be treated in the childish way which officialism favours. I care not for myself, for it is rarely indeed that I need trouble the authorities in respect of any printed book; but there are many not so happily placed, and I fail to see why well-known men using the Library for the benefit of the nation and the public, which after all supplies the funds by which the work of the great institution is efficiently carried on, should not by the authorities of the British Museum be treated with that courtesy and consideration they almost invariably meet with elsewhere.

ANOTHER EDITOR AND AUTHOR.

I WAS somewhat surprised in reading, in your issue of January 30th, your correspondent's protest against the rules regarding the Reading-Room of the British Museum. "An Editor and Author" objects to being asked by the attendant to produce his ticket of admission, inasmuch as, having been a reader for thirty years, he ought to be well known. I have not any doubt of the wisdom of the rules made by the authorities, and of the necessity of these rules being from time to time amended, and enforced. I have been a reader for fifty-one years, and yet I was questioned, and asked to show my ticket, which unfortunately had, during absence in the country, gone astray. I was not perturbed. Upon giving the approximate date of my first admission as a reader, I was promptly identified, and furnished with a fresh ticket. One must make allowance for the feelings of "An Editor and Author." In my case it did not matter.

However, there is something amusing in the assumed capabilities of the attendant who ought to know. A wonderful individual must he be; his retentive powers almost beyond conception! Again, the attendant is not immortal; a man of many years' standing is succeeded by another, and the work of recognition begins afresh. The convenience of readers seems to me to be studied in every particular, and I think authors would endorse this. The Reading-Room is an immense boon, and I would say is as near perfection as such an institution can be. If there are no safeguards, what would it be? J. S. L.

M. CATULLE MENDES.

SOME ONE has happily said "Les poètes n'ont pas d'âge," and Catulle Mendès, whose accidental death was announced on Monday, preserved up to almost the last the joyousness and effervescence of youth, as witness his charming little notice in Le Journal on Sunday of 'Gavotte,' by M. Croze, with music by M. Camille Saint-Saëns, revived at the Opéra on Saturday. A man of many talents, a novelist, a storyteller, a poet and dramatist, an accomplished critic of literature, drama, and music, Catulle Mendès just fell short of greatness in most of these, just as he failed to obtain election to the Académie Française—the greatest of French literary distinctions. The last of the "Parnassiens," he survived Coppée by only a few months, but had produced a greater quantity and variety of literary work than any of his early friends and contemporaries—Albert Glatigny, Villiers de l'Isle-Adam, Coppée, Sully-Prudhomme, Heredia, and Verlaine.

Born at Bordeaux on May 22nd, 1841, he went to Paris at the age of eighteen, and immediately started writing. He founded in 1861 La Revue Fantaisiste, with Coppée, Villiers de l'Isle-Adam, and other Parnassians as contributors; and one of his own poems, 'Le Roman d'une Nuit,' procured him celebrity in the form of a 500-franc fine and a month in prison. His first volume of verse, 'Philomela,' appeared in 1864, and in the succeeding forty-five years the stream of his literary productions has never ceased; sometimes one a year and sometimes more. His first book of verse was followed in 1869 by a poem entitled 'Hespérus,' obviously and admittedly inspired by a study of Swedenborg; and this was rapidly followed by 'Contes épiques' (1870), 'Odelette guerrière,' and 'La Colère d'un Franc-tireur,' both of which appeared in l'année terrible of 1871. Before this he had turned his attention to working for the stage, and had dramatized Théophile Gautier's 'Le Capitaine Fracasse,' which, with music by Émile Pessard, was produced at the Opéra Comique. 'La Partie du Roi,' a one-act comedy in verse, was published in 1872. In the interval the Franco-German War had given him fresh material for his pen, and we have a vivid picture of the siege in 'Les 73 Journées de la Commune du 12 mars au 29 mai, 1871,' which appeared in 1871. From about 1877 he issued a long series of novels and short stories, most of which had appeared serially, and all of which indicated a vivid and almost inexhaustible wealth of imagination—though they were unfit for the reading of la jeune fille. There can hardly be any doubt that these stories did much to keep the author outside the pale of the Académie.

In addition to his numerous novels and collections of stories, he published in 1884 'La Légende du Parnasse contemporain,' a volume of literary and historical studies which will always rank high as the history of an interesting literary movement in which the author was one of the chief figures. As showing his versatility, it may also be mentioned that in 1881 he published, under the title of 'La divine Adventure,' a translation of the 'Confessions' of Cagliostro. In the eighties of the last century a number of his plays were staged. His most important piece 'Les Mères ennemies,' a drama, was produced at the Ambigu Comique in November, 1882. Others were 'Le Châtiment,' also a drama in verse (1887); 'Gwendoline,' an opera, with music by Emmanuel Chabrier (1886); 'La Femme de Tabarin,' a comédie-parade (Théâtre Libre, 1887); 'Isoline' (Renaissance, 1888); 'Fiamette' (Théâtre Libre, 1889); 'Le Docteur Blanc,' which achieved a great success at the Menus-Plaisirs; 'Les Frères d'Armes,' a drama produced at the Cluny; 'La Maison de la Vieille,' and so forth. Quite recently one of his plays was staged in Paris with success; and he was shortly to have read at the Théâtre Réjane a new play on the subject of Napoleon with the title 'L'Ile d'Elbe.'

If Mendès knocked in vain at the doors of the Académie, he at least enjoyed one official success, for in July, 1895, he was décoré, and given a banquet by his friends and admirers—Silvestre, Dierx, Coppée, and Heredia among others. From his speech on this occasion the following passage is well worth quoting:—

"D'ailleurs, l'amour des Lettres, la fervente passion de la Beauté, ne faisait pas de moi une exception dans la groupe aujourd'hui immémoriale qu'on appela tour à tour les Fantaisistes, les Impassibles, les Parnassiens; nous nous donnions l'un à l'autre l'exemple de la Foi en notre art, comme nous donnions l'un à l'autre l'exemple de la loyale, de la tendre camaraderie. Nous fûmes des poètes qui aimaient bien la poésie et qui s'aimaient bien entre eux."

Mendès married Mlle. Judith Gautier, daughter of Théophile Gautier, an accomplished woman, who has written a good deal, and survives her husband. The marriage was not a happy one.

W. R.

AN ARABIC AUTOGRAPH AT LINCOLN'S INN.

IN an old Admission Book of Lincoln's Inn is an inscription in Arabic as to which a strangely false tradition has grown up—false as to its date and as to its writer, and incorrect as to its matter. This inscription was reproduced with admirable exactness in Lane's 'Student's Guide through Lincoln's Inn'—the first edition of which appeared in 1803—and the following explanatory note was appended:—

"This [plate] contains the signatures of Charles the Second and his suite, who became members of Lincoln's Inn in 1671. Among the persons who accompanied his majesty on that day was the Turkish Ambassador, who, as is common with Mussulmans, has prefaced his signature with the usual profession of faith and invocation for mercy. These seem to be written in a Turko-Arabic dialect, which is found very difficult at the present time to understand: the letters, too, are not clearly formed. The following translation, however (which was procured from the India Office), we doubt not will be found correct:—

"Praise to the one God. The signature of the humble Alhajh Allah Mohammed, the son of Mohammed-Sahy Allah, son of Abukerâi. God be merciful to him."

This translation has been copied from Lane's 'Guide' into the margin of the Lincoln's Inn Admission Book, and so has, to this extent, received the official sanction of the Inn. Now the first thing to be said about this autograph is that it is not on the same page as the signatures of King Charles II. and his suite, as it would appear to be from Lane's reproduction. It bears no date, and there is nothing whatever to connect it with the other signatures. Lane's facsimile of the autograph was reproduced in the Appendix to the printed transcript of the 'Black Books' of Lincoln's Inn, and Mr. W. Paley Baildon, in his note on it, expresses more than a doubt as to the correctness of Lane's story. He says that there is no record of any Turkish Ambassador having been in England in 1682; and, on the authority of a passage in Luttrell's 'Diary,' suggests that the autograph was probably that of the Moorish Ambassador then accredited to the English Court.

That I may without breach of continuity say all that I have to say about this autograph, I will here for a moment interrupt myself to note that the Moorish Ambassador—or Morocco Ambassador, as he was always called—was undoubtedly admitted a member of the Royal Society about this time. The 'Journal Book' of the Society states, under the date of April 26th, 1682, that the whole time of the meeting on that day was spent in entertaining the Morocco Ambassador, and that "He was pleased to inscribe his name in the book among the Fellows of the Society in a fair character in Arabic."* For this and other information concerning the Ambassador in connexion with the Royal Society, and also for the privilege of examining his autograph in the Roll of the Society, I am indebted to the courtesy of Mr. R. W. F. Harrison, the Society's Assistant Secretary and Librarian. Prof. Arnold (Professor of Arabic in the University of London, and Librarian of the India Office) has, at my request, very kindly given a great deal of time and trouble to the study and comparison of these two inscriptions in the books of Lincoln's Inn and the Royal Society. In the first place, he tells me that they are both undoubtedly written by the same hand. This certainly identifies the writer of the autograph at Lincoln's Inn as the Morocco Ambassador, even if we had no other proofs. But we know from an old newspaper—The Loyal Protestant and True Domestic Intelligence—that the Morocco Ambassador visited Lincoln's Inn on March 4th, 1682, and wrote his name in the same book in which Charles II. and his suite had done the "Society the Honour to enter their names in heretofore."

* "May 31st, 1682. The Morocco Ambassador being admitted an honorary member of the Royal Society, and subscribing his name and titles in Arabic, I was deputed by the Council to go and compliment him."—Evelyn's 'Diary.'

Prof. Arnold entirely confirms the statement of his predecessor at the India Office as to the difficulties presented in the Ambassador's script. He says that the character of the writing in both the Lincoln's Inn and the Royal Society books gives him the impression that the Ambassador was writing with an instrument to the use of which he was not accustomed—with a goose-quill, probably, instead of his native reed-pen.

Before I go on to Prof. Arnold's translations of the two inscriptions, I must say a word or two as to the Ambassador's name. It is a matter of deep mystery. It apparently was so from the beginning. I have already quoted the earlier India Office translation as given by Lane, and that supplies us with one version of his Excellency's name. The Royal Society has an engraved portrait of the Ambassador, which is inscribed "His excellency Hamet Ben Hamet Ben Haddu, Ottoman Ambassador Extraordinary from the Emperor of Morocco to His Majesty of Great Britain in the year 1682." The editor of Evelyn's 'Diary' (William Bray) says the Ambassador's name was Hamet. Anthony Wood says that on his Excellency's portrait at Oxford the name carved on a brass plate was Hamet ben Hamet ben Haddu Ottur; but this, he adds with prompt discouragement, is false. On a separate slip of paper he has noted:—

"Mohamed son of Mohamed son of Haddu, of the province of Ohtor, of the family of Bahamvâr, of the kingdom of Sus—this is the name of the Morocco ambassador in England in 1682, as in the King's letters to the Universitie or vicechancellor for his reception."

Unfortunately, this letter from the King cannot now be found at Oxford, neither can the Ambassador's portrait. My thanks are due to Mr. A. Cowley, of the Oriental department of the Bodleian Library, for kindly searching for them.

The Ambassador visited Cambridge also; and at Trinity College "he called for a Pen and Ink," an old journal tells us, "and wrote his name, and the name of his master the Emperor with all his Titles and Dominions, in the Arabick Language, which was Interpreted by the Secretary into Spanish, which is kept in the said university amongst their Antiquities."

This seems to have been the only autograph of the Ambassador accompanied by a translation into a European language; and it would probably have been decisive as to his Excellency's name if it could have been found. Prof. E. G. Browne, Prof. A. A. Bevan, and Dr. A. W. Verrall—to all of whom I here record my thanks—have searched every place where it was at all likely to be found, and have consulted every one who was at all likely to know anything about it; but it cannot be traced.

I now come to Prof. Arnold's translation of the Lincoln's Inn autograph. It is, he tells me, as follows:—

"Praise be to God alone! Written by the servant of the wise, the pilgrim to God, Muhammad the son of Muhammad the son of Haddu, belonging to Sûs, the Bahamwâni. May God be gracious unto him! Amen."

Or, he adds, the name may be literally transcribed "Muhammed ibn Muhammed ibn Haddu, al-Sûsî, al Bahamwâni." "You will notice," he writes,

"that where my predecessor has 'the humble,' I translate 'the servant of the wise.' These words are very difficult to decipher in the Lincoln's Inn entry, but appear clearly in the Royal Society's Charter Book."

He adds his reasons for differing in other respects from the earlier India Office translation, which I need not detail here. "The inscription in the Royal Society's Charter Book," Prof. Arnold continues,

"is somewhat different. 'Praise be to God alone. This entry (?) is written by the servant of the wise, . . . Muhammad ibn Muhammad ibn Haddu al-Bahamwānī, in the year . . . one thousand and ninety three.' Two or three words of this inscription are still obscure to me, so I have had to omit them. . . . There is nothing in either of the Arabic inscriptions that at all corresponds to Ohtor or Ottor."

Though Prof. Arnold has consulted some of the ablest Arabic scholars, as well English as native-born, he has been unable to fill up the gaps in the Royal Society's inscription. A.D. 1682 is equivalent to A.H. 1093.

I should add, while I am speaking of these inscriptions, that on the same page in the Lincoln's Inn book which contains the Ambassador's autograph there follows, with some little intervening blank space, this signature in ordinary script: "Alhajh Mahamed Lacos (?) Abençerahe." It has been believed that this was an English transliteration of the Ambassador's name, written by some one at Lincoln's Inn at the time of his visit there, as some sort of key to the identity of the writer of the Arabic autograph. I am strongly inclined to think, however, that it is the signature of the Ambassador's secretary. Abençerahe or Abençerahe is the name of a well-known Moorish family that was long domiciled in Spain; and we know from the account of his Excellency's visit to Cambridge that he was accompanied by a secretary who wrote Spanish. "As to the English signature in the Lincoln's Inn book," says Prof. Arnold, meaning this autograph in the ordinary script, "I do not think that it can possibly be the same name as in the Arabic inscription."

I cannot conclude this note without recording my thanks to Prof. Arnold for all the valuable help he has given me, and the kindly willingness with which he has given it.

W. C. BOLLAND.

"MRS. SHAXSPERE" IN THE LAW COURTS.

It is well known that William Shakespeare, his family, and his friends were frequently connected with lawsuits in Stratford-on-Avon; but it has not yet been noted that his mother also appeared, in one case at least, under conditions not quite clear.

Among the Miscellaneous Documents, Stratford-on-Avon, Vol. VI., is a narrow strip of paper numbered 168. It begins:—

"Jurie between Robert Reed, plaintiff, and John Sadler, defendant, in a pley of trespas committed."

"List of Jury: Phyllyp Grene; Ralph Lourd; Valentyne Taunt, Jur.; Robert Byddell, Jur.; Rycharde Dyxon; William Wyat, Jur.; Rycharde Boyse; Hough Piggon, Jur.; Edmund Watt; Rycharde Taylor, Jur.; Nycholas James, Jur.; George Perey; Thomas Sharpe, Jur.; Humphrey Wheeler; Thomas Brydges; Jullyan Shawe, Jur.; Robert Wylson; John Knyght; William Tether-ton; Rycharde Pinck; George Mase, Jur.; Wyl-iam Slater, Jur.; George Rose, Jur.; Thomas More, Jur."

At the foot of the page, apparently unconnected with the above, is another entry: "Capiat Rycharde Jumpe at the suit of John Coocke in assumpsion for cecurrtie for iiii^{li} vi^s viii^d to paye at Stratford fair next."

Endorsed upside down, and hence on the back of the later entry, appears—

"Maria Shaxspere, Jur.
Jone Reade.
Jane Baker, Jur."

Now can it be taken that these women were also on the jury, or were they only sworn witnesses? One of these they must have been. Of the three women's names, one was apparently ruled out, Jone Reade, probably related to Robert Reed, plaintiff. The case is undated, and one gathers no clues from the calendar. I have looked up the dates of all the names mentioned in the Stratford Registers, and find that it cannot have been heard later than 1597, as Robert Bydell was buried December 28th, 1597. Of the others, Thomas Sharpe was buried August 18th, 1608, and "Marye Shaxspere, Wydowe," on September 9th: "Jane, daughter of Richard Baker, Shoemaker, 23rd Sept., 1613," though the entry might really refer to Jone, wife of Daniel Baker, who was buried May 16th, 1600.

It seems almost certain that this Maria was the wife of John Shakespeare and the mother of William. There is not another of the name in the Stratford Register; and had she been one of the Rowington Shakespeares, her place of residence would naturally have been mentioned as a distinction. It is therefore possible that the poet learnt some of his knowledge of law terms from the experience of his mother.

CHARLOTTE C. STOPES.

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

ENGLISH.

Theology.

- Beet (J. A.), The New Testament, its Authorship, Date, and Worth, 1/6 net.
Bigg (C.), The Spirit of Christ in Common Life: Addresses and Sermons, 6/ net. Selected and edited by the Dean of Christ Church, with an introduction by the Bishop of Oxford.
Brewster (E. J.), Memorials of a Past Ministry: Sermons, 3 vols., 2/6 each.
Carnegie (Rev. W. H.), Churchmanship and Character, 3/6 net. Consists of three years' teaching in Birmingham Cathedral.
Eps (F. S. and M. B. van), Rejoice Always; or, Happiness is for You.
Ford (Rev. H.), The Art of Preaching; or, The Secret of Pulpit-Power, 2/6. With preface by the Archdeacon of London. New Edition.
Irwin (Rev. C. H.), John Calvin, the Man and his Work, 2/6. With portraits and numerous other illustrations.
Lewis (F. Warburton), The Work of Christ, 2/6 net. A series of sermons. In the Methodist Pulpit Library.
Slack (S. B.), Early Christianity, 1/ net. In Religions Ancient and Modern.
Wilkins (Rev. H. J.), Faith Healing, 1/ net. A plea for greater recognition in the Church and by the medical profession.

Law.

- Oppenheimer (H.), Criminal Responsibility of Lunatics, 10/6 net.
Wade-Evans (A. W.), Welsh Medieval Law, 8/6 net. The text of the laws of Howel the Good.

Fine Art and Archaeology.

- Berks, Bucks, and Oxon Archaeological Journal, January, 1/6. Edited by the Rev. P. H. Ditchfield.
Conwentz (H.), The Care of Natural Monuments, with Special Reference to Great Britain and Germany, 2/6 net.
Coxhead (A. C.), Thomas Stothard, R.A.: his Life and Work, 8/6 net. Illustrated.
Hughes (H.) and North (H. L.), The Old Cottages of Snowdonia, 3/6 net. With numerous illustrations.
Konody (P. G.), Brockwell (M. W.), and Lippmann (F. W.), The National Gallery, Part 7, 1/ net.
Mortimer (P. J.) and Coulthurst (S. L.), The Oil and Bromoil Processes, 1/ net. No. XXXI. of the Amateur Photographer Library.
Nature Pictures: a Portfolio of Photographs from Life, 7/6 net.
Pottier (E.), Douris and the Painters of Greek Vases, 7/6 net. With 25 illustrations.

Poetry and the Drama.

- Bell (Mackenzie), Poems, 2/6 net.
Datta (Roby), Echoes from East and West, to which are added Stray Notes of Mine Own, 5/ net. Besides touching on many Indian subjects, the book ranges from Homer to Robert of Gloucester and Scandinavian mythology.
Fyvie (J.), Tragedy Queens of the Georgian Era, 12/6 net. Accounts of actresses from Mrs. Barry to Lady Becher, with 16 illustrations.
Graham-Burr, Thoughts in Solitude: The Story of the Bramble, and other Poems, 4/6 net.
Ingleby (H.), Wenceslaus and Sabra, 2/6 net. A poem.
Oliphant (W. Elwin), The Story of German Song, 3/6 net.
Shakespeare, The Tempest, 2/6 net. Edited by F. J. Furnivall in the Old Spelling Edition.
Wolfe (C.), The Burial of Sir John Moore, and other Poems, 1/ net. With a colotype facsimile of the original manuscript of 'The Burial of Sir John Moore,' and an introductory memoir by C. Litton Falkiner.

Music.

- Brahms (Johannes), 10/6 net. Deals with the Herzogenberg correspondence, edited by Max Kalbeck, translated by Hannah Bryant, with portrait.

Philosophy.

- Brackett (E. A.), The World We Live In, 2/ net. Essays on the relations between this world and the unseen.
Butler (A.), A Dictionary of Philosophical Terms, 1/ net. In the Miniature Reference Library.
Desertis (V. C.), Psychic Philosophy as the Foundation of a Religion of Natural Law, 4/6 net. With introductory note by Alfred Russel Wallace.
Eckartshausen (Karl von), The Cloud upon the Sanctuary, 3/6 net. Third Edition. Translated and annotated by Isabelle de Steiger, with an introduction by Arthur Edward Waite.
Hudson (W. H.), Herbert Spencer, 1/ net. In Philosophies Ancient and Modern.
Prichard (H. A.), Kant's Theory of Knowledge, 6/6 net. An attempt to think out the nature and tenability of Kant's Transcendental Idealism.
Reade (W. H. V.), The Moral System of Dante's Inferno, 12/6 net.
Sidis (Boris), Psychopathological Researches: Studies in Mental Dissociation, 8/6 net. With text figures and 10 plates.

Political Economy.

- Dutt (R. C.), Famines and Land Assessment in India, 3/6 net.
George (W. L.), Labour and Housing at Port Sunlight, 3/6 net. With several illustrations.
Withers (H.), The Meaning of Money, 7/6 net. The object of the author is to explain a matter of positive, practical fact, which is important, dull, and little understood, and to do so as clearly as may be.

History and Biography.

- Alford Family Notes, Ancient and Modern, compiled by Josiah George Alford, and edited by W. P. W. Phillimore.
Birrell (Augustine), Selected Essays 1884-1907, 1/ net. Includes the essays on Milton, Dr. Johnson, Gibbon, and Cowper. New Edition. In Nelson's Shilling Library.
Canning, George, and his Friends, 2 vols., 30/ net. Contains hitherto unpublished letters, &c., edited by Capt. Joceline Bagot, with illustrations.
Hitchcock (F. R. Montgomery), The Midland Septs and the Pale, 3/6. An account of the early Septs and later settlers of the King's County, and of life in the English Pale.
Inquisitions and Assessments relating to Feudal Aids, with other Analogous Documents preserved in the Public Record Office, 1284-1431: Vol. V. Stafford-Worcester.
Journal of John Mayne, 12/6 net. Deals with a tour on the Continent upon its reopening after the fall of Napoleon, 1814, edited by his grandson, John Mayne Colles, with numerous illustrations.
MacNutt (F. A.), Bartholomew De Las Casas, his Life, &c., 15/ net.
South African Who's Who, 1909, 21/ net.

Geography and Travel.

- Daniels (H. G.), Chelmsford with its Surroundings, 1/. In the Homeland Handbooks, No. 67.
Hyatt (A. H.), The Charm of Paris, 2/6 net. An anthology, in large type, fine paper edition.
Pennell (T. L.), Among the Wild Tribes of the Afghan Frontier, 16/ net. Being a record of sixteen years' close intercourse with the natives of the Indian Marshes, with an introduction by Earl Roberts, and 37 illustrations and 2 maps.

Sports and Pastimes.

- Benson (E. F.), English Figure Skating, 1/ net. A guide to the theory and practice of skating in the English style.
Hutchinson (General W. N.), Dog Breaking, 2/6 net. Popular edition.

Education.

- Eliot (C. W.), University Administration, 6/ net. A book on American universities.

Philology.

- Farmer (J. S.) and Henley (W. E.), Slang and its Analogues. Past and Present. Revised edition, Vol. I. Parts II. and III.
Gray (T.), A Concordance to the English Poems of, 10/6 net. Edited by Albert S. Cook.
Menardos (Simos), The Value of Byzantine and Modern Greek in Hellenic Studies, 1/ net.

School-Books.

- Bell's Literature Readers: Fenimore Cooper's Last of the Mohicans; Mrs. Ewing's Six to Sixteen; Mrs. Gatty's Parables from Nature; Kingsley's Water Babies; Harriet Martineau's Feats on the Fiord, 1/ each.
Johnson (A. H.), The Age of the Enlightened Despot, 1660-1789, 2/6. With 11 maps. In Six Ages of European History.
Sainte-Beuve (C. A.), Causeries du Lundi, 1/ net. Translated, with an introduction and notes, by E. J. Treshmann.
Scott's Tales of a Grandfather, 1/4. Edited, with introduction and notes, by P. Giles. In English Literature for Schools.
Senter (G.), Outlines of Physical Chemistry, 3/6.
Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice, Midsummer Night's Dream, edited by K. Harvey, 1/ net each.
Stevenson (R. L.), Kidnapped, 1/6. Edited, with introduction and notes, by J. Harold Boardman.

Science.

- Balfour (A.), Third Report of the Wellcome Research Laboratories at the Gordon Memorial College, Khartoum, 21/ net.
Bennett (Sir William), Injuries and Diseases of the Knee-joint considered from the Clinical Aspect, 5/ net. Relates the experience of one who has had somewhat extensive opportunities for becoming familiar with the subject.
Crèvecoeur (J. H. St. John), Letters from an American Farmer, 6/ net. Reprinted from the original edition of 1782, with preface by W. P. Trent, and introduction by Ludwig Lewisohn.
Finn (F.), Wild Beasts of the World, Part IX., 1/ net. With coloured illustrations by L. Sargent, C. E. Swan, and W. Austen.
Hancock (E. L.), Applied Mechanics for Engineers, 8/6 net.
Hepburn (E. B.), Artificial Waterways and Commercial Development, 4/ net.

* This seems to be the case described in the same volume of Miscellaneous Documents, VI. No. 176. Robert Reade was a surgeon. John Gibbes was dangerously wounded June 10th, 37 Eliz. John Sadler, his intimate friend and neighbour, summoned Robert Reade, and promised him 10l. if he should cure Gibbes. This sum Sadler refused to pay after the cure had been effected.

Hobart (H. M.), Heavy Electrical Engineering, 16/ net.
 Ibbetson (W. S.), The Theory and Practice of Electric Wiring, 5/ net.
 Skinner (Walter R.), The Mining Manual, 1909, 15/ net.
 Spitta (Edmund J.), Microscopy, 12/6 net. Treats of the construction, theory, and use of the microscope. Illustrated.
 Spurzheim (J. G.), Phrenology, 12/6 net.
 Stubbs (L. P.), Consider the Butterflies, How They Grow, 3/6 net. With 7 illustrations.
 Watson (F. S.) and Cunningham (J. H.), Diseases and Surgery of the Genito-Urinary System, 2 vols., 63/ net.
 Wharton (Sir W. J. L.), Hydrographical Surveying, 21/ net. A description of means and methods employed in constructing marine charts, with diagrams and illustrations. New Edition, revised and enlarged by Rear-Admiral Mostyn Field.
 Wright (H. J. and W. P.), Beautiful Flowers and How to Grow Them, Part VIII., 1/ net. With coloured illustrations.

Fiction.

Bailey (H. C.), Springtime, 7d. net. In Nelson's Library.
 Barr (Robert), Stranleigh's Millions, 6/. A series of episodes showing the wonderful uses to which the millions were put.
 Dalby (W.), Captain Vanion's Business. Tells of a scoundrel's dealings with natives under cover of philanthropy.
 Field (C.), Tales of the Caliphs, 2/6 net. In the Romance of the East Series.
 Fisk (May I.), With Powder Puff and Dagger, 6/. A series of short stories and society sketches.
 Herbert (A.), The Measure of our Youth, 6/. A story of modern life.
 Hood (A.), The Mind of the Duchess, 1/. A story of smart society.
 Hill (Haden), Links in the Chain, 6/. An "atmosphere of black mystery" is attained.
 Iddesleigh (Earl of), Ione Chaloner, 6/. A tale of Jacobite and Hanoverian intrigue.
 Morrison (A.), Green Ginger, 6/. A series of short stories.
 Murray (David Christie), His Father's Honour, 6/. With illustrations. A story of blackmail.
 Pain (Barry), The Gifted Family, 6/. Deals with the careers of three talented people. The scene is laid at a bookseller's shop in the Finchley Road.
 Perrin (Alice), Idolatry, 6/. Depicts the struggle between the World and the Spirit, as portrayed in the two central characters of the book.
 Pedmore (C. T.), The Fault, 6/. A story of passion and temptation.
 Snaith (J. C.), Araminta, 6/. A comedy of a country cousin in Mayfair.
 Tynan (Katharine), Peggy the Daughter, 6/
 Wells (H. G.), Tono-Bungay 6/. The hero's philosophy of life, founded upon his sombre experiences, is expounded towards the close.

General Literature.

Avebury (Lord), Peace and Happiness, 6/. A series of short essays dealing with happiness, the body, the mind, aspiration, &c.
 Edwards (E.), Personal Information for Young Men, 1/ net.
 Grayson (Victor) and Taylor (G. R. S.), The Problem of Parliament, 6d. net. A criticism and a remedy.
 Mulholland (J. Shaw), The Predominant Partner, his Rights and his Duties, 2/6 net. A book on the relations between Ireland and England.
 Reformers' Year-Book, 1909, 1/ net. Edited by Clifford D. Sharp. The present volume, besides containing much fresh matter, has undergone rearrangement and modification.
 Stelzle (C.), Principles of Successful Church Advertising, 5/ net.
 Stephen (Leslie), Hours in a Library, 3 vols, 3/6 net each. New Edition.
 Weale (B. L. Putnam), The Coming Struggle in Eastern Asia, 12/6 net.
 Ziegler (H.), We Germans and our British Cousins, 6d. net. A German business man's point of view.

Pamphlets.

London County Council: Indication of Houses of Historical Interest in London, Part XXIII., 1d.
 Smith (G. C. Moore), Marlowe at Cambridge. Reprinted from The Modern Language Review.
 Swinton (A. A. C.), The Occlusion of the Residual Gas and the Fluorescence of the Glass Walls of Crookes Tubes. Reprinted from the Proceedings of the Royal Society.

FOREIGN.

History and Biography.

Dutrait-Crozon (H.), Précis de l'Affaire Dreyfus, 6 fr.
 Lemoine (J.) et Lichtenberger (A.), Trois Familiers du grand Condot : l'Abbé Bourdelot, le Père Talon, le Père Tixier, 5 fr.
 Martens (F. de), Recueil des Traités et Conventions conclus par la Russie avec les Puissances étrangères : Vol. XV. Traités avec la France, 1822-1906. Supplies both Russian and French text.
 Nouaillac (J.), Villeroy, 1543-1610, 10 fr.
 Waliszewski (K.), Le Berceau d'une Dynastie : les premiers Romanov, 1613-82, 8 fr.

Fiction.

Foleij (C.) Tuteur, 3 fr. 50
 Tinseau (L. de), Sur les deux Rives, 3 fr. 50
 Waltz (Madame R.), La Vie intérieure, 3 fr. 50

* * All Books received at the Office up to Wednesday Morning will be included in this List unless previously noted. Publishers are requested to state prices when sending Books.

Literary Gossip.

'A BISHOP IN THE ROUGH,' which Messrs. Smith & Elder will publish towards the end of this month, is the record of eight adventurous years in the early life of Dr. Sheepshanks, the present Bishop of Norwich. Pioneer priest in British Columbia, missionary to gold miners and aboriginal Indians, he was also a notable traveller. The book is edited and supplemented by the Rev. D. Wallace Duthie, and has a Preface by the Bishop, and several illustrations.

MR. UNWIN will publish this spring a volume by Prof. Hugo Münsterberg of Harvard on 'Psychology and Crime.' Its object is to draw attention to the field in which psychology and law come into contact. It deals mainly with the mind of the man in the witness-box. Among the subjects discussed are: Illusions, The Memory of the Witness, The Detection of Crime, Traces of Emotions, Untrue Confessions, Suggestions in Court, Hypnotism and Crime, and The Prevention of Crime.

MESSRS. METHUEN are publishing 'The Last King of Poland and his Contemporaries,' by Mr. R. Nisbet Bain, and 'The Conflict of Religions in the Early Roman Empire,' by Mr. T. R. Glover, who attempts to treat Christian and Pagan with equal goodwill and honesty.

DR. MAHAFFY'S Boston (Lowell) lectures will presently be published by Messrs. Putnam of New York. The author has been selected by the Governing Board of Trinity College, Dublin, to represent the University at the quinqucentenary celebration to be held at Leipsic next July.

THE REV. JOHN WILLCOCK, author of the Life of the Earl of Argyll who co-operated with Monmouth, is engaged upon a 'Life of Clarendon,' in which he will utilize the extensive materials in connexion with the period which have come to light since Lister's 'Life' was published. A special feature of the work will be the treatment of Clarendon's ecclesiastical policy after the Restoration and its effect upon the history of the Church of England.

DR. J. N. FIGGIS has now concluded his Hulsean Lectures at Cambridge, which have attracted a good deal of attention. They are to be published with additions by Messrs. Longman, under the title of 'The Gospel and Human Needs.'

THE March issue of Chambers's Journal includes the third instalment of Mr. A. Stodart Walker's 'Celebrities I Have Known.' Mr. E. Bruce Low writes on 'The Threefold Victory in Roslin Glen'; Mr. E. Reynolds-Ball on 'Mogador: a Potential Winter Resort'; while one who knew Stevenson furnishes 'A Reminiscence of R. L. S.'

SINCE Lord Rosebery's address to the Old Edinburgh Club the membership has mounted to over 220. A membership of 300 is desired, and seems likely soon to be achieved.

NEXT Wednesday there is an important sale of books at Gravesend. There are some three thousand volumes of general literature; also nearly a thousand lots of scarce books dealing with Kent, Essex, and other parts of the country, chiefly the East, South-East, and North. In addition there are some rare specimens of early printing, not all of them to be found in the British Museum.

IN the March Sunday at Home Sir Oliver Lodge, Mr. William Watson, Profs. Cheyne, Dowden, and Driver, the Bishop of Truro, Mr. A. C. Benson, Sir Donald MacAlister, and others discuss the question, "Which is the most magnificent passage in the Bible?" Principal Fairbairn writes on Calvin; and Miss A. E. Keeton on 'Compton and G. F. Watts.' An article on 'The Gambling Mania among the Working Classes' is contributed by a writer who has mingled with operatives in our great cities.

THE INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF ANTIQUARIAN BOOKSELLERS seems to be making satisfactory progress. At the annual meeting, held at Anderton's Hotel on the 4th inst., a membership of 237 was reported, including many well-known booksellers on the Continent and in America. Mr. W. J. Leighton was elected President for 1909, and Mr. Frank Karslake of 35, Pond Street, Hampstead (to whom all communications respecting the Association should be addressed), was re-elected Hon. Secretary.

THE LONDON TOPOGRAPHICAL SOCIETY will hold their tenth annual meeting in the Lecture Theatre, Burlington Gardens, next Friday afternoon. Lord Rosebery, as President of the Society, will deliver an address.

THE LORD MAYOR will preside at the nineteenth Readers' Dinner, to be held at the Holborn Restaurant on Saturday, March 20th. Sir George Wyatt Truscott is the head of the well-known City printing firm.

THE AUTHORS' CLUB have arranged a banquet at the Hôtel Métropole on March 1st to celebrate the centenary of Edgar Allan Poe. Sir A. Conan Doyle will preside, and the chief guests will be the American Ambassador and Capt. Poe, the senior living representative of the poet's family. Recitations from Poe's works will be given, and an Ode for the occasion written by Mr. Herbert Trench.

THE annual meeting of the members of the Booksellers' Provident Institution will be held at Stationers' Hall on March 16th. The meeting will be followed by a Conversazione, at which the Lord Mayor has kindly promised to deliver an address.

It is proposed to erect a memorial tablet at Castle-Douglas, and another at Newton Stewart to Joseph Train, the friend of Walter Scott.

THE philologist Dr. Johann von Kelle, whose death at the age of eighty-one is announced from Prague, was Professor of German Language and Literature at the German University of that town from 1857 to 1898. He was one of the last surviving pupils of the brothers Grimm, under whom he studied at Berlin. His extensive knowledge and thoroughness are exemplified in his edition of Otfried's 'Evangelienharmonie,' which includes a translation and a glossary, and on which he worked for twenty-six years. Among his other works is a 'Geschichte der deutschen Literatur von der ältesten Zeit bis zum dreizehnten Jahrhundert.'

SCIENCE

BOOKS ON BIRDS.

The Birds of Tierra del Fuego. By Richard Crawshay. (Quaritch.)—It is eminently fitting that the work of describing the birds of what Capt. Crawshay calls this "land of mystery" should have been undertaken by a naturalist so capable of doing justice to the theme. Given the opportunity of a six months' stay in the island in the breeding season, another man with sufficient enthusiasm for exploring the forgotten by-ways of the earth might have shown the same ardour in surmounting the difficulties in the way of the collector, and might even have been fortunate enough to obtain as good results; but few indeed could have written as Capt. Crawshay has done of the scenes of his labours. As a piece of descriptive writing the twenty-seven pages of preface are as good as anything we have read for a long time. "For weaklings," he says,

"and for those who cling to luxury it is no country. To the robust, reasonably optimistic, and open-minded, I commend it in all confidence—above all, to those who would realize the Earth as God created her. In Tierra del Fuego, man is face to face with Nature and her greatest forces untamed and unrestrained, to an extent perhaps unequalled anywhere else in the world."

He is ready to endorse the judgment of Sir John Narborough, who in 1670 testified that "a man hath an excellent stomach here. I can eat Foxes and Kites as savourily as if it were Mutton. Nothing comes amiss to our stomachs." To many "the wind from the everlasting snows and glaciers, always blowing with terrific force and with cutting keenness, yet how invigorating and fragrant with forest and peat and seaweed!" might seem a sufficiently appalling accompaniment to the unutterable desolation of this storm-ridden land. Yet there are numerous favourable testimonies to it.

Capt. Crawshay enters a vehement protest against the prevailing idea that the natives are the most degraded of mankind. The Onas, at any rate, he describes as a magnificent race. These are some of his first impressions on seeing one of them:—

"A gigantic form robed in shaggy furs from head to foot—erect, motionless, silent—regarding me with a gaze so impressive and intense, that as I encountered it, my whole being experienced a shock. A man indeed!.....a frame physically and constitutionally as strong as can be, resource in any emergency, determination, courage recking nothing of cost to life or limb in the achievement of purpose, untiring patience, endurance to the end, intelligence the outcome of instinct and reason so combined as to place him on equal terms alike with man and the lower creation..... But what impresses one most of all is his magnificent dignity and reserve—so natural, as to be impossible of compromise. That stern, calm, thoughtful, deeply-lined, awfully solemn face—so full of expression of all that is greatest and best in Man, yet manifesting nothing evil—will dwell with me to my dying day."

It is not difficult to understand Capt. Crawshay's indignation when he speaks of the painful fact that this race has been, in recent times, deliberately brought to the verge of extermination.

Of the lower animals, far the most interesting and characteristic is the guanaco. This creature—a curious combination, it is explained, of camel, deer, and sheep—stands to the Onas for food, clothing, and equipment, but plentiful as it was at one time, it is now, like them, approaching extinction. The introduction of sheep-farming on a large scale has had strangely far-reaching effects on the fauna of the country, apart from any contributory causes arising from the practices of the shepherds. That these sheep should be the object of unwelcome attentions from predatory creatures, winged and otherwise, is not, of course, surprising; chief among their persecutors are the gigantic, wolf-like fox, and that sinister bird the carancho, of whose evil deeds a most unattractive picture is painted. Unwittingly enough, the sheep themselves have proved destructive of life in one direction in a remarkable manner, for the mole-like Ctenomys magellanicus, which honeycombs the open country in a wholesale and most troublesome manner, is said to be trampled out of existence by the large flocks. But it is in the case of the geese that their presence has been indirectly responsible for the greatest changes. The eating down of the brushwood by the sheep leaves a growth of fine short grass exactly to the liking of the geese. Thus we find that Chloephaga dispar, a resident in Tierra del Fuego throughout the year, has within recent times increased prodigiously; Capt. Crawshay writes that they will nest right out on dry, open ground, often within a few yards of the track. "Never," he says, "are you out of sight or hearing of geese, grazing, squatting, and ever rising and gagging, as you go your way." Almost equally numerous in the lowlands is C. rubidiceps, which begins to appear as a summer visitor early in September. "After seeing none, a pair appears mysteriously here and there, and these increase from day to day until there are countless thousands." This ruddy-headed goose, it is to be observed, has hitherto been recorded only from the Falkland Islands, and its total omission from previous lists is significant of the fact that it did not appear in anything approaching its present numbers before the sheep had prepared the way.

Of the seventy-nine different species here described, many are now recorded for the first time, and it is certainly strange that such birds as the black-necked swans, which Capt. Crawshay found in vast numbers on the lagoons of the north coast, should have escaped all mention from Darwin and other observers. It could not reasonably be expected that the present work should in any way exhaust the subject of the bird life of the island; it represents the unaided labours of a single man for a limited space of time over a wide and difficult area, and as such it is surprisingly comprehensive. It is probably an oversight that Phalacrocorax atriceps, which is abundant in the Straits of Magellan, is omitted from the list. The South Orkneys might have been included in the habitat of Sterna hirundinacea and Larus dominicanus.

Capt. Crawshay has a great liking for long extracts from other writers, and no one will quarrel with the quaint, shrewd quotations from Sir Francis Drake, Sir Richard Hawkins, and Capt. Cook; but whole pages in the original French and Spanish of D'Orbigny and Azara are hardly likely to be so generally appreciated. Again, however interesting it is to find our homely barn owl (in one of its innumerable variations) and the short-eared owl represented in Tierra del Fuego, it seems out of place to quote at length Waterton or Lord Lilford on the useful habits of these birds.

The twenty-one coloured plates are a valuable addition to the book, and are executed in Mr. Keulemans's best style. They include the fine grey eagle, a rarity on the island, which has previously been described as preying almost exclusively on migratory pigeons, but in Capt. Crawshay's experience confined its attentions to rodents, and never touched a bird. Noteworthy, too, is a picture of the puzzling Attagis malouinus, which, with many of the outward characteristics and habits of a gallinaceous bird, is nevertheless now classified among the Limicolæ. Exception may be taken to the decidedly green feet of Podiceps americanus; Capt. Crawshay himself calls them only dark grey, inclining to green, and they have been pronounced an uncompromising black by Mr. M. J. Nicoll. It is certainly a matter for regret that additional plates have not been given, particularly of some of the new specimens of which records were obtained. An index is a desideratum, but a good map is supplied, and is supplemented by a number of photographs of faithfully dreary landscape. Author, artist, and publisher alike are to be congratulated on producing this handsome book, which incidentally deals admirably with other subjects besides ornithology.

The World's Birds. By Frank Finn. (Hutchinson & Co.)—Under the comprehensive title of this small volume Mr. Finn has attempted much the same task as that which Mr. Pycraft had before him in his 'Book of Birds,' reviewed in these columns on September 19th. It is interesting to note the different lines upon which these experienced ornithologists have proceeded, and compare the advantages of each. Perhaps the happiest results would have been obtained if the two methods could have been blended. Mr. Finn, in face of the great divergence of opinion among the highest authorities regarding a systematic grouping of birds in their proper "Orders," disclaims from the first any semblance of classification of this sort. "Families" are disposed of alphabetically, with little or no attempt to show their relationship. Now "family" is an elastic term, and while one may be represented by a single species, e.g. the whale-headed stork (missing from the Index), another is so huge as to include all Passerine birds, comprising, that is to say, more than half the known species, and the great bulk of the feathered population of most countries. For Mr. Finn does not recognize its many subdivisions as having more than sub-family value, although he has dealt with the various groups by discussing typical species in some detail. Again, the juxtaposition, for instance, of ostrich and owl, except for the purposes of an index, seems unfortunate; while any kinship existing between scattered families like those of rhea, cassowary, and ostrich is necessarily lost sight of under such conditions. In fact, whatever merits this scheme of decentralization may possess, they are considerably discounted by the inevitable lack of cohesion between the separate units; and if the alphabetical arrangement is to be adhered to, an appendix becomes almost essential to a scientific study of the subject. Here the missing links might be supplied—if only tentatively—and the whole puzzle more or less pieced together on some rational basis.

Apart from these considerations, we have nothing but praise for this excellent handbook. The practical form in which the information relating to each family is given is admirable, and it is wonderful how much is contained in such a small compass. Mr. Finn is always a model of lucidity and conciseness, and the eye is greatly assisted by the fact that everything has been tabulated throughout under the various headings of size, form, plumage and coloration, young, nest, eggs, incubation, courtship, food, gait, flight, note, disposition and habits, economic qualities, captivity, distribution, and important species. Each family is introduced by a short diagnosis in plain, untechnical English.

The illustrations are fairly numerous, and are for the most part from photographs of living specimens belonging to the Zoological Society, being purposely selected from the most unfamiliar forms.

As in Mr. Douglas Dewar's former book 'Bombay Ducks' (Athen., July 28th, 1906), so in Birds of the Plains (Lane) the forty-two chapters have already appeared in various Indian newspapers, in which they must have formed a considerable attraction. For though not severely scientific, the descriptions are accurate, and, at the same time, attractively written with abundant humour. The wonder, perhaps, is how the author, who is apparently a member of the Indian Civil Service, could find time and energy to write the articles; for, as a rule, the members are worked hard, and he seems to have been employed in all three Presidencies as well as at Lahore, an experience uncommon amongst the younger men, but of advantage in collecting information for preparing a book of this sort. As there has recently been an outcry against the sparrow and his destructive ways in this country, Mr. Dewar may be quoted:—

"It is the custom to speak of the sparrow as a curse to the husbandman. The bird is popularly supposed to live on grain, fruit, seedlings, and buds—those of valuable plants by preference. There is no denying the fact that the sparrow does devour a certain amount of fruit and grain, but, so far from being a pest, I believe that the good it does by destroying noxious insects far outweighs the harm."

Ordinarily this is probably correct; but there are seasons, of which the past is one, specially favourable to nesting, the result being an abnormal increase of birds and undoubted damage to crops. The remedy, however, is not to organize yearly destruction, which might have evil results, but to let each person who is aggrieved wage war on his enemies.

Writing of the adjutant, a gigantic stork possessed of a great pouch which dangles from his bare neck, Mr. Dewar explodes a story which, if not vero, was ben trovato. In essentials it was thus. An adjutant perched in an exposed position was being bullied by many crows, who flew round him, getting nearer and nearer as their boldness increased with impunity. At last one came too close, and the great beak opened and shut with a snap. The crow was caught, and his struggles were seen as he slipped down the pouch. The rest of the crows, struck with awe, departed, and the adjutant remained at his post, placid as before. Now, alas! we are told that the bag does not communicate directly with the oesophagus.

"Knowing this, one is able to appreciate to the full the splendid mendacity of the writer to Chambers's Journal in 1861, who declares that he witnessed an adjutant swallow a crow, which he watched 'pass into the siena-toned pouch of the gaunt avenger. He who writes saw it done.'"

Curiously enough, Mr. Dewar does not mention the fact that the most certain place to find adjutants was on the top of Government House, Calcutta. There they stood like sentries, and when one went another relieved him, with great regularity. Perhaps the unrest has spread to them, and they have deserted their old post.

Most persons who have lived some years in India know the cobbler or tailor bird, so called because it sews leaves together to form its nest; but we have never seen the operation nor heard it described. Mr. G. A. Pinto, "a very keen ornithologist," had the good fortune to see the hen at work.

A suitable plant having been selected, she began operations on one of its leaves so curved that its terminal half was parallel with the ground.

"The first thing she did was to make with her sharp little beak a number of punctures along each edge of the leaf. In this particular case the punctures took the form of longitudinal slits, owing to the fact that the veins of the Dracena leaf run longitudinally. In leaves of different texture the punctures take other shapes. Having thus prepared the leaf, she disappeared for a little, and returned with a strand of cobweb. One end of this she wound round the narrow part of the leaf that separated one of the punctures from the edge; having done this, she carried the loose end of the strand across the under surface of the leaf to a puncture on the opposite side, where she attached it to the leaf and thus drew the edges a little way together."

Similarly she treated the other punctures, and the leaf assumed the shape of a section of a cone; the smaller end was filled with cotton, elaborate lining was introduced, and the little bird worked hard enough "to disqualify her for membership in any trade union."

Many other birds are described, but we must conclude with the barn owl, which every one except Bosworth Smith's German professor knows: that gentleman, on shooting one, exclaimed in triumph, "Zee, I have shot von schnipe mit einem face Push cat." So a small Scotch boy, frightened out of his wits by seeing one staring at him in the dark, ran to his parents, exclaiming that he had seen a fearful sight, and, when asked to describe it, said: "It had a body like a chicken and a head like a caat." Mr. Dewar says the face of the owl when awake is heart-shaped; "when the bird is asleep it is as long as that of a junior Madras Civil Servant as he looks over the Civil List." The volume is admirably turned out.

The Birds of the British Islands. Parts IX. and X. By Charles Stonham. (Grant Richards.)—The greater part of these two instalments deals with what we may term the vanishing aristocracy of our avifauna, and in bringing his account up to date Mr. Stonham has often shown a praiseworthy reticence, and refrained from supplying too particular details with regard to the present-day status of these victims of persecution. The doomed birds of prey have afforded Miss Medland material for some of her finest work. In the case of the harriers the plates properly bring out the differences both between the species and between the two sexes of a species—points which are often imperfectly appreciated. In certain instances mistakes in identification have been made from the fact that the hen-harrier is in the main a winter visitor, and Montagu's harrier a summer migrant, and that the one will replace the other unnoticed with the change of the season. Mr. Stonham adheres to the view that Montagu's harrier "is not, and never was, a resident species," though this statement has been challenged in the 'Birds of Hants' (Kelsall and Munn); on the other hand, his assertion that the hen-harrier "now is only met with as a breeding species...in the wilder parts of England and Wales" is sufficiently ambiguous to be misleading. We have before praised the lucidity of the letterpress, but there are a few unfortunate lapses. Thus when we read (of Montagu's harrier again) that "this species appears to be more partial than its congeners to snakes and other reptiles than to mammals," the effect is that produced by a fantastically worded riddle. To the use of "like" as a conjunction Mr. Stonham is particularly prone.

Seemingly averse from making statements on his own authority, Mr. Stonham seldom casts any new light on his subject. Even so, he appears not unfrequently to reject deliberately material of which he might have been expected to avail himself. For instance, the nesting habits of the goshawk are described in a perfunctory way, without the slightest mention of its having attempted to breed in England. The fact that a female goshawk was shot at a nest containing four fresh eggs in Grosmont, Yorkshire, in 1893 is well established; and even if it be contended that it may have been an escaped bird and that no mate was seen, the point should not have escaped mention. We note that while the white stork and the purple heron are admitted to a place in the portrait gallery, the beautiful squacco heron is excluded. In the case of the white stork it might have been stated that many specimens have been imported into this country and have afterwards obtained their liberty. Curiously out of place in this distinguished company seem the cormorant and the shag, but they are none the less interesting on that account. There is no doubt that in many localities the poaching proclivities of the cormorant have been undeservedly visited upon its smaller relative, the two species being placed on the black list without any discrimination. Mr. Stonham does something to rehabilitate the shag when he writes that it is "a strictly oceanic bird...nor does it frequent rivers and inland lakes like the cormorant."

THE HAIRY AINUS OF JAPAN.

DWARFED creatures, covered with hair, half monkeys, half men, covering for shelter beneath the burdock leaves in unapproachable forests—such were the Ainus of which I learnt at school. Ardent believers in Darwin's views of our ancestry quoted this race as affording a striking illustration of the truth of his theories, and some rumours reached our class that the small, hairy human creatures had tails.

Alas that the truth must deal a blow to these pretty fancies! I have lately seen the Ainus, have spoken with them and walked with them in the virgin forests of the land they now inhabit, and my pulses are stilled. I can testify that the portrait imagination had painted of them was a travesty.

Yet all romance and strangeness are not gone from them, and in their distant land they are living a life so different from that led in England that it may be of interest to tell of their ways and appearance. Driven from the main island of Japan by the Japanese, they now live in the northern island of Yezo, and in some outlying islands where they form small communities apart from the Japanese, for whom they feel little friendship.

The first Ainu man I saw reminded me instantly of the popular conception of an Old Testament patriarch, and I thought at once of Abraham as he must have looked before his hair grew white. The fine face of this man of sixty years included a slightly Jewish nose and deep-set eyes, and was crowned by a halo of thick hair which fell just to his shoulders, and stood out bushily all round his head. Round his brow was bound a brightly coloured handkerchief, which intensified the illusion. This type is common among the older men; and of all the Ainu men I saw, only one was ugly and unintelligent in appearance, and he was obviously the village idiot. The men are short, it is true, seldom exceeding 5 ft. 5 in. in stature; but pygmies they are not, and so thick-set and broad-shouldered that they have the appearance of great strength and manliness.

The Ainu man differs widely from the Ainu woman. This fact is all the more notable because among the Japanese the difference is often very slight, and in the eyes of a foreigner it may be impossible to recognize the sex of an individual during the first and last ten years of life. The Ainu woman looks ill-fitted to be the mate of the Ainu man, for the faces of the older ones, and many even of the girls, are rendered startling and somewhat repulsive by the curious dark-green tattoo-marks which are heavily scored on them. Many of the women are much shorter than the men, and more thick-set; indeed, some of the older ones are almost square, and have such short lower limbs that their figures are entirely lacking in grace, alike in motion and repose. Their hair is worn without ornament or dressing, very little longer than that of the men, and falls in waving locks on either side of their broad faces. The typical pattern of the tattoo-marks is one which comes in a thick curved line both above and below the lips, and continues on either side almost to the ears, where it suddenly turns upwards. At a very short distance it gives them the appearance of wearing a fierce moustache of the "es ist erreicht" type. Across the forehead run one or two bands of similar colour, either straight or waving, and going from temple to temple like the unwelcome wrinkles on Western foreheads. The transformation of expression resulting from these ornaments is so great that at first one can hardly believe that the women belong to the same race as the keen, intelligent, handsome men. Yet among the younger women who have not been tattooed the bright expression of face shows them to be fit mates for the men. Sometimes the girls are most attractive—two of those I saw were distinctly beautiful, even according to our own standards; and all of them appear quick and vivacious in comparison with the inscrutable calm and apparent stupidity of the Japanese women.

To-day the Ainus are a subject race, having been driven further and further back in Japan by the Japanese, until they hold only a part of the northern islands. In truth, they have but a precarious foothold in the land, which is now entirely under the Japanese, and is every year increasingly cultivated. They live in villages or groups apart from the Japanese, in houses of a different shape from those common in the country. Indeed, their houses are little more than straw huts, with a curiously high roof (or should one say low walls, which make the roof look out of all proportion?) with many tiers of thatching. The women ride into the Japanese villages, sitting cross-legged on the backs of mares which are followed by frisking foals. Here they sell the vegetables they bring with them in great baskets, and buy soap and thread and all such things as they cannot make themselves. This last class of article is rapidly increasing in number, for the old Ainu industries and individual products are dying out, and the arts of weaving, carving, cloth-making, and many others are becoming lost among them. The men still hunt, but bears are much fewer now than they were in the old days when the great bear feasts and festivals were originated, and warriors of valour were decorated with a crown, the ornament of which was a bear's head rudely carved in wood. Those on the coast go out to sea to fish, in boats with square-ended prows, some of which are still rudely carved. The fishing villages are places to be avoided by all but the most enthusiastic anthropologists, as the stench of the fish, which they allow to rot in some peculiar manner, is unutterable.

The people call to each other in harsh tones, in words with short syllables in which k is apparently the most frequent letter—a language very different from the soft and poetical speech of the conquering Japanese. In the names of places, p is very common, as many descriptive adjectives begin with this letter in Ainu, but often this is changed to h in Japanese; for example, the place Poronai is always spoken of, and is even written up at the railway station, as Horonai by the Japanese. Writing is an unknown art among the Ainus—not even a forgotten one, like pottery-making—and it does not seem likely that it will now be evolved by a people who are rapidly dying out of the land they have lost.

M. C. STOPES.

SOCIETIES.

GEOLOGICAL.—Jan. 27.—Prof. W. J. Sollas, President, in the chair.—The following communications were read: 'The Conway Succession,' by Miss Gertrude L. Elles, D.Sc., and 'The Depth and Succession of the Bovey Deposits,' by Mr. A. J. Jukes-Browne.

MICROSCOPICAL.—Jan. 20.—Annual Meeting.—Lord Avebury, President, in the chair.—Mr. J. E. Conrady and Mr. J. I. Pigg were appointed by the President as scrutineers of the ballot for officers and Council for the ensuing year.—A reflecting microscope, made by Amici, presented to the Society by Mr. S. R. Roget, was exhibited, and was described by Mr. Rousselet, by whom it was regarded as a very valuable donation, as the Society had not hitherto possessed an instrument of this type.—Mr. Conrad Beck exhibited and described an instrument, invented by Dr. Leslie Buchanan, consisting of two small microscopes with negative eyepieces converged at an angle, and used as a binocular instrument for the examination of the eyes of patients by oculists.—Mr. F. Watson Baker (for Messrs. W. Watson & Sons) exhibited a new form of portable microscope and a student's microscope of new design called the "Standard."—Mr. F. Plaskitt exhibited some high-power photomicrographs of Podura scales, taken to show their transverse markings, a short paper descriptive of the exhibit being read.—The Report of the Council for 1908 was read by Dr. Hebb. The Treasurer also submitted his statement of accounts and duly audited balance-sheet.—The President, in moving that the Report of the Council and the Treasurer's balance-sheet be received and adopted, said that, though their balance was only small, it was satisfactory to note that it was on the right side. The motion was carried by acclamation.—The following gentlemen were elected as officers and Council for the ensuing year: President, Sir Edwin Ray Lankester; Vice-Presidents, F. J. Cheshire, Rev. W. H. Dallinger, Sir Ford North, and E. J. Spitta; Treasurer, Wynne E. Baxter; Secretaries, R. G. Hebb and J. W. Gordon; ordinary members of Council, F. W. Watson Baker, A. N. Disney, J. W. H. Eyre, E. Heron-Allen, H. G. Plimmer, T. H. Powell, C. Price-Jones, P. E. Radley, Julius Rheinberg, C. F. Rousselet, F. Shillington Scales, and D. J. Scourfield; Librarian, P. E. Radley; Curator of Instruments, &c., C. F. Rousselet; Curator of Slides, F. S. Scales.—The President then read his annual address, entitled 'On Seeds, with Special Reference to British Plants.' In this he more particularly dealt with the seeds of Gymnosperms and Monocotyledons, in continuation of the address of the previous year, in which the seeds of Dicotyledons were considered. The following were elected:—Ordinary Fellows: F. W. Gordon, E. Heath, R. Kennedy Levett, and E. J. Sheppard.

INSTITUTION OF CIVIL ENGINEERS.—Feb. 2.—Mr. J. C. Inglis, President, in the chair.—The paper read was 'On Heat-Flow and Temperature-Distribution in the Gas-Engine,' by Prof. Bertram Hopkinson.—It was announced that 30 candidates had been admitted as Students.—The monthly ballot resulted in the election of 4 Members and 22 Associate Members.

ANTHROPOLOGICAL INSTITUTE.—Jan. 26.—Annual Meeting.—Prof. W. Ridgeway, President, in the chair.—The President delivered his anniversary address on 'The Relation of Anthropology to Classical Studies,' in which he pointed out the results that had followed from the use of the anthropological method in the study of the classics. Subjects which had long been obscure, or which had given rise to wild speculations, took upon themselves in the light of anthropology a clear meaning. For example, Aristotle's account of the origins of Greek society—an account which had long perplexed scholars—can be explained by comparing it with institutions still surviving amongst primitive peoples; but it is only of recent years that any such comparison has been made, or such an explanation given. It is, however, not only in the domain of sociology or religion that such a comparative method is of service. The art of the Greeks, for example, can be shown to have been at one time in a stage comparable to that of the modern savage, from which it has directly developed. Again, a knowledge of anthropology will be of great service to an intelligent understanding of classical literature. The attacks which have been made on classical studies, and especially on the teaching of Greek, are in great measure due to the classical scholars themselves, who by their pedantry and their indifference to scientific method have caused the reaction which has set in against these studies. But if ancient literature and history are studied in the light of anthropology, much that was obscure will be explained, much that was imagined to be erroneous will be found to be true. To help to make the classics live is the part of anthropology.

ARISTOTELIAN.—Feb. 1.—The meeting took the form of a "Symposium," to which Dr. Bernard Bosanquet, Mrs. Sophie Bryant, and Mr. G. R. T. Ross contributed papers. The subject discussed was 'The Place of Experts in Democracy.' Dr. Bosanquet dealt with Plato's criticism of democracy. The distinction between the specialist expert and the expert in statesmanship was touched upon. Next the discrepancy between Plato's caricature of democracy and modern democratic constitutions was pointed out. There is no reason against finding the analogue of what we call democracy in the spirit of Plato's perfect State. That is characterized by three important principles, viz. (1) every creature in the commonwealth is to have a right and duty that satisfies its nature; (2) the career open to the talents; (3) the equal utilization of the abilities of the two sexes in public functions. Democracy, like the Platonic State, does not forbid a highly autocratic administration by the right person, but this is not a specialist; at least he is one whose speciality is to be a "consummate artificer of freedom." Thus the conflict between the doctrinairism of the mere specialist and the ignorance of the layman is to be reconciled.

Mrs. Bryant divided the experts connected with government into three classes: (1) the rulers, (2) specialist advisers, (3) executive officials. The conflict between different classes of specialists was dealt with. Mrs. Bryant preferred to assimilate modern democracy to the type of the "mixed State" in Plato's 'Law'; yet in Plato we miss sufficient guidance as to the means by which his experts are, in the first instance, selected for special education. In the modern State selection and training are, for the most part, phases of a single process. Competition for distinction in local government paves the way for fitness to enter Parliamentary life, and within this sphere selection and education go hand in hand.

Mr. Ross criticized the assumption that the selective experience which rulers undergo must necessarily produce the best type of expert in governing. It is often held that democracy leads to the predominance of the mediocre. There are reasons, however, for rejecting this doubt, as no real democracy can survive which does not secure the service of men of exceptional talent. Democracy also requires the high development of the political intelligence of the governed. The theory that democracy means mediocrity is supported by an illusion to which artists are specially susceptible. The anti-democratic thought of Nietzsche is a case in point.

CHALLENGER.—Jan. 27.—Sir John Murray in the chair.—'Notes on the Breeding Habits and Development of Littorina littorea,' by Mr. W. M. Tattersall, were communicated by Mr. E. W. L. Holt. On changing the water in the aquarium for fresh seawater, copulation of the periwinkles was readily induced. The eggs are deposited in small capsules shaped like a Panama hat, and are not attached, which accounts for their not having been recorded hitherto. Of the four British species of Littorina, littorea is exposed only at low spring tides, and is freed as a trochophore, later becoming a veliger; obtusata is generally exposed at ordinary low water, and is freed as a veliger; rudis is exposed during the greater part of the day, and is viviparous; neriloides lives between the high water of springs and neaps, and is also viviparous. Both in habit and life-history these four seem to represent stages in the adaptation to a land existence.—In describing the 'British Oithonæ,' Mr. G. P. Farran pointed out that they are four in number and inhabit respectively waters of low salinity, ordinary coastal waters, oceanic waters bordering on the coastal area, and purely oceanic waters. Structural modifications accompany the increase in salinity of the different habitats.—A paper by Mr. S. W. Kemp dealt with the four species of 'Polychæles from the N.E. Atlantic,' and included notes on their habits and on the structure of the vestigial eye.—Mr. E. W. L. Holt exhibited a new species of Rhinochimæra, which he regarded as the adult of immature specimens known as Harriotta, a view which gave rise to some discussion.

MEETINGS NEXT WEEK.

- Mon. Royal Academy, 4.—'Preliminary—to the Sculptors of Tomorrow,' Lecture I., Prof. W. R. Colton.
— London Institution, 5.—'Leaves from an Old Venetian Diary,' Mr. T. Okey.
— Institute of British Architects, 8.—'Town and Country: some Aspects of Town Planning,' Mr. H. V. Lanchester.
— Society of Arts, 8.—'Modern Methods of Artificial Illumination,' Lecture I., Mr. Leon Gaster. (Cantor Lecture.)
Tues. Royal Institution, 3.—'The Architectural and Sculptural Antiquities of India,' Lecture III., Prof. A. A. Macdonell.
— Statistical, 5.—'Forestry in some of its Economic Aspects,' Prof. W. Somerville.
— Institution of Civil Engineers, 8.—'The Design of Marine Steam Turbines,' Mr. S. J. Reed.
— Zoological, 8.30.—'The Fauna of the Cocos-Keeling Atoll,' Mr. F. Wood-Jones; 'Contributions to the Anatomy of certain Ungulata, including Tapirus, Ilyrax, and Antilocapra,' Mr. F. E. Beddard; 'Le Rhinocéros blanc du Soudan,' Prof. Dr. E. L. Tronessart.
Wed. Meteorological, 7.30.—'Report on the Phenological Observations for 1908,' Mr. E. Mawley; 'The Cold Spell at the End of December, 1908,' Mr. W. Marriott.
— Folk-lore, 8.—'Head-hunting Tribes in the Hills of Assam,' Mr. S. R. Hodson.
— Microscopical, 8.—'On a German Silver Powell Portable Microscope made in 1850,' Mr. A. A. C. E. Merlin; 'The Red Snow Plant, Sphaerella nivalis,' Mr. G. S. West.
— Society of Arts, 8.—'The Commercial Relations of France and Great Britain,' Yves Guyot.
Thurs. Royal Institution, 3.—'Problems of Geographical Distribution in Mexico,' Lecture I., Dr. Hans Gadow.
— Royal Academy, 4.—'Preliminary—to the Sculptors of Tomorrow,' Lecture II., Prof. W. R. Colton.
— Royal, 4.30.
— Historical, 5.—'Annual Meeting: President's Address.'
— London Institution, 6.—'St. Paul's Cathedral,' Canon W. Benham.
— Linnean, 8.—'Discussion on "Alternation of Generations," opened by Dr. W. H. Lang.
— Chemical, 8.30.—'A Study of some Asymmetric Compounds,' Mr. F. S. Kipping; 'The Decomposition and Sublimation of Ammonium Nitrate under Heat,' Mr. P. C. Ray; and other Papers.
— Society of Antiquaries, 8.30.
Fri. Geological, 3.—'Annual Meeting.'
— Institution of Civil Engineers, 8.—'Standardization in Engineering Practice,' Lecture I., Dr. W. C. Unwin. (Students' Lecture.)
— Institution of Mechanical Engineers, 8.—'Annual Meeting: Discussion on "The Filtration and Purification of Water for Public Use."' — Royal Institution, 9.—'Recent Advances in means of saving Life in Coal Mines,' Sir H. Cunynghame.
Sat. Royal Institution, 3.—'Chamber Music,' Sir A. C. Mackenzie.

Science Gossip.

THE only Parliamentary Papers likely to be of interest to our readers this week are Agricultural Statistics: Vol. XLII., Part IV., Colonial and Foreign Statistics (6d.); and Further Correspondence relating to the preservation of Wild Animals in Africa (1s. 3d.).

A MEDICAL MONTHLY made its first appearance with the New Year at Calcutta. It is entitled The M. S. Journal, and is edited by Dr. S. K. Mullick, of the Medical Service. Among the contributors are Sir Alexander R. Simpson, Dr. Herschel, and Major A. R. S. Anderson.

JOHN BLACKWOOD writes:—

"In The Athenæum of Feb. 6 appears a review of 'Reminiscences, Personal, Professional, and Philanthropic,' by Dr. Blackwood, M.D. Classing Dr. Blackwood with another author, the reviewer writes: 'Both are men of delicate sensibility....whose foibles and mistakes we readily forgive, even when, as in Dr. "Blackwood's" case, the pylorus is described as a part of the intestine "which measures nine inches in length." A "mistake" this indeed for any doctor to make. Perhaps you will allow me to show how it appears in my book, p. 107:—

"The food, now converted into chyme, passes into the pylorus, which is about nine inches in length and is the medium of communication between the stomach and the intestinal canal which receives the chyme."

The author writes "pylorus" when he should have written "duodenum." The pylorus is the outlet of the stomach, and is a mere ring: the duodenum is the first part of the small intestine. Sylvestre Bonnard can hardly be called "another author."

AN informal dinner was held at the Criterion Restaurant, Piccadilly, on Monday last, at which the formation of an Illuminating Engineering Society in this country was the subject of discussion. The scheme was warmly approved, and it was agreed unanimously that The Illuminating Engineer should be appointed the official organ of the society. For further particulars application should be made to Mr. Leon Gaster, 32, Victoria Street, S.W.

THIS year being the tercentenary of the invention of the telescope, Mr. Arthur Mee of Llanishen, Cardiff (author of the annual handy guide 'The Heavens at a Glance'), has issued an interesting illustrated little 'Story of the Telescope,' in which a concise account is given of the successive improvements in the instrument, both of the refracting and reflecting kind, together with a list of the largest which are at present in use. The booklet contains also a well-selected summary of astronomical dates from the time of Copernicus, and another of important works in different departments of astronomy. It is to be obtained of the author.

No fewer than fourteen small planets are announced as having been photographically discovered at the Astrophysical Institute, Königstuhl, Heidelberg: four by Prof. Max Wolf—one on the 18th, and three on the 28th ult.; nine by Herr Kopff—three on the 18th, one on the 24th, two on the 26th, and three on the 28th; and one by Herr Lorenz on the 22nd.

SOME large spots, visible to the naked eye, have passed over the sun recently. Examination showed remarkable changes in their size and shape. The period of abundance has been unusually protracted, an epoch of minimum being due next year.

WE have received Nos. 122-45 of papers communicated from the Oxford University Observatory to the Monthly Notices of the Royal Astronomical Society and other scientific periodicals. The majority of these are by Prof. Turner himself, and several are of great interest, particularly with reference to variable stars, and the classification of those of a long period, with a suggested physical interpretation of the effects produced. Prof. Turner and Mr. Lewis contribute a paper on the inclination of binary star-orbits to the galaxy, and Mr. H. C. Plummer one on a mechanical solution of Kepler's problem.

M. FLAMMARION'S Annuaire astronomique et météorologique has appeared for 1909, and contains, as usual, not only ample information as a guide to observation during the year (including the positions of the planets, and maps of the constellations visible each month), but also an extremely interesting account of the progress of astronomy during 1908. Meteorological data are of course furnished; as well as a review of the climatic conditions, as compared with those of previous years, registered at Juvisy during 1907. Some remarkable effects of thunderstorms, which occurred on the 6th of July and the 9th of December in that year, are described.

HERR FRITZ GOOS of Bonn discusses in No. 4300 of the Astronomische Nachrichten the spectroscopic observations of α Persei in the line of sight, and arrives at the conclusion that that star is moving in a circular path with a period of about 290 days.

FINE ARTS

OUR LIBRARY TABLE.

Modern Art. By Julius Meier-Graefe. 2 vols. (Heinemann.)—Books on modern art are not rare in these days, and the reviewer usually knows their contents beforehand. He knows they will set forth in easy fashion and with tolerable correctness the views accepted in the better-informed circles, and will aim at supplying a vade-mecum wherein the reader will find all that is necessary to enable him to pass as a person of culture. All the more is it a pleasure to come for once upon an author who scorns this safe path, and refrains from adding a further coating of plausibility to other men's opinions. Among so many echoes which become every day more unreal and suspicious, here is a voice. Herr Meier-Graefe has the courage of his convictions. He has a point of view, and it leads him to judgments often refreshingly at variance with those currently accepted, and the result will be found highly stimulating by those to whom, as to himself, art really means something.

It is, indeed, to this small class of readers only that the book will be entirely satisfactory. It opens with a complaint that "the amount of talking and writing about art in our day exceeds that in all other epochs put together," which contrasts humorously with the torrent of words which follow (close on 650 closely written pages), at times garrulous, at times obscure, but always repaying the trouble it undoubtedly requires from the reader. Hardly any of this consists of the usual historic and biographical details. It is all "talking about art." With a copiousness which leaves us admiring and amazed, the author continues talking with undiminished zest till the end. Had Herr Meier-Graefe spent another year in distilling the essence of this diffuse causerie into one-third of the space, he might have produced a statement of his point of view that would have been definitive.

As it is, his artistic principles hardly find explicit statement, yet make their presence felt throughout. So, one thinks, might the great artists have written if they had not been better employed, and to catch the gist of the message calls, perhaps, for some small inside practical acquaintance with the subject. The book must be read with sympathy as well as literal understanding, being, indeed, a vindication of the sensuous side of art as the predominating element. "Art," we are told,

"is not of the feminine gender for nothing. She mocks at the intelligence of the thinker, and throws herself into the arms of the man who happens to be born handsome. The exertion necessary to overcome her is certainly of an intellectual kind, but it is remote from the icy eminences of purely personal consciousness."

Here, in fact, we have one of those apparently arbitrary statements of specifically artistic merits and demerits which are periodically necessary to counterbalance the tendency of literary criticism to be misled by plausible imitations, and the circumstance that the statement is made with a certain violence does not, perhaps, lessen its utility. We confess to a certain glee at the merciless dissection of "the portrait manufacturers," as our author terms Reynolds and his school. Summary justice was called for as a wholesome corrective to wholesale idolatry. So also the severe chapter on Turner, if open to reservations, contains a solid kernel of truth. It is refreshing to find a writer on "modern art" who pushes his record a little nearer to the present, and ventures to declare his admiration for artists hardly as yet canonized by the picture-dealer. To this courageous following-up of his principles to their logical conclusion we owe acquaintance with the charming design by Gauguin reproduced opposite p. 66, vol. ii. When, however, he extends his appreciation to Seurat's 'Le Chahut' (p. 312, vol. i.), we are compelled, while admiring his consistency, to recall his own dictum concerning certain amateurs, who "tolerate the most glaring defects—nay, even to a certain extent absolute incapacity—if some single quality is preserved which approves itself as unique." Notable also in the volumes are the due appreciation of Daumier as a painter, and the seeing of Whistler and Rodin in something like reasonable proportion.

The Life of James McNeill Whistler. By E. R. and J. Pennell. (Same publisher.)—There is in this book no criticism of Whistler's art to compare with Herr Meier-Graefe's clear-sighted chapters, indeed the position of Mr. and Mrs. Pennell as depositories of the deceased artist's confidence has had the effect of making the work rather a storehouse of anecdote than anything else. It is surprising to find how large a body there remains of Whistler legends, nor is it to be denied that they are amusing reading, and an essential part of the artist's legacy to us.

This point is duly insisted upon. There are many who profess veneration for Whistler's painting and deprecate the time he wasted in frivolous posing. Perhaps in a little while we shall be admiring his seriousness and significance as a poseur, and lamenting the frivolity of some of the painting. In this book, however, is small attempt to sift the wheat from the chaff in the painter's output, and the man's little quarrels are for the most part recounted purely from one standpoint—Whistler's own. If this were admittedly the rule, a posthumous responsibility might in some sort be awarded to Whistler; but by defending one or two victims of the artist's dislike (Mr. Leyland and Mr. McClure Hamilton are examples), the authors of the book place themselves in a somewhat ungracious position. Thus when Whistler, at the trial of a question in the technique of lithography, allowed himself spitefully to complain that "distinguished people like Mr. Pennell and myself are attacked by an unknown authority (Mr. Walter Sickert), an insignificant and irresponsible person," it was surely an ebullition which an admirer of Whistler might, in kindness to his hero, have refrained from quoting, or mentioned as a symptom of that fantastic combativeness which only the lightest and most humorous manner could render tolerable. Mr. Sickert's criticism, as a matter of fact, is excellent in literary form, while it has behind it as much study and experience as any of the copious art-criticism which latterly, and largely on his initiative, has been written by members of the artistic profession. Something of this difficulty of apparent partisanship was perhaps inherent in the work Mr. and Mrs. Pennell have undertaken; otherwise their task is capably performed.

THE WORKS OF THE LATE HENRY OSPOVAT.

THE collection of drawings by the above-named artist at the Baillie Gallery is not, we believe, a Memorial Exhibition in the ordinary sense of the word. Arrangements had been made with Henry Ospovat some time back for a representative show to be held at this date, and there seemed no reason why his untimely death at the beginning of last month should alter those arrangements. We are thus made to feel the more poignantly, by how narrow a margin we have been balked of an adequate opportunity of appreciating in his lifetime an admirable artist.

How admirable he was we have never till now had proper demonstration. A few of his less successful studies in portraiture were shown at Mr. Baillie's Baker Street Galleries a year ago, along with a number of those caricatures which were his one point of contact with the general public, but were for the most part, by their very subject, hardly worthy of his talents. He contributed nothing else to London exhibitions, and his work as an illustrator suffered much in reproduction, so that the five volumes decorated by him offer a hint only of his peculiar powers. When executing a publisher's commission Ospovat almost always strikes us as derivative—as though, working for a public which has little respect for contemporary art, he hoped to slip by unobserved as a belated artist of the sixties. The first of his books, 'Shakespeare's Sonnets,' was a weak reflection of the weakest of the English Pre-Raphaelites, not characteristic works. In 'Matthew Arnold's Poems,' 'Men and Women,' and 'Shakespeare's Songs' the sturdier inspiration of Houghton and the like is occasionally combined with something of Fantin-Latour; and in his more independent drawings Fantin, and behind Fantin, Rembrandt, are seen inspiring the artist to steadily increasing force and originality, culminating in certain weirdly imaginative designs, and eloquently sympathetic drawings of Jews which bespeak powers of the highest order.

Already among the book-illustrations fine things are scattered. We may mention the delicate feminine figure, touching in its refinement in No. 69, Two Young Fair Lovers; the rich colour-quality of No. 70, Why standest thou there, O Neckan? or the web of delicate modelling which makes up the face in No. 83, A Merry Heart goes all the Way. In some of these we see a born lithographer gradually finding his way to his natural medium. His sense of the impalpable, mysterious quality of light was too strong to make a pure line process suitable.

In none of these did Ospovat achieve the extraordinary combination of beauty and actuality shown by Houghton at his best (indeed, no one has ever equalled Houghton on his own ground). No. 107, Study for Illustration for an Eastern Tale, shows what actuality meant for Ospovat—something more brutal in which character is simplified for plastic purposes. One feels that Rodin would claim the author of this powerful drawing as a kindred spirit. Another Eastern Tale (7) shows the artist a master in that realm of mystic invention which was probably his ultimate destination. It is stamped with the highest reality, but the reality of nightmare—the same quality which forces us to recognize in an occasional work of Odilon Redon the creation of a genius. Yet we cannot esteem less highly than this the different, but equally personal drawing The Wandering Jew (32), which we do not hesitate to rank as one of the finest dramatic illustrations that have been made in this country. In this perfect union of pictorial and plastic vision, a strong gossamer of line caresses the form with a tenderness which preserves its simplicity. Rembrandt might have realized thus the infinite patience of this majestic countenance, from whose smooth curves, as of a waterworn pebble, the sufferings of centuries fall away—powerless to fret its mournful resignation. The legend is made a vehicle for forcing even the frivolous to read something of the significance of the mystic calm of the East—to see it as the ultimate smoothness taken on by a perdurable material beneath the infinite drilling of the ages. To achieve this in a tiny pen-drawing indicates a man of mark.

We must note as only a little less fine, or at least less definitive than this, the vivid sketch How long, O Lord? (45) which takes a place somewhere between the two works last mentioned and An Old Jew (34), which is more in the vein of Houghton. The Yiddish Provision Shop (40) has something of the bitter story-telling emphasis we find in the work of Mr. Sidney Sime. There are, moreover, certain examples of Ospovat's portrait painting, one of which (we should fancy the earliest) has a sober power that commands respect. A charcoal Portrait (54) is also excellent in the manner of Fantin.

It will be seen that, among much immature and some obviously affected work, we have to recognize an artist of remarkable power and distinction, who has yet died in comparative obscurity at a time when every one is lamenting the decadence of the arts and the dearth of talent. That this should be so is a rebuke alike to promoters of artistic shows and critics. One has to search among much futility for neglected talent.

Complete neglect was not Ospovat's. Besides the books he illustrated for Mr. John Lane and Mr. Dent, he did a large number of caricatures, and with these achieved latterly a certain success. The general public was interested in him on condition that he did drawings of Harry Lauder and Little Tich in their public aspects, and to do work of this kind is, of course, not to caricature life, but to caricature some one else's caricature. To set an artist of Ospovat's powers to make a commentary on such people is a little as if one should set Rembrandt to make an interpretative etching of a drawing by—say Mr. Tom Browne. Thus, while all these caricatures display considerable ability (an uncatalogued drawing of Mr. Charles Sykes is one of the wittiest), they cannot as a series claim the interest and vitality of the later work, for example, of Mr. Max Beerbohm.

The illustrations to Poe exhibited by Baron Rosenkrantz in the further gallery suffer from such formidable comparison. After looking at the work of the deceased artist one sees that the drawings here are academic rather than imaginative. Two of them (13 and 14) are disgusting—as is clearly their intention—and may be set down as to that extent successful.

ETCHINGS BY LIVING ARTISTS.

AT the gallery of Messrs. Connell & Sons a show of contemporary etchings is notable principally from the presence of some new plates by M. Eugène Bédot and the works of a new-comer, Mr. Andrew F. Affleck. Some of M. Bédot's plates are as good as ever—the Pont Mirabeau (19), the bold Petit Bras de la Seine au Pont Marie (45), or Le Pont de Sèvres, Bellevue (54). Some of them are marred, in our opinion, by his introduction of little patches of soft ground etching which give a rough texture out of harmony with the daintiness of his scale of detail. Mr. Affleck is an artist of more uncertain taste, who is sometimes vulgar, but sometimes shows undoubted power; and too easy tolerance of commonplace is perhaps more remediable than lack of vitality. The melodramatic Perugia (55) and the better St. Gervais, Paris (48)—the latter subject suggesting lithography rather than etching as a medium—are the most favourable examples of his talent. There are also good plates by Miss H. Frood (6), Mr. E. M. Synge (11 and 13), and Mr. William Walker (37).

SALE.

MESSRS. CHRISTIE sold on the 6th inst. the following. Pictures: N. Diaz, In Fontainebleau Forest, 157l. Hoppner, Mrs. Munroe, in white dress, 199l. Leighton, Head of a Girl, 115l. L. J. Pott, Game to the Last, 199l. Drawings: Constable, Langham, Essex, 52l.; The White Horse, 50l.; Stratford Lock, 89l.; A Cornfield, 60l.; Dedham Vale, 63l.; A Ruined Castle, 63l.; The Old Chain Pier, Brighton, 86l.; Hampstead Heath, 78l.; Stratford St. Mary, 54l. Birket Foster, Edinburgh, 75l.; Ballater, 77l. Turner, Lake of Lugano, 84l.

Fine-Art Gossip.

Two interesting series of lectures are announced to take place at the Albert Hall, Kensington. Mr. Roger Fry is lecturing on 'The Language of Art' on five Fridays, February 19th and 26th, March 5th, 19th, and 26th. Mr. Laurence Binyon on Wednesday afternoons, March 10th, 17th, 24th, and 31st, will deal with 'Art and Thought in East and West: Parallels and Contrasts.' Tickets for both courses, which will be illustrated with lantern-slides, may be obtained from Mr. J. Stepney, 24, Bury Street, St. James's, S.W.

JUST as we go to press we learn of the death of Mr. Charles Conder. The world of art thus loses, at the early age of forty-one, an artist with great distinction of style. Mr. Conder spent several years in Paris in the study of art, and much of his painting recalls the luxurious and decadent grace of eighteenth-century France. He became an Associate of the Société Nationale des Beaux-Arts in 1893, and his work was prominent at the New English Art Club and the International Society. He is represented in the Luxembourg, and is best known in this country as an exquisite painter of fans.

THE REV. G. S. DAVIES is publishing with Messrs. Methuen, in their "Classics of Art" Series, a volume on 'Michelangelo.' Both older and more recent authorities have been consulted, and there will be more than a hundred illustrations.

At the last meeting of the Council of the Royal Society of Painter-Etchers and Engravers Mr. H. Sheppard Dale and Miss Katharine Kimball were elected Associates.

In a new German periodical, Der Cicerone ("Halbmonatsschrift für die Interessen des Kunstforschers und Sammlers," January, Heft I.) Dr. Hermann Voss reproduces a picture to which a pathetic interest is now attached—the 'Deposition' of the Messina Gallery. We trust it may prove to be one of the "three valuable Flemish pictures" which, according to a note in this month's Burlington Magazine, have been rescued by Prof. Salinas and his staff of sappers and soldiers.

DR. Voss ascribes this fine picture to the Brussels master Colijn de Coter, to whom Dr. Friedländer has recently drawn attention. The close connexion between this work and a picture of the same subject at Stuttgart, which Dr. Voss reproduces for purposes of comparison, is striking; and though the example at Stuttgart is inferior in quality and power to the Messina 'Deposition,' there can be little doubt that both are by the same hand. Dr. Friedländer's attribution to Coter of the Stuttgart picture is therefore confirmed. Colijn de Coter, whose artistic personality is thus being gradually reconstructed, forms a connecting link between Rogier van der Weyden and Barend van Orley, and must at some period have had relations with an earlier contemporary, the Maître de Flémalle.

CONTE FRANCESCO MALAGUZZI VALERI, a well-known authority on Italian art and the author of several books and essays on this subject, is publishing an exhaustive catalogue of the Pinacoteca at Milan, which will be welcomed by art-students. The scheme of the catalogue, which deals with the contents of the Pinacoteca in groups or schools, is due to the former Director, Corrado Ricci, and the fullest details are given not only of the pictures themselves, but also of the artists, many of whom are almost unknown outside the Palazzo Brera.

THE Report recently published by the Board of Education as "Command Paper 4431" might find more readers, or, at least, more purchasers at its official price of fifteen pence, did it not cover matters so diverse as "The Victoria and Albert Museum, the Royal Colleges of Science and Art, the Geological Survey, and the Solar Physics Committee." The Report deals with 1906-7 in the case of the two Colleges, and in all other cases with 1907, and is therefore as heavily in arrear as are most official publications. We note that, although charged with the Indian Collection, South Kensington continues its purchases of objects in which it is already rich, such as Græco-Buddhist sculpture from the Punjab frontier.

MR. JOHN STABB writes:—

"In the review of my book 'Some Old Devon Churches' in your last issue, a list is given of the screens not included in that volume. This gives the idea that the book is incomplete, but I stated in the preface that I hoped to bring out a second volume dealing with another hundred churches, and I hope those you mention will be included.

"In the meantime I have a book in preparation illustrating the objects of interest in the churches which were not illustrated in 'Some Old Devon Churches.' This volume will, I hope, be ready about Easter."

EXHIBITIONS.

- SAT. (Feb. 13).—Mr. Wilfrid Ball's Water-Colours made in Hampshire, Private View, Fine-Art Society's Gallery.
— M. Pierre Bracquemond's Paintings of Interiors of Venetian Palaces and Churches, Mr. McLean's Galleries.
— The late William Callow's Water-Colours and Sketches, Private View, Leicester Galleries.
— Mr. Alfred Parsons's Pastorals, Private View, Leicester Galleries.
— Society of Art, Life, and Literature, Pictures and Drawings, Sixth Exhibition, Private View, Gallery van Brakel.
— Society of Twelve, Original Prints and Drawings, Private View, Messrs. Obach's Gallery.
— Mr. Algernon Talmage's Paintings of London, Day and Night, Goupil Gallery.
— Mr. W. Walcott's Water-Colours of London and Rome, Private View, Fine-Art Society's Gallery.
FRI. Women's International Art Club, Exhibition, Press View, Grafton Galleries.

MUSIC

OUR LIBRARY TABLE.

A History of English Cathedral Music. By John S. Bumpus. 2 vols. (Werner Laurie.)—In 1549 was published what is known as the First Prayer Book of King Edward VI., and in the following year Merbecke's work 'The Boke of Common Praier Noted,' which, as our author remarks, "supplied a deficiency sure to be felt throughout the country on the substitution of the English for the Latin rite." The present 'History' opens with a brief account of that book; of Tallis's Litany, or, as it is called, 'The Festal Litany,' also of Tallis himself; and of Christopher Tye, usually regarded as the "founder of the Post-Reformation School of Church Music." In vol. ii. the concluding chapter deals with the second half of the nineteenth century, Thomas Attwood Walmisley, S. S. Wesley, Henry Smart, John Goss, and Frederick A. Gore Ouseley being selected as typical of that period. Many other composers are mentioned, both dead and living, whose valued contributions to cathedral music could not, however, without greatly increasing the size of the book, be noticed.

Mr. Bumpus tells the story of English cathedral music in what may be called dictionary form. The headings of the chapters name the various periods in chronological order, while after brief introductory remarks the composers are separately noticed. The author throughout shows how carefully he has studied his subject; and though in the main he keeps to his text, there are many interesting details not strictly referring to it.

Bach is mentioned more than once. There is a quotation from a letter of Samuel Wesley to his mother (January 12th, 1810) in which he says:—

"Tell him [i.e. his brother Charles] that if he is minded to go to St. Paul's on Sunday next to the afternoon service, he will hear that fugue in three movements, in three flats, which he assisted me in playing the other evening, and which he was so delighted with."

The fugue in question was the one known as 'St. Anne's.' The cathedral organist at that time was Attwood. Prof. Prout has within the last few years read papers with illustrations on Bach's Church Cantatas, calling attention to the wonderful music contained in them. In connexion with this it is interesting to read that T. A. Walmisley, who was elected Professor of Music at Cambridge in 1836, in a lecture spoke of Bach's Mass in B minor as "the greatest composition in the world," and also prophesied "that the publication of the Cantatas [then in MS.] would show that his assertion of Bach's supremacy was no paradox."

Mr. Bumpus, referring to arrangements from Mozart's so-called 'Twelfth Mass,' adds in parenthesis, "or is it Eybler's?" In the second edition of Koehel's catalogue doubt is expressed as to its being genuine, but no mention is made of Eybler. Mozart's name occurs again in connexion with Byrd. The canon "Non nobis, Domine," is, as stated, "generally acknowledged to be Byrd's." It has, however, been attributed to various composers, and among them Mozart. The reason for this is not widely known. Haertel found a copy of the canon, without words, in Mozart's handwriting, and concluded it was original. It was published in Mattheson's 'Der vollkommene Capellmeister' in 1739, and it was probably from this work that Mozart copied it. In the account of Purcell mention is made of his anthem "Remember not, Lord, our offences," performed at Queen Mary's funeral, January, 1694/5; but a word might have been added about 'The Queen's Funerall March' discovered by the late Mr. Taphouse in the library of Oriel College, Oxford. Mr. W. Barclay Squire, in his article 'Purcell's Music for the Funeral of Mary II.,' published in the fourth year of the Sammelbände of the International Musical Society, states that Dr. Alan Gray called his attention to the fact that the March was taken from a passage, marked "with flatt Trumpets," in Purcell's incidental music to 'The Libertine.'

The following reference to Mendelssohn may be quoted. In 1829 he was staying with the Attwoods at Norwood, and his friend Klingemann gave a droll account of a Sunday procession there. The composer was recovering from an injury to his knee. He was in a "very diminutive four-wheeled vehicle," drawn by a plump milk-white donkey. Meeting his friends, Mendelssohn got out of his carriage, and walked with them;

"and a caravan, consisting of one lady, four young men, the vehicle with the milk-white donkey, and three dogs, moved placidly up the [Beulah] hill and into the village."

Mr. Bumpus's volumes contain many illustrations—portraits, facsimiles, &c.

Musical Gossip.

MADAME TERESA CARREÑO gave a second pianoforte recital at Bechstein Hall last Saturday afternoon. Her programme opened with Beethoven's 'Appassionata' Sonata; and if there is nothing new to say of the work itself, her rendering of it claims notice. There was no attempt to over-accentuate the impassioned music. The interpretation was broad and dignified, interesting in that it showed individuality, and superb both as regards tone and technique. Beethoven's easy and delightful Rondo in G was played with refinement and due simplicity.

SIR ALEXANDER MACKENZIE delivered the first of two lectures on Mendelssohn at the Royal Institution last Saturday afternoon. The second will be given this afternoon. Next Saturday Sir Alexander's subject will be 'Chamber Music,' with illustrations (Schumann, Brahms, and Dvorák) by the Wessely Quartet.

THE LEIGHTON HOUSE COMMITTEE has arranged a series of seven concerts on the following dates: February 16th and 23rd, March 2nd, 9th, 16th, 23rd, and 30th, beginning at 4.30. The programmes will include interesting unfamiliar works in Trio up to Nonet formation, for wind and strings. At the first will be heard Mozart's Trio for viola, clarinet, and pianoforte, and Beethoven's for flute, bassoon, and pianoforte (a posthumous work). The performers will be "The London Chamber Musicians," under the direction of Mr. Emile Gilmer.

MESSRS. DENT & Co. will shortly issue a critical edition, with explanatory notes, of 'Beethoven's Letters.' The translation has been carried out by Mr. J. S. Shedlock, who also contributes the preface; and the notes have been supplied by Dr. A. C. Kalischer. This will be the first complete English edition of Beethoven's letters, and will contain over twelve hundred letters and notes.

WE regret to hear of the death of Madame Clothilde Kleeberg, a talented pianist. Born at Paris in 1866, she studied at the Paris Conservatoire, and made her début at the early age of twelve. Her first visit to London was in 1883. In 1894 she married the sculptor Charles Samuel.

THE death is also announced, at the age of seventy-one, of James L. Molloy, who wrote a few operettas and songs, two of the most popular being 'Love's Old Sweet Song' and 'Thady O'Flynn.'

PERFORMANCES NEXT WEEK.

SUN.	Concert, 3.30, Royal Albert Hall.
—	Sunday Society Concert, 3.30, Queen's Hall.
—	Sunday League Concert, 7, Queen's Hall.
MON.—TUES.	Royal Opera, Covent Garden.
MON.	Mr. Gottfried Galston's Pianoforte Recital, 3, Bechstein Hall.
—	Royal Academy of Music, 3, Queen's Hall.
—	London Symphony Orchestra, 8, Queen's Hall.
TUES.	Miss Kate Phillips's Recital, 3, Bechstein Hall.
—	Mr. Franz Liebich's Concert, 8, Aeolian Hall.
—	Misses Meyer's Recital, 8.15, Bechstein Hall.
WED.	Miss Jenny Meid's Orchestral Concert, 8, St. James's Hall.
—	Nora Clench Quartet, 8.30, Bechstein Hall.
—	Mr. Hoskins's Vocal Recital, 8.30, Steinway Hall.
—	Mr. Donald Tovey's Concert, 8.30, Chelsea Town Hall.
—	Royal Amateur Orchestral Concert, 9, Queen's Hall.
THURS.	Philharmonic Concert, 8, Queen's Hall.
—	Broadwood Concert, 8.30, Aeolian Hall.
—	Miss Helen Mott's Cello Recital, 8.30, Bechstein Hall.
FRI.	Miss Hilda Foster's Vocal Recital, 8.30, Bechstein Hall.
SAT.	Chappell's Ballad Concert, 2.30, Queen's Hall.
—	Mozart Society, 3, Portman Rooms.
—	Messrs. W. Sachse and Ernest Lengyel's Recital, 3, Bechstein Hall.
—	Miss Fanny Davies's Pianoforte Recital, 3.15, Steinway Hall.

DRAMA

THE WEEK.

GARRICK.—Samson: a Play in Four Acts.
By Henry Bernstein.

THERE is always a suggestion of violence about M. Bernstein's stage work. He never hesitates to make use of physical force or mental torture if by such means he can increase the tension of the emotional or nervous crisis round which he has written his play. He spares us no ferocity of speech, no harshness of action, no ugliness of character, which can help him to produce an impression of overpowering strength. Ordinarily, however, there is something redeemingly human in his dramas; painful as were some of the scenes of 'La Rafale' and 'Le Voleur,' the love-interest of both pieces had its pathos and made a genuine appeal to the emotions. 'Samson' reveals its author's instinct for the theatre in its subtlest form, but so brutal is its story from first to last that it merely makes an attack on the nerves, and leaves the feelings of the audience cold. It shocks, it disturbs, it stuns, but it never creates completely an atmosphere of illusion. The playgoer gasps under the sledgehammer blows with which M. Bernstein beats out afresh the old material of 'The Ironmaster' or 'New Men and Old Acres,' but by the ruthlessness of his energy the dramatist half-defeats his purpose.

Some idea of the play may be got from its chief situation. Here we see a self-made millionaire revenging himself on his wife's lover by bringing about the aristocrat's financial ruin, though it involves his own fall and incidentally beggars thousands of innocent persons. The man of business invites his rival to lunch, and, when he has set in motion his operations on the Exchange, explains his plan and draws his guest's attention to the cries of the newsboys, who are already shouting "Panic on the Bourse," then, when the trapped lover seeks to escape, he holds him down half-strangled on the table, heaps on him abuse worthy of a bargee, and turns him out with the crowning insult of bidding him live on the earnings of a woman he has brought to shame. Does the brutality of M. Bernstein's methods need further illustration? If so, let us select two episodes from the career of the lover, Le Govain. Having persuaded a woman to pay his debts under promise of marriage, he leaves her in the lurch, robbed alike of fortune and of honour. Again, with the aim of compromising hopelessly the wife of his millionaire friend, he takes her to supper with a set of Bohemians whose conduct defies description. When details such as these are retained by the adapter, it hardly seems to matter very much that he has made the heroine's relations with Le Govain innocent, whereas the author makes them guilty; indeed, it only matters at all in so far as the lover is thus transformed from a knave into a fool.

Whatever M. Bernstein may have thought of the bowdlerizing of his drama as he watched its first London performance, he should have been pleased with the acting. Mr. Bouchier is always at his best in characters in which virility has to struggle against social awkwardness, and he suggests to the life the parvenu's desire to please, and the strong man's joy—when he is roused—in his own masterfulness. Miss Violet Vanbrugh naturally finds a difficulty in reconciling the vagaries of a heroine who through three acts of a play is in love with one man, and then invites the advances of the husband she has hitherto repelled, merely out of admiration of his will-power and capacity for self-sacrifice; still, she gives an idea of the woman's fastidious refinement, and she has one or two cries which set the nerves of her hearers quivering. Mr. Bryant puts a surprising amount of individuality into the part of the lover. Miss Edyth Latimer's sketch of Le Govain's unhappy victim is full of colour and vitality. Mr. Kenneth Douglas, if he looks a little too vigorous, strikes the right comedy note in the speeches of the heroine's degenerate brother; and Miss Marie Illington and Mr. Whitby as titled folk who require no other qualification than wealth in their son-in-law play amusingly, but perhaps err somewhat on the side of farce. The burden of the interpretation, however, falls on Mr. Bouchier's shoulders, and he carries through "Samson's" task with a dogged resolution that is in keeping with the associations of that name.

LYRIC.—The Chief of Staff: a Play in Four Acts. By Ronald MacDonald.

THE playwright who can trick out a hero in picturesque garb and enable him to figure in scenes of adventure and peril, can show him foiling conspirators and successfully defying half a dozen enemies, can secure him a good supply of rhetoric and a succession of love-scenes, is the man to please Mr. Lewis Waller's admirers and to suit the actor's style. Mr. MacDonald has done this much in 'The Chief of Staff,' and to that extent merits congratulations. Moreover, he has laid his scenes in a not too familiar atmosphere, that of a South American republic; and he has given Mr. Waller rather a novel part, that of a soldier who has the reputation of being a strong, hard man. Certainly he is ruthless with men he considers dangerous; but he is weak, deplorably weak, with women.

So far good, but we pine for more incident and less talk. All the characters are exasperatingly long-winded, the women especially, and more scenes are needed like that of the third act, in which the hero, finding himself and his sweetheart cornered by a gang of ruffians, whips out his apparently disabled arm from a sling, and shoots three men dead just as help arrives. Mr. MacDonald, however, wastes too much time on Col. Cavendish's love-affairs. True, the closing tableau of the first act furnishes a rather piquant imbroglio, for there we find the President's daughter, a cool, watchful girl, saving her young stepmother from the results of a flirtation with the chief of staff by throwing herself into his arms, and so confronting her angry father. From the engagement thus begun and the relations of the lovers there might have resulted complications inconsistent with the conventions of romance. But not unwisely, the author lets the old flirtation languish, turns the affections of the wife into legitimate channels, and offers us the prospect of a more innocent courtship for the colonel.

Mr. Waller makes love gallantly, and looks handsome in his uniform, but he has to play too long a waiting game. More chances fall to Miss Evelyn D'Alroy, who produces with her charming, low-toned voice an effect of singular sincerity, and shows a pretty sense of humour in the heroine's share of the love-scenes. Miss Auriol Lee, suggests happily a languorous, warm-blooded woman of the South; and the author is well served by Mr. Haviland, Mr. George, and Mr. Shiel Barry.

Dramatic Gossip.

WITHIN a fortnight of his brother's death the less famous of the Coquelins, Coquelin cadet, has followed Coquelin aîné to the grave. He was removed some months ago to a private asylum at Suresnes, and it was hoped that rest might bring about complete mental recovery. For some days he was kept in ignorance of his brother's death, but towards the end of last week the news was broken to him with all possible care. At once he seemed to lose the desire to live, and he died suddenly on Monday morning at the age of sixty-one. He only retired from the Comédie Française in the autumn of 1907, and hopes were entertained of his return to the stage.

LIKE his elder brother, Ernest Coquelin was intended for his father's bakery business, but he insisted on adopting Constant's profession. After a rather prolonged course at the Conservatoire he made his début at the Odéon in 1867, and a year later appeared at the Comédie Française. He gained a considerable reputation as a comedian, though his art was never comparable with that of Coquelin aîné. Perhaps his best-known part was Frederic in 'L'Ami Fritz,' but he often played "seconds" to his elder brother. He had a special talent for the rendering of monologues, and he has left several books to his name. During the Franco-German War he served at the front, and won a medal for gallantry.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—S. M. M.—J. H. R.—R. S.—N. M.—E. A. W. B.—A. B.—F. W. R.—Received.

J. B.—Not possible.
No notice can be taken of anonymous communications.
We do not undertake to give the value of books, china, pictures, &c.

We cannot undertake to reply to inquiries concerning the appearance of reviews of books.

INDEX TO ADVERTISERS.

	PAGE
AUTHORS' AGENTS	182
BATSFORD	183
BELL & SONS	208
CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS	183
CATALOGUES	182
CHAPMAN & HALL	212
CONSTABLE & Co.	186
CULLEY	188
DUCKWORTH & Co.	185
EDUCATIONAL	181
ENO'S FRUIT SALT	211
EXHIBITIONS	181
HEINEMANN	186
LIBRACO LTD.	186
LONDON LIBRARY	211
LONGMANS & Co.	188
LOW & Co.	208
MACMILLAN & Co.	188
MAGAZINES, &c.	182
MISCELLANEOUS	181
NOTES AND QUERIES	210
NUTT	184
PITMAN & SONS	187
PRINTERS	182
PROVIDENT INSTITUTIONS	181
SALES BY AUCTION	182
SEELEY & Co.	186
SITUATIONS VACANT	181
SITUATIONS WANTED	181
SMITH, ELDER & Co.	209
SOCIETIES	181
TYPE-WRITERS, &c.	181

MESSRS. BELL'S BOOKS.

JUST PUBLISHED, crown 8vo, 6s. net.

HISTORY OF THE LATIN AND TEUTONIC NATIONS, 1494-1514.

By LEOPOLD VON RANKE.
A Revised Translation by G. R. DENNIS, B.A. (Lond.)
With an Introduction by EDWARD ARMSTRONG, M.A.
Fellow of Queen's College, Oxford.

A thoroughly revised translation of this famous work, which Lorentz called one of Ranke's "most original and instructive contributions to history," and which gives a general account of the history of Europe during a period of the highest interest and importance.

JUST PUBLISHED, demy 8vo, 8s. 6d. net.

LIFE OF DEAN COLET, Founder of St. Paul's School.

By the Rev. J. H. LUPTON, M.A.
Surmaster of St. Paul's School, and formerly Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge.

With an Appendix of some of his English Writings, and a Facsimile Portrait taken from the Engraving in Holland's 'Heroölogia.'

NEW AND REVISED EDITION.

"This is specialist's work, and first-rate of its kind. The book leaves us with a feeling of affection as well as esteem for Colet, who appears to have been sterner to himself than to others."—St. James's Gazette.

FOURTH EDITION NOW READY.

Royal 16mo, 1s. net.

THYSIA. An Elegy in Forty-five Sonnets.

"Sonnets which I hold to be of exquisite quality.... They have that pathos inscribed on marble in the best Greek epitaphs."—Mr. FREDERIC HARRISON, in the Nineteenth Century, November, 1908.

Fcap. 8vo, 5s. net.

CATULLI CARMINA.

Edited, with Copious Explanatory Notes, by CHARLES STUTTAFORD.

"Intended for the class whose Latin has become rusty in consequence of the exigencies of a professional or business occupation. Well and wisely annotated for the purpose, and produced admirably."—Evening Standard.

JUST PUBLISHED.

Vol. IV. (containing Parts VII. and VIII.).
Small 4to, with 3 Maps and 2 Plans, 12s. net.

THE ITINERARY OF JOHN LELAND.

Newly Edited from the MSS. by LUCY TOULMIN SMITH.

This Edition will be completed in Five Volumes, of which Vol. I. (containing Parts I.-III.), price 18s. net, Vol. II. (Parts IV. and V.), price 12s. net, and Vol. III. (the 'Itinerary in Wales'), price 10s. 6d. net, are already published.

"The present edition was worth waiting for, and we are grateful to Miss Smith for the care she has bestowed on a congenial task. The result of Miss Smith's editing is eminently satisfactory. The 'Itinerary,' which is interspersed with extracts from charters and lives of the saints, abounds with lights on the vanishing feudal period, and there are few who will not find the indefatigable old antiquary an amusing and most instructive companion."—Westminster Gazette.

BELL'S CLASSICAL TRANSLATIONS.

Crown 8vo, sewed, 1s.

THE PERSIANS OF AESCHYLUS.

A Literal Prose Translation from a Revised Text by C. E. S. HEADLAM, M.A.

THE STANDARD AUTHORITY. WEBSTER'S INTERNATIONAL DICTIONARY.

TWENTIETH-CENTURY EDITION.

Revised and Enlarged, with an Appendix of 25,000 Words, Phrases, and Definitions.

2,348 pages. 5,000 Illustrations.

WRITE FOR DETAILED PROSPECTUS, with Specimen Pages, hundreds of Opinions of Eminent Men, and prices in various styles of binding.

London: GEORGE BELL & SONS,
York House, Portugal Street, W.C.

"The English Catalogue is indispensable."
ATHENÆUM.

THE ENGLISH CATALOGUE OF BOOKS

PUBLISHED DURING

1908

IS NOW READY

Royal 8vo, cloth, 6s. net.

Giving in one Alphabet, under Author, Title, and Subject, the Size, Price, Month of Publication, and Publisher of being a Continuation of the "London" and "British" Catalogues, with the Publications of Learned and other Societies, and Directory of Publishers.

Books Issued

IN THE United Kingdom

Note the Address to which Order must be sent:—

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO., LTD.,
Tudor House, Warwick Lane, E.C.;
100, Southwark Street, London, S.E.

"The English Catalogue is indispensable."
ATHENÆUM.

SMITH, ELDER & CO.'S PUBLICATIONS.

A NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF 'BROKE OF COVENDEN.'
JUST PUBLISHED.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

ARAMINTA. By J. C. SNAITH.

AUTHOR OF 'HENRY NORTHCOTE,' 'WILLIAM JORDAN, JUNIOR,' 'BROKE OF COVENDEN.'

CLAUDIUS CLEAR in the British Weekly says:—"Among the new books I have read, by far the most brilliant, original, and remarkable is 'Araminta,' by J. C. Snaith. I really think that Mr. Snaith has done it now.....A more readable, entertaining, humorous, genial, and new story I have not seen for years. Let me lay special stress on the adjective 'new.'"

READY FEB. 16. With a Portrait. Fcap 8vo, 4s. 6d. net.

POEMS BY THE LATE REV. DR. RICHARD WATSON DIXON,

Late Hon. Canon of Carlisle and Vicar of Warkworth.

A Selection with a Memoir by ROBERT BRIDGES.

READY FEB. 16. With 9 Illustrations. Large post 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

PRE-TRACTARIAN OXFORD:

A Reminiscence of the Oriel 'Noetics.'

By the Rev. W. TUCKWELL, M.A.

Late Fellow of New College, Author of Reminiscences of Oxford.

WORKS BY ARTHUR C. BENSON, C.V.O.

Large post 8vo, 7s. 6d. net each.

AT LARGE.

SECOND IMPRESSION IN THE PRESS.

Daily Chronicle.—"This is, in its way, the most frankly personal of the 'Benson Books' as yet published. It is all graceful, soothing, and pleasant—the very book for tired minds in a nerve-racking world."

THE ALTAR FIRE.

SECOND IMPRESSION.

World.—"In conception and in execution this study of a high-souled but inveterate egoist, converted to humility and altruism by the discipline of suffering, is an achievement of rare power, pathos, and beauty, and, so far, incomparably the finest thing that its author has given us."

BESIDE STILL WATERS.

THIRD IMPRESSION.

Daily Chronicle.—"Beside Still Waters' gathers together the scattered threads which have been already introduced into several of Mr. Benson's more recent studies; it consolidates his attitude in life, and gives full expression to his mellow and contented philosophy."

FROM A COLLEGE WINDOW.

THIRTEENTH IMPRESSION (FOURTH EDITION).

Daily Graphic.—"One of the most delightful books of the year."

London Quarterly Review.—"Will be read again and again with eager interest."

Guardian.—"We have nothing but praise for Mr. Benson's book."

THE UPTON LETTERS.

TWELFTH IMPRESSION (SECOND EDITION). WITH A PREFACE.

Daily Chronicle.—"If any one supposes that the art of letter-writing is dead, this volume will prove the contrary.....Altogether this is a curiously intimate and very pathetic revelation."

Large post 8vo, 6s. net.

THE GATE OF DEATH: a Diary.

SECOND EDITION READY FEB. 18.

Spectator.—"A very striking book.....The story of a dangerous accident and a long convalescence is so told as to take powerful hold upon the reader, and it is difficult to lay the book down. It has all the fascination of a confession, a confession which convinces the reader of its essential truth."

H. S. MERRIMAN'S NOVELS.

NOTE.—Mr. Merriman's Novels are published uniform in style, binding, and price, and thus form a collected edition of his works.

Crown 8vo, 6s. each.

THE LAST HOPE. Fourth Impression (Second Edition).

TOMASO'S FORTUNE; and other Stories. Second Impression.

FLOTSAM. Seventh Impression. With a Frontispiece.

BARLASCH OF THE GUARD. Eighth Impression (Second Edition).

THE VULTURES. Seventh Impression.

THE VELVET GLOVE. Fifth Impression.

THE ISLE OF UNREST. Seventh Impression. With Illustrations.

RODEN'S CORNER. Fifth Edition.

IN KEDAR'S TENTS. Tenth Edition.

THE SOWERS. Twenty-ninth Edition.

WITH EDGED TOOLS.

FROM ONE GENERATION TO ANOTHER.

THE SLAVE OF THE LAMP.

THE GREY LADY. Sixth Impression. With 12 Full-Page Illustrations by ARTHUR RACKHAM.

ALSO CHEAP EDITION. Foolscap 8vo, limp cloth, 2s. 6d. each.

WITH EDGED TOOLS. FROM ONE GENERATION TO ANOTHER. THE SLAVE OF THE LAMP.

RE-ISSUE OF THE DICTIONARY OF NATIONAL BIOGRAPHY.

Edited by LESLIE STEPHEN and SIDNEY LEE. IN TWENTY-TWO VOLUMES.

Cloth, gilt top, 15s. net each; half-morocco, marbled edges, 21s. net each.

Vols. I.-XI. now ready. Vol. XII. (LLWYD-MASON) ready February 10, and a Volume will be issued each month until the completion of the Edition in December, 1909.

* * Prospectus, with Specimen Pages, post free on application.

London: SMITH, ELDER & CO. 15, Waterloo Place, S.W.

"LEARNED, CHATTY, USEFUL."—Athenæum.

"THAT DELIGHTFUL REPOSITORY OF FORGOTTEN LORE, 'NOTES AND QUERIES.'" Edinburgh Review, October, 1880.

Every Saturday, of any Bookseller or Newsagent in England, price 4d.; or free by post to the Continent, 4½d.

NOTES AND QUERIES:

A MEDIUM OF INTERCOMMUNICATION FOR LITERARY MEN AND GENERAL READERS.

. Subscription, 10s. 3d. for Six Months; 20s. 6d. for Twelve Months, including postage.

The NINTH SERIES of NOTES AND QUERIES, complete in 12 vols. (JANUARY, 1898, to DECEMBER, 1903), price 10s. 6d. each Volume, contains, in addition to a great variety of similar Notes and Replies, Articles of Interest on the following Subjects.

THIRD SELECTION.

BIBLIOGRAPHY and LITERARY HISTORY.

Translations of Galen—Books on Gaming—John Gilpin's Route to Edmonton—Mrs. Glasse—'Globe' Centenary—Goethe—Oliver Goldsmith—Thomas Gray—Greene's 'Frier Bacon and Frier Bongay'—Grub Street—A. H. Hallam's Publications—Harvey, Marston, Jonson, and Nashe—Hawker of Morwenstow—Heber's 'Racing Calendar'—George Herbert's Proverbs—Herrick—Heuskarian Rarity in the Bodleian—'Historical English Dictionary'—Hood's 'Comic Annual.'

BIOGRAPHY.

"The Starry Galileo"—Letters of German Notabilities—W. E. Gladstone—Sir Edmund Berry Godfrey—Duchess of Gordon—Duke of Grafton and Lord Thurlow—Thomas Guy's Will—Nell Gwyn—Serjeant Hawkins—Sir John Hawkwood—Sir Richard Hotham—Victor Hugo.

ECCLESIASTICAL MATTERS.

Genesis i. 1—Nameless Gravestones—Greek Church Vestments—Hagioscope or Oriel—Heretics Burnt—Hexham Priory and the Augustales—Holy Communion, Substitutes for Bread—Honest Epitaphs—Huxley on the Bible—'Hymns Ancient and Modern.'

FINE ARTS.

Gainsborough's lost 'Duchess'—Grinling Gibbons's Statue of James II.—Sir John Gilbert's Drawings in the 'London Journal'—Miss Gunning's Portraits—Haydon's Historical Pictures—Pictures by Sir G. Hayter—Hogarth—Holbein Portraits—Hoppner Portraits.

PHILOLOGY and GRAMMAR.

Caimacam or Kaimakam—Camelry—Cecil, its Pronunciation—Celtic Words in Anglo-Saxon Districts—Chaperon applied to Males—Chic recognized by the French Academy—Chi-ike—"Chink" of Woods—Comically—Corn-bote—Creak as a Verb—Crowdy-mutton—Deadfold—Dewsiers—"Different than"—Dive, Peculiar Meaning—Dude—Electrocute—English Accentuation—Ey in Place-names—Fashion in Language—Fearagurthok, Irish Word—Félibre—Filbert—Flapper, Anglo-Indian Slang—Irish "Flittings"—Floyd v. Lloyd—Folk or Folks—Foulrice—Frail—Gallant, its Varying Accent—Gallimaufry—Gambaleery—Gaol and Goal—Garage—Gavel and Shieling—Ghetto—Ghost-words—"Good afternoon"—Doubtful Grammar in A.V. and Prayer Book—Greek Pronunciation—Gutter-snipe—Gwyneth—Halsh—Hattock—Help with an Infinitive—Helpmate and Helpmeet—Henbane—Heron—High-faluting—Hooligan—Hopeful and Sangw—Huish—Hullabaloo—Hurtling.

PROVERBS AND QUOTATIONS.

"Cambuscan bold"—"Carnage is God's daughter"—"Chalk on the door"—"Lug the coif"—"Comparisons are odious"—"Crow to pluck"—"Crying down credit"—"Cutting his stick"—"Who sups with the devil"—"Down to the ground"—"Dutch courage"—"Embarras des richesses"—"English take their pleasures sadly"—"Enjoy bad health"—"Fall below par"—"Farewell, vain world"—"Feggess after peace"—"Fert, Fert, Fert," on Italian Coins—"First catch your hare"—"Flea in the ear"—"Forgive, blest shade"—French Sermon in Proverbs—Familiar French Quotations—"God works wonders now and then"—"Gone to Jericho"—"Green grief to the Grahams"—"Grass widow"—Gratitude Defined—"Green-eyed monster"—"Heart of grace"—"Hook it"—"Hop the twig"—"Horse-marine."

SONGS, BALLADS, and NURSERY RIMES.

"Ask nothing more of me, sweet"—'Bailiff's Daughter of Islington'—'Beggar's Petition'—'Canadian Boat Song'—'Charlie is my Darling'—'Cherry Ripe'—'Comin' thro' the Rye'—'Dulce Domum'—"Gentle shepherd, tell me where"—"God bless the King!—I mean the Faith's defender"—"I dwelt in a city enchanted"—"I'll hang my harp on a willow tree"—"In the days when we went gipsying."

MISCELLANEOUS.

Acacia in Freemasonry—Adelaide Waistcoat—Adulation Extraordinary—Old Advertisements—Æolian Harp, its Construction—Albino Animals Sacrificed—Ale, Bottled, Burton, and "Lanted"—Anagrams on Various Subjects—Apostle Spoons—Athens, the City of the Violet Crown—Autographs, how to keep them—Bagman, for Commercial Traveller—Bank of England and Heberfield—First Lady Barrister—Birch-sap Wine—Ancient Boats Discovered—Bows and Arrows last used in War—Bread by Troy Weight—C.I.V. Nicknames—Originator of Christmas Cards—Beginning and End of Centuries—Clerks—Chancery—Chess Legend—Chimneys in Ancient Houses—Introduction of Chocolate—Twenty-four-hour Clocks—Convivial Clubs—Local Names for the Cowslip—Earliest Cricket Match—Death from Fright—Dutch Fleet captured by Cavalry—Standing Egg—Brewers' "Entire"—Earliest Envelopes—Epigrams and Epitaphs—Farthings Rejected—Feeding-Bottles First Used—Five o'Clock Tea—Flats in London—Flaying Alive—Franciscans v. Freemasons—Earliest Funeral Cards—Gas and Locomotive—Gates on Commons—Genius and Large Families—Gentleman Porter—Germination of Seeds—Slang for Gin—Gipsy Wedding and Funeral—Golf and Pall-mall—Goths and Huns—Guillotine—Gun Reports—Hair Powder last Used—Hansom Cab, its Inventor—First Silk Hat in London.

LONDON LIBRARY, ST. JAMES'S SQUARE, S.W.

Patron—HIS MAJESTY THE KING. President.—The Right Hon. A. J. BALFOUR, M.P.

Vice-Presidents—FREDERIC HARRISON, Esq.; Sir FRANK T. MARZIALS, C.B.; GEORGE MEREDITH, Esq. O.M.; ALFRED RUSSEL WALLACE, Esq. O.M. F.R.S.

Trustees—EARL of ROSEBURY, K.G.; Right Hon. LORD AVEBURY, F.R.S.; HENRY YATES THOMPSON, Esq.

Committee—Right Hon. Sir Rowland Blennerhassett, Bart. LL.D., Bernard Bosanquet, Esq. LL.D., Prof. A. C. Bradley, LL.D., Horace T. Brown, Esq. LL.D. F.R.S., Prof. Ingram Bywater, D.Litt., Austin Dobson, Esq. LL.D., Hon. Arthur Eliot, D.C.L. J. Fitzmaurice-Kelly, Esq. Litt.D., Sydney Gedge, Esq., Sir A. Geikie, K.C.B. F.R.S., Sir R. Giffen, K.C.B. F.R.S., Edmund Gosse, Esq. LL.D., Mrs. J. R. Green, Rev. W. Hunt, Litt.D., Sir C. P. Ilbert, K.C.B. K.C.S.I., Walter Leaf, Esq. Litt.D., Sidney Lee, Esq. Litt.D., W. S. Lilly, Esq., Sidney J. Low, Esq., Dr. J. F. Payne, Sir F. Pollock, Bart. LL.D., Rev. J. H. Rigg, D.D., H. R. Tedder, Esq. F.S.A., A. W. Ward, Esq. Litt.D. LL.D.

The Library contains about 220,000 Volumes of Ancient and Modern Literature, in various Languages. Subscription, 3l. 3s. a year, with an entrance fee of 1l. 1s.; Life Membership, according to age. Fifteen Volumes are allowed to Country and Ten to Town Members. Reading-Room open from Ten to Half-past Six. The NEW CATALOGUE (1526 pp. 4to, 1903), price 2l. 2s.; to Members, 25s.

"ONE OF THE MOST SAGACIOUS AND JUDICIOUSLY LIBERAL MEN I HAVE EVER KNOWN, THE LATE LORD DERBY, SAID THERE WAS A KIND OF MAN TO WHOM THE BEST SERVICE THAT COULD BE RENDERED WAS TO MAKE HIM A LIFE MEMBER OF THE LONDON LIBRARY."—W. E. H. LECKY.

C. T. HAGBERG WRIGHT, LL.D., Secretary and Librarian.

YOUR BIRTHRIGHT IS HEALTH. THE SCIENCE IN A NUTSHELL.

'Health is a Man's Birthright. It is as natural to be well as to be born. All pathological conditions, all diseases, and all tendencies to disease are the result of the transgression of physiologic and hygienic law. This is the science of health in a nutshell.'—DENSMORE.

Eno's Fruit Salt

IS NATURE'S ANTIDOTE FOR HUMAN ILLS
arising from the neglect or violation of her laws.

'Our Acts, our angels are, for good or ill, our fatal shadows that walk by us still.'

And such is life, so gliding on, it glimmers like a meteor, and is gone.'

CAUTION.—Examine the capsule, and see that it is marked ENO'S 'FRUIT SALT.' Without it you have the sincerest form of flattery—IMITATION.

Prepared only by J. C. ENO (Limited), 'FRUIT SALT' WORKS, LONDON, S.E.

AUTHORIZED TO BE USED BY BRITISH SUBJECTS.

NOW READY

THE NATIONAL FLAG,

BEING

THE UNION JACK.

SUPPLEMENT TO

NOTES AND QUERIES

FOR JUNE 30, 1900,

Price 4d.; by post 4½d.

Containing an Account of the Flag, Reprinted June, 1908.

With Coloured Illustration according to scale.

JOHN C. FRANCIS and J. EDWARD FRANCIS,
Notes and Queries Office, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

P. & O.

PLEASURE CRUISES FROM MARSEILLES.

(Rail and Steamship connexions from London.)

No. 1.—February 18 to March 17.

GREECE,
SYRIA, PALESTINE,
EGYPT, &c.

S.Y.
VECTIS

No. 2.—March 20 to April 16.

CONSTANTINOPLE
GREECE,
SICILY.

No. 3.—April 22 to May 20.

DALMATIA, VENICE,
CORFU, SICILY.

Fares for Cruises 1, 2, or 3, from 30 Guineas.

No. 4.—May 21 to June 12.

NAPLES, SICILY,
ALGIERS, SPAIN, &c.

BY

Fares from 20 Guineas.

P. & O. CRUISING YACHT VECTIS, 6,000 tons, 6,000 h.p.

For Passage, Illustrated Handbooks, and all information, apply Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company, Northumberland Avenue, W.C., or 122, Leadenhall Street, E.C., London.

NOTICE.

NOTES AND QUERIES.

THE VOLUME

JULY to DECEMBER, 1908,

WITH THE

INDEX,

Price 10s. 6d.,

IS NOW READY.

* * The INDEX separately, price 6d.;
by post, 6½d.

Also Cases for Binding, price 1s.;
by post, 1s. 2d.

JOHN C. FRANCIS & J. EDWARD FRANCIS,
Notes and Queries' Office, Bream's Buildings, E.C.

For Acidity of the Stomach.

For Heartburn and Headache.

For Gout and Indigestion.

D I N N E F O R D ' S

M A G N E S I A.

For Sour Eructations and Bilious Affections.

A Safe and most effective Aperient for regular use.

CHAPMAN & HALL'S NEW & FORTHCOMING BOOKS

BRIGHTON :

Its History, its Follies, and its Fashions.

By LEWIS MELVILLE,

Author of 'The First Gentleman in Europe,' &c.

Profusely illustrated. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net. [March 5.

This is a book dealing with the history of Brighton on its social side, and full of stories of the romances, adventures, quarrels, duels, &c., which have taken place in that city since the time when it became fashionable under the Georges. It will prove extremely entertaining.

SAMUEL PEPYS :

Administrator, Observer, Gossip.

By E. HALLAM MOORHOUSE.

With many Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net. [Feb. 19.

Although every one knows Pepys's Diary, there is no extant life of him which, while it is gathered from that Diary, shall aim at giving a bright and lively picture of the man himself, and also an account of the more serious work he did for the Admiralty. The Author has had access to rare Admiralty papers, and much unpublished material will appear.

MEMORIALS OF ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL.

By ARCHDEACON SINCLAIR.

With many Illustrations in Black and White and Silverpoint, by LOUIS WEIRTER. Demy 8vo, 16s. net. [In April.

This is an authoritative history of the Cathedral from the earliest days to the present by the Archdeacon of London, and it will aim at giving a popular and at the same time an accurate account of the Cathedral's history. The pictures are a special feature, being of unusual beauty.

THE LOST LAND OF KING ARTHUR.

By J. CUMING WALTERS.

With many Illustrations. Pott 8vo, 3s. 6d. net. [March 12.

This charming little book is something between an historical work and a guide-book, dealing with all those parts of England identified with the romance of King Arthur, and saying definitely what legends are associated with what places.

THE TOWER OF LONDON :

Fortress, Prison, Palace.

By CHARLES G. HARPER.

Illustrated by the Author and from Photographs by W. S. CAMPBELL.

Crown 8vo, 6s. net.

[In April.

In this book Mr. Harper deals alike with the architecture and the living history of the Tower of London and of the prisoners whose blood was shed upon its green or hill. It is not too much to say that the intimate history of the Tower is, in fact, the history of England, and it will be found that Mr. Harper relates the story in a fascinating and interesting manner.

INSURRECTIONARY INDIA.

By DOUGLAS STORY.

Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

[In the press.

Mr. Story has just returned from a long visit to India, where he has been in private conference with most of the principal governors of districts. His book will express the official view with regard to the present dangers of a recurrence of the Mutiny. It will be full of new material of a highly up-to-date order.

RICHARD MANSFIELD :

His Life and Art.

By PAUL WILSTACH.

Profusely illustrated with Portraits in Character and with Photogravure Frontispiece. Demy 8vo, 16s. net. [Now ready.

This is the authoritative life of the well-known American actor, and is not only a summary of his career, but a most interesting account of his private life and friendship.

AN ACTOR'S STORY.

By BRANSBY WILLIAMS.

With Portraits. Crown 8vo, 6s.

[March 16.

This is the story of the professional life of one of the most popular music-hall performers of to-day. It abounds in anecdotes of the struggle by which a young actor makes his way, and tells many interesting stories of notable actors of the time. As the "Dickens Actor" Mr. Williams is well known, both in this country and America, and the story of how he became such is narrated in a most entertaining manner.

NEW NOVELS AT ALL LIBRARIES.

THE CITY OF BEAUTIFUL NONSENSE.

By E. TEMPLE THURSTON, Author of 'Sally Bishop,' [March 19.

THE COMPACT.

By RIDGWELL CULLUM,

Author of 'The Watchers of the Plains.' [March 5.

MAGNIFICAT.

By VINCENT BROWN, Author of 'The Christian Marriage,' [Feb. 17.

SANDFORD OF MERTON.

By DESMOND COKE.

Entirely New Edition, Rewritten, and Incorporated with 'Sandford of the Smart Set.'

Paper covers, 1s. net.

[Feb. 23

The Two Novels which are being talked about in literary circles at the present time are

ARNOLD BENNETT'S
THE OLD WIVES' TALE

FOURTH EDITION.

AND

DESMOND COKE'S
THE GOLDEN KEY.

SECOND EDITION.

Ask your Librarian for them.

London: CHAPMAN & HALL, LTD., 11, Henrietta Street, W.C.

THE ATHENÆUM

Journal of English and Foreign Literature, Science, the Fine Arts, Music and the Drama.

No. 4243.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 20, 1909.

PRICE
THREEPENCE.
REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

Lectures.

ROYAL INSTITUTION OF GREAT BRITAIN,
ALBEMARLE STREET, PICCADILLY, W.

TUESDAY NEXT, February 23, at 3 o'clock, Prof. FREDERICK W. MOTT, M.D., F.R.S., F.R.C.P., Fullerian Professor of Physiology, R.I., FIRST of SIX LECTURES on 'The Evolution of the Brain as an Organ of Mind.' One Guinea the Course.
SATURDAY, February 27, at 3 o'clock, Prof. Sir J. J. THOMSON, LL.D., D.Sc., F.R.S., Professor of Natural Philosophy, R.I., FIRST of SIX LECTURES on 'Properties of Matter.' One Guinea.
Subscription to all the Courses in the Season, Two Guineas.

MR. ROGER FRY proposes to give FIVE LECTURES on 'The Language of Art,' at the ROYAL ALBERT HALL, 5.30 p.m., on FRIDAYS, February 19, 26, March 5, 19, and 26.
Tickets may be had from Mr. J. STEPNEY, 24, Bury Street, St. James's, and at door.

Societies.

BUDDHIST SOCIETY OF GREAT BRITAIN
AND IRELAND. Patron—H.M. THE KING OF SIAM.
President—Prof. T. W. RHYS DAVIDS, LL.D., Ph.D.

All interested in Buddhism are eligible as Members. Annual Subscription, One Guinea; Associates, 10s. 6d. Addresses every Sunday Evening at 12, St. Mary Abbot's Place, near Addison Road Station, W. Publishing and Secretarial Offices, 41, Great Russell Street, W.C. The BUDDHIST REVIEW, price One Shilling Quarterly, is the Organ of the Society.

Exhibitions.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF ARTS.
WINTER EXHIBITION.
Open from 9 A.M. to 6 P.M. Admission 1s
Catalogue, 6d. Season Ticket, 5s.

DRAWINGS AND CARICATURES by the late HENRY OSPOVAT, and DRAWINGS illustrating EDGAR ALLAN POE by ARILD ROSENKRANTZ.—THE BAILLIE GALLERY, 13, Bruton Street, W. 10-6.

ROWLANDSON DRAWINGS, also ETCHINGS by D. S. MACLAUGHLAN and H. MULREADY STONE. Exhibition now open at Mr. R. GUTEKUNSTS, 16, King Street, St. James's, S.W. 10-6 Daily. Admission 1s.

EXHIBITION of a Series of 60 PASTORALS by ALFRED PARSONS, A.R.A., R.W.S. Also the WATER COLOURS and SKETCHES left by the late WILLIAM CLOW, R.W.S. THE LEICESTER GALLERIES, Leicester Square.

Provident Institutions.

NEWSVENDORS' BENEVOLENT AND PROVIDENT INSTITUTION.

Founded 1839.

Funds exceed 27,000l.

Office: 15 and 16, Farringdon Street, London, E.C.

Patron:

The Right Hon. THE EARL OF ROSEBURY, K.G. K.T.

President:

The LORD GLENESK.

Treasurer:

THE LONDON AND WESTMINSTER BANK, LIMITED.

OBJECTS.—This Institution was established in 1839 in the City of London, under the Presidency of the late Alderman Harmer, for granting Pensions and Temporary Assistance to principals and assistants engaged as vendors of Newspapers.

MEMBERSHIP.—Every Man or Woman throughout the United Kingdom, whether Publisher, Wholesaler, Retailer, Employer, or Employed, is entitled to become a Member of this Institution, and enjoy its benefits upon payment of Five Shillings annually, or Three Guineas for life, provided that he or she is engaged in the sale of Newspapers, and such Members who thus contribute secure priority of consideration in the event of their needing aid from the Institution.

PENSIONS.—The Annuitants now number Thirty-six, the Men receiving 25l. and the Women 20l. per annum each.

The "Royal Victoria Pension Fund," commemorating the great advantages the News Trade enjoyed under the rule of Her late Majesty Queen Victoria, provides 20l. a year each for Six Widows of News-vendors.

The "Francis Fund" provides Pensions for One Man, 25l., and One Woman 20l., and was specially subscribed in memory of the late John Francis, who died on April 6, 1882, and was for more than fifty years Publisher of the Athenæum. He took an active and leading part throughout the whole period of the agitation for the repeal of the various then existing "Taxes on Knowledge," and was for very many years a staunch supporter of this Institution.

The "Horace Marshall Pension Fund" is the gift of the late Mr. Horace Brooks Marshall. The employees of that firm have primary right of election to its benefits.

The "Herbert Lloyd Pension Fund" provides 25l. per annum for one man, in perpetual and grateful memory of Mr. Herbert Lloyd, who died May 12, 1899.

The principal features of the Rules governing election to all Pensions are, that each Candidate shall have been (1) a member of the Institution for not less than ten years preceding application; (2) not less than fifty-five years of age; (3) engaged in the sale of Newspapers for at least ten years.

RELIEF.—Temporary relief is given in cases of distress, not only to Members of the Institution, but to News-vendors or their servants who may be recommended for assistance by Members of the Institution. Inquiry is made in such cases by Visiting Committees, and relief is awarded in accordance with the merits and requirements of each case.

W. WILKIE JONES Secretary.

THE BOOKSELLERS' PROVIDENT INSTITUTION.

Founded 1837.

Patron—HER MAJESTY QUEEN ALEXANDRA.

Invested Capital, 30,000l.

A UNIQUE INVESTMENT

Offered to London Booksellers and their Assistants.

A young man or woman of twenty-five can invest the sum of Twenty Guineas (or its equivalent by instalments), and obtain the right to participate in the following advantages:—

FIRST. Freedom from want in time of Adversity as long as need exists.

SECOND. Permanent Relief in Old Age.

THIRD. Medical Advice by eminent Physicians and Surgeons.

FOURTH. A Cottage in the Country (Abbots Langley, Hertfordshire) for aged Members, with garden produce, coal, and medical attendance free, in addition to an annuity.

FIFTH. A furnished house in the same Retreat at Abbots Langley for the use of Members and their families for holidays or during convalescence.

SIXTH. A contribution towards Funeral expenses when it is needed.

SEVENTH. All these are available not for Members only, but also for their wives or widows and young children.

EIGHTH. The payment of the subscriptions confers an absolute right to these benefits in all cases of need.

For further information apply to the Secretary Mr. GEORGE LARNER, 28, Paternoster Row E.C.

Educational.

TUITION BY CORRESPONDENCE.—For all

Exams. in Classics, Modern Languages, Mathematics, Science, Logic, &c. Highly qualified Staff.—Address Mr. J. CHARLESTON, B.A., Burlington Correspondence College, Birkbeck Bank Chambers, London, W.C.

CHRIST'S COLLEGE, BLACKHEATH, S.E.

F. W. AVELING, M.A., B.Sc.

Preparation for Universities and Professions.

Stress on Modern Languages and Science.

EDUCATION.

Parents or Guardians desiring accurate information relative to the CHOICE of SCHOOLS for BOYS or GIRLS or TUTOR in England or abroad are invited to call upon or send fully detailed particulars to MESSRS. GABBITAS, THRING & CO.,

who for more than thirty years have been closely in touch with the leading Educational Establishments.

Advice, free of charge, is given by Mr. THRING, Nephew of the late Head Master of Uppingham, 36, Sackville Street, London, W.

Situations Vacant.

HEREFORDSHIRE LOCAL EDUCATION AUTHORITY.

LEOMINSTER SECONDARY SCHOOL (MIXED).

Applications are invited for the post of HEAD MASTER of the above new SCHOOL, which will be OPENED in SEPTEMBER, 1909, working under the regulations of the Board of Education.

Accommodation, 35.

Salary 300l. per annum, and 2l. Capitation Fee on all Children above the first 50.

Applicants must be Graduates of a University.

Applications, endorsed "Head Master," enclosing copies of not more than three recent Testimonials, should be sent to W. T. SALE, Esq., Clerk to the Governors, Leominster, so as to reach him not later than MARCH 4 NEXT.

Canvassing will disqualify a Candidate.

Signed,

JOHN WILTSHIRE, County Education Secretary.
Education Office, Shire Hall, Hereford,
February 8, 1909.

BARNESLEY HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.

WANTED, after EASTER, a FORM MISTRESS, to teach only French. Special qualifications in this subject essential.

Apply, with full details and Testimonials, to the HEAD MISTRESS.

TECHNICAL SCHOOL, GUILDHALL, BATH.

ASSISTANT ART MASTER REQUIRED AT ONCE for the BATH SCHOOL OF ART. Salary 90l. per annum.

For further particulars apply to

A. GODFREY DAY, Director of Studies.

WOOLWICH POLYTECHNIC.

The GOVERNING BODY invite applications for the appointment (part time) of a MAN TEACHER in the SCHOOL OF ART, at a Salary of 75l. per annum.—Further particulars and Forms of Application, which must be returned to the Principal not later than WEDNESDAY, March 12, may be obtained by sending to THE PRINCIPAL a stamped addressed foolscap envelope.

ASSISTANT (JUNIOR) REQUIRED for the SECOND-HAND DEPARTMENT. A knowledge of Cataloguing and of the French Language essential.—Apply, by letter only, to H. SOTHERAN & CO. 140, Strand, W.C.

GENTLEMAN (or LADY) of superior education and status WANTED as SECRETARY of INCORPORATED SOCIETY (Literary), must deposit £250; position influential. State minimum Salary, experience (if any) to PHILIP, Box 1591, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

WANTED, TEMPORARY CATALOGUER in large REFERENCE LIBRARY. Skilled, used to Foreign Books, young, well educated. Terms and full particulars to X. B., care of Willings, 73, Knightsbridge, S.W.

Yearly Subscription, free by post, Inland, 15s. 3d.; Foreign, 18s. Entered at the New York Post Office as Second Class matter.

THE ATHENÆUM is published on FRIDAY AFTERNOON at 2 o'clock.

Situations Wanted.

POST of SECRETARY DESIRED, either Resident or Non-Resident, by a LADY. Shorthand Typist, well trained; Good French, Book-keeping, &c.—Address READER, 18 Princes Square, London, W.

LADY (Young), good Typist, own Machine, desires AFTERNOON ENGAGEMENT in Weybridge or Neighbourhood.—Apply Box 1570, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

FRENCH UNIVERSITY MAN, 29, Bachelor, six years in England, seeks SECRETARIAL or other Position. Willing to Travel. Fluent English. Good all-round qualifications and credentials. Apply E. F., care of Messrs. Barnett & Leonard, Solicitors, 13, John Street, Bristol.

BACHELOR OF LETTERS requires POST, Literary, quasi-Literary, or Secretarial. Young, Energetic. Highest References.—H. ROWLANDS, S. Coldicott, Mitcham.

Miscellaneous.

MISS BISHOP'S PRIVATE SOCIAL

TOURING PARTY leaves for ITALY MARCH 3. Genoa, Rome, Naples (Capri, Sorrento, Pompeii), Florence, Venice, &c. Inclusive Terms. Short Sea Route. First-class Hotels. Complete arrangements. References exchanged.—Particulars of this and succeeding Tours from Miss BISHOP, 27, St. George's Road, Kilburn, London.

TO NEWSPAPERS AND MAGAZINES.—The AUTHOR of 'MEDICAL PHILOSOPHY' desires to WRITE on HEALTH. As Medicine teaches that all our thoughts, actions, and happiness depends on health, this is the most important subject that Editors can lay before their readers.—Write care of H. KIMPTON, Esq., Publisher, 13, Furnival Street, E.C.

PUBLIC-HOUSE REFORM.—The People's Refreshment House Association, Ltd., founded by the Bishop of Chester, manages 68 Licensed Inns. Ask for List and Report. APPLY FOR 11 SHARES. 5 per cent paid since 1899. P.R.H.A., Broadway Chambers, Westminster.

TRANSLATIONS INTO ENGLISH from French, Italian, Spanish, Portuguese, German, Dutch, Dan-Norwegian, and Swedish.—W. T. CURTIS, 10, Haringey Park, Crouch End, N.

WORK WANTED in INDEXING, CATALOGUING, BIBLIOGRAPHY, &c. Good experience. Spanish, Italian, and French Translated. Research Work of any kind undertaken.—Address ALPHA, care Davies & Co., Advertising Agents, Finch Lane, Cornhill.

TRANSLATIONS (into and from English). Research, and other Literary Work. French, German, Italian, Spanish, Portuguese, Dutch. Varied experience. Moderate terms.—Miss STRACK, 35, Mail Chambers, Kensington W.

LITERARY RESEARCH undertaken at the British Museum and elsewhere on moderate terms. Excellent Testimonials.—A. B., Box 1062, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

THE DAUGHTER of a well-known Literary

Man is desirous of meeting with a LADY and GENTLEMAN to SHARE her HOUSE; or would take Boarders. Rooms Furnished or Unfurnished. The House is situated on South Norwood Hill, five minutes from Norwood Junction Station, close to the Stanley Halls (where Concerts, Lectures, &c., are continually given), near the Public Library, and within a walk of the Crystal Palace, or One Station from it. Norwood is regarded as one of the healthiest places round London, and was at one time a well-known health resort.—Address C. M., Box 1562, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

Type-Writers, &c.

TYPE-WRITING.—The WEST KENSINGTON OFFICES. Authors' MSS., Translations, &c. Legal and General Copying. Private Dictation Room. Circulars, &c., Duplicated. Usual Terms. References. Established sixteen years.—SIKES & SIKES, 223A, Hammersmith Road, London, W.

TYPE-WRITING, 7d. per 1,000. Thoroughly well done. Long MSS. 6d. per 1,000. Carbons 2d. extra. Satisfaction guaranteed. Every care and attention given.—TYPIST, 89, Egerton Road, Bishopston, Bristol.

TYPE-WRITING OF EVERY DESCRIPTION by EXPERT, 8d. per 1,000 words. Clear Carbon Copies, 3d. per 1,000 words. Accuracy and prompt return guaranteed. Reliable References.—NORA DICKINSON, 1, Sackville Gardens, Ilford.

AUTHORS' MSS. TYPED from 6d. 1,000 words, Scientific from 9d. Accurate Work guaranteed. Specimens sent.—Miss HABERSHON, L.L.A., St. Andrews (Honours in Science and Languages), 101, Palmerston Road, Southsea.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY, 74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON.

REPRODUCTIONS IN MONOCHROME OF FAMOUS WORKS OF ART BY THE AUTOTYPE PERMANENT PROCESS.

Amongst the numerous Publications may be mentioned
SELECTIONS from THE NATIONAL
GALLERY (London), THE WALLACE COLLECTION,
THE TATE GALLERY, THE WALKER ART GAL-
LERY (Liverpool).

DRAWINGS BY HOLBEIN, from the ROYAL COLLECTION, Windsor Castle.

SELECTED EXAMPLES OF SACRED
ART from various Collections.

ETCHINGS BY REMBRANDT.

DRAWINGS BY ALBERT DÜRER.

PICTURES from the Louvre, Luxembourg, Paris.

Prospectuses of above Issues will be sent on application.

FULL PARTICULARS OF ALL THE COMPANY'S PUBLICATIONS ARE GIVEN IN THE AUTOTYPE FINE-ART CATALOGUE.

NOW READY,
ENLARGED EDITION, with Hundreds of Miniature
Photographs and Tint Blocks of Notable Autotypes.

For convenience of Reference the Publications are arranged Alphabetically under Artists' Names.

Post free, One Shilling.

A Visit of Inspection is invited to
THE AUTOTYPE FINE-ART GALLERY
74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.

TYPE-WRITING 9d. per 1,000 words; Carbons
3d. French and German Type-writing 1s. per 1,000. Translations. Duplicating 3s. 100 Copies (quarto), 15s. per 1,000. Best work, accuracy, and promptitude.—G. WALKER, 14, Park Road, New Cross, S.E.

AUTHORS' MSS., 9d. per 1,000 words. Sermons,
Plays, and all kinds of TYPE-WRITING carefully done at home (Remington). Good paper. Orders promptly executed. Duplicating from 3s. 6d. per 100.—M. L. L., 18, Edgeley Road, Clapham, S.W.

AUTHORS' MSS., NOVELS, STORIES, PLAYS,
ESSAYS TYPE-WRITTEN with complete accuracy, 9d. per 1,000 words. Clear Carbon Copies guaranteed. References to well-known Writers.—M. STUART, Allendale, Kimberley Road, Harrow.

TYPE-WRITING undertaken by highly educated
Women (Classical Tripos; Cambridge Higher Local; Modern Languages). Research, Revision, Translation, Shorthand, Dictation
Room.—THE CAMBRIDGE TYPE-WRITING AGENCY, 10, Duke
Street, Adelphi, W.C.

TYPE-WRITING, 9d. per 1,000 words. All kinds of MSS. accurately typed. Clear Carbon Copies, 3d. per 1,000.
References to well-known Authors. Oxford Higher Local. Tel. 1272,
Richmond P.O.—M. KING, 24, Forest Road, Kew Gardens, S.W.

Catalogues.

MAGGS BROS.

109, Strand, London, W.C.

DEALERS IN RARE AND VALUABLE BOOKS
PRINTS, AND AUTOGRAPHS.

CATALOGUES sent post free to all parts of the World
Export Orders Solicited.

Telegraphic and Cable Address: "Bibliolite, London."
Telephone: "Gerrard 4664."

CATALOGUE No. 50.—Drawings by Turner,
Prout, Ruskin, &c.—Turner's Liber Studiorum and other
Engravings—Proofs touched by Turner—Constable's English Landscape—Etchings by Whistler—Japanese Colour Prints—Illustrated
Books. Post free, Sixpence.—WM. WARD, 2, Church Terrace,
Richmond, Surrey.

ANCIENT and MODERN COINS.—Collectors
and Antiquarians are invited to apply to SPINK & SON
Limited, for Specimen Copy (gratis) of their NUMISMATIC
CIRCULAR. The finest Greek, Roman, and English Coins on View and for Sale at Moderate Prices.—SPINK & SON, Limited, Experts, Valuers, and Cataloguers, 16, 17, and 18, Piccadilly, London, W.
Established upwards of a Century.

JUST PUBLISHED.

MANUAL of BRITISH TOPOGRAPHY. A
Catalogue of County and Local Histories, Civil War Tracts, Views, Drawings, Maps, &c., connected with the Principal Localities in the United Kingdom. Illustrated with 12 interesting Portraits and Views from early Copperplates. Comprising nearly 11,000 entries, 234 pp., 8vo. cloth, 5s. net. Only 200 copies issued.
WALTER V. DANIELL, 53, Mortimer Street, London, W.

THREE THOUSAND ENGRAVED POR-TRAITS, and One Thousand Old Engravings, of LONDON and MIDDLESEX. CATALOGUE post free.—A. RUSSELL SMITH, 28, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C.

WE will send any MUSICAL PUBLICATION
post free by return, and charge lowest current rates. VIOLIN MUSIC CATALOGUE, with Supplement (25,000 Publications), free for 3d. postage (published 1s.).—MURDOCH, MURDOCH & CO.
Hatton House, Hatton Garden, London, E.C.

BRIGHTON BOOK CIRCULAR, No. 147, shortly to be published, will contain a number of Items from the Library of Lord Sheffield, many relating to America, several with fine Book-Plates. Will be sent for a Stamp. Names of Bookbuyers solicited.—WILLIAM J. SMITH, 41-3, North Street, Brighton.

BOOKS.—ALL OUT-OF-PRINT and RARE
BOOKS on any subject SUPPLIED. The most expert Bookfinder extant. Please state wants and ask for CATALOGUE. I make a special feature of exchanging any Saleable Books for others selected from my various Lists. Special List of 2,000 Books I particularly want post free.—EDW. BAKER'S Great Bookshop, 14-16, John Bright Street, Birmingham. Rhéal's Staffordshire Pots and Pottery, illus., 21s., for 10s. 6d.; Ainsworth's Novels, 20 vols. 35s.; Burke's Peerage, 1907, 24s.

GLAISHER'S REMAINDER BOOK
CATALOGUE

For MARCH (No. 363).

NOW READY, and will be forwarded on application.
It comprises a specially attractive Selection of Publishers' Reminders, including many Good Bargains.

WILLIAM GLAISHER, LTD.,
Booksellers, 263, HIGH HOLBORN, LONDON.

Authors' Agents.

THE AUTHOR'S AGENCY.—Established 1879.
The interests of Authors capably represented. Agreements for Publishing arranged. MSS. placed with Publishers.—Terms and Testimonials on application to Mr. A. M. BURGHES, 24, Paternoster Row.

MR. GEORGE LARNER, Accountant and
Licensed Valuer to the Bookselling, Publishing, Newspaper,
Printing, and Stationery Trades. Partnerships Arranged. Balance Sheets and Trading Accounts Prepared and Audited. All Business carried out under Mr. Lerner's personal supervision.—28, 29, and 30, Paternoster Row, E.C., Secretary to the Booksellers' Provident Institution.

Printers.

ATHENÆUM PRESS.—JOHN EDWARD
FRANCIS, Printer of the Athenæum, Notes and Queries, &c., is prepared to SUBMIT ESTIMATES for all kinds of BOOK, NEWS, and PERIODICAL PRINTING.—13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery
Lane, E.C.

Sales by Auction.

The Collection of Greek, Roman, Byzantine, Mediaeval and Modern, Foreign, Oriental, &c., Coins and Medals, the Property of M. LE COMTE PIERRE DE VIRY.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE
will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on WEDNESDAY, February 24, and Two Following Days, at 1 o'clock precisely, the COLLECTION of GREEK, ROMAN, BYZANTINE, MEDIAEVAL and MODERN, FOREIGN,
ORIENTAL, &c., COINS and MEDALS, in Gold, Silver, and Bronze, and an important Louis XIV. Cabinet by Bouille, formed in the Eighteenth Century by M. de Montcarr, Conseiller au Parlement de Grenoble, and now sold by order of the present owner, M. LE COMTE PIERRE DE VIRY, Château de Viry (Haute-Savoie), France.

May be viewed two days prior. Illustrated Catalogues may be had, price 1s. each.

Engravings and Drawings.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE
will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on FRIDAY, February 26, at 1 o'clock precisely, ENGRAVINGS, DRAWINGS, &c. (Framed and in the Portfolio), comprising Fancy Subjects—Mezzotint and other Portraits, some suitable for extra-illustrating—Engravings and Etchings by and after Old Masters—Woodcuts—Miscellaneous Parcel Lots, &c.—a large Collection of Small Views, Maps, Plans, &c., by different Engravers, illustrating Ancient London, mounted in Six Folio Scrapbooks—Arundel Society Publications—and a few Drawings, Oil Paintings, &c.

May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

Autograph Letters and Historical Documents.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE
will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on MONDAY, March 1, at 1 o'clock precisely, AUTOGRAPH LETTERS and HISTORICAL DOCUMENTS, including Lord Byron, P. B. Shelley, John Keats, C. Lamb, Sir W. Scott,
T. Hood, R. Wagner, General Wolfe, and others—a Series of Letters, &c., relating to the American War of Independence, several being signed by G. Washington—a magnificent Holograph Letter of Raphael Sanzio d'Urbino, the famous Painter—a most interesting Message of Louis XVI., probably to Diane de Polignac—Collections in Albums,
&c.

May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

Books and Manuscripts.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE
will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on TUESDAY, March 2, and Following Day, at 1 o'clock precisely, BOOKS and MANUSCRIPTS, comprising the LIBRARY of the late Col. G. HENDERSON, J.P., of Heverswood, Brasted, Kent, and other Properties, including Documents on Yellum concerning the Worshipful Company of Horners—Hasted's History of Kent, 4 vols. 1778-99—Works on Art and Archaeology—Sport and Travel—Americana—First Editions of English and Foreign Authors —Drama—Early Printed Books—Scarce Tracts—Publications of the Kelmiscott and Doves Presses—Autograph Letters.

May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

Books and Manuscripts.

MESSRS. PUTTICK & SIMPSON will SELL
by AUCTION at their Galleries, 47, Leicester Square, W.C., at the END of FEBRUARY, BOOKS and MANUSCRIPTS, including a Library removed from Queen's Gate and Leamington, comprising Standard Works in Library Editions—valuable First Editions—Works on Natural History, Sport, the Drama, and Fine Arts, &c.

Valuable Miscellaneous Books.

MESSRS. HODGSON & CO. will SELL by AUCTION, at their Rooms, 115, Chancery Lane, on TUESDAY, March 2, and Two Following Days, at 1 o'clock, VALUABLE MIS-CELLANEOUS BOOKS, including a SELECTION from the LIBRARY of a GENTLEMAN, comprising Incunabula and Early Printed Books—Lydgate's Fall of Princes, 1534, Barclay's Ship of Fools
[1579], Speght's Chaucer, 1598, and others in Old English Literature—Dodoens' Herbal, 1578—Fuchs, Neu Kreuterbuch, 1543—Books of Emblems—a Set of the Tudor Translations—Editions de Luxe of Lamb, Tennyson, Pater, Kingsley, Lytton, Meredith, and others—
Library Editions of Hakluyt's Voyages, 12 vols., Burton's Arabian Nights, 12 vols., Fielding, 12 vols., Horace Walpole, 16 vols., Large Paper, Scott, 43 vols., Goethe, 14 vols., and Schiller, 10 vols.—Crisp's
Visitation of England, Wales, and Ireland, 19 vols.—Lodge's Portraits, India Proofs, 8 vols.—the Historical Writings of Gibbon, Motley, Dunry, Curtius, and others—Books on Anthropology—First Editions,
&c.
Catalogues on application.

STEVEN'S AUCTION ROOMS. Etab. 1769.

Important Sale of British Lepidoptera.

TUESDAY and WEDNESDAY, February 23 and 24, at 1 o'clock.

MR. J. C. STEVENS will offer for SALE by AUCTION, at his Rooms, 38, King Street, Covent Garden,
London, W.C., the FIRST PORTION of the valuable and extensive COLLECTION of BRITISH LEPIDOPTERA formed by the late T.
MADDISON, Esq., F.E.S. The Collection is particularly rich in Rare and Extinct Species.
Catalogues on application.

STEVEN'S AUCTION ROOMS. Etab. 1769.

TUESDAY, March 2, at half-past 12 o'clock.

The COLLECTION of ENGLISH and FOREIGN SILVER, Porcelain Vases, Brass Work, Roman Pottery, Pictures, Prints, and Curios of every Description, formed by the late Dr. WILLIAM SPENCER LIGHTFOOT, R.N.; also the usual Assortment of Curios from all parts.

MR. J. C. STEVENS will SELL the above
Property by AUCTION, at his Rooms, 38, King Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C.

MESSRS. CHRISTIE, MANSON & WOODS
respectfully give notice that they will hold the Following
SALES by AUCTION, at their Great Rooms, King Street, St. James's
Square, the Sales commencing at 1 o'clock precisely:—

On WEDNESDAY, February 24, fine EN-GRAVINGS by ALBERT DÜRER, and ENGRAVINGS of the EARLY ENGLISH SCHOOL.

On THURSDAY, February 25, OLD ENGLISH
SILVER PLATE from various Sources.

On FRIDAY, February 26, the COLLECTION of EARLY STAINED GLASS PANELS of the late W. J. BRAIKEN-RIDGE, Esq.; OBJECTS of ART, RENAISSANCE, and other FURNITURE of the late EDWARD STEINKOPFF, Esq., and others.

On SATURDAY, February 27, PICTURES by OLD MASTERS.

WILLIAM BEMROSE, F.S.A., DECEASED, ELMHURST, DERBY.

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT of the FORTHCOMING SALE of the valuable and rare COLLECTION of EARLY ENGLISH
PORCELAIN, Objects of Art of the Sixteenth, Seventeenth, and Eighteenth Centuries—Limoges and Battersea Enamels—European and Oriental Porcelain, Bijouterie—choice Collection of Oil Paintings—Water-Colour and Pastel Drawings—Miniatures—Carved Ivories—Bronzes—Weapons—Antique Furniture of the Queen
Anne, Chippendale, Hepplewhite, and Sheraton Periods—Silver Objects, and other Effects—the whole of which

MESSRS. T. NEALE & SON, of Nottingham, are favoured with instructions from the Executors to SELL by AUCTION, without reserve, at the Residence, ELMHURST, DERBY, on MONDAY, TUESDAY, WEDNESDAY, THURSDAY, and FRIDAY, March 1, 2, 3, 4 and 5, 1909, commencing each day at 11 o'clock precisely.

Descriptive illustrated Catalogues (price One Shilling each) are now ready, and may be had upon application, by post or otherwise, at the Auctioneers' Offices, Milton Street, Nottingham.

THE COLLECTION WILL BE ON VIEW AT ELMHURST, DERBY.

PRIVATE VIEW on WEDNESDAY and THURSDAY, February 24 and 25; admission by card only, to be obtained from the Auctioneers.

PUBLIC VIEW on FRIDAY and SATURDAY, February 26 and 27; admission by Catalogue (price One Shilling each, to admit Two Persons), to be obtained from the Auctioneers.

Magazines, &c.

EBENEZER PROUT'S WORKS.
Bound, each net, 5s.

HARMONY: its Theory and Practice. Twenty-fourth Impression.
Revised and largely Re-written.

ANALYTICAL KEY TO THE EXERCISES in the Same. Net 3s.

COUNTERPOINT: Strict and Free. Ninth Impression.

DOUBLE COUNTERPOINT AND CANON. Fourth Impression.

FUGUE. Fifth Impression.

FUGAL ANALYSIS. Third Impression.

MUSICAL FORM. Seventh Impression.

APPLIED FORMS. Fifth Impression.

THE ORCHESTRA. 2 vols. Fourth Impression.

AUGENER, Ltd., 6, New Burlington Street, and 22, Newgate Street.

THE BUILDER (founded 1842), 4, Catherine

Street, London, W.C., February 20, contains:—

SOME OLD CASTLES IN GERMANY.

THE LOCAL GOVERNMENT BOARD REPORT.

TOWN PLANNING (Institute of Architects).

SCHOOLS (Architectural Association).

ROMANESQUE ARCHITECTURE ON THE CONTINENT (Society of Architects).

LECTURES AT CARPENTERS' HALL.

"MONOLITHIC" FLOORS.

ILLUSTRATIONS:

ROYAL INSURANCE BUILDINGS, PICCADILLY;

DESIGN FOR A LANDING-STAGE FORMING APPROACH
TO A ROYAL PALACE (Grissell Medal Prize Design).

From Offices as above (4d., by post 4½d.), at Railway Bookstalls, Bookshops, and of all Newsagents.

MESSRS. METHUEN'S NEW BOOKS

Messrs. Methuen's New Illustrated Announcement List, containing Notes of many new and interesting Books, is now ready, and will be sent post free to any applicant.

GENERAL LITERATURE

TRAGEDY QUEENS OF THE GEORGIAN ERA. By JOHN FYVIE. With 16 Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

This book is a series of biographical sketches of all the most prominent English tragedy actresses of the eighteenth century, from the famous Madam Barry and the fascinating Oldfield down to the majestic Siddons. In every case the strictly professional career of the performer is made subordinate to the private life and character of the woman.

THE THRESHOLD OF RELIGION. By R. R. MARETT, M.A., Fellow and Tutor of Exeter College, Oxford. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

A new book on Primitive Religion. "Mr. Marett's treatment is vigorous, lucid, and worthy of the best traditions of Oxford. This collection of terse, tense, compressed essays exhibits in a remarkable degree unity of design and method."—Morning Post.

HOME LIFE IN ITALY. By LINA DUFF GORDON (Mrs. Aubrey Waterfield). With many Illustrations, of which 13 are by AUBREY WATERFIELD. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

"One of the most delightful books about Italian life that we have ever read."—Athenæum.

MAN AND THE UNIVERSE. By Sir OLIVER LODGE, F.R.S. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

"It is impossible to withhold sympathy from the genuine fervour with which Sir Oliver devotes himself to breaking down the notion that the scientific conception of the world is incompatible with the religious or spiritual view."—Times.

LORENZO THE MAGNIFICENT: and Florence in Her Golden Age. By E. L. S. HORSBURGH. Illustrated. Demy 8vo, 15s. net.

"A work of literary value and philosophic value, which will bring profit and delight at every reading."—Outlook.

HER INFINITE VARIETY: a Feminine Portrait Gallery.

By E. V. LUCAS. Fcap. 8vo, gilt top, 5s. [Third Edition.]

This is uniform with 'The Open Road,' 'The Friendly Town,' &c.

"Surely a like array of beautiful and entertaining women was never marshalled."—Spectator.

THE WIND IN THE WILLOWS. By KENNETH GRAHAME, Author of 'The Golden Age.' Crown 8vo, gilt top, 6s. [Third Edition.]

"The adventures are told with many a pretty turn of fancy and many a little gem of description, such as only a master of English could give us."—Daily Mail.

THE CREED IN THE EPISTLES. By WILFRID RICHMOND, M.A. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.

Major Hume's New Series.—ROMANTIC HISTORY.

TWO ENGLISH QUEENS AND PHILIP. By MARTIN HUME, M.A., Pembroke College, Cambridge. With a Frontispiece in Photogravure and 12 other Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 15s. net.

"A fine and masterly volume. The book is better reading than any historical novel, and it has the crowning virtue of being true."—Daily Telegraph.

THE FIRST GOVERNESS OF THE NETHERLANDS: Margaret of Austria. By ELEANOR E. TREMAYNE. With 20 Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

"A singularly careful and conscientious piece of work."—Morning Post.

READINGS ON THE PARADISO OF DANTE. Chiefly based on the Commentary of BENVENUTO DA IMOLA. By the Hon. WILLIAM WARREN VERNON, M.A. With an Introduction by the BISHOP OF RIPON. A New and Improved Edition. In 2 vols. crown 8vo, 15s. net.

"A monument of industry and a work which no student of Dante would care to be without."—Westminster Gazette.

THE INDIAN BORDERLAND: being a Personal Record of Twenty Years. By Sir T. H. HOLDICH, K.C.I.E. With 22 Illustrations and a Map. New and Revised Edition. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

This work contains a personal record of those military and political expeditions which, during the last twenty years, have led to the consolidation of our present position in the north-west frontier of India.

THE THOUGHTS OF LUCIA HALLIDAY. Edited by R. M. Fcap. 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.

This book is meant to be taken up in leisure hours, and to be companionable when you lounge under a tree in summer, or enjoy a lonely hour by a winter fire.

THE AGE OF THE ENLIGHTENED DESPOT, 1660-1789. By A. H. JOHNSON, M.A., Fellow of All Souls'. With many Maps. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. [Six Ages of European History.]

THE REMAKING OF MODERN EUROPE: 1789-1878. By J. A. R. MARRIOTT, M.A. With many Maps. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. [Six Ages of European History.]

This is intended to serve as a text-book for the highest forms in schools, particularly for those preparing for Local and other similar examinations.

ENGLAND'S RUIN: Discussed in Fourteen Letters to a Protectionist. By A. M. S. METHUEN. Crown 8vo, 3d. net. [Eighth Edition.]

This is the eighth edition, and the book has been carefully revised and all the figures brought up to the end of 1906.

OUTLINES OF PHYSICAL CHEMISTRY. By GEORGE SENTER, D.Sc. (Lond.), Ph.D., Lecturer in Chemistry at St. Mary's Hospital Medical School. With many Diagrams. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. [Textbooks of Science.]

This book is designed to serve as a general introduction to Physical Chemistry, and is specially adapted to the needs of electrical engineers.

METHUEN'S SIMPLIFIED GERMAN TEXTS.

Edited by T. R. N. CROFTS, M.A., Modern Language Master at Merchant Taylors' School, London. Fcap. 8vo, 1s. each.

DER MULLER AM RHEIN. | UNDINE UND HULDBRAND.
DIE NOTHELFER.

FICTION

HOLY ORDERS. By MARIE CORELLI. 110th Thousand. Crown 8vo, 6s.

KATHERINE THE ARROGANT. By B. M. CROKER, Author of 'Peggy of the Bartons.' Crown 8vo, 6s. [Second Edition.]

This is, like all Mrs. Croker's works, vivacious and arresting; the story of a young orphan girl of good birth and education whom circumstances force to earn her own living—always an attractive theme to the modern novelist of manners. Chance gives her as employer an unscrupulous old woman, and the story follows her adventures, not only in London but in Switzerland, with much entertaining thoroughness.

BROTHERS ALL: More Stories of Dutch Peasant Life. By MAARTEN MAARTENS, Author of 'An Old Maid's Love.' Crown 8vo, 6s. [Second Edition.]

The Dutch peasant of to-day may be said to be as unknown to readers as the Dutch peasant of Ostade and Jan Steen are known to art critics. In his new book Mr. Maarten Maartens, the Dutch writer, who has, like Mr. Conrad, chosen English as his literary medium, has taken the Dutch peasant for his theme, and it will be impossible any more for wise readers to plead ignorance of that interesting personality.

THE GIFTED FAMILY. By BARRY PAIN, Author of 'Lindley Kays.' Crown 8vo, 6s. [Second Edition.]

Mr. Barry Pain's new and divertive story opens in a sitting-room over a bookseller's shop in the Finchley Road. The bookseller, an enthusiastic Meredithian, has a family of three daughters and a son. The book is full of humorous observations.

THE STORY OF VIRGINIA PERFECT. By PEGGY WEBLING, Author of 'Blue Jay.' Crown 8vo, 6s. [Second Edition.]

"A book at once fragrant and unconventional."—Punch.

"A delicate and beautiful piece of work."—Morning Leader.

"It is rarely that one reads a novel having such delicate characterization and conveying such a dainty sense of charm."—Manchester Courier.

"Here is a book that the New Year will find hard to beat, welcome as the aconite and snowdrop, full of tears and laughter and true human things."—Morning Post.

THE FLOWER OF THE HEART. By H. B. MARRIOTT WATSON. Crown 8vo, 6s. [Third Edition.]

"The incidents are not only exciting but of real power and passion."—Morning Post.

"The story is an admirably conceived and admirably written piece of dramatic fiction."—Outlook.

"The book is of absorbing interest and a masterly piece of work."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"Alice Eversley is one of the sweetest, most delicately charming women of modern fiction."—Daily Mail.

"A fine and powerful novel. No one can question the sincerity and power."—Daily Telegraph.

A SON OF THE EMPEROR. By NEWTON V. STEWART. Crown 8vo, 6s. [Ready.]

"Mr. Stewart works out with great skill the pattern of the story, and has written a book of unusual interest."—Daily Mail.

"Mr. Stewart has written his story with spirit, and he has an eye for colour and the picturesque."—Daily Chronicle.

IN THE POTTER'S HOUSE. By G. D. ELDRIDGE. Crown 8vo, 6s. [Ready.]

"The author is comparable to Mr. Caine because of his splendid inventiveness of incidents and his ceaseless fluency."—Daily News.

"The attitudes of the characters are powerfully handled and the whole book has strength and freshness."—Morning Leader.

"It is a strong work, and the characters are etched in incisively and vehemently."—Standard.

OVER BEMERTON'S: an Easy-going Chronicle. By E. V. LUCAS. Crown 8vo, 6s. [Fifth Edition.]

"Mr. Lucas has in these pages added to the debt of gratitude owed him by the reading public."—Spectator.

"Many delightful character sketches, much wisdom of life, and not a little book lore."—Tatler.

"How full of sparkle and grace, in fact quite worthy of Mr. Lucas's reputation."—Black and White.

TO BE PUBLISHED LATER

BARBARY SHEEP. By ROBERT HICHENS, Author of 'The Garden of Allah.' Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

MY LADY OF SHADOWS. By JOHN OXENHAM, Author of 'The Gate of the Desert.' Crown 8vo, 6s.

In this novel Mr. Oxenham's many readers have the pleasure of meeting again a number of old friends, Denise and Hugh Lamont, and Gaston des Comptes, and Prudent Vaurel and his bull-dog Boulout, out of 'Our Lady of Deliverance'; Dr. Coffin and the Leighs of Clyst and others out of 'John of Gerisau,' and many new ones, all most excellent company. The novel deals with a somewhat difficult and delicate situation—the complete lapsus of memory on the part of a bride immediately after the wedding.

THE LOVE STORY OF ST. BEL. By BERNARD CAPES, Author of 'A Jay of Italy.' Crown 8vo, 6s.

SET IN SILVER. By C. N. and A. M. WILLIAMSON, Authors of 'The Lightning Conductor.' With a Frontispiece in Colour by ARTHUR H. BUCKLAND. Crown 8vo, 6s.

In this new novel, which describes a motor tour through England, Mr. and Mrs. Williamson again are faithful to the motor-car, into which they pack their characters, and from which are caught those glimpses of England which they give so alluringly.

MACMILLAN'S NEW BOOKS.

LORD AVEBURY'S NEW BOOK.

Peace and Happiness.

By the Right Hon. LORD AVEBURY. Crown 8vo, 6s.

Social Life at Rome in the Age of Cicero.

By W. WARDE FOWLER, M.A., Author of 'The Roman Festivals of the Period of the Republic,' &c. With Map and Plans. 8vo, 10s. net.

The Ancient Greek Historians

(Harvard Lectures). By J. B. BURY, Litt.D. LL.D., Regius Professor of Modern History in the University of Cambridge. 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

The Characters of Theophrastus.

An English Translation from a Revised Text, with Introduction and Notes by R. C. JEBB, M.A., Fellow and Assistant-Tutor of Trinity College, Cambridge, and Public Orator of the University, 1870. A New Edition. Edited by J. E. SANDYS, Litt.D. 8vo, 7s. 6d. net. [Classical Library.]

The Acropolis of Athens.

By MARTIN L. DOOGUE, Professor of Greek in the University of Michigan. Fully illustrated. 8vo, 17s. net.

Jimbo. A Fantasy.

By ALGERNON BLACKWOOD. With Decorated Half-Titles to Chapters. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net. This is a striking study of the mind of an imaginative child during consciousness, and also through a period of physical unconsciousness. It is remarkable for its beautiful descriptive passages, its weird suggestions, and its fine implied teaching of sympathy and courage and truth.

The Poor Law Report of 1909.

A Summary Explaining the Defects of the Present System, and the Principal Recommendations of the Commission so far as relates to England and Wales. By HELEN BOSANQUET. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net. [Tuesday.]

The Novels of Henry James.

ÉDITION DE LUXE, in 23 vols. 8vo, 8s. 6d. net each. Vol. XI.—WHAT MAISIE KNEW. IN THE CAGE. THE PUPIL.

NEW 6/- NOVELS.

TONO-BUNGAY.

By H. G. WELLS.

One Immortality.

By H. FIELDING HALL. Author of 'The Soul of a People,' &c.

Mars as the Abode of Life.

By PERCIVAL LOWELL, A.B. LL.D. Author of 'Mars and its Canals,' &c. Illustrated. 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

Notes of a Botanist on the Amazon and Andes.

Being Records of Travel during the Years 1849-1864. By RICHARD SPRUCE, Ph.D. Edited and Condensed by ALFRED RUSSEL WALLACE, O.M. F.R.S. With Portrait of the Author and other Illustrations and Maps. 2 vols. 8vo, 21s. net.

SEVENTH EDITION. JUST PUBLISHED.

A Popular Handbook to The National Gallery.

Vol. I. FOREIGN SCHOOLS.

Compiled by EDWARD T. COOK. With Preface by JOHN RUSKIN, LL.D. Crown 8vo, leather, 10s. net. In this new edition of Mr. Cook's well-known Handbook, not only have all recent acquisitions been included, but the Text has been carefully revised throughout.

CHEAPER RE-ISSUE.

The Bible Story for Children of all Ages.

By HELEN N. LAWSON. Revised by FREDERICK P. LAWSON, M.A. THE BEGINNINGS OF THE JEWISH CHURCH. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

The Assassination of Abraham Lincoln and its Expiation.

By DAVID M. DEWITT. 8vo, 9s. 6d. net.

MACMILLAN & CO., LTD., London.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

The Short Cut to India.

The Record of a Journey along the Route of the Baghdad Railway.

By DAVID FRASER,

Author of 'A Modern Campaign' and 'The Marches of Hindustan.'

With 83 Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. net. [Shortly.]

This is a record of a journey from Constantinople to Bombay over the route of the projected and partly completed Baghdad Railway. When travelling in the deserts of Mesopotamia on Christmas Day, 1907, Mr. Fraser was attacked by an Arab robber and received dangerous wounds from which he did not recover for six months. His new book mainly records this adventurous journey, but it also contains an exhaustive study of many interesting aspects of the Baghdad Railway question.

Three Books to Note

DIVERSION.

Leaves from the Diary of a Country Cricketer.

By W. E. W. COLLINS. 6s.

"Anecdotes of the tented field practically unrivalled for their interest and variety."

Daily Telegraph.

"There is not a dull page in the book."

Newcastle Chronicle.

"Excellent reading and is sure to appeal to cricketers."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"Full of good stories capitally told."

Glasgow Herald.

INSTRUCTION.

Some Eighteenth- Century Byways and other Essays.

By JOHN BUCHAN. 7s. 6d. net.

"The author has a wide range of interests and of reading, and his style possesses that impalpable quality of distinction which is born and not acquired."—Spectator.

"A masterpiece not only of literary but social criticism."—Glasgow Herald.

ROMANCE.

Winged Dreams.

By HELEN COLEBROOKE. 6s.

"A modern society story written by an author who really knows the world she is describing."

Spectator.

"Diana is a heroine worthy of George Eliot..... a charming and even brilliant story, and one that bids fair for the future work of the author."

Glasgow Herald.

"A story of excellent promise."—Globe.

READ the lucid criticism of

LORD MORLEY'S REFORMS

in the February No. of 'BLACKWOOD.'

By Sir C. H. T. Crosthwaite, entitled:

'The Tangle in India.'

W. BLACKWOOD & SONS,
Edinburgh and London.

MR. JOHN LANE'S NEW LIST

ON THE TRACKS OF LIFE.

The Immorality of Morality. Translated from the Italian of LEO G. SERA by J. M. KENNEDY, with an Introduction by Dr. OSCAR LEVY. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

Dr. Sera is a physician who has deeply studied literature and historical science, and the object of his book is, in the opening words of the preface, "to establish our conception of social life on its original basis." He holds that the diffusion of democratic principles is vulgarizing science and art, and that present social conditions, especially work and Christian teaching, are leading to the intellectual and moral degeneration of the race.

UNDER PETRAIA, WITH SOME SAUNTERINGS.

By the Author of 'In a Tuscan Garden.' With Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

Globe.—"Purely conversational in style as this book is, it possesses that indefinable literary charm which holds fast the reader who has once opened its pages, so that he cannot put it down till he has reached the end. Even then it will be taken up again and again, to be dipped into here and there as the fancy seizes us."

Academy.—"We can imagine no pleasanter preparation for a leisurely holiday in Northern Italy than the perusal of this volume."

A SISTER OF PRINCE RUPERT:

Elizabeth Princess Palatine, Abbess of Herford.

By ELIZABETH GODFREY, Author of 'Heidelberg: its Princes and its Palaces,' 'English Children in the Olden Time,' &c. With numerous Illustrations Reproduced from Contemporary Portraits, Prints, &c. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

Morning Post.—"No historical biography published during the last few years surpasses this one in the minuteness of its research and the width of the field it has covered."

ASPECTS OF MODERN OPERA.

By LAWRENCE GILMAN, Author of 'Phases of Modern Music,' 'Strauss,' 'Salome,' 'The Music of To-morrow, and other Studies,' 'Edward MacDowell,' &c. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d. net.

THE JOURNAL OF JOHN MAYNE

During a Tour on the Continent upon its Reopening after the Fall of Napoleon, 1814.

Edited by his Grandson, JOHN MAYNE COLLES. With numerous Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

BRITISH MALAYA.

An Account of the Origin and Progress of British Influence in Malaya. By Sir F. A. SWETTENHAM. With numerous Illustrations from Photographs. Demy 8vo. NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION. 7s. 6d. net.

LADIES FAIR AND FRAIL.

Sketches of the Demi-Monde during the Eighteenth Century. By HORACE BLEACKLEY, Author of 'The Story of a Beautiful Duchess.' With numerous Portraits reproduced from Contemporary Sources. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

NOVELS

LITTLE DINNERS WITH THE SPHINX.

By RICHARD LE GALLIENNE. 6s.

Observer.—"Ten little stories of the rarest, most delicate charm. Fantastic, of course; sentimental, sometimes tragic, with a kindly elf of humour smiling behind it all."

BALTHASAR.

By ANATOLE FRANCE.

THE MEASURE OF OUR YOUTH.

By ALICE HERBERT. 6s.

Observer.—"Active and telling picture...the book is mercilessly true—no sentiment is allowed to disguise weakness and failure."

SOMEONE PAYS.

By NOEL BARWELL. 6s.

LANE'S SHILLING LIBRARY

A WHIRL ASUNDER.

By GERTRUDE ATHERTON. CHEAP EDITION. 1s. net.

LIFE IN A GARRISON TOWN.

By F. O. BILSE. CHEAP EDITION. 1s. net.

JOHN LANE, The Bodley Head, Vigo Street, W.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 20, 1909.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE
SOME EIGHTEENTH-CENTURY BYWAYS	217
THE OXFORD DICTIONARY	218
ENGLISH JOURNALISM TO THE FOUNDATION OF THE GAZETTE	219
IAN MACLAREN	220
NEW NOVELS (One Immortality; The Story of Virginia Perfect; The Interrupted Kiss; The Graven Image; The Rogue of Rye; Henry of Navarre; The Combat; After the Pardon)	220-221
LOCAL HISTORY	221
SHORT STORIES	223
OUR LIBRARY TABLE (Unemployment; Responsible Government in the Dominions; Dod's Parliamentary Companion; Military Memoirs of Sir Joseph Thackwell; The Eye-Witness; Mummery's Climbs in the Alps and Caucasus; The Medici Popes; Nine Spanish Poems; Tables synoptiques de Phonologie de l'ancien Français; Siam Historical Research Society; Men and Women; Florio's Montaigne; The Fool of Quality; Dean Ramsay's Reminiscences; The Kalendar of Shepherds)	224-226
THE BRITISH MUSEUM READING-ROOM; 'NOTES ON THE VULGATE GOSPELS'; SALE	226-227
LIST OF NEW BOOKS	227
LITERARY GOSSIP	228
SCIENCE—THE ROYAL BOTANIC GARDENS, KEW; GARDENS PAST AND PRESENT; AN ARTIST'S GARDEN; A BOOK OF SIMILES; SOCIETIES; MEETINGS NEXT WEEK; GOSSIP	230-232
FINE ARTS—THE SOCIETY OF TWELVE; THE MODERN SOCIETY OF PORTRAIT PAINTERS; OTHER EXHIBITIONS; SALE; GOSSIP; EXHIBITIONS	232-234
MUSIC—SYMPHONY CONCERT; BROADWOOD CONCERT; MR. MACLEAN'S 'ANNUNCIATION'; GOSSIP; PERFORMANCES NEXT WEEK	234-235
DRAMA—THE TRUANTS; THE DANCING GIRL; THE SOURCES OF A 'MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM'; GOSSIP	235-236
INDEX TO ADVERTISERS	236

LITERATURE

Some Eighteenth-Century Byways, and other Essays. By John Buchan. (Blackwood & Sons.)

A CERTAIN note of distinction pervading Mr. Buchan's writing makes the reappearance in book form of these essays and reviews welcome. Most of them are on eighteenth-century subjects, and are concerned, directly or indirectly, with Scotland. Two of them—those on Prince Charles Edward and Mr. Secretary Murray—traverse much the same ground, though from a slightly different starting-point. It is an interesting speculation propounded by Mr. Buchan whether, if Charles Edward had been contented with Scotland alone, he might not have been successful in the Forty-Five: perhaps the possibilities in favour of the movement as it was actually conceived may be a little under-estimated. A legitimate plea for the Chevalier in his relations with his wife is put forward; but was it his "petulance" only, or chiefly, that "drove" his brother Henry into taking the cardinal's hat?

The traitor Secretary, Murray of Broughton, is reconsidered in the light of the recently published 'Memorials.' His merits as a writer are deservedly rated high; and as a man he is found to have been "capable of no little admiration for virtue and a genuine devotion to his friends," but one who was shipwrecked on the rock of physical cowardice. It is noted that Murray and the man he betrayed to death expressed much the same opinion of each other; but had Mr. Buchan read the recent work of Mr. W. C. Mackenzie on Simon Fraser, Lord Lovat, he would probably not have followed so nearly the popular estimate of that singular personage. He does acquit Lovat of Murray's absurd charge that he wished to have his Whig friend President Forbes of Culloiden murdered (Mr. Mackenzie seems to doubt even the story of the unexecuted warrant issued to Lovat); but though in one passage the essayist seems inclined to take a moderate view of the old fox of the Highlands, in another he stigmatizes him as "born to be a traitor to any cause he espoused," and a little later writes that "he committed every known treachery and sin." These later excerpts are from the twofold essay called 'The Making of Modern Scotland,' which is a great deal more than a mere review of Mr. Lang's 'History' and Sir Henry Craik's 'Century of Scottish History,' and may with advantage be studied by Southrons. Some Scotsmen may take exception to the description of Dundas as "the representative Scotsman of this epoch," who was "less the leader of a party than of a nation"; but the sympathetic handling of Montrose will appeal to all.

"There is a type of woman who is specially made by Heaven for a long life, because she has the true receptive mind which can profit, and make the world profit, by the processes of time," remarks Mr. Buchan concerning two of his subjects—Scott's correspondent Lady Louisa Stuart, and Lady Jane Scott, "a Scottish lady of the old school," whose favourite motto was "Haud fast by the past." The claim that Lady Louisa's letters were equal to those of her "more famous" grandmother, Lady Mary Wortley Montagu, may appear somewhat excessive, but there is something to be said for it. That Sir Walter's friend had limitations is shown by her disparagement of Madame de Sévigné when comparing her with her own relative. But it is well said that "she was a true child of her century; her good sense was always leavened with imagination and sympathy, half given by temperament, and half by the teaching of time." Of Lady Jane we are reminded that the "Jock Scott" salmon-fly was named after her husband, and that the first specimen was dressed with a lock from her hair. She deserves to be remembered, if only for her version of 'Annie Laurie,' though we do not quite comprehend how that famous song could have become "a kind of 'Marseillaise' for Chicago patriots."

Two of the best studies in Mr. Buchan's collection are those of Lord Mansfield and the eleventh Earl of Buchan, the latter somewhat infelicitously headed 'A Comic Chesterfield.' In the former the essayist displays to great advantage his considerable powers of psychological analysis, and makes suggestive comparisons between the great Chief Justice—"the Chief Justice for all time"—and Lords Chatham and Lovat. "A little of the Bute type of High Tory, a little of the French intellectuel, and something of the enlightened critical man of affairs" are made the components of his political character; aurea mediocritas is the stamp happily applied to his legal talent. The defence of his limitations is perhaps more subtle than convincing; and to contend that "incomplete humanity" is "scarcely a defect" surely comes perilously near special pleading. The essayist finds it difficult to accept the view that the future Lord Mansfield's first disappointment in love was merely his temporary rejection by his future wife; he thinks that when Pope came forward to console his friend it was a question of the frustration of "the one grand passion" which "his equable nature ever entertained." On the other hand, Mr. Buchan hesitates to accept, in favour of his hero, Brougham's conjecture that "the Earl of M." who remained, according to Lord Camden, unmoved at the spectacle of Chatham's collapse in the House of Lords, was not Mansfield, but Marchmont. Some readers will be puzzled at finding Horace Walpole spoken of as a disparager of Mansfield on one page (88) and as a eulogist on another (99); whilst it will hardly be clear to them who is the "Walpole" named on the latter page as "one who hated him as a clever alien who had no part in the Whig family circle." It could hardly be Sir Robert. A fine passage in the essay describes the scene in the House of Lords when Mansfield, escaping from the Gordon rioters, took Thurlow's place on the Woolsack; and his one pathetic reference to the loss of his great library, when presiding at the trial of the Protestant ringleaders, is effectively introduced.

Most entertaining as well as excellently critical is the essay on Scott's "Prince of Bores," the Earl of Buchan. It is recognized that he possessed considerable talents, and was heavily handicapped by having had as younger brothers one Erskine who was the most popular advocate of his day in Scotland, and another who reached the English Woolsack after a brilliant forensic career. Sir Walter could not help regretting the man who had given him his first word of praise at the Edinburgh High School, even though in later years he forced himself into Scott's sick chamber to make premature arrangements for his funeral; and the epithet "Mæcenas à bon marché" was probably not meant to convey an imputation of meanness. Of all the diverting things recorded of the man who held that he was one of the three great men of his generation (the others being Frederick of Prussia and his "cousin," Washington), perhaps the best is his contention that his brothers, the great lawyers, owed everything to himself:—

"On my father's death they pressed me for a small annual allowance. I knew that this would have been their ruin by relaxing their industry. So, making a sacrifice of my inclination to gratify them, I refused to give them a farthing. And they have both thriven since—owing everything to me."

The Earl would call Sir Thomas Browne "my grandfather," and was accustomed so completely to identify his ancestors with himself as to remark at the dinner-table: "I remember I remonstrated strongly, before it took place, against the execution of Charles I." But Scott at the last credited with "very considerable talents" this patron of Thomson and founder of the Scottish Society of Antiquaries, the unveiling of whose Wallace statue was marred by some wag's decoration of it with a German tobacco-pipe; and Mr. Buchan shows that the man's follies were not those of the vulgar, and that, with an uncertain taste, he had a little real aptitude for letters.

With the exception of the paper on 'The Victorian Chancellors' and the concluding essay, 'The Apocalyptic Style,' most of the other contents of the volume are of slighter texture. The reference to the exceedingly bourgeois Campbell as "that lighthearted nobleman" is not happy, and the grave faults of his work, which Mr. Atlay has noticed in much more commendable a spirit, are treated somewhat over-leniently. Something like a contradiction concerning the feeling entertained of Lyndhurst by his contemporaries appears in statements on opposite pages, and the appreciation of Lord Halsbury may seem to some rather high-pitched; but the essay as a whole is a most competent review.

The destructive analysis of the Tolstoyan argument against war strikes us as more successful than the writer's own constructive idealization; and we greatly doubt whether most readers will agree with Mr. Buchan in placing Mr. Balfour above Lord Morley as the first of literary statesmen of to-day, even though they may concede to the former that "eighteenth-century's own authentic voice" which is claimed for him. The essays on Bunyan and Rabelais are good specimens of exposition in brief, and that on Mommsen contains acute remarks; whilst the much abused Castlereagh has justice done to him.

We must say a brief word in praise of the concluding essay. Mr. Buchan's philosophical condemnation of 'The Apocalyptic Style' is valuable. He lays his finger on the most serious result of its prevalence—its inevitable tendency towards "the cheapening of serious things in the public mind." This is worse than the degradation it entails on those who practise it, or even the incidental fact, in the case of writers, that the business of criticism suffers. "Suburban sublimity," not mere fine writing, is what is meant: it is the "lie in the soul," not the mere offence against good taste, which constitutes the gravity of the sin. The doctrine of "the appropriate style" is inculcated as the remedy. Sometimes the essayist seems a little paradoxical, as when he maintains that the romantic revival was not a revolt from eighteenth-century standards, but "more correctly, in its best form, a natural development." Incidentally Mr. Buchan, in his able defence of the often-belittled age preceding that revival, credits it with having produced among its great men Marlborough, who was nothing if not a child of the Stuart restoration. We have very few such faults to charge against the essayist, who, however, writes "Mrs. Ratcliffe" (p. 50), and cannot make up his mind between "Drummond of Balhaldy" (p. 9) and "of Bohaldie" (p. 61), or between St.

Germain and St. Germain. The epithet "hag-ridden" seems to have a somewhat baleful attraction for him.

A New English Dictionary on Historical Principles. — Premisal — Prophecier. (Vol. VII.) Edited by Sir James A. H. Murray. (Oxford, Clarendon Press.)

THE publication of three consecutive triple sections of the letter P in the Oxford Dictionary encourages a hope that the same amount may in future be issued every three months. Another such instalment will hardly suffice to finish P and fill the remaining gap, while the instalment announced for April 1st, edited by Dr. Craigie, is not likely to finish the letter R. But, whatever the quarterly rate of production may be, the standard of unparalleled excellence is maintained without variation. This is well shown in the treatment of the syllable "prime" used as a substantive, on which three distinct articles are correctly given: one on "prime" from Latin prima (hora) = first hour, or 6 A.M.; a second on the "Absolute use of Prime, a., or of its Lat., Fr., or other equivalent"; a third on the use as a noun of the verb "prime" = fill, load, charge, &c., of uncertain origin. It is further suggested that two more words may be included under the meanings "basket-maker's conical bodkin" and "footstep of a deer." In addition to these marked improvements and the multitude of illustrative quotations—ranging from the tenth century for the main substantive; the sixteenth for the second, of which the meanings are technical; the seventeenth for the third, and the end of the fourteenth for the adjective—we find several uses and combinations which all former dictionaries have omitted; e.g., the colloquial use as adverb of the adjective; "prime," sb., meaning "a first coat of paint," "the half of a sword next the hilt," Chaucer's "at pryme face" and Caxton's "of prymeface" (= prima facie), and "prime day," "p. song," "p. tone." The general public should be interested to learn that in official use Beaconsfield was in 1878 the first to be styled "Prime Minister," and that Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman in 1905 was the first to take office with the title "fully recognized, and the precedence of the Prime Minister defined by King Edward VII." Words and combinations involving the Latin adjective primus take up a large share of the space in this section not occupied by compounds formed with the prepositions "pre-," "preter-," and "pro-."

In the admirable article on "principle," sb., the phrase "a crauing of the principle" = petitio principii (Golding, 'De Mornay,' 1587) is noteworthy. The restriction of the phrase "on principle" to moral and conscientious motives can hardly be applied to the quotation about an insurance company "defending" at law "on principle," and certainly leaves in the air Sam Weller's man "as killed his-self on principle," "in support of his great principle that crumpets was wholesome." It is interesting to observe that for "proletariate" the earliest quotation is "a poor, ignorant, and venal proletariat," from The Times of November 19th, 1853, the year in which F. Bastiat published his 'Essays on Political Economy,' in which, we are told, he contrasted prolétaires with capitalists.

Though "prime-staff" is an unwarranted disguise of Swedish primsstaf, Norwegian and Danish primstav, Icelandic primstafr, as the spelling is given under "primstaff," there should have been a cross-reference from the faulty form adopted by modern dictionaries.

Independently of a general impression that the Oxford editors might have cited Milton more freely with advantage, we are convinced that his "great progenitor," twice applied to Adam, should have been given, 'P. L.,' v. 544, and that he should have been quoted for "prologue" (ix. 854), "in her face excuse | Came p., and apology to prompt." Between 1758 and 1858 for "primness" Scott, 'Old Mortality,' chap. xxv. (1816), "His features were drawn up to a contemptuous p."; might have been inserted; and between 1615 and 1791 for "prescience" as a human faculty, "received my compliment with great acknowledgment of my p.," Spectator, No. 479 (1712). Within a few pages of the latter citation are to be found illustrations of "present," vb., in the sense "to propose as a member of a board" of directors of a fashionable society, "Old beaux are to be presented in the first place," No. 478; of "preserve" = make into jam, &c., "He could p. apricots, and make jellies, before he had been two years out of the nursery," No. 482; of "proceed" = make way in the world, "The modest man must p. and show a latent resolution in himself," No. 484; of "profess" with reflexive pronoun and "for," "Their authors have professed themselves for the modest man," No. 484; and a noteworthy use of "produce" = to bring into notice with a view to due recognition, "to p. the merit of such whose modesty would otherwise have suppressed it." Such rare and slight differences of meaning are explained and illustrated freely on almost every page of the Dictionary, but to deal with them here exhaustively is impossible. The only instance given of "presume" = be presumptuous, is dated 1797; yet Young, 'Night Thoughts,' ii. 621, has "Dare I presume then?" He gives the unrecorded construction "presumption on," ib., i. 374, and fills a gap from 1718 to 1884 as to "proceed" = go on with a discourse or investigation, ii. 629, "It is religion to proceed: I pause— | And enter, aw'd, the temple of my theme." Perhaps the phrase "private ear," used by Young, should have been noticed. Certainly "prize-fight" is earlier than 1824, and it probably dates from the eighteenth century. The combination "primrose-flower," which is not given, occurs in Wordsworth's 'Excursion'; and the modern use of "primrose" itself by poets and prose writers is almost entirely neglected. "Process-server" is in 'Pickwick,' chap. 43, in the description of the Insolvent Court. In the same chapter Mr. Pell's reference to himself as "a professional man" fills a gap in the quotations for that phrase.

One of the heaviest articles is that on "press," sb., ultimately from the past participle of Lat. premere, the earliest meaning being "crowd," "throng." It is thus commented on in the Prefatory Note:—

"The ramification of meaning is almost as notable as in board: it is a long way from the original sense...to the 'coffins like open presses' in 'Tam o' Shanter,' or to the views of 'the newspaper press,' and the 'representatives of the press,' who in the 16th century would have been somewhat different persons. The development of this last sense, connected as it is with the 'freedom of the press,' is an interesting chapter in sematology."

The very interesting and learned note on "premise," "premiss," informs us that the term is "due to mediæval Latin translations of Arabic terms."

A History of English Journalism to the Foundation of the Gazette. By J. B. Williams. (Longmans & Co.)

MR. WILLIAMS is to be congratulated on a successful attempt to plough a way through the drifts of English journalism during the Great Rebellion, for this is what his work amounts to in great measure, though by no means entirely. As might be expected, it offers many points of interest, and some few of debate. In his introductory chapter the author has hardly laid sufficient emphasis on the fact that printing was a matter of royal prerogative in most countries of Christendom, and that this made press censorship easy. Francis I. forbade printing altogether in his realm for a considerable period, and Charles I. claimed in 1637 that "the print is the king's in all countries." When, in addition to this, the stringent laws and proclamations against false news, and meddling with affairs of State, which might involve being sent to the galleys as late as the time of Edward VI., are remembered, it is not to be wondered at that the earliest record of a news-book is found only at the end of Henry VIII.'s reign. The implied distinction between "book" and "sheet" at this period is, we believe, without foundation: during the reign of Elizabeth printed broadsides are officially referred to as books.

The first English periodical news-books actually preserved deal with foreign affairs, and date from 1622, though isolated "relations of news" were comparatively common from the beginning of the Stuart period. They were in general translations of foreign periodicals by the "military experts" who frequented the desecrated church of St. Paul's. The first periodical with a continuous title, the Mercurius Britannicus, was published in 1625. The author devotes some space to the identification of Ben Jonson's Capt. Hungry and the characters in 'The Staple of News,' and shows that the former was most probably Capt. Francis Gainsford. Hans Buz seems far-fetched for Mathew de Questor, and the identification is otherwise improbable. John Chamberlain seems to have been the moving spirit of much of this early journalism, and Thomas Archer its chief publisher. From the death of Chamberlain in 1627 to the sitting of the Long Parliament in 1641, nothing but foreign news was allowed to be printed, and the "corantos" that appeared had no running title or "catch-word." The Star Chamber, by and with the Stationers' Company, made journalism impossible.

The abolition of the Star Chamber was the beginning of a new period in English journalism. Not only did this act remove all means of constraint on the press, except for the few instances in which it was amenable to common law; but when King and Parliament were brought face to face, each was forced, and even anxious, to appeal to the public at large. In this way an enormous pamphlet literature came into being; but beyond that a demand arose for news, first of the proceedings in Parliament, and then, after the massacre of 1641 and the breach with Charles, of the general events of the day. The first periodical issued in response, Diurnal Occurrences, can be traced back to November 29th, 1641, though the title does not appear till December 20th. In 1642 the favourite title was Perfect Diurnal, and the series runs on to 1655, with from 1648 a rival, Perfect Occurrences. The Royalist party found it necessary to publish an opposition journal, and in consequence Mercurius Aulicus represents their views from January, 1643, to September, 1645, when it came to an end. Immediately a maddening maze of periodicals began to appear, the more important being The Kingdomes Weekly Intelligencer, continued to 1655, and Mercurius Civicus. A list of the journals issued for each year between 1641 and 1666 is one of the most important parts of Mr. Williams's book.

Some regulation of the press soon became necessary, and the Parliament found itself gradually forced into the same position as the government against which it had revolted. Ordinances were passed, and printers and authors condemned to fine or imprisonment at the bar of the House at will. In March, 1643, the power of committal to prison was delegated to a committee, and unauthorized reports of Parliamentary proceedings were declared a breach of privilege; while in June a board of licensers was constituted. This put an end to the anarchy of titles—henceforward the same name connotes the same publication; but as time went on and the authority of the Parliament weakened, other licensers appeared unquestioned. Further, a number of unlicensed Royalist periodicals, Mercuries Melancholicus, Pragmaticus, Eleuticus, kept up a chequered existence during the last years of the King's life. In September, 1649, all the licensed news-books were indirectly suppressed, two official journals, representing the Council of State and the Parliament, coming into existence, followed by a third representing the Army.

We have now arrived at a period when it is necessary to call attention to a somewhat regrettable aspect of Mr. Williams's 'History'—the strong prejudice under which it is written. No doubt the author finds in the facts he has brought forward a sufficient justification of this bias; but that is a different matter. Take an example. If the Act decided on in May and passed September 20th, "did not contemplate the total suppression of licensed news-books," what is "the importance of the total suppression of the licensed press in its bearing upon the question of how far Cromwell's massacres extended"? Obviously none, for the synchronism is accidental. Why, if the entries in the parish registers of Huntingdon of 1621 and 1628 are quoted against Cromwell, has no attempt been made to get at the register of the arch-deacon or bishop giving some account of the offence for which he was reprovved or ordered to do penance? In 1621 he was in the first year of his marriage; in 1628 he was elected M.P. Is it barely credible that the charges against him were anything but to his credit? Any one who has looked at the records will find the best men of the Eastern Counties condemned to penance, &c., for not kneeling at Communion and defaults of that kind. Moreover, Mr. Williams, to our mind, reads too much of modern conditions into Commonwealth times. Why should not a tailor make a good news-writer? The history of England, and of London especially, owes more to another tailor than can be easily stated. And what importance can be attributed to the personalities of the Slurks and Potts of the Commonwealth press? About public men certain lies were too gross for use, but the less prominent the men, the more easily were they misrepresented. A sharp distinction must be made between what the author states as fact and the statements he repeats from contemporary writers; the King's cause must have been bad indeed to be beaten by such a band of poor rascals as he represents the victors to be.

In September, 1655, the licensed press finally disappeared, and two official news-books took its place: the Mercurius Politicus, issued on Thursday, and The Publick Intelligencer on Monday. Each contained a full week's news, but the half-week contained in the other was reprinted. Thurloe, the Secretary of State, was responsible for their contents. Their monopoly was untouched till the return of the Rump in 1659, when their author was dismissed, and a number of new periodicals were started. On the Restoration The Publick Intelligencer, which had become The Parliamentary Intelligencer in 1659, changed its title once more to The Kingdom's Intelligencer. Both news-books came to an end in August, 1663, when fresh journals, The Intelligencer and The News, were founded by Sir Roger L'Estrange, which ran till January, 1666. By this time the bi-weekly Oxford Gazette had become The London Gazette, and, after crushing one or two rivals, remained the sole source of official information for many years. The history of all this is told at length by Mr. Williams, who has made many important discoveries as to the writers and printers of this enormous literature.

One curious side of journalism, on which Mr. Williams lays little stress, was the disposition of the Royalist press in the years before the Restoration to hide its purpose under the cloak of pornography. It is a phenomenon which, since the edict of October, 1905, can be studied in Russia, where many pornographic papers passed the police as being non-political, even reactionary, while not licentious enough for suppression, and subsequently developed a strong political tendency. Another little-known side of English journalism is the existence of French journals published in London for several years. We have found Mr. Williams singularly free from mistakes of fact, and though he has certainly gone out of his way to trail his coat before such established authorities as the writers of the 'Dictionary of National Biography,' Prof. Firth, and S. R. Gardiner, we are sure that he could make a stout defence of his position. If there is a chance of revision he should rearrange and rewrite some of the chapters, and so make it easier to read his invaluable record.

"Ian Maclaren": Life of the Rev. John Watson. By W. Robertson Nicoll. (Hodder & Stoughton.)

THE biographer of the late Ian Maclaren had a somewhat difficult task, in that the combination of the theologian and the humanist is rare, and involved something like writing two different lives. Dr. Watson, the preacher, the Moderator of the Presbyterian Church of England, the devoted parish minister, and Ian Maclaren, the framer of Scottish idylls, the intuitive critic and exponent of his countrymen, seem almost a contrast. On the whole, Dr. Robertson Nicoll has done his work well, though he has most to say on the ecclesiastical side of his subject. But he has not failed to reveal John Watson

"as a man of many gifts, of large and generous nature, of unwearied fidelity in service, and above all as a devoted minister of the Christian Church."

"A Highlander" Watson confessed himself to be.

"My mother was a Maclaren, and came from Loch Tay, and spoke the Gaelic tongue. My father was born at Braemar, and Gaelic was the language of my paternal grandfather."

When we add that his mother's ancestry was Roman Catholic, many traits of feeling and character are accounted for. He was a Jacobite at heart, though his reason rejected the Stuart claims. 'Beside the Bonnie Brier Bush,' the title of his best book, is taken from one of the sweetest of Jacobite songs. Patriotic to the core, after the news of Magersfontein "he scarcely spoke that day." Something of a mystic, he was attracted by the asceticism of the Roman Church, and there is a pathetic tale of his conversation with an Italian peasant-woman, ending thus: "I take back all I said. Forgive it, forget it. Do not let any word of mine stand between you and your prayers to the Mother of our Lord." This sympathy in religion was inevitable in one who saw the best in human nature.

Having, after some years' university and college preparation, including six months at Tübingen, chosen the Free Church of Scotland as the sphere of his ministry, Watson thereafter devoted his best energies to a succession of charges, Logierait and Glasgow being his early scenes of action, while Liverpool became the centre for many years of his labours and successes. These Dr. Nicoll treats very fully, as also the establishment of Westminster College at Cambridge, the Principalship of which Watson would have had but for his death. Large extracts from his American and other correspondence are given. His several visits to the States left him an enthusiastic admirer of the qualities of the nation. Some of the minor letters might perhaps have been spared, but many a ray of humour and shrewdness is to be found among them. He had been fifteen years at Liverpool before he published his first novel. Sentimentalism, observation, and an eye for locality are the characteristics of his work noted by the author. Without the versatile genius of Mr. Barrie, or the narrative capacity of Mr. Crockett, he had a real gift of pathos, and could portray character. His last work indicated a possibility of success in the regular novel.

Literature to Ian Maclaren was but a subordinate business. The present activities of a strenuous life engrossed his soul too much. But he had the gift of humour, which lightened his lot. Perhaps he shone most brightly as a conversationalist. Too short a chapter is allotted to this subject. One extract may be offered, illustrating the difference between the Highland and Lowland character:—

"Watson would tell of a gentleman in the west end of Edinburgh who was accustomed to ask a number of the poorer students of the University to the evening entertainments at his house.... At one of these solemn and improving functions a Highlander and a Lowlander met upon the stair.

"'Angus,' said the Lowlander, 'hoo are ye gettin' on? I'm daein' fine. The girl I have appears to be greatly pleased with me, and she's no ill-lookin'.' One may safely conclude from what one knows of a Scots country lad that he had sat on the extreme edge of his chair all the evening, and had hardly uttered a word, and that the poor young woman had been bored to death.

"'Jock,' said the Highlander, 'the young lady who wass so good as to speak to me, and whom I am desiring to serve, asked me to get her what she called "blackmange." I am willing to do her bidding, and would be ready to go anywhere and take that blackmange from any man who hass it. But I do not know what it is. I would not be saying that to the young lady, but I am feeling very sore in my heart that I cannot get her the blackmange, and, Jock, I wish to heaven I was outside this house with honour to myself.'"

NEW NOVELS.

One Immortality. By H. Fielding Hall. (Macmillan & Co.)

MR. FIELDING HALL has chosen the form of a novel for his latest reflections on the philosophy of life. The reader will find, however, no plot, and no action in the story; the characters, who are fellow-travellers on the voyage from Venice to India, are only brought together to give expression to the author's theories concerning love and marriage, the difference between East and West, and kindred matters. The group consists of two married couples—one happy and the other unhappy; some nuns; an Indian girl and her European admirers; a delightful German professor; and two Englishmen, one of whom, Holt, a dreamy, mystical person, engages in a prolonged and laboured, though ultimately successful courtship of an English girl who is also of the party. They all move in an atmosphere of divine discontent and self-analysis, and the language which they employ in conversation is not suitable for ordinary usage. But Mr. Fielding Hall is a poet in feeling, and if on this occasion he is disappointing as an exponent of the East to the West, there is beauty both in his ideas and his expression of them.

The Story of Virginia Perfect. By Peggy Webling. (Methuen & Co.)

A HEAVY responsibility is laid upon the heroine who must prove herself worthy of this evidently symbolic title, and it is much to the credit of its bearer that, being thus heavily handicapped, she is still a lovable person. Our sympathy goes readily out to Virginia during the trials of an uncongenial marriage, culminating in the treachery, under peculiarly aggravated conditions, of her husband, and up to this point the story develops artistically; but the interest hereafter slackens, and the conclusion seems to be unnecessarily deferred. The characters, taken almost wholly from lower middle-class London life, are few, but presented with freshness and individuality, Virginia's false friend being especially well imagined. The artist hero is a nice young man, but we do not altogether believe in him.

The Interrupted Kiss. By Richard Marsh. (Cassell & Co.)

IN all melodrama there is a strong element of farce, and the melodramatic tales which Mr. Marsh produces with so much rapidity and ease are none the less pleasing because they are more farcical than most stories of their kind. In 'The Interrupted Kiss' a wealthy usurer is murdered by a burglar, and a number of perfectly innocent persons, including even the heroine, are each made to believe that they struck the fatal blow. The circumstances that create this confusion are neatly devised, and the narrative moves swiftly along to the closing scene, where, in accordance with tradition, all the figures in the story appear unexpectedly in a body. A story of this description is to be enjoyed all the more because the author makes it clear that he is not wholly unconscious of its absurdity. Mr. Marsh, unlike many writers of melodramatic fiction, has a sense of humour.

The Graven Image. By Mrs. Coulson Kernahan. (Milne.)

THE incidents in this briskly told tale violate the probabilities of life, but they grip the attention; the characterization is of no interest apart from the plot, but it has vividness and strength. Perhaps a frankly melodramatic story can deserve no higher praise. The scene of the story is, for the most part, a lonely, prison-like house on the seacoast, the owner of which, a talented, passionate, unscrupulous man, employs his surgical skill in altering the features and finger-marks of such criminals as can afford to pay his exorbitant fees. Some of the scenes—particularly those in which the high-spirited heroine (a lady's companion in this strange household) struggles with the dominant will of the refined villain—are marked by dramatic power, but parts of the book have a gruesomeness which the more tender passages can scarcely be said to redeem. Mrs. Kernahan tells a tale of this description with unmistakable skill, but she has qualities of style and craftsmanship which might well be employed on stories more worthy of them.

The Rogue of Rye. By W. Willmott Dixon. (Chatto & Windus.)

MR. DIXON makes this romance, which is laid in the period of the First Empire, out of the imprisonment in France of several British subjects, including a young countess and two lieutenants. The title-character is a daring smuggler who out-matches a bigger rogue than himself. An old-fashioned novelist might have killed him for bestowing a stubborn and devout affection on a chaste barmaid whose beauty and noble pride entitle her to marry a man above her station in life. Mr. Dixon, however, without being distinctly the opposite to old-fashioned, is moral in his sentimentality, and his book may be safely commended to those who like a simple novel, unembarrassed by psychology, and plentifully supplied with incident.

Henry of Navarre. By May Wynne. (Greening & Co.)

THE practice of turning successful plays into novels appears to be on the increase. It dates at least as far back as the days of Charles Reade. The present romance is founded on the play of the same name now running at a London theatre. It has all the characteristics which such an origin involves, and the reader can recognize the divisional parts of the drama in the action of the book. The Massacre of St.

Bartholomew and the intrigues of the Medici queen-mother have been the inspiration of many tales, and will doubtless continue to furnish more. This transmogrified play makes a brisk and spirited narrative with rather crude and conventional characterization. Henry of Navarre and Margot de Valois are the central figures.

The Combat. By Arthur Campbell. (John Long.)

NOVA SCOTIA in the sixties may be fairly considered an original background for a novel, and it is one by no means lacking in interest. The landscape has a certain individuality, and the same is true of the inhabitants, who, amongst other traits distinguishing them from their Yankee neighbours, seem to have maintained the class traditions of an older civilization. The story (which is overlong) has an atmosphere of virility; that is to say, there is abundance of fighting, drinking, bad language, and chivalry of the blusteringly virtuous order. The heroine is a negligible quantity, and the most successful character is neither the hero nor the villain, though both of these are well enough, but an eccentric and intensely feminine old maid.

After the Pardon. By Matilde Serao. (Eveleigh Nash.)

'DOPO IL PERDONO' is hardly one of the novels that can be satisfactorily transplanted to our soil. Even in a more skilful English rendering than we find here, it would probably strike one as morbidly exaggerated and emotional; and indeed, though these qualities are less apparent in the original, they cannot be said to be absent from it. A young wife defies the conventions by openly leaving her husband and going to live with her lover; the fires of passion burn themselves out, and she returns to her husband, who offers to pardon her, while her lover, in accordance with her own counsel, marries the girl who has been devoted to him for years. Such is the situation presented to us, and though it is worked out with considerable psychological insight, the book as a whole fails to inspire genuine sympathy and interest. The characters all belong to that wealthy and luxurious section of society in which it seems rare for the normal human emotions to have free play, and one is apt to grow impatient with the artificiality of their doings.

LOCAL HISTORY.

Wells and Glastonbury. By Thomas S. Holmes. (Methuen & Co.)—Canon Holmes is well qualified by thirty years' residence and his long-sustained study of the mediæval records of this Western diocese to write the story of the cathedral church of Wells and the adjacent abbey of Glastonbury. Notwithstanding all that has been written on Wells, the author has in one respect attained to no small measure of originality, for which he merits considerable praise. The history of the town or city is treated of side by side with that of the great ecclesiastical foundation, and the whole is laudably free from errors.

In our opinion, however, this book of 300 pages would have been materially improved if the whole of it had been devoted to Wells. In several places the story of the cathedral city is compressed to the point of dryness, whilst the actual account of the great church and its remarkable group of well-preserved mediæval buildings is distinctly insufficient. As it is, only 180 pages are given to Wells, the remaining 120 being assigned to Glastonbury. Nor do we find it possible to agree with Canon Holmes's claim to have put together "all the wondrous life of the abbey," or with his statement that there is "little to say" about it. To attempt to tell the tale of the dissolution of Glastonbury Abbey and the shameless execution of Abbot Whyting in a few paragraphs is to carry condensation to excess. Again, if the legend connected with the Sacred Thorn and its Christmas blossoming was worth telling at all, it was worth more space.

It is perhaps too much to expect that Canon Holmes, who is singularly reticent in his comments throughout, would be strong in his condemnation of the unhappy and inartistic treatment of the choir of Wells by Mr. Salvin between 1848 and 1854; but an epitome of the disastrous work then effected ought assuredly to have been supplied. A like tenderness is shown towards other evil works of last century. The fact that the tomb of Bishop Beckington (who died in 1464) used to be yearly visited by the Mayor and Commonalty in solemn procession, as an acknowledgment of their gratitude for a good water supply and other benefactions to the town, is briefly mentioned; but nothing is said as to the intrusion of a pew for Dean Bathurst's lady within the fine iron grate of Beckington's beautiful chantry chapel; nor does Canon Holmes join with Canon Church in stating that "it was reserved for the restorers of the nineteenth century to thrust aside that historic monument in order to obtain a few more feet for the 'free seats' which now crowd the presbytery." It is also surprising that any one can write about Wells Cathedral without giving a certain amount of attention to the most beautiful set of misericords in England.

Mr. E. H. New is at his best in the illustrations with which the book is liberally furnished.

Sherwood Forest. By Joseph Rodgers. (Fisher Unwin.)—This handsome volume is at once an attraction and a disappointment. The typography is admirable, and many of the illustrations of ancient or historic trees are excellent. Moreover, the letterpress is written in an easy, pleasant style, and can be accepted as correctly appreciative of the many natural beauties of the Sherwood district. But this is all that can be said in favour of the book, for its sins of omission and commission will irritate the antiquary and all who are experienced in local topography.

The author does not seem to know the old Forest Law of England. For instance, when writing of the Plantagenet kings and their hunting visits to the royal lodge at Clipston, he says:—

"And perhaps when the cavalcade has gone by, there creeps stealthily from the hollow trunk of an oak tree near the church a figure of a man, though barely distinguishable from the wild beasts of the forest, for he is clothed in a rough, worn, and weather-stained garment, made from the skin of some animal, reaching from his throat to his knees, and giving him a half-savage aspect. Why is that scowl upon his face? Is it that he is starving, and has killed one of the king's deer, and knows that if he is taken his life will be the forfeit."

The early severity of Norman, and possibly of Saxon, forest laws came to an end in the thirteenth century. So much was this the case that the latest writer on England's forests tells us that "if a man was determined to poach venison, he met with far lighter punishment if the offence was committed in the royal forest than if he was dealt with by the common or manorial law for a like offence in a private park." If Mr. Rodgers had read the essay on the forestry of the county which appeared in the first volume of 'The Victoria History of Nottinghamshire' (1906), he would have been saved from a diversity of errors.

Another class of mistakes relates to monastic life within Sherwood. No arduous labour was necessary to enable the author to make his allusions to the old abbeys of Welbeck and Rufford or the priory (not abbey) of Newstead correct; but as it is, these short references are marred by many errors. The point may seem trivial to the casual reader, but no sound historical writer would confound monks with regular canons, yet Mr. Rodgers more than once writes of the White Canons of Welbeck as monks. It will be news, too, to students of monastic life that for nearly four hundred years "these Premonstratensian monks, with their linen gowns bound at the waist by a leather girdle, were familiar to the inhabitants as they traversed the forest paths."

To give a single instance of sins of omission, readily detected by those familiar with the delights of Sherwood Forest: it is stated on an early page that all that remains of the beautiful woodland of Sherwood "is comprised in that portion which passes under the names of Birkland and Billagh." As a proof of the incompleteness of such a statement, it must suffice to mention the noble group of old forest oaks at Haywood, near Blidworth, of which we cannot find any mention in these pages.

Selby Abbey, 1069-1908, by C. H. Moody (Elliot Stock), is generously illustrated. The photographic plates are good, and those showing the result of the fire of October, 1906, are of mournful interest. But the chief point in the illustrations is the remarkable skill shown by Mr. E. Ridsdale Tate in his delightful series of pen-and-ink drawings, small and large, of the abbey and its details, from almost every point of view. The frontispiece supplies a well-executed bird's-eye view of the great abbey church in the midst of its extensive conventual buildings previous to the Dissolution; it is styled "a suggestion partly based on existing remains."

The letterpress is scarcely worthy of the pictures: it shows no evidence of any original research, and even the printed works cited are often strangely old-fashioned. Fosbrooke's 'British Monachism,' with all its inaccuracies, served fairly well a century ago; but such advances have been made in monastic lore since Fosbrooke's days that any one relying upon his work is sure to find himself in pitfalls. Mr. Moody, however, has culled from Fosbrooke a short paragraph on what he terms the "symbolism of canonicals," and printed it by itself in the centre of a page of the Appendix. There is so much accurate modern writing on the daily round of a Benedictine monk that Mr. Moody's epitome of their procedure might have been much improved. He says, for instance, that after compline at seven o'clock "the monks sought rest in the solitude of their cells." But one of the main principles of their rule was sleeping in a common dormitory. Not a little space, which might have been devoted to a few of the many omitted incidents in the story of this great monastery, is devoted to ecstatic and inaccurate reflections. Thus the author writes: "The monks have gone, but their stupendous churches, God be praised! are still with us. Jealously let us guard our heritage!" It is well within the mark to say that not one in ten of the great churches belonging to the larger monasteries that Henry VIII destroyed stands at the present day; and of those that were bought back from the Crown to serve as parish churches, the large majority are in a mutilated condition.

The Preface anticipates the speedy issue of another edition. When this time arrives, Mr. Moody should undertake a careful revision, for misconceptions as to the Benedictines abound. An entry in a fifteenth-century expense roll names a certain sum "for Brother Robert Duffield's expenses at Oxford, 3s. 4d." To this is appended the remark that "it would seem that the monks occasionally pursued their studies elsewhere." There were three Benedictine colleges or halls at Oxford.

Church Book of St. Mary the Virgin, Tenby. By Edward Laws, F.S.A., and Emily Hewlett Edwards. (Tenby, J. Leach.)—A satisfactory town history may be compiled in various ways. Some are far too verbose, containing a multitude of speculations, and sometimes facts interesting in themselves, which have only the slightest relation to the matter in hand. Others are so rigidly matter-of-fact that we learn nothing further than is absolutely necessary about the persons or things connected with the place. The latter is undoubtedly the better plan when undertaken by competent persons, and the work before us is a good example of it. There is little or no wandering abroad, but great industry is displayed in the gathering and arrangement of material.

The first chapter, headed 'A Chronicle of Events,' though highly condensed, must have been a work of no little labour. The first entry relates to about 1090, when Arnulph de Montgomery conquered the greater part of South Pembrokeshire. That a pre-Norman church was then in existence cannot, we think, be called in question, but whether of wood or stone it is at present impossible to determine; if the latter, diligent trenching might expose portions of the Saxon foundations. The authors think that this early building may have been dedicated to Fraid or Bridget. The Norman structure was put under the patronage of St. Mary the Virgin. She was a favourite Norman saint, but not, the authors tell us, a Welsh patroness. In the fifth year of his reign John founded the house of St. Mary de la Pré as a place of rest for lepers and diseased women. These nuns are stated to have been persons of notoriously evil life. Whether the stories told of them are true we cannot say with certainty; but it is noteworthy that after the advowson of the church of Tenby fell to the Abbot of Glastonbury, Abbot John (probably John de Whethamstede, who ruled from 1420 to 1440) gave it to these nuns, an act highly improbable had they been notoriously violating their rule. Their nunnery was, however, suppressed by a Bull of Clement VII., and Tenby again became an appanage of St. Albans, and such it remained until the fall of the greater monasteries, when the rectorship came into the hands of the Crown. There it rested until late in the reign of Elizabeth, who sold her rectorial rights to the corporation of the town, which continued to hold them until they were taken away by the Municipal Corporations Act of 1835.

There is a tradition at Tenby, as elsewhere, that the church was desecrated by the Puritans, but there seems to be no proof of this; it is, indeed, far more probable that such havoc as there has been belongs to a later time. The future Lord Protector was, however, staying there in June, 1648, for we find 6s. 4d. was paid "for candles to the gards from the time lieutenant Generall Cromwell came till the 11th of June." A gallon of wine was supplied to him at the same time, and he seems to have been accompanied by a Mr. Petters, who had a gallon of sack on his own behalf. As it was the custom in those times to give wine to preachers, the authors feel "pretty certain that Hugh Peters preached from our pulpit, and among the congregation sat Oliver Cromwell." The preachers of those days were by no means total abstainers. In 1656-7 those who visited Tenby on a religious mission were each rewarded with a quart of sack.

The present church fabric is largely Decorated, though the arches below the earlier work are in great part Perpendicular. To those who are not familiar with the methods of the mediæval builders this must seem strange, but it is easy to account for by those who can enter into the feelings of the men of the Middle Ages, when the church was the centre of parish life. Every generation was anxious to improve its church, which was at once the place of contemplation on things holy, its assembly hall, and its gallery of art. Though the men of those days were desirous of making their church as beautiful as possible, they were conservative also. It was well for them to add to its attractions, but acutely painful to them to destroy, without urgent need, the work which had delighted their fathers and mothers. We have no doubt also that questions as to cost entered in, though they by no means took the first place. If a whole wall had been removed at the same time, the church, or at least a large part of it, would have been rendered useless, for masons' work went on slowly in those days. The mediæval builder, therefore, instead of demolishing all before him and starting afresh, was wont to break a hole corresponding to the size of the required arch.

The Early English church was built by Warine de Munchesney, husband of Joan Mareschal, Countess of Pembroke, in 1245. It no doubt stands on the same ground as that which almost certainly perished by fire some ninety years previously. It is not conceivable that for so long a period the town should have been left without a church of some kind or other, but it may well have been so small and so rude in character that no portion of it was permitted to encumber the site when the new fabric arose. The careful observer will still detect traces of Munchesney's building; but the church has suffered so much mutilation at various times that the Early English work has been for the most part obliterated.

Under the arch of the chancel in the south-west corner of the tower is a piscina which the authors regard as Norman. If so, it is a relic saved from the conflagration of 1186; but we cannot feel certain of this, for all the very small arches required to canopy the piscina have at times been made semi-circular. Very near this was the rood-loft stair; a square-headed recess marked the spot. This was recently opened, and a passage found that had been much tampered with. On the southern surface of this recess a picture was found painted on the plaster in black and red. It was much mutilated, but enough remained to show that it was a Crucifixion, with the attendant figures of St. Mary and St. John. The cross is what heralds call raguly, that is, the timber roughly trimmed, with the places where the branches had been left projecting. The nail which affixed the left hand of the divine figure to the cross is represented as piercing the forefinger. Can this be a blunder of the artist, or is it some piece of forgotten symbolism?

The bosses of the roof are noteworthy; engravings of several are given, and a complete catalogue of them. Though many are by no means good examples of mediæval carving, they are valuable as showing how our forefathers blended things humorous with things sacred. Thus we have a goose preaching to a man with his mouth covered by a broad band and the long ears of an ass, while not far away occurs St. Veronica, displaying the veil with which she is said to have wiped our Lord's face on His way to death. Another boss intended to produce merriment, which the authors think to represent a hypocrite, shows the head of a round-faced man who mocks with fingers in eyes and mouth. He has a long beard forming the hair of the smiling female face below. The mermaid which figures on another boss has a mirror in her left hand, a comb in her right, but the latter object is far more like a square box than that for which it was intended. Mermaids were symbols of temptation leading to destruction. We have rarely if ever seen them on bosses, but know of three examples of them on misereres, namely, in Chichester and Ripon Cathedrals and in Cartmel Church. They also frequently appear in pictures of St. Christopher fording the water with the Christ-Child on his shoulder. Perhaps the most interesting in the whole series is the figure of the five wounds arranged in the form of a cross, with the pierced heart in the centre.

Materials for a History of the Wither Family. By the Rev. R. F. Bigg-Wither. (Winchester, Warren & Son.)—The modest title of this comprehensive storehouse of facts suggests to the imaginative student the pleasure of reading between the lines; even a poorly equipped historian may clothe the dry bones of such an historical and genealogical record as his knowledge allows and may trace the fortunes of a thoroughly English family through the centuries. Mr. Bigg-Wither unduly depreciates the value of his work when he calls the title "an admission of incompleteness"; for while we cannot suppose he has collected every fact about every Wither, the speculative reader may browse amongst his admirably ordered records at will, and create for himself visions of bygone men and manners.

In a charter of Æthelred, dated 1005, is a signature of a witness "Ego Wiðer minister"; in Domesday Book are found two Norfolk Withers, tenants prior to the Survey; and through the next few centuries Withers and their deeds for better or worse, are on record in the Escheats and Rolls of twenty English counties. Assuredly the name, though its etymological origin is disputed, is rooted firmly in English soil, and is at least old enough to supply place-names, from Witherslack in Westmorland to Witheridge in Devon. The poet George Wither derived the name from Greek, saying it meant the son of the harvest; this was a fantastic Elizabethan error.

By record as well as tradition the family is of Lancashire origin, and its known pedigree begins with Sir Robert Wyther, seneschal to Roger de Lucy, Constable of Chester from 1179 to 1189. Some seven or eight generations later, one Thomas Wyther of Lancashire slew (so an Elizabethan pedigree declares) Sir Robert Worsley, "and for that deed hee with his brethren fled into Cheshire," where they entered the service of a Cistercian abbot. The fourth generation of the said Thomas consisted of three monks—a belated penance for "that deed." His brothers went south, to disseminate their name—Richard in London, Essex, and Somerset, and Robert, the youngest son, in Hampshire.

It is with the Hampshire Withers that Mr. Bigg-Wither is principally—and justifiably—concerned. We gather that he himself was brought up at Manydown, where the above-mentioned Robert had settled in 1484 (at latest), and that he himself was the eighth member of his family to become Rector of Worting, with the manor and advowson of which they were connected for three hundred years. The Withers, he writes,

"may not have produced any, or many, world-famous men and women; but it is not without just pride that its representatives to-day look back to forbears of distinction in all branches of Church and State, of literature, law, and commerce; and especially to a long succession of country 'squires' living on their estates, 'good old English gentlemen,' serving their country as magistrates, their parish as benefactors, honoured by their neighbours, and beloved by the poor."

It is pleasant to reflect on this tradition, and we hope that it is still extant in many an English family.

The Withers have served Hampshire well, and she is a county well worthy of service. Manydown Park in 1392 supplied William of Wykeham with 91 cartloads of timber to reconstruct the nave and roof of Winchester Cathedral; and half a century later three huge Manydown oaks went to roof what is now part of the Dean's residence in the Cathedral Close; the beams are still doing duty. At Wootton St. Lawrence, a quiet village four miles from Basingstoke, the little church contains many memorials of pious and worthy Withers; and in the vestry the visitor may find, though Mr. Bigg-Wither does not appear to mention it, a set of church plate of beautiful old silver presented by various Withers.

Outside the county the best-known member of the family is certainly the seventeenth-century poet George Wither, whose motto was "Nec habeo, nec careo, nec curo," his most famous refrain being "What care I how fair she be?" In this book he occupies nearly a whole chapter, and a list of his manifold and unequal writings fills three pages of small type. If only he had "cared" more! "Wither is like an old friend," wrote Lamb to Southey, "whose warm-heartedness and estimable qualities make us wish he possessed more genius, but at the same time make us willing to dispense with that want"—a piece of sound and kindly criticism characteristic of Elia. George Wither too loved Hampshire, as readers of 'Fair Virtue' know; and his "first fine careless rapture" of verse is now, though late, appreciated as it deserves.

In the eighteenth century the Manydown estates passed to Lovelace Bigg, grandson of another Lovelace Bigg who had married a seventeenth-century Dorothy Wither from Manydown. The Biggs were a prolific family, supplying a Warden and more than one Fellow to Wykehamist foundations, and were connected by marriage with Blackstone of the 'Commentaries.' The second Lovelace Bigg added Wither to his name in 1789, when he succeeded to the estates; he had nine children, of whom one was father of ten, of whom one was father of fourteen. Meanwhile, the name Withers (the final s is added by some branches of the family, who yet bear the same arms) had spread in America, and another branch flourished in Liverpool; the late Prof. H. L. Withers of Owens College, Manchester, was of that stock.

Mr. Bigg-Wither has diverged too seldom from the strict path of history. One or two letters, small sketches, a collection of wills, and a series of excellent portraits hint at the possibility of a fascinating volume 'Annals of a Hampshire Family,' which we beg him to compile from the present volume.

SHORT STORIES.

INTO the fifteen stories in High Life in the Far East (Fisher Unwin) Mr. James Dalziel compresses several emotions and much experience. The atmosphere is generally that of the English seaports of China. The ingenious devices of smugglers, the terrors of Beri-Beri, the absurdity attending a jilted mariner's marriage, the painful pleasure of honourably protecting another man's Chinese sweetheart, the heroism of a dog's love, and even the mysteries behind the ivory gates of sleep, unlocked with an opium-key, engage Mr. Dalziel's reader. Perhaps his cleverest tale is 'A Gaudy Night,' a study in inebriety which suddenly rises to poetry when the riotous crew hear the words, "The skipper is asleep," and are under the spell of a time-honoured belief in the sacredness of his slumber. Mr. Dalziel would do well, by the way, to refrain from expressing ungracious personal opinions when his object is not political, but artistic.

The Portent, and other Stories, by George MacDonald (same publisher), an addition to "The Adelphi Library," comes like a faint refrain of the old melodies of the enlightened mystic. The more important works of MacDonald's prime have had many a meed of appreciation in our pages. Of the present tales we would only say they bear his religious and poetic stamp. The title-story deals with second sight in its larger form of telepathy.

Beyond the Skyline (John Murray) seems to be Mr. Robert Aitken's first publication. If so, we can offer it a cordial welcome. It is full of excellent material and rich in promise. When the author has attained more skill in the practice of his art he should seize and occupy a higher place. What strikes one first about these tales is that they have been inspired by Mr. Kipling; and the next reflection that occurs is one of wonder at their variety and scope. They deal—apparently from real knowledge—with Spanish South America, the East, the Boer War, the Scottish Highlands, and the Isthmus of Panama. The manner of narration is as a rule Kiplingesque, in its boldness, its swagger, and its habit of taking things for granted; but it is evident that Mr. Aitken has other moods not derivative. We should like to warn him against his trick of hiatus: he must not leave too much to be unravelled by the reader, and it is after all worth while being plain and easy to follow. The faults of the stories are due to inexperience, and the freshness of the material and the point of view render these insignificant. Some stories are trivial. There is real tragic quality in the tale of 'The Little Sister Tula,' but 'Righinn,' which follows, was not worth saving from periodical literature. 'A Second-Class District' is very grim, and much in the Kipling style. 'The Price of Victory' belongs to the category of 'Righinn.' The South American tales are bright, bluff, and stirring; and there is in 'Delilah' the same grim, gruesome humour which we have already noticed.

The latest volume of Gyp, La Bassinoire, is not one of her best, and follows previous sketches devoted to the family of "Les Cayenne de Rio," unpopular among those who dislike the anti-Semitic theme. The present instalment of this history is remarkable, however, for the development of one admirable character in a member of the hated set. It is, perhaps, a sign of grace in the talented author, or evidence of some modification of her ferociously "Nationalist" opinions, that she should have made a hero of the son of a Jewish multimillionaire. The other point which deserves notice is the inclusion of a list of Gyp's favourite women writers. Several well known on this side the Channel, and some admired both here and in France, are omitted. There is included "Gérard d'Houville," and even Colette Willy. No one will complain that two of the first three named are the poets Madame de Noailles and Madame Delarue-Mardrus. It is a curious example of French carelessness in correcting proofs that Gyp's friend, the daughter of President Félix Faure, is made into two people by the insertion of a comma after her first name, "Lucie."

We have had amusing essays in this country on "stage law": a little worse than the law of novels, according to our experience. It is rash for a writer on the northern side of the Channel to pronounce an opinion upon French law hostile to that of a French writer, but we should have thought that the whole scheme of the present book—above all, its catastrophe—is spoilt by the rule that the law of intestacy is regulated by domicile, and only in a lesser degree by nationality. The Jewish multimillionaire assumes that, although he lives and has all his interests in France, the fact that he is "not naturalized" evades the French law of inheritance. As far, at least, as his property is situate in France, we imagine that domicile would play its usual part.

The Kiss, and other Stories. By Anton Tchekhoff. Translated by R. E. C. Long. (Duckworth & Co.)—Although the short tales of Anton Tchekhoff have obtained much popularity in Russia, yet this is only the second time that a volume of them has appeared in the English language; the former volume was from the pen of the translator of the present tales, and was favourably noticed in our columns at the time. It is difficult to account for this neglect, for Tchekhoff has great merits. Perhaps the reason is that he has been entirely eclipsed by Gorky in his realistic pictures of Russian misery. Moreover, his career was short; he died, aged thirty-four, in the year 1904. His life was sad, as he was born in humble circumstances, being the son of a former serf, and a victim to consumption. A profound melancholy pervades his writings. Life seems to such men a blank, and nature is in harmony with their melancholy, as in the sketch entitled 'The Steppe,' which is not included in the present volume. Tchekhoff's characters are nearly always unfortunate, as in the case of the doctor, 'Ward No. 6.' In the present volume the most realistic sketch is 'The Muzhiks.' Here we get a graphic picture of the dismal abode of the peasant. As regards the minor pictures, the delicate shades of character sometimes disappoint us, and the story also seems to have no definite object.

Of Mr. Long's translation we may say, as we said of the previous one, that it is excellently done. He is clearly well acquainted with the Russian language, but he seems to believe that his readers will be equally familiar with Russian ways. How are they to make out what the "Slavianski Bazaar" is, or an abacus, as it is used in Russian shops? These should be explained. We hope that Mr. Long will give us a complete version of Tchekhoff's writings. His play 'Tchaika' ('The Gull') might well be translated into English.

OUR LIBRARY TABLE.

MESSRS. LONGMAN publish a volume by Mr. W. H. Beveridge in which the author tells us, in excellent form and with singular completeness, exactly what the public wants to know at the present moment on Unemployment. A week ago a distinguished Parliamentarian—the original organizer, we believe, of the Labour party—made an announcement evidently based on knowledge of the most novel proposals lately before the Government. But the Bill announced in the King's Speech of Tuesday avoids the experiment. Skilled workmen were to have credited to them in insurance companies a weekly sum, partly provided by the workman, partly by the employer, and partly by the State. The trade unions at present receiving unemployed contributions and providing against unemployment are not only mainly those of skilled trades, but also in high degree, as now shown by Mr. Beveridge, those possessing the largest accumulated funds. Readers of the book before us will probably be more interested in the more difficult problem of how to meet the larger body of unemployment shown by Mr. Beveridge to be always with us, even when trade is at its best. It should be remembered that the poorest workers will more or less indirectly contribute by taxation towards any State payment to trade-unionists. Mr. Beveridge deals at length with all the other parts of the problem of unemployment, and his book will give valuable support to the Board of Trade in the proposed organization of a Labour Exchange after the German model. The volume is a storehouse of facts for the use of both sides in any controversy which may arise. On the whole, the experience of the author as an active member of the Central Unemployed Committee, administering the Conservative Act known by the name of Mr. Walter Long, and the grants given by Parliament on the proposal of Mr. Burns, places Mr. Beveridge among the more cautious observers.

The most novel part of this interesting volume concerns the author's proof that even in the most prosperous trades, in all countries and in the best years, there is unemployment of at least two kinds. The dominant fact is that the trade cannot keep pace with "spurts" unless it has always a margin or a reserve of labour. When the trade is doing well it is the least competent who are found still "reserved" or dependent upon outside assistance. Mr. Beveridge examines with much care the popular contention, accepted as self-evident by all, that Labour legislation, however beneficial to the majority of the workers, must press hardly in this respect upon the old. To the astonishment of the reader he proves, without saying so, that the examination of the facts gives no support to this theory, but, on the contrary, seems to show the exact opposite. The only trades as regards which we know the state of the case present figures telling exactly the opposite way. In them the industrial age has steadily risen, and stands higher now than it ever did. We understand that this is fully demonstrated by the Poor Law Commission, whose Report is just now published. Mr. Beveridge's book will be found to give no support to a large scheme of afforestation as a remedy for unemployment. Neither does he approve of much of the work done in connexion with Relief Committees, or he could not write:—

"To give...relief work on conditions as attractive as their ordinary life is to leave them with no incentive to return to independence, yet their ordinary life is such that the relief can hardly in practice be made less attractive without being made inadequate or degrading. To give them temporary work in times of exceptional depression is to throw them back upon chronic poverty at its close; it is like saving men from drowning in order to leave them on a quicksand."

No one can be more competent to write on Responsible Government in the Dominions than Mr. Arthur Keith of the Colonial Office, who publishes through Messrs. Stevens & Sons a valuable and important volume on the subject. He discusses with admirable wisdom the very questions which are now raised in current politics by the proposed union in one Dominion of the South African Colonies. The need for, and the difficulty attending, special provision with regard to native interests; the relations of Natal and the Colonial Office in the matter of martial law; the powers and duties of a Governor, advised by Colonial ministers, but, nevertheless, an Imperial officer—all these constitutional points are discussed in a fashion which will wound none and will guide all concerned. Mr. Keith is modest in his Preface, and explains that he has done his best to be as accurate in his statement as is consistent with brevity and clearness. There are few matters in which he has exposed himself to serious criticism. So great are the difficulties as to lead the author to believe that in the long run they can only be solved by alteration in the fabric of the Empire, and by voluntary concession on the part of the Dominions of some of those extreme privileges of isolated self-government which they enjoy. This is notably the case as regards the treaty-making power, and the Canadian view put forward by the most responsible statesmen of the Dominion. The danger of either using or failing to use the prerogative of mercy in certain cases is another matter in which Mr. Keith wisely prepares us for the troubles of the future. Whatever view may be taken, his volume may be commended as an example of how to expound the Imperial Constitution.

SOME years ago we ventured upon criticism of Dod's Parliamentary Companion (Whittaker & Co.) with a view to its improvement, but all ground for dissatisfaction long since disappeared, and we have failed on careful examination to pick holes in this excellent, portable House of Commons handbook "for 1909." It is now in the seventy-seventh year of its age, but may be expected to flourish as long as Parliament itself.

COL. H. C. WYLLY, C.B., who has arranged from diaries and correspondence The Military Memoirs of Lieut.-General Sir Joseph Thackwell, Colonel 16th Lancers (Murray), states in his Preface that they would not, in all probability, have seen the light, had not blame been imputed to Sir Joseph Thackwell in some books, "recently published, which deal with the history of the campaigns of the Sutlej and of the Indus." No doubt, in the anxiety of the authors of these books to dispel the prevalent opinion of Lord Gough as a general, more or less blame was laid on others; but, after all, the verdict of those best able to judge has scarcely been affected. The Athenæum (June 19th, 1897), after a careful examination of 'The Sikhs and the Sikh Wars,' considered that "it will not succeed in convincing the historian that Lord Gough was a great and prudent general." That being so, we are inclined to think that Sir Joseph himself, had he been alive, would not have encouraged the publication now under consideration, which is less a biography than an arrangement of extracts from diaries and letters. For it is known, in the first place, that during his life he refrained punctiliously from criticism of his commanders, and that the 'Narrative of the Second Sikh War in 1848-1849,' by his son, published in 1851, caused him no little annoyance.

From these remarks it should not be inferred that Col. Wyll's book is devoid of interest; far from it. There is much to attract a variety of readers; for glimpses, useful in their way, of four wars are afforded. The first is that in the Peninsula almost precisely a century ago, as Thackwell embarked for Corunna on October 20th, 1808, to join the army commanded by Sir John Moore. He returned to England with the 15th Hussars in January, 1809, served at home four years, and in February, 1813, having again set forth, landed at Lisbon, and took an honourable part in the campaign under Wellington. At Waterloo he had two horses shot under him, and was shot through the bridle-hand when leading a charge:—

"He instantly placed the reins between his teeth, but a few seconds afterwards he was again shot in the left arm, shattering the bone between the elbow and the shoulder, and fell to the ground."

He returned to England, retired on half-pay, and settled down to the life of a country gentleman, shooting, fishing, and improving his properties. He continued, however, to keep in touch with the service, and rarely missed the Waterloo dinner at Apsley House.

Service in India had a curious fascination for him. In 1837 he offered 4,000*l.* for an exchange to that country, and was appointed to the 3rd Light Dragoons and a colonelcy in the Army. He took the regiment out, and was stationed at Cawnpore when the troubles began which resulted in the first Afghan war. He commanded the cavalry of the Army of the Indus, and took part in the march to Kabul, the capture of Ghazni being its most prominent incident. He returned to India with Sir John Keane, thus escaping the disasters which followed; but extracts from his diary show that he was keeping in touch with current events as well as the imperfect transmission of news permitted. Sir Joseph commanded the cavalry of the army which received the returning troops from Afghanistan near Ferozpur, and he records the honour with which the "Illustrious Garrison of Jellalabad" was received.

Soon there followed the battle of Maharajpur and the anarchy in the Punjab which culminated, towards the end of 1845, in the first Sikh war. Thackwell, though not present at Aliwal, took a distinguished part in the decisive victory of Sobraon, but was disappointed at finding his name omitted in the Governor-General's General Order.

The second Sikh war again brought this indefatigable officer to the front. He was second in command to Lord Gough, and commanded the cavalry of the army. The action at Sadúlápúr was fought under his independent guidance, but he was, or considered himself to be, restricted by Lord Gough's instructions; consequently he did not follow up his success, and was blamed by the Commander-in-Chief.

Sir Joseph left India in 1853, and died in 1858. Col. Wyll may be congratulated on his preparation of this volume, a task requiring research and tact; its appearance is entirely satisfactory.

The Eye-Witness. By Hilaire Belloc. (Eveleigh Nash.)—This volume consists of a series of historical or quasi-historical sketches, the "greater part" of which are reprinted from The Morning Post. In them the author, as he tells us, "has attempted, upon the model of one vivid experience, to reconstruct certain passages of the past." This experience is described in a prefatory chapter entitled 'Motive of this Book,' and is ascribed to one of three men who, after discussing with the others things universal "in the White Horse at Storrington," suddenly turned to the relation of a dream, or vision, or "experience" that had been his "three Thursdays ago," when lying asleep during the heat of the day in "the little dense wood near Roundabout." The gist of the story is this—that waking up to "the hot sky of Sussex," he realized "that time had overlapped on him... he had been on board the Jacobin just at the end of the fighting on June 1, 1794." "Hearing such a tale," the author wondered whether it might not be possible, by an effort of the will, as by an accident, to live for some moments in the past, and to see the things that had been, stand and live before one."

Such is the circumstantial, and perhaps over-subtle, justification, which Mr. Belloc elaborates for his book.

The sketches range "across the 2,000 years of Christian history," and, as the author points out, may be divided into three classes. In some the actors and events are purely imaginary, in others some only of the actors are historical personages; while in others "every detail of person and scene is rigidly historical." It is this last class which please us most. Such scenes as those described in the episode entitled 'The Christian,' have been worked up too often and too well for a new presentment to be of any great interest; but when Mr. Belloc gives us actual fact, combined with vividness of detail and local colour, he cannot fail to please. He is, perhaps, at his best when writing on French subjects.

In this volume he is, however, incorrigibly geographical, working in descriptive details in an over-anxious and irrelevant manner, as in his insistence that "the Straits of Dover, when one approaches them from the east, are like the mouth of a great river," at the beginning of his chapter 'The Ark-Royall,' in which he describes the attempt which the English made to fire the Spanish fleet on July 27th, 1588.

We might deprecate the not infrequent touch of a cynicism which finds its most flagrant expression in the closing sketch, 'The Politician,' describing a meeting in a Northern town during the General Election of 1906. It is a question whether the unrelieved sordidness of the picture is justified. A seeing eye might see further, and the author's motive in a presentation of this sort is far to seek. But to enter into the search would be to open up the thorniest problems of literature and politics. Suffice it to say that pleasing, or unpleasing in this matter of taste, and in spite of an occasional false colloquialism which is the bane of historical fiction (witness the manner in which the imaginary speech of grave Spaniards of the sixteenth century is translated into English in 'The Familiar'), the sketches are always interesting, and nearly always effective.

My Climbs in the Alps and Caucasus. By A. F. Mummery. (Fisher Unwin.)—If the Alpine Club was called upon to give a vote as to which of its past heroes best embodied the ideal of the complete mountaineer, the name of A. F. Mummery would probably come out at the top of the poll. There have been others of its members who have done more for exploration or for science, who have recorded their adventures, not in one, but in many volumes. But these things are not essential in the mountaineer. No one has ever more fully combined his main qualities—a love for the glories of the mountains, and the highest technical skill in dealing with their difficulties and dangers—than the keen cragsman who lost his life under the precipices of Nanga Parbat. The present volume, an édition de luxe of 'Climbs in the Alps and Caucasus,' first published in 1895, forms a fitting memorial to its author. Mummery, as his friends are naturally anxious to point out, was something more than a mountaineer. He possessed a strong character and a remarkable intellect, which but for an unkind fate might have won him fame in the fields of thought. In the problems of economics in which his principal interest lay he had proved himself a vigorous and independent thinker, and at the time of his death he had resolved to free himself from business ties and give his mind to their study. His one published contribution in that field has sufficed to give him a niche in the 'Dictionary of National Biography.' In an 'Appreciation' prefixed to this volume his friend Mr. J. A. Hobson speaks in the strongest terms of Mummery's capacity for such abstruse investigations. After dwelling on "the force of a personality at once simple, subtle, trustful, and confident," he writes:—

"Mummery's aptitude for following difficult lines of thought, his preference for short cuts in a rarified atmosphere of abstraction, were interesting.... In conciseness of expression as in boldness of speculation he surpassed Ricardo among economists, approaching at times the compactness of Spinoza's philosophic systematisation. It was a bracing experience to follow him into the recesses of some speculation in a fresh problem, either commercial, ethical, or metaphysical, which he had carved out for himself."

Mrs. Mummery gives the public a few pages of extracts from the last letters received from her husband when in Kashmir, which will be read with interest. They must confirm the belief that his death was caused by a sudden avalanche rather than any more avoidable accident in a rash attempt.

For the rest the text of the book is identical with that of the previous edition. Its merits have been generally recognized, and do not need insisting on afresh. No more direct and vigorous narrative of the incidents of mountain travel or hard climbing, of a bivouac with Caucasian shepherds, or a day on the Chamonix Aiguilles, can be found on our bookshelves. In these pages we meet again the freshness, the unforced fun, the vivid descriptions, which gave their popularity to the earlier annals of the Alpine Club.

An excellent portrait of the author is given as a frontispiece. The other illustrations are of varied merit. We have some of the fine photogravures of mighty peaks to which we have become accustomed. There are also a number of reproductions of sketches of valley or village scenes which do not seem very closely connected either with the letter or the spirit of the text. Mr. Pennell's 'Guides at the Riffel' are wanting in local colour, and his 'Village Street at Zermatt' suggests a dangerous comparison with one of Mr. Whympers's most successful woodcuts.

The Medici Popes. By Herbert M. Vaughan. (Methuen.)—This is a slight and easily written account of Leo X. and Clement VII. from the purely personal standpoint. The pictures are on the whole vivid, notably the account of Leo's hunting days; and one is enabled to realize a little what the Leonine age really meant, and how it was completely ended at the sack of Rome. But for any serious estimate of papal statesmanship we look in vain. To write of Leo X. and omit all but a passing reference to Luther would seem impossible, but Mr. Vaughan succeeds in doing it. He gives on the whole a very fair judgment of Leo, and does not much extenuate his faults of levity and dissimulation. The illustrations are excellently chosen and reproduced.

Nine Spanish Poems. Collected by F. de Arteaga y Pereira. (Frowde.)—Though three or four poems in this slim pamphlet are not adequately representative, our chief complaint is that the editor has supplied us with superfluous paraphrases instead of a page of introduction and half a dozen bibliographical notes. Information of this sort would be useful to others than the readers who need to be told that "Egito" is a form of "Egipto" (p. 14). It would be interesting to learn why the title of the 'Epístola moral á Fabio' is cut down to 'Epístola á Fabio,' and why these verses are attributed conjecturally to Rioja (p. 26): the poem is ascribed with as much—that is to say, with very little—reason to the younger Argensola, to Andrés Fernández de Andrada, to Andrés Sánchez de Andrada, and to Francisco de Medrano. Scholars, of course, are aware that the sonnet reprinted on p. 36 forms part of Don Fernando's reply to Fénix in 'El Príncipe constante,' but a beginner cannot know this by the light of nature, and is apt to be perplexed at finding the same sonnet reproduced in Mira de Amescua's 'Galánvaliente y discreto.' A word of guidance on such points would have been welcome. The texts are modernized in an illogical and half-hearted fashion: "oseuro" on pp. 17 and 18 becomes "obseuro" on p. 27. "Luis" is unaccented on pp. 6, 8, and 10, but is accented on p. 34; "jóven" is accented on p. 15, but is unaccented on p. 44; and similar cases of carelessness or inconsistency are too frequent. The rules of Spanish accentuation will be found on pp. 364-8 of the official 'Gramática' issued by the Academy; they are really simple, but Spaniards seem to have peculiar difficulty in applying them correctly.

A USEFUL contribution to the history of the French language has just been published by the Oxford University Press in the form of Tables synoptiques de Phonologie de l'ancien Français, by M. Berthon, Maître de Conférences à l'Université d'Oxford, and Mr. V. G. Starkey. This is a work of thirty pages quarto, exhibiting in tabular form, with illustrative examples, the passage from Latin into French of every vowel and consonant sound, diphthong, and consonant group, in every position in the word. It exhibits in a concise but clear form facts which otherwise are scattered over many pages of such works as Schwan's 'Grammatik des Altfranzösischen,' and many volumes of Romania, Romanische Studien, and other journals. A feature of importance is a Chronological Table, which assigns approximate dates to the various phonetic changes, arranged under the Vulgar Latin, First Gallo-Roman, Second Gallo-Roman, and First, Second, Third, and Fourth Romanic Periods, the last of these ending with the fully developed Old French, c. 1300. The work is thoroughly up to date in its philology, and will be very useful not only to students, but also for handy reference to advanced scholars.

THE HISTORICAL RESEARCH SOCIETY OF SIAM has just issued the first volume of its publications. It is called the Phra-Rājavi-carāna, and contains the reminiscences of the Princess Narindr Devi, a sister of the first king of the present dynasty, from the destruction of Ayuddhya in 1767 to the first years of the reign of Phra Buddha Löt La in 1820. The original MS. has now been edited by the King with a commentary and explanatory notes. The facts noted down were in most cases presented in outline only, as the writer supposed that the particulars she recorded were known. The original MS. was not written with a view to publication, printing only coming into general use in Siam during the reign of Phra Chom Klao. Besides the commentary and notes, the King has added from the royal archives official documents which throw a welcome light on the relations of Siam with its dependencies and the neighbouring countries at that time.

The King has presented the books for sale to the National Library, and the net proceeds are to be added to the fund for publishing the historical and literary records of Siam.

Men and Women. By Robert Browning. Vol. II. (Doves Press.)—The Doves Press complete by this volume their reprint of Browning's greatest work, judged by its influence on the best of his contemporaries and juniors. We think it strange that William Morris never reprinted this work at the Kelmscott Press, considering how highly he appreciated it in his undergraduate days, and how deeply it moulded his early poems. Perhaps the reason, apart from questions of copyright, which were not insurmountable, lay in the divergence of method which put the poets in two opposing camps—those who write for the eye and those who write for the ear. To quote Tennyson, if the English language ceased to be spoken, Browning would be considered our greatest poet. Mr. Cobden-Sanderson's intention of making a collection of the best books of our language in the best form they can be produced is steadily approaching some measure of completion, and it only remains for us to say that we do not hope to see any printed book nearer to the ideal of perfection in all the qualities of artistic craftsmanship.

The Essays of Michael, Lord of Montaigne. Edited by Thomas Seecombe. 3 vols. (Grant Richards.)—This is a very satisfactory edition of Florio's translation of Montaigne. It is well printed on light paper, of a convenient size, and with good type. Mr. Seecombe's Introduction is sufficient, if not altogether inspired, or uniformly well-written; the subject leading him, no doubt, to interlard his phrases with unnecessary scraps of French. The habit of reading Montaigne is one that grows on a man with advancing years, and the publishers have provided an edition admirably adapted for such readers. We hope they will be encouraged to give us a similar issue of North's 'Plutarch,' of which there is no available edition in convenient type and size.

MR. JOHN LANE has added to his "New Pocket Library" two volumes containing The Fool of Quality, by Henry Brooke. It is an interesting revival of a book which deserves all that Mr. Francis Coutts says of it in his spirited introduction; but it is to be doubted if the present age will care for a story with no horrors and abundant disquisitions. That on "the beauties and benefits of our Constitution," the author himself invites readers to skip.

MR. HENRY W. KERR has recently reached the full honours of the Scottish Academy of Art. Excellent specimens of his work are the illustrations in colour he has provided for Dean Ramsay's Reminiscences of Scottish Life and Character, republished by Mr. T. N. Foulis. It is a delightful edition of an old friend, a welcome exception to the casual understanding between writer and artist.

The Kalendar of Shepherds, edited by A. H. Diplock (Sidgwick & Jackson), is a very acceptable reproduction of the complete series of woodblocks for the 'Kalendrier des Bergiers' from the Troyes edition of 1529. To these are added for each month a couplet from Tusser, some translations of verse and prose from the French original, and a character of the month extracted from Nicholas Breton's 'Fantasticks.' We can recommend this little volume not only to those interested in folk-lore and mediæval medicine, but also to students and schools of art.

THE BRITISH MUSEUM READING-ROOM.

YOUR correspondent H. W. B. rightly considers "that any one custodian who allowed a person not in possession of the requisite permit to pass into the Library would be unworthy of the post of janitor," and I think that "Another Editor and Author" should not blame the "man with buttons." The real grievance is that the officials have cancelled the old green tickets, and make irritating demands from readers of long standing.

At one time I frequently read in the Reading-Room, and I have constantly carried my green ticket, issued to me in 1880, in an inner pocket of my pocket-book. I am told that if I show it, the man at the door will seize it, and that I had better leave it at home, and say I have one, without mentioning its colour. On the back of my ticket are the words: "This ticket must be carefully preserved by the reader; it must be produced when asked for at the Museum, and must be returned on expiry, or when no longer required." It does not go on to say "or when arbitrarily revoked by the authorities." Meanwhile it has not expired, and is required.

It is quite possible that at one time the room was crowded by novel-readers, and perhaps it was necessary to exclude certain undesirable persons. That might have been a reason for screwing up the conditions under which new tickets were issued, but not for compelling holders of old tickets to call at the Secretary's office and obtain a fresh ticket every year.

On my last visit to the Reading-Room, prepared to fight for the retention of my green ticket if it were asked for, I looked in vain for any notice of the new conditions.

A CIVIL SERVANT.

I do not think that many readers will be found to support the complaints of the two editors and authors who have stated their grievances in the columns of The Athenæum. I have been a reader since 1851, and I should like to express my grateful sense of most courteous treatment received during more than half a century from officials of every grade.

The complaints of these gentlemen amount merely to this, that having written many books, they are not therefore placed above the regulations deemed necessary by the authorities for the protection of the Library. The amount of freedom enjoyed by readers is really astonishing. The Reading-Room contains costly and valuable books accessible without any formality to every person entering the room. For a long time past, so far as I am aware, no notices of misuse of the Reading-Room have been brought to the knowledge of readers. It may be supposed that such cases are of less frequent occurrence than heretofore. If this comes from the stricter regulations made necessary by the greatly increased number of readers, the result is surely one with which there may be general satisfaction. The higher the position in letters of a reader, the more cheerful should be his acquiescence in the rules laid down by the authorities in the fulfilment of their difficult task of conciliating the freedom of readers with the preservation of the contents of the Library.

It once happened to me to be unable, when challenged, to produce my ticket; but on explanation given at the office, I received a temporary admission. Since then, I have been careful to have my ticket always at hand. It never occurred to me that there is any hardship in this. A. M.

'NOTES ON THE VULGATE GOSPELS.'

Erdington Abbey, Birmingham,
Feb. 9, 1909.

IN your long review on January 30th of my book I am accused of believing that the "Three Heavenly Witnesses" were introduced into the Latin Bible by Priscillian, although on p. 263 I said the opposite. The reviewer also gratuitously assumes that I follow Prof. Künstle's views as to the origin of the Athanasian Creed and as to the importance of Priscillianism generally. It happens that I entirely disagree with Künstle. In another hypothesis of the reviewer's—that the codex grandior of Cassiodorus had belonged to St. Jerome—I regret that I can see no probability. Nor can I accept his conjecture that Eugippius in his youth as a simple monk in Noricum is likely to have possessed a library which could be called his own. We happen to know that he had a library and a staff of copyists when he was abbot of Lucullanum, and it is unnecessary to conjecture further. I do not know why it is suggested that he was an editor; still less why he should be "totally unfit to edit a Latin book" because he believed in contemporary miracles! I fully admit that there may have existed other persons of the name Eugippius or Eugippius; but I do not think the further conjecture is justified, that the "Eugippius Presbyter" with a library not long before 558, to whom the Echternach Codex refers, might perhaps be a different person from the well-known Eugippius Presbyter of Lucullanum, who was a great student of Scripture. In the same vein the "scs hieronimus" of the same note might be distinguished from the Doctor of the Church, if such a conjecture were worth making. As to my own conjectures, the reviewer states that I am myself conscious that they are baseless. This is a serious charge, even though itself conjectural. Had I really put forward hypotheses which I believed to be baseless, I must have been out of my senses.

I am sorry the reviewer does not agree with my view that the Gospel Prologues were written by Priscillian. I do look upon it as pretty certain, on account of the number and eminence of the savants who have accepted it. It is only fair to say that Mr. C. H. Turner is not responsible for the accuracy of the tables which your reviewer conjectures to be untrustworthy; for I do not remember his having verified any of them.

JOHN CHAPMAN, O.S.B.

* * The reviewer nowhere said that Dom Chapman believes that the "Three Heavenly Witnesses" were introduced into the Latin Bible by Priscillian. He was particularly careful to avoid saying any such thing. He was inclined to remark on the reason which Dom Chapman assigns for not believing this, but he refrained because he thought the matter irrelevant. The reason seemed to the reviewer to show great innocence. It was that Priscillian quoted the passage in one of the works edited by Schepss, and could not have done this if he had forged it. But if he did not use it as a proof of the Trinity, how can we account for his forging it? The reviewer was also careful to avoid saying that Dom Chapman shared any of Künstle's opinions. What was stated was that Dom Chapman had read Künstle's books, and was inspired by his example to make conjectures and represent them as facts. Dom Chapman also employs his words curiously. The statement about the codex grandior is not a hypothesis, but is an interpretation of a passage in Cassiodorus. The interpretation may be right or wrong, but its inaccuracy can be proved only by showing that the interpretation of the words is wrong, or it may be maintained that Cassiodorus is not to be trusted. Dom Chapman misunderstands the drift of the review altogether in regard to conjectures, especially in regard to those of the reviewer. Dom Chapman does not see that they were made solely as conjectures which could be suggested as well as those made by him. They are all equally without historical support, and the attitude which he assumes in saying that he cannot accept them or that they cannot be justified, is utterly unscientific, for they are all unattested by any historical witnesses. The charge that many of his conjectures are baseless seems to the reviewer to be proved by the extracts quoted in the review. Numerous other passages might have been quoted of a similar character. In them Dom Chapman affirms that history bears no witness to the conjectures which he has made.

Dom Chapman puts a great value on the Codex of Eugippius, but he does not indicate whence the value arises. Surely he cannot imagine it comes from the fact that the codex was in the possession of the saint. If not, then the value must arise from the supposed fact that Eugippius, like Cassiodorus, compared MSS., inserted what he deemed the best readings, corrected mistakes, and, in one word, performed the work of an editor.

The remark about the miraculous was not intended to be personal, for Dom Chapman does not live "in the world of the miraculous," and this age affords him many opportunities of learning "to weigh evidence" and "to distinguish fact from fiction."

SALE.

THE following prices were realized at Messrs. Puttick & Simpson's on Thursday and Friday in last week: Bunyan's Holy Citie, 1669, 10l. Burton's Arabian Nights, 21l. Grimm's German Stories, 15l. Pickwick Papers, 10l. Wordsworth's Descriptive Sketches, 18l. Wither's Emblems, 1634, 11l. 15s. Thackeray's Rose and the Ring, 5l. Drayton's Poems, 12l. Keats's Endymion, 20l. Holbein's Portraits, 1792, 12l. 10s. Solvyn's Manners of the Hindoos, 12l. 15s. Gould's British Birds, 42l.

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

ENGLISH.

Theology.
Baring-Gould (S.) and Fisher (J.), The Lives of the British Saints, Vol. II., 10/6. Includes the saints of Wales and Cornwall, and such Irish saints as have dedications in Britain.
Bavinek (Herman), The Philosophy of Revelation, 6/ net. The L. P. Stone Lectures, 1908-9.
Box (Rev. G. H.), A Short Introduction to the Literature of the Old Testament, 1/ net. One of the Oxford Church Text-books.
Brett (Jesse), The Divine Friendship, 3/ net.
Foley (G. C.), Anselm's Theory of the Atonement, 5/ net. The Bohlen Lectures, 1908.
Fry (C.), Christ our Example, 1/ net. With a preface by the Rev. A. M. W. Christopher.
Heurtley (C. A.), The Union between Christ and His People, 2/6 net. Four sermons, with introduction by F. S. Guy Warman.

Holmes (E. E.), Immortality, 5/. In the Oxford Library of Practical Theology.
Law (Rev. R.), The Tests of Life: a Study of the First Epistle of St. John, 7/6 net. The Kerr Lectures for 1909. London Diocese Book for 1909, 1/6 net. Edited by the Rev. Glendinning Nash.
St. Clair (G.), Man: First and Last, Cave-Dweller and Christian, 9/ net.
Schechter (S.), Some Aspects of Rabbinic Theology, 7/6 net.
Thorp (Helen), With Christ to Gethsemane, 2/ net. A book for use during Lent, with preface by the Bishop of Rochester.

Fine Art and Archaeology.

Cook (E. T.), A Popular Handbook to the National Gallery: Vol. I. Foreign Schools, 10/ net. Includes by special permission notes collected from the works of Ruskin. New Edition.
Fairbairn's Book of Crests of the Families of Great Britain and Ireland, 2 vols., 25/ net. Contains 43,000 entries, and upwards of 4,000 engravings. New Edition.
Field (Mrs. Edwin), Australian Lace-Crochet, Easy and Artistic, 3/ net. Illustrated.
India, Progress Report of the Archaeological Survey of Western Circle, for the Year ending March 31st, 1908, 1/4.
Johnson (G. Lindsay), Photographic Optics and Colour Photography, including the Camera, &c., 7/6 net. Illustrated.
Memoriale di Francesco Albertini, 5/ net. A reprint from the edition of 1510.
Middleton (G. A. T.), English Church Architecture from the Earliest Times to the Reformation, 2/6 net. Illustrated.
Monograms and Ciphers, 7/6 net. Designed and drawn by A. A. Turbayne and other members of the Carlton Studio, illustrated by 164 full-page plates.
Radan (Hugo), Letters to Cassite Kings from the Temple Archives of Nippur. Vol. XVII. Part I. of the Babylonian Expedition of the University of Pennsylvania: Series A. Cuneiform Texts.
Reader (F. W.), Report of the Red Hills Exploration Committee, 1906-7. With introductory note by Horace Wilmer.
Stebbing (W. P. D.), The Church of Worth, in Sussex, 3/6. With notes on its architectural history; has 5 plates, and 5 illustrations in the text.
Ward (J.), Fresco Painting: its Art and Technique, 10/6 net. With special reference to the Buono and Spirit Fresco methods. Illustrated.
Watkins (A.), The Watkins Manual of Exposure and Development, 1/ net. Fourth edition of a photographer's guide.

Poetry and Drama.

Barbour (J.), The Bruce, 5/ net. Edited, with literary and historical introduction, notes and appendixes, and a glossary by W. M. Mackenzie.
Carey (A. E.), Voices in the Wind, 1/ net.
Dixon (Rev. Dr. R. W.), Poems, 4/6 net. Contains a selection with portrait, and a memoir by Robert Bridges.
Gayley (C. M.), Plays of our Forefathers, and some of the Traditions upon which the Plays were Founded, 12/6 net.
Impatient Poverty, 1560. Edited by John S. Farmer. In the Tudor Reprinted and Parallel Texts.
Lehmann (R. C.), Light and Shade, and other Poems, 5/ net.
Poe (E. A.), Poems, 1/. With a sketch of the author by John H. Ingram. In the Muses' Library.
Wilkinson (C.), Songs of the Plains, and other Poems, 2/6 net.

Music.

Neumann (Angelo), Personal Recollections of Wagner, 10/6 net. Translated from the fourth German edition by Edith Livermore, and contains 4 illustrations.

Bibliography.

Acton Collection: Classes 17 and 38, Spain and Portugal, 1/6; Class 34, Germany, Austria, and Hungary, 3/6. Two of the Cambridge University Library Bulletins.
English Catalogue of Books for 1908. Gives in one alphabet, under author and title, the size, price, month of publication, and publisher of books issued in the United Kingdom.

Philosophy.

Jones (E. E. C.), A Primer of Ethics, 1/
Political Economy.
Andreades (A.), History of the Bank of England, 1640-1903, 10/6 net. Translated by Christabel Meredith, with a preface by H. S. Foxwell.
Kennedy (J. B.), Beneficiary Features of American Trade Unions. One of the Johns Hopkins University Studies.
Lowenfeld (H.), All about Investment, 5/ net.
Northrop (W. B.), Wealth and Want, 5/ net. A study in living contrasts and social problems, illustrated.

History and Biography.

Bagwell (R.), Ireland under the Stuarts and during the Interregnum, 1603-60, 2 vols., 28/ net. With map.
Bartolo (A.), The Sovereignty of Malta and the Nature of its Title. With notes and appendixes.
Browne (E. G.), A Brief Narrative of Recent Events in Persia, 1/. With a translation of 'The Four Pillars of the Persian Constitution.'
Buchanan (J.), Works: Vol. VI, 1844-6. Comprises his speeches, State Papers, and private correspondence, edited by John Bassett Moore.
Cockburn (A. P.), Political Annals of Canada, 10/6 net. A condensed record of Governments from the time of Samuel de Champlain in 1603.
Debrett's House of Commons and the Judicial Bench, 1909, 7/6 net. Illustrated with 500 armorial engravings.
Dictionary of National Biography: Vol. XII. Llywd-Mason, 15/ net. Reissue.
Koebel (W. H.), Madeira, Old and New, 10/6 net. Illustrated with photographs by Miss Mildred Cossart.
Lucas (Sir C. P.), A History of Canada, 1763-1812, 12/6 net. With 8 maps.
Lupton (J. H.), A Life of John Colet, D.D., 8/6 net. With an appendix of some of his English writings. New Edition.
Oliver (Capt. S. P.), The Life of Philibert Commerson, 10/6 net. A story of French travel and science in the days

- of Linnaeus, with illustrations, and edited by G. F. Scott Elliot.
- Page (T. N.), General Lee, Man and Soldier, 6/. With portrait.
- Seignobos (C.), History of Contemporary Civilization, 5/net.
- Tuckwell (Rev. W.), Pre-Tractarian Oxford, 7/6 net. A reminiscence of the Oriel "Noetics," with 9 illustrations, one of them from a family portrait, and the remainder from paintings and drawings in the Oriel Hall and Common Room.
- Vernon (Mrs. H. M.) (K. Dorothea Ewart), Italy from 1494 to 1790, 5/6 net. In the Cambridge Historical Series.
- Geography and Travel.*
- Daniell (W. V.) and Nield (F. J.), Manual of British Topography. A catalogue of county and local histories, pamphlets, views, drawings, maps, &c., connected with the principal localities in the United Kingdom.
- Davies (Major H. R.), Yun-nan, the Link between India and the Yangtze, 16/net. The main part of the book is taken up with an account of travels in Yun-nan and the neighbouring provinces; there are several illustrations.
- Oaten (E. Farley), European Travellers in India during the 15th, 16th, and 17th Centuries, &c., 3/6 net.
- Sports and Pastimes.*
- Vassall (H.) and Budd (A.), Football: the Rugby Game, 1/. Revised by Charles J. B. Marriott. New edition.
- Education.*
- Leach (A. F.), Milton as Schoolboy and Schoolmaster, 1/net. From the Proceedings of the British Academy.
- Philology.*
- S.P.C.K. Publications:—In Chiswina, New Testament, 1/4; Heroes of the Faith, 8d.; in Cree, The Pathway of Safety, 2/4; in Dutch, Daily Prayers for Boys and Girls; 1d.; in Car (Nicobar), Order of Morning Prayer, 6d.; in French, Helps to Worship, 8d.; in Hausa Service Book (portions of the Book of Common Prayer and Hymns), 10d.; in Luganda, Gospel of St. Matthew, with Commentary, 1/6; in Lunasaba, Church Catechism, 3d.; in Lunyoro, A Catechism, Part II., 3d.; in Ubi, A Catechism and Psalms and Hymns, 6d.; in Urdu, Book of Common Prayer, revised edition, 3/; in Xosa, Form of Licensing a Clerk to the Cure of Souls, 1d.
- Ullman (B. L.), The Identification of the Manuscripts of Catullus cited in Statius' Edition of 1566, 75 cents.—The Book Division of Propertius. Reprinted from Classical Philology, Vol. IV., No. I.
- School-Books.*
- Æschylus, The Persians, 1/. Translated from a revised text by C. E. S. Headlam. In Bell's Classical Translations.
- Barker (H. J.), Merry Moments with Scholars, 1/net. A collection of children's essays and jokes.
- Brackenbury (L.), The Teaching of Grammar, 2/.
- Cambridge County Geographies: Essex, Kent, Surrey, and Sussex, by G. F. Bosworth, 1/6 each. With maps, diagrams, and illustrations.
- Done (W.) and Tickner (F.), Object Lessons in Geography and Elementary Science Combined, Book III., 1/6.
- Rait (R. S.) and Parrott (J. E.), Finger-Posts to British History, 2/. A summary, with notes of the chief historical events up to 1908, together with a glossary of terms and a brief account of the leading historical characters.
- Wilkinson (H.), The Alert Arithmetic, Book III. for Pupils, 3d.; Book III. for Teachers, 4d. In the Royal School Series.
- Wilmot-Buxton (E. M.), Highroads of History, 1/6. Book VIII. of the Royal School Series.
- Science.*
- Balfour (A.) and Archibald (R. G.), Review of some of the Recent Advances in Tropical Medicine, 10/6 net.
- Birkeland (K.), The Norwegian Aurora Polaris Expedition, 1902-3, Vol. I., 22/net. Treats of the cause of magnetic storms and the origin of terrestrial magnetism.
- Bureau of American Ethnology, Twenty-Sixth Annual Report, 1904-5.
- Clayton (E. G.), A Compendium of Food-Microscopy, with Sections on Drugs, Water, and Tobacco, 10/6 net. Compiled, with additions and revision, from the late Dr. A. H. Hassall's works on food.—Arthur Hill Hassall, Physician and Sanitary Reformer, 7/6 net.
- Cooper (C. S.) and Westell (W. P.), Trees and Shrubs of the British Isles, Native and Acclimatized, Part I., 1/net. The work will contain 16 full-page coloured plates and 70 full-page black-and-white plates drawn direct from nature by C. F. Newall.
- Darwin-Wallace Celebration held on Thursday, 1st July, 1908, by the Linnean Society of London.
- Geological Survey of Scotland: The Geology of the Country near Oban and Dalnally, by H. Kynaston, J. B. Hill, and others, 2/6.
- Horrocks (J.), Railway Rates, 21/net. Consists of three parts, with a method of calculating equitable rates and charges for merchandise carried on railways.
- Johnson (J. P.), The Ore Deposits of South Africa, with a Chapter on Hints to Prospectors: Part I. Base Metals, 5/net.
- Kempe (H. R.), The Engineer's Year-Book of Formulae, Rules, Tables, Data, and Memoranda, 1909, 8/.
- Mathematical Papers for Admission into the Royal Military Academy and the Royal Military College, 1899-1908, 6/. Edited by E. J. Brooksmith and R. M. Milne.
- Meade (E. S.), The Story of Gold, 2/6 net. Illustrated.
- Owen (F. A.), The Dyeing and Cleaning of Textile Fabrics, 8/6 net.
- Sleeping Sickness Bureau Bulletin, No. 3, January.
- Stern (H. A.) and Topham (W. H.), Practical Mathematics, 6/. New Edition.
- Suckling (C. W.), Movable Kidney, a Cause of Insanity, Headache, &c., 5/net.
- Transactions of the International Union for Co-operation in Solar Research: Vol. II. Third Conference, 7/6 net.
- Tyler (J. M.), Man in the Light of Evolution, 6/net.
- Fiction.*
- Barrett (E. A.), The Heroine, 2/6 net. Revival of a book of 1814, with an introduction by Walter Raleigh.
- Bashford (H. H.), The Pilgrims' March, 6/. The story of the making of a man's character and the formation of his view of life.

- Blackwood (A.), Jimbo, 3/6 net. A fantasy.
- Boisgobey (Fortuné du), The Matapan Jewels, 1/6 net. A translation in the Lotus Library.
- Clarke (R. N.), Diana of the Swamp, 6/. A tale of Virginia in the last generation.
- Croker (B. M.), Katherine the Arrogant, 6/. The story of a young orphan girl of good birth and education, whom circumstances force to earn her own living.
- Curties (Capt. H.), Out of the Shadows, 6/. Contains some details of flirtations carried on by a married man.
- Everett-Green (E.), The City of the Golden Gate, 6/. Deals with San Francisco at the time of the great earthquake.
- Gallon (T.), The Dream—and the Woman, 6/. A tale of supposed murder told by eight people.
- Galsworthy (J.), Fraternity, 6/. The story deals with the household of two brothers and their wives. Into their lives comes "a little model," innocent in herself, but the cause of much disturbance, not only to these refined and respectable people, but also to the working-class family beneath whom she lodges in a West-End slum.
- Graham (F.), Tommy and a Tower, 2/.
- Hartley House, Calcutta, 6/net. A novel of the days of Warren Hastings, reprinted from the Edition of 1789, with Notes by J. Macfarlane.
- Jepson (E.), The Mystery of the Myrtles, 6/. A story of crime and devil-worshippers.
- Magnay (Sir W.), A Poached Peerage, 6/. Illustrated. Of a farcical nature, a wrongful impersonation being among the chief incidents.
- Moore (E. M.), The Lure of Eve, 6/. With a frontispiece by J. E. Sutcliffe.
- Napier (R.), The Heart of a Gypsy, 6/. Concerned with the marriage of a medical man which has a sad termination.
- Ramsay (R.), The Straw, 6/. The scene of the story is laid in Leicestershire, in the country of the Belvoir and the Quorn, and the action takes place among hounds and hunting people.
- Reid (C.), The Coin of Sacrifice. A Roman Catholic story.
- Townley (H.), The Sin of the Duchess, 6/. A sensational tale of wrongful accusation and revenge.
- Wales (H.), Hilary Thornton, 6/. Has to do with more than one unhappy marriage.
- Warden (Gertrude), An Actress's Husband.
- World's Story-Tellers: Chateaubriand and Balzac, 1/net each. Two stories of Chateaubriand, and five of Balzac, with introductions by Arthur Ransome.
- Wyndham (H.), Irene of the Ringlets, 1/net. New Popular Edition. For notice see Athen., April 11, 1903, p. 445.

General Literature.

- Contributions to Current Literature, by W. H. S. Notes on modern marriage, religious movements of the nineteenth century, &c.
- Farrer (J. A.), Invasion and Conscription, 1/net. Some letters from a mere civilian to a famous general.
- Hall (Thornton), Roads to Riches: the Romance of Money-Making, 3/6 net.
- Insurance Register, 1909, 1/. Contains a record of the progress and present financial position of British Insurance Associations.
- Leigh (E. C. Austen), A List of English Clubs in all Parts of the World for 1909, 3/6.
- Philip (Alex. J.), A Dickens Dictionary: the Characters and Scenes of the Novels and Miscellaneous Works Alphabetically Arranged, 8/6 net.
- Robinson (C. N.), The British Tar in Fact and Fiction, 15/net. The poetry, pathos, and humour of the sailor's life, with 103 illustrations.
- Sainte-Beuve (C. A.), Causeries du Lundi, 1/net. Translated by E. J. Treshmann. Of the 28 articles in the volume, it is believed that only four have previously appeared in English.
- Shurter (E. du Bois), The Rhetoric of Oratory, 4/6 net. An American work, with speeches College Orations.
- Skinner (T.), The Directory of Directors, 1909, 15/net.
- Thoughts of Lucia Halliday, with some of her Letters, edited by R. M., 2/6 net. A collection of thoughts on various subjects.

Pamphlets.

- Dickson (T. S.), Caroline Fry: a Story of Grace, 1d.
- Glazier (K. B.), Socialism and the Home, 1d. Reprinted from The Socialist Review.
- Snowden (P.), Socialism and Teetotalism, 1d.
- Wace (Rev. Henry), The Estimate and Use of Holy Scripture in the Church of England, 1d. No. 14 of the Church of England Penny Manuals.

FOREIGN.

Theology.

- Feret (P.), La Faculté de Théologie de Paris et ses Docteurs les plus célèbres: Époque moderne, Vol. VI. Dix-huitième Siècle, Phases historiques, 7 fr. 50.
- Foucart (G.), La Méthode comparative dans l'Histoire des Religions, 3 fr. 50.
- Jastrow (M.), Die Religion Babylonien und Assyrien, Part XIII., 1m. 50.

Fine Art.

- Köbenhavns Raadhus opført 1893-1905. A magnificent volume lavishly illustrated.
- Roux (A.), Histoire de l'Art, 6 fr. 50.

Poetry.

- Victoria (Leandro Arrarte), Clarinadas: Versos. A little collection of poems from Montevideo, with a portrait of the author.

Philosophy.

- Palante (G.), La Sensibilité individualiste, 2 fr. 50.
- Paulhan (F.), La Morale de l'Ironie, 2 fr. 50.

History and Biography.

- Bérard (V.), La Révolution turque, 4 fr. In four sections: La Réforme, Trente Ans avant, L'Entente austro-russe, Trente Ans après.

Geography and Travel.

- Vigne (P.), Visions sahariennes, 3 fr. 50.

Philology.

- Brenner (E.), Der altenglische Junius-Psalter: Die Interlinear-Glosse der Handschrift Junius 27 der Bodleiana, 7m. 50. Part of the Anglistische Forschungen.

- Bulletin International de l'Académie des Sciences de Cracovie: Philologische Klasse, Nos. 6-9.
- Meyer (P.), Notice sur la Bible des sept États du Monde de Genfroid de Paris, 3 fr. Reprinted from 'Notices et Extraits des Manuscrits de la Bibliothèque Nationale.'
- Stapfer (P.), Récréations grammaticales et littéraires, 3 fr. 50.
- Science.
- Bulletin international de l'Académie des Sciences de Cracovie, Nos. 9-10.

Fiction.

- Buteau (H.), L'Otage, 3 fr. 50.
- Miomandre (F. de), Le Vent et la Poussière, 3 fr. 50.
- Ohnet (G.), Un Mariage américain, 3 fr. 50.

General Literature.

- La Grande Revue, 10 février, 2 fr. The first article is a "conte inédit" by Poe, 'Sepulture prématurée.'

* * All Books received at the Office up to Wednesday Morning will be included in this List unless previously noted. Publishers are requested to state prices when sending Books.

Literary Gossip.

The Cornhill Magazine for March opens with some verses on the Shakespeare-Bacon question, by Sir Arthur Conan Doyle. Articles of the hour are 'Reflections on the Poe Centenary,' by Mr. Thomas Seccombe, and 'Charles Darwin: a Centenary Sketch,' by Mr. Leonard Huxley. 'An Impression of Mr. Taft' is supplied by Mrs. Campbell Dauncey. Mr. St. Loe Strachey writes on 'Pope and the Modern Woman'; Mr. Sidney Lee on 'Charlotte Brontë in London'; and Miss Edith Sellers describes 'A High School of Danish Peasants.'

THE next novels to be published by Messrs. Smith & Elder are 'Geoffrey Cheriton,' by Mr. John Barnett, author of 'The Prince's Valet,' and 'Teresa,' by Mrs. Zangwill. 'Geoffrey Cheriton' is a story of friendship lasting from schooldays into manhood, and depicts the love of a reserved nature for a brilliant, but unstable friend. 'Teresa' tells how a young woman, misreading life through her mother's unworthy eyes, makes a wrong choice, but is able to redeem her husband by the strength of her innocence.

MESSRS. LONGMAN will publish shortly a book on 'English Poor Law Policy, 1834-1908,' by Mr. Sidney Webb and his wife.

SIR JOHN H. A. MACDONALD, Lord Justice-Clerk for Scotland, has written his 'Reminiscences,' which Messrs. Blackwood will publish shortly. Two articles from his pen—'Vanessa,' a motoring romance, and a paper on the progress of motor-impelled vehicles—will appear in the pages of Chambers's Journal. Sir John was a pioneer in the use of the motor-car in Scotland.

UNDER the title 'Psyche's Task' Messrs. Macmillan & Co. will publish immediately a discourse by Prof. J. G. Frazer "concerning the influence of superstition on the growth of institutions." The substance of this discourse was recently delivered to an evening meeting at the Royal Institution, and the greater part has since been delivered in the form of lectures to the author's class in Liverpool. The book is "an attempt to sort out the seeds of good from the heap of evil which we call superstition, just as Psyche was given the task of sorting out the different kinds of seeds." The subjects dealt with are Government, Private Property, Marriage, and Respect for Human Life.

MR. JOHN LANE'S announcements include 'The Last Journals of Horace Walpole,' edited by Mr. A. F. Steuart, 2 vols., with numerous portraits and an introduction; 'Maria Edgeworth and her Circle in the Days of Bonaparte and Bourbon,' by Miss Constance Hill, author of 'Juniper Hall'; and 'British Malaya,' by Sir F. A. Swettenham, who has written much and well on Malay matters.

A BRIEF study by the late Mr. J. M. Watson, entitled 'Aristotle's Criticisms of Plato,' is to be published by Mr. Frowde. The author was a pupil of Prof. Burnet (who has written a preface) at St. Andrews and a Fergusson Scholar, and at Oxford had a career of great promise.

MESSRS. KEGAN PAUL announce for early publication a work called 'Resurrectio Christi.' It is an attempt to reconsider the evidence for the Resurrection in the light of psychical research. The author claims to find support for his conclusions in early documents, the value of which has been hitherto unrecognized.

MESSRS. WILLIAMS & NORGATE are publishing immediately a volume entitled 'Man's Origin, Destiny, and Duty,' by Mr. Hugh MacColl. It is a careful examination of the theory of Evolution in its bearing on Theism. One of the chapters is devoted to a careful analysis of the mental differences between man and lower sentient animals, whilst another is devoted to an examination of the theories contained in Prof. Haeckel's writings.

MR. B. H. BLACKWELL writes:—

"In the notice of Vernon Lee's new book in your issue of the 30th ult. you state that the play 'Ariadne in Mantua' is published for the first time; but this is hardly correct, as I published a limited edition of 500 copies in 1903, one of which you received for notice."

THE House Governor of Donaldson's Hospital, Edinburgh, Mr. Robert Taylor Skinner, is gathering materials for a life of James Donaldson, the founder of the institution, along with that of his father, Alexander Donaldson, who had a shop in London, and incurred the wrath of Johnson because he sold pirated editions of popular works.

IN connexion with the Poe Centenary, the Oxford University Press is issuing Poe's 'Poems and Critical Essays,' in "The Oxford Poets." The volume has been edited by Mr. Brimley Johnson, who contributes a life of the poet.

It will be some time before the Catalogue of the Acton collection of books at Cambridge is published. Meanwhile historical students will be glad to know that Bulletins, containing the titles of books which were not previously in the University Library, are being issued in various sections, and can be purchased from the Secretary, University Library, Cambridge. 'Germany: General Political History,' and 'Spain and Portugal' are now ready; and 'Political and Social Philosophy, Law,' will be available shortly.

THE centenary of the birth of Edward FitzGerald is to be celebrated at Ipswich and Woodbridge on March 27th and 28th. Details may be obtained from Mr. Frank Woolnough, Curator, The Museum, Ipswich.

THE second part of Mr. Demetrius C. Boulger's 'History of Belgium' will appear on or about the 1st of March. It covers the half-century from the battle of Waterloo to the death of Leopold I., and deals with the period of Dutch rule, the Belgian Revolution, the London Conference, and the consolidation of Belgium under its first king. Like its predecessor, the volume is published by the author himself, from 12, Bloomsbury Square, W.C.

IN the list of Edinburgh University honorary degrees are the names of Mr. J. M. Barrie and Mr. John George Bartholomew of the well-known map-publishing firm. Mr. Barrie has already received a similar compliment from St. Andrews University. In 'An Edinburgh Eleven' he sketched half a dozen of the professors of that city.

MISS BESSY BOYLE O'REILLY, of Boston, U.S.A., is now in Cairo, collecting information regarding the Constitutional Movement in Turkey, for a work which she is preparing on that country, and which she contemplates publishing at an early date.

IN March M. Frédéric Loliée will publish his 'Frère d'Empereur: Auguste de Morny et la Société du Second Empire.' Before the publication of the book the chapter devoted to 'L'Enfance du Duc de Morny' will appear in the Annales politiques et littéraires. M. Loliée has been allowed by M. Clemenceau to examine unprinted documents of the Ministère de l'Intérieur, including the "archives secrètes de la sûreté," so that his book is likely to clear up some points hitherto obscure.

La Revue de Paris has discovered the extraordinary interest attached to the Japanese war book 'Human Bullets,' reviewed by us on November 16th, 1907. The writer of the essay, Général de Grandprey, explains that 40,000 copies of the original have been sold in Japan. The French writer enters on an examination of patriotism in armies, and reaches the conclusion that it is independent of forms of government, though sometimes, as in the United States, "dissimulé par le tourbillon des affaires."

La Revue des Deux Mondes of the 15th inst. contains the more important part of M. Hanotaux's history of African expeditions leading up to the political situation known as "Fashoda," on which the historian entered in the number of the 1st inst.

WE learn from the director of La Vie Parisienne that the sparkling, but ultra-Parisian writers we referred to on January 9th last as appearing in its pages include "Colette Willy," but not Willy.

A TWOFOLD literary interest is evoked by the death (which took place suddenly at Pau last week) of the Marquis de Saint Yves, whose literary name was Saint Yves d'Alveydre. Born in Paris in 1842, the Marquis married the Comtesse Keller, a niece of Balzac. He wrote many books, among others 'La Mission des Juifs,' 'La Mission des Souverains,' 'La Mission des Ouvriers,' 'La France vraie,' and 'Le Poème de Jeanne d'Arc.'

THE death was announced on Monday of Charles Albert, Marquis Costa de Beauregard, a member of the French Academy, and the head of one of the oldest families in Savoy. He took part in the Franco-German War, and for some time sat in the French Chamber as Deputy for Nice. Since 1875 he had devoted himself entirely to literary pursuits. The first of his books was 'Un Homme d'Autrefois,' followed by 'Le Roman d'un Royaliste,' two books on the youth and later years of Charles Albert, and 'La Prédestinée.' He was elected to the Academy in succession to Camille Doucet in 1896.

ANOTHER French grand seigneur has passed away this week in the person of Emmanuel Henri Vieturnien, Marquis de Noailles, who, born in 1830, spent most of his active life in the diplomatic service. He was an authority on matters relating to Poland, and his books include 'La Pologne et ses Frontières' (1863); 'Henri de Valois et la Pologne en 1572,' in three volumes (1867), which was "crowned" by the French Academy; and 'La Poésie polonaise' (1866).

A NEW bilingual weekly journal called Swadesh, written in English and Bengali, has been started in Calcutta by Mr. S. C. Laharry. Its object is to promote the progress of indigenous arts and manufactures, and to interpret to the people of Bengal the purposes and acts of the Government. While making politics a secondary consideration, it will range itself on the side of law and social order. Two numbers have already appeared. It is to be hoped that this literary venture will meet with the success which it deserves.

PROF. REIFFERSCHIED, whose death in his sixty-second year is announced from Greifswald, had since 1877 been Professor in the Philosophical Faculty of the University of that town, and was the author of a number of valuable works, among them 'Quellen zur Geschichte des geistigen Lebens in Deutschland während des siebzehnten Jahrhunderts,' 'Freundschaftsbriefe von Wilhelm und Jakob Grimm,' and 'Neun Texte zur Geschichte der religiösen Aufklärung in Deutschland während des vierzehnten und fünfzehnten Jahrhunderts.'

WE note the publication as a Parliamentary Paper of the Fifth Number of a Statistical Abstract of the British Empire (1s. 2d.).

NEXT week we shall pay special attention to Theological Literature.

SCIENCE

The Royal Botanic Gardens, Kew: Historical and Descriptive. By W. J. Bean. With an Introduction by Sir William Thiselton-Dyer. (Cassell & Co.)

Kew Gardens are regarded by most people who visit them as forming a magnificent pleasure ground, or at the best a well-managed, perfectly equipped garden. Others having some botanical or horticultural knowledge may recognize that the collections of particular types of plants afford unrivalled opportunities for study. A still smaller number are aware that Kew provides a first-rate training school for young gardeners. Certainly Kew fulfils all these purposes; but it does much more than this. The most valuable work performed through its agency is the least conspicuous, and therefore the least appreciated.

We refer especially to the botanical assistance rendered to the Colonies and India. There is not one of these that has not, at one time or another, sought the good offices of Kew; and there are countless instances in which the information and practical assistance thus obtained have been the means of creating or developing industries of importance. In the words of the late Director, Sir William T. Thiselton-Dyer, who contributes an interesting introduction to Mr. Bean's work, Kew "did what was possible when coffee-leaf disease brought financial disaster to Ceylon; the fortunate identification of a single leaf started the rubber industry of the Gold Coast; Kew sent tea to South Africa, it gave cinchona to India, it transferred the South American rubber plants to the East." Scientific members of the Kew staff hold important positions in India and the Transvaal, and a former Assistant Director, Sir Daniel Morris, has done great work in restoring the agricultural prosperity of the West Indies. All this work is better understood in the Colonies, and perhaps even on the Continent, than at home. In botanical stations over all the world there are Kew-trained men; they already "dot the course of the Cape-to-Cairo railway," and as they are in intimate correspondence with each other and with Kew, the economic plants of all quarters of the globe may be tried, from the cultural point of view, by any particular colony. In this work the scientific staff employed in the Herbarium and Museums affords invaluable help. Plants have to be identified from specimens sent home for the purpose, and frequently occasion is taken to propagate them for distribution in various parts of the Empire. Plant pests and diseases have also to be studied in the laboratory with a view to the discovery of preventive or remedial measures.

We cannot refer to all the important work that constitutes the activities of Kew, but a word, at the least, is demanded by the valuable literature that has directly emanated from the Directors and their staff.

The 'Genera Plantarum' by Bentham and Hooker, the 'Flora of British India' by Sir Joseph Hooker, the 'Flora of Tropical Africa,' the 'Index Kewensis,' the Handlists of plants in cultivation in the gardens, and the Bulletin of Miscellaneous Information are sufficient testimony to the strenuous activity of Kew, so far as its literary output is concerned; but it may be added that the editorship of the world-famous Botanical Magazine was entrusted to Sir W. J. Hooker in 1827, and it has ever since 1841 been directly associated with Kew.

The author of the present work is the Assistant Curator, who not only knows all the circumstances connected with the internal management of the gardens, but is also full of their spirit and traditions. He has told the story of Kew in a straightforward and interesting manner, without any superfluous matter.

Kew, as we know it to-day, is not an institution which has been developed on any preconceived plan, but rather one that, having sprung from a small beginning, has continued to evolve, so to speak, ever since Frederick, Prince of Wales, son of George II., obtained a lease of Kew House from the Capel family in 1730. Eventually the Kew property was amalgamated, under the auspices of George III., with that of Richmond (or Ormonde) Lodge, which was a royal residence before Kew House was occupied. The Prince died in 1751, and it is to his consort, Princess Augusta, that credit is due for having formed a botanical centre at Kew. In 1759 William Aiton, the author of 'Hortus Kewensis' (published in 1789), who was employed under Philip Miller in the Physic Garden at Chelsea, was engaged by the Princess Dowager of Wales to act as head gardener, and therefore from that date Kew may be regarded as having exerted some botanical influence. In the same year Sir William Chambers began to build the various temples and structures which at that time were considered ornaments of the gardens, but have since been mostly removed. John Stuart, third Earl of Bute, who was Prime Minister under George III., and Sir William Chambers (who also designed Somerset House) exerted considerable influence in directing the development of the garden at this time, being appointed by the Dowager Princess for this purpose. Princess Augusta died in 1772, and three months later her son George III. and his family transferred their residence from Richmond Lodge to Kew House, and the freehold of the property was eventually bought by him from the Essex family. In 1772 also Lord Bute retired from the Botanical Directorate, and was succeeded by Sir Joseph Banks. In the same year it was decided to send out from Kew Francis Masson, the first of the long line of plant-collectors whose exertions have resulted in the introduction of so many exotic plants. It was soon after George III. had taken over Kew House that Cobbett obtained employment at Kew as an under-gardener.

For thirty years or so the gardens flourished gaily under the encouragement given by George III. and his queen, but there followed a period of thirty years' neglect and decline. In January, 1838, a Committee of three was appointed "to inquire into the management, &c., of the Royal Gardens." These were Dr. John Lindley, Mr. (afterwards Sir Joseph) Paxton, and Mr. Wilson, gardener to the Earl of Surrey. The Report of this Committee was not presented to Parliament until May 12th, 1840; and in the March of the following year a most important event happened in the appointment of Sir William Hooker as Director. Kew was then under the control of the Commissioners of Woods and Forests; in 1850 the management was transferred to the newly instituted "Board of Works and Public Buildings," and in March, 1903, it was again transferred to the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries. After the appointment of Sir William Hooker the development of the gardens and the work attached to them went on apace, and this has been continued under his successors.

Mr. Bean's work is sure to meet with a good welcome. It is printed on first-rate paper, the type is good, and there are forty excellent half-tone plates from photographs, in addition to twenty coloured plates from paintings by Mr. H. A. Olivier. Two plans—the one illustrating the successive enlargements of Kew since 1760, and the other representing it as it exists to-day—are contributed by Miss E. Goldring.

Gardens Past and Present. By K. L. Davidson. (Werner Laurie.)—Mrs. Davidson's book on gardens is more satisfactory than more pretentious treatises; but its value would have been enhanced had it been better produced. The margins are too small, and the illustrations might have been improved. The matter of the book is excellent. The author has studied her subject, and is full of garden lore, which she can use so as to interest. She has also good taste. Her survey of the past of English gardening, though not detailed or comprehensive, is very serviceable; and she does justice to the good work of the Royal Horticultural Society, now established in new gardens at Wisley by the grace of the late Sir Thomas Hanbury. This society has flourished abundantly during the last twenty years, and is a moving force in horticulture, far different from the water-logged Royal Botanic Society. The loss involved in the abandonment of the Chiswick Gardens, after a century of use, forced upon the society by the growth of London, will be more than compensated in time by the establishment at Wisley. On the art of topiary Mrs. Davidson is sound. It is nothing but "tree mutilation," freak gardening; and the less we hear of it the better. Levens should remain sacred, perhaps, as an object-lesson in what to avoid. Once again we have to remark on the movement which has set in against the previous reaction against bedding-out. That earlier reaction, to which Mr. Robinson largely contributed, broke up the Early Victorian ideas of a garden once and for all; but it also bade fair to infuse erroneous views as to the value of "bedders." A sane mean was necessary, and writers are beginning to recover it. The crux of gardening is the difficulty of trimming and ordering the herbaceous border. Bedding-out may well assist in this, though the two kinds of gardening have hitherto been kept rigidly apart. We must join issue with Mrs. Davidson's enthusiasm for "dry-walling," which, as we have had occasion to say before, seems to us to be a waste of zeal. Mrs. Davidson has a pleasant chapter on the rose garden, in which she remarks on the strides which rose culture has made of late. One point worthy of notice is that the Germans have recently taken up the raising of roses systematically, and with great success. Some of our most beautiful roses come from Germany, whereas a few years ago France and England held the field.

An Artist's Garden. Tended, Painted, Described, by Anna L. Merritt. (Allen & Sons.)—It is obvious from the outset that Mrs. Merritt's book is to be judged rather by its illustrations than its letterpress. The latter is sound enough, but offers nothing horticulturally which has not been said to garden-lovers a score of times before, unless it be some particular hints on gradations of colour. For example, Mrs. Merritt observes that pale yellow may excellently well accompany red, and that it enhances the value of white. Both these truths are likely to help the person who is more of a gardener than an artist. Our author is both practically, and both functions march together and assist each other. Mrs. Merritt's garden is small, but, as she says, a small garden may be as beautiful a picture as a large, if treated according to proper rule and proportion. She aims in a garden, as in a picture, at "light and shade, colour in contrast and in harmony form." On these matters her remarks are well worth reading. But the feature of the writing is rather a genuine joy and enthusiasm than any expert knowledge. The author runs on in a sort of rhapsody, and in her course delivers many pleasant fancies and some amiable anecdotes. The evident zest of her chronicle is in itself excuse enough, apart from the pictures. These are some seventeen in number, and with one exception reproductions from water-colour drawings. The exception is possibly the most artistic of the lot, being a wash drawing of downs. The others are studies of flower groupings. The book will make an admirable gift for lovers of gardens. We must demur to Mrs. Merritt's statement that the burning of the Alexandrian library was serviceable to literature.

A Book of Simples. (Sampson Low & Co.)—In these days of rapid transit and facile communication, of all manner of patent panaceas and prepared aliments, this book of simples comes with almost a shock of surprise when we realize in how comparatively brief a lapse of years a great change has been brought about. The original was found in the library of a distinguished Essex antiquary, and would seem to have been the still-room book of some manor house or homestead of standing. It has been pronounced by experts to cover a period of about fifty years, terminating towards the middle of the eighteenth century. As the editor says, "the writing is in the hand of several persons: the spelling and absence of punctuation are here reproduced in all their original quaintness." How remarkable is the quality of that quaintness may be inferred only by students of old herbals and manuscript archives of the same comprehensive kind. Almost every description of ill the flesh is heir to will find its remedy in these resourceful pages; and if some of the remedies appear not a little bewildering, that only brings home the more forcibly the lesson of other times, other medicaments. For instance, although there are few modern households that do not possess a cat, the châtelaine who is confronted with 'Convulsion Fits in Man, Woman, or Child' might conceivably find some difficulty in procuring, in addition to other even more difficult ingredients, three drops of her cat's blood. A handful of earthworms, prepared as directed, "for the Jaundice" is a cure that presents fewer difficulties; while "Mr. Walldrons ye Surgeons Cure for Green Wounds" is of some interest, inasmuch as it embodies one phase of a very ancient superstition that survives, in divers forms and localities, to-day:—

"Roman vitriol apply'd not to the wound but to the blood of the wound wiped on a clean linnen cloth then put your vitriol on the blood ye last is best and when heal'd by this application, bind your cloth wrap'd up as wth you dress'd ye blood) to a stone and thrown into some well or deep water, then shall ye wound no more trouble you."

Red rose leaves will never make wine, but a conserve of roses, together with other simples, is prescribed for certain maladies; while the numerous recipes for kitchen and still-room use are occasionally tempting; for example, that for a sweet bag, which we commend to modern makers of potpourri. And what idyllic suggestions are raised by such recipes as these!—"To Pickle Green Ashen Keys, Elder Buds, Broom Buds, or ye likes"; "To Candie Flowers"; "To make Apricocke Wine"; "To pickle Violets for Sallets," and so forth. Seed pearls, red coral, crab's eyes, hart's horn, and white amber are among the essentials for a famous cordial powder, a costly-sounding compound. Always the spelling is charming in its naïveté—sausage is written "sawedge"; sainfoin, "sinkfoin." An adequate Index and a Bibliography of Herbals and old Books of Cookery complete a delightful book.

SOCIETIES.

LINNEAN.—Feb. 4.—Dr. A. Smith Woodward, V.-P., in the chair.—Mr. F. C. McClellan was admitted a Fellow.—Mr. P. Rivalz Dupont, Mr. W. H. Mullens, and Mr. Gurney Wilson were elected Fellows.—Prof. W. A. Herdman exhibited microscope-slides prepared by one of his pupils, Mr. W. J. Dakin, now working at Naples, showing striped muscle-fibre in the mantle of Pecten.—The Rev. E. S. Marshall showed the following interesting British plants: Saxifraga nivalis × stellaris, n. hybr., found in 1902 on Cairngorm by the late Mr. F. C. Crawford; Orchis —, found by Mr. W. A. Shoolbred and the exhibitor at Inchnadamph, W. Sutherland; Helianthemum chamaecistus × polifolium, from Purn Hill, Bleadon, N. Somerset, first observed by Mr. S. H. Thompson; Hieracium hyparcticum, (Almq.) Elfstrand, first found by Mr. F. J. Hanbury and the exhibitor in 1890 at Inchnadamph; and H. custales, Linton, from E. and W. Sutherland. This exhibition was followed by Prof. F. E. Weiss, who showed some specimens of Compsopogon, a tropical freshwater alga belonging to the Rhodophyceæ, which has been found in the Reddish Canal near Stockport. The water in this part of the canal is warmed by the inflow of hot water from the cotton mills, and other subtropical aquatics have been found there in the past—Najas graminea, Chara braunii, and Pithophora oedogonia. They are supposed to have been introduced with refuse from the cotton mills.—Prof. A. Dendy, Sec. L.S., exhibited lantern-slides and preparations throwing light upon the structure of the pineal eye of Sphenodon. The Chairman, Prof. Herdman, and the Rev. T. R. R. Stebbing took part in a short discussion.—The first paper, on 'Fucus spiralis, Linné, or Fucus platycarpus, Thuret: a Question of Nomenclature,' was by Dr. Börgesen, and was expounded by Mr. A. D. Cotton. The purport of the paper was to show that recent statements by Prof. Sauvageau as to the validity of the name Fucus spiralis, Linn., are not supported by the history of the plant, nor by specimens in the Linnean Herbarium.—The next paper, by Mr. Claude Morley, was read by Mr. E. A. Cockayne, and was entitled 'Observations on the Economy of the Ichneumon manifestator, Marsham (nec Linn.); an Historical Note.'—The third paper, on 'The Polyzoa of Madeira,' was by Canon Norman, who sent an abstract. The Rev. T. R. R. Stebbing pleaded for the use of the term Bryozoa in place of Polyzoa.

ZOOLOGICAL.—Feb. 2.—Mr. F. Gillett, V.-P., in the chair.—Mr. C. Tate Regan exhibited specimens of the char of Lough Melvin (Salvelinus grayi, Günth.) and of the char from a little loch under Ben Hope, Sutherland, recently described by him under the name S. maxillaris. He pointed out the differences between the two forms, and called attention to the interest attaching to the study of this neglected group of British freshwater fishes.—Mr. R. E. Holding exhibited several skulls and photographs of the St. Kilda or Hebridean four-horned sheep, and remarked upon the character of the horns.—Mr. C. Davies Sherborn, on behalf of Mr. Malcolm MacLaren, read an account of a fight between a whale and a swordfish observed in the Hauraki Gulf, New Zealand.—Dr. C. W. Andrews gave an account of his visit to Christmas Island, calling attention to the differences in the fauna associated with influx of population.—Mr. H. S. Leigh, Honorary Research Fellow in the University of Manchester, presented a paper entitled 'Preliminary Account of the Life-History of the Leaf-Insect, Phyllium crurifolium, Serville.'—Mr. E. C. Chubb, Acting Curator of the Rhodesia Museum, communicated a paper on 'The Mammals of Matabeleland.'—Dr. H. G. Plimmer, Pathologist to the Society, reported on the pathological observations at the Society's gardens during 1908, and illustrated his remarks with a series of lantern-slides.

ENTOMOLOGICAL.—Feb. 3.—Dr. F. A. Dixey, President, in the chair.—Dr. K. Jordan, Dr. G. B. Longstaff, and Mr. C. O. Waterhouse were nominated Vice-Presidents for the year.—Mr. L. A. Vidler was elected a Fellow.—Dr. K. Jordan brought for exhibition some Oriental Papilio illustrating polymorphism. P. dissimilis and P. clytia have long been considered distinct species, but recent evidence points decidedly to their being but forms of one species. Both have been reared from one batch of larvæ and pupæ, which appeared to be alike; and they have been observed to pair. There is also no structural difference. P. paradoxa and P. canus, hitherto regarded as separate, are similarly alike in structure. Hence it is legitimate to conclude that they are dimorphic forms also of the same species.—Mr. O. E. Janson showed a cockroach and a beetle from the Celebes exhibiting a remarkable case of mimicry.—Mr. C. O. Waterhouse exhibited a specimen of Acridium peregrinum from a swarm that visited Las Palmas, Grand Canary, in October, 1908. He said that 16 locusts weighted one ounce, but allowing 15 to the ounce (as the specimens may have lost in weight), one ton would represent 537,600 locusts, and the 200 tons, estimated as the weight of the swarm, 107,520,000. He also exhibited a dragonfly, Tramca basilaris. This species occurred in such numbers on one occasion in Portuguese Congo that the natives mistook them for a swarm of locusts.

The Rev. F. D. Morice exhibited photo-micrographs of the "saws" in ten British sawflies—species of the genus Dolerus. After briefly alluding to the specific characters presented by them, to certain points in which all alike differed from the ordinary tenon-saws employed by carpenters, he invited suggestions which might account for these differences. A discussion followed, in which Dr. T. A. Chapman expressed his opinion that the name "saw" for these instruments, though well describing their general appearance, was misapplied as regards their function. They were really knives; all their cutting was done during the forward movement, the notches being merely a ratchet to hold one "saw" in place whilst the other advanced, as they alternately moved.

Mr. W. Parkinson Curtis sent for exhibition two specimens (male and female) of Agrotis vestigialis, Rott., from Purbeck, Dorset. When working the sandhills he noticed the dead female apparently sitting on the grass, and then saw that a part of the male appendages were attached to her. He had found afterwards a common earwig engaged in devouring the male, though he had never noticed previously any other attack by this species on Lepidoptera. Dr. Chapman felt it impossible to accept the conclusions arrived at by the exhibitor with regard to the earwig. An earwig would probably not attack a living Agrotis; if it did, the Agrotis would repel it successfully.

PHILOLOGICAL.—Feb. 5.—Mr. H. A. Nesbitt, Treasurer, in the chair.—Mr. John Hodgkin read a paper on 'Proper Terms: an Attempt at a Rational Explanation of the Meanings of the Collection of Phrases in "The Book of St. Alban's," 1486, entitled "Compaynys of Bestys and Fowlys," and other Lists.' Unluckily the word "Compaynys" in the heading of the St. Alban's book has led dictionary-makers and other folk into saying that all the phrases in the St. Alban's list apply to companies of the birds, people, and other animals named in it, though it is not possible that terms like "an Exalting of Larkis, a Wachie of Nyghtingalis, an vnkynednes of Rauenes," have anything whatever to do with a collection of these birds: the epithets are simply "proper terms" for qualities of the birds, like "an Eloquens of lawyeris, a faith of Marchandis, a Lyeng of pardonis," are of those men. As the Egerton MS. 1995 says of its list, "Note ye the proper teys that longythe to a yonge gentylle man to haue knowynge of suchie thyngys that longythe vnto hym, that he fayle not in hys propyr termys that longythe vnto hym." The object of the lists was to teach young gentlemen the proper technical term for various things, so that when peacocks spread their tails he should call it "A Moustyr (or moustyr) of Pecoockys," and not "a tail-spread," and should speak of "a Bevy of Ladies," and not "a group." There is no excuse for the error of all dictionary-makers in treating the special terms in the various lists as names of companies, because some of the terms show the impossibility of their applying to companies. Yet all the lexicographers, from Skinner in 1671 to the editors of the 'New English Dictionary,' have sinned in this respect. One of the terms in the 'Book of St. Alban's' is "A Kerf of Panteris," meaning the carving or cutting up of bread by panteris, the bread or pantry servants. On this Skinner acknowledged that he did not know what "Kerf" meant, and that panteris or leopards had not been seen in England: but he said the phrase meant a company of some animals. So Coles, ed. 1685, made "kerf, a great company"; John Kersey made it "kerf, a notch in wood"; and the 'N.E.D.' said the phrase was "a humorous term for a company of pantry-men." "A Tydyng of Pies" in the Egerton MS.—which "tyding" refers to the superstition that the number of magpies seen by any one predicts future disaster or events—is interpreted by Skinner (who copied it in the mistaken form "A Tygendis of pies" from the 1496 'Book of St. Alban's') as a group of pies; and he is followed by Halliwell with "tilthing, a company of magpies." Mr. Hodgkin examined all Skinner's 25 explanations of the 'Book of St. Alban's' terms, and found only 6 of them right, possibly 7. He also dealt with Halliwell's absurdities, and he showed that there were 164 "proper terms" in the 'Book of St. Alban's,' and 16 more in the 'Hors, Shepe, and Ghoos' list, c. 1376, printed with Lydgate's poem. Of these 180, 98 ought to have been treated by the 'New English Dictionary,' but only 84 had been. The following 14 should therefore be dealt with in the Supplement to that work after it is completed to Z: "a Boste of souldyours, a Conuerting of prechouris, a disceite of lapwinks, a destruction of wild cattles, a discrecion of wode-walis, a Doctryne of doctoris, an Erthe of foxes, an unbrewyng of Kerueris, a Festre [that is, Sestre] of Brweris, a Fraunch of Mylneris, a Lordship of monkes, a Malepertnes of pedleris, a Pyte of prysoners, a Plocke of Shoturneris." A print of the first three parts of Mr. Hodgkin's paper (80 pages) was put into the hands of his hearers, so that they could see his print of the 20 lists of "proper terms" which he had collected, to which two more, shown to him by Mr. Falconer Madan in the Bodleian, have to be added. He also called attention to the way in which many of the terms had been mistaken and misprinted. Thus the Oath of Allegiance to the King, sworn by every baron, is in the Porkington MS. "A Trothe of Barrouns," but in the two editions of the 'Book of St. Alban's,' 1486, 1496, appears as "a Thongh of barons"; then in 1560, 1561, and 1586 as "a though of barons," and in 1614 as "a thought of barons." So "a Padelynge of Dokis" (paddling of ducks) was turned into "a badelyng of Dokis" by the 'Book of St. Alban's,' and the "Biches" (beech-mast brown fur) of martens into the "Riches of Martrons," also in the 'Book of St. Alban's,' 1486, and its followers. Mr. Hodgkin was warmly thanked by the meeting for the result of his many years' work at the subject of his paper, and for his clearing-up of the numerous obscurities and difficulties till now existing in these so-called "Company terms."

ANTHROPOLOGICAL INSTITUTE.—Feb. 9.—Prof. W. Ridgeway, President, in the chair.—The election of the following Fellows was announced: Messrs. C. O. Blagden, W. H. Broad, A. R. Brown,

J. L. Copland, Malik Muhammad Din, F. H. Harward, and A. R. Wright.—The Rev. J. W. Hayes read a paper on 'Deneholes,' in which he argued that these excavations were merely chalk wells or chambers from which chalk was taken for builders' mortar or manure for the fields. He did not assert that all the deneholes were modern: some may well have been dug in Saxon or even in Roman times, but others were certainly not more than 100 years old, and some were dug within the last quarter of a century. Evidence was adduced to show that even at the present day the farmers in some parts of the country—Hertfordshire for example—still get chalk from the land from similar pits. The use of chalk for building was enlarged upon, and the author contended that the Chislehurst caves were nothing more than an old chalk mine, the so-called altars or steps being merely platforms left purposely to enable the workmen to reach the roof of the cavern. The author was also able to show that where a firm stratum of chalk, suitable for builders' lime, was found under the Thanet sand, it would pay the excavators better to make fresh shafts through the sand than to tunnel in the ordinary way and hoist the material excavated through a single shaft. The cones of sand usually found at the bottom of a denehole were explained as the result of the refuse of an old shaft being deliberately thrown down a new one. The paper produced a good discussion, in which Messrs. Clift, Miller Christy, and Reader took part, all of whom were in general agreement with the views of the author.

MATHEMATICAL.—Feb. 11.—Sir W. D. Niven, President, in the chair. The following papers were communicated: 'The Conformal Transformations of a Space of Four Dimensions and the Generalization of the Lorentz Einstein Principle,' by Messrs. H. Bateman and E. Cunningham; 'On a Certain Family of Cubic Surfaces,' by Mr. W. H. Salmon; 'Some Fundamental Properties of a Lebesgue Integral in a Two-Dimensional Domain,' by Dr. E. W. Hobson; 'On the Relation between Pfaff's Problem and the Calculus of Variations,' by Prof. A. C. Dixon; 'On Implicit Functions and their Differentials,' and 'On Indeterminate Forms,' by Dr. W. H. Young; and 'Modular Invariants of a General System of Linear Forms,' by Prof. L. E. Dickson.

FARADAY.—Feb. 9.—Dr. V. H. Veley in the chair.—Dr. S. Rideal read a paper entitled 'Application of Electrolytic Chlorine to Sewage Purification and Deodorization by the "Oxy-chloride" Process.'

MEETINGS NEXT WEEK.

- MON. Royal Academy, 4.—'Two Great Sculptors of Modern Times,' Prof. W. R. Colton.
— Institute of Actuaries, 5.—'Some Financial and Statistical Considerations of the Old-Age Pension Scheme,' Mr. Vyvyan Marr.
— London Institution, 5.—'Russia: Economical Development,' Mr. Bernard Pares. (Travers Lecture.)
— Surveyors' Institution, 5.—'Practical English Estate Forestry,' Mr. M. C. Duchesne.
— Society of Arts, 8.—'Modern Methods of Artificial Illuminating,' Lecture II, Mr. Leon Gaster. (Cantor Lecture.)
— Geographical, 8.30.—'Recent Journey across Northern Arabia,' Capt. S. S. Butler.
TUES. Royal Institution, 3.—'The Evolution of the Brain as an Organ of Mind,' Lecture I, Prof. F. W. Mott.
— Institution of Civil Engineers, 8.
— Anthropological Institute, 8.15.—'Man and the Glacial Period,' Dr. W. Allen Sturge.
WED. British Numismatic, 8.
— Geological, 8.—'Palaeolithic Implements, &c., from Hackpen Hill, Winterbourne Bassett, and Knowle Farm Pit, Wiltshire,' the Rev. H. G. O. Kendall; 'On the Karroo System in Northern Rhodesia, and its Relation to the General Geology,' Mr. A. J. C. Molyneux; 'On Coal-Balls from Japan,' Miss Marie C. Stopes.
— Society of Arts, 8.—'Hand-Made Papers of Different Periods,' Messrs. C. Beadle and H. P. Stevens.
THURS. Royal Institution, 3.—'Problems of Geographical Distribution in Mexico,' Lecture II, Dr. Hans Gadow.
— Royal, 4.30.
— Royal Academy, 4.30.—'Two Great Sculptors of Olden Times,' Prof. W. R. Colton.
— Society of Arts, 4.30.—'The Bhuddist and Hindu Architecture of India,' Prof. A. A. Macdonell.
— London Institution, 6.—'European Commercial Federation,' Sir Max L. Waechter. (Travers Lecture.)
— Institution of Electrical Engineers, 8.—Discussion on 'The Use of Large Gas Engines for Generating Power.'
— Society of Antiquaries, 8.30.—'Excavations in the Cloister of Durham Abbey,' Mr. W. H. St. John Hope.
FRI. Physical, 5.—'A Laboratory Machine for applying Bending and Twisting Moments Simultaneously,' Prof. Coker; 'On the Self-Demagnetizing Factor of Bar Magnets,' Prof. S. P. Thompson and Mr. E. W. Moss.
— Institution of Civil Engineers, 8.—'Standardization in Engineering Practice,' Lecture II, Dr. W. C. Unwin. (Students' Lecture.)
— Royal Institution, 9.—'Osmotic Phenomena, and their Modern Physical Interpretation,' Prof. H. L. Callendar.
SAT. Royal Institution, 3.—'Properties of Matter,' Lecture I, Prof. Sir J. J. Thomson.

Science Gossip.

WE regret to hear that towards the end of last year M. Percival de Loriol le Fort died at Geneva at the age of eighty. M. de Loriol was a prolific and much-esteemed writer on living and fossil echinoderms, and on various groups of other fossil invertebrates. He was at work to the last.

THE death of Sir George King, K.C.I.E., F.R.S., on Saturday last at San Remo, in his sixty-ninth year, removes a distinguished Oriental botanist. Educated at Aberdeen Grammar School, Sir George entered the Bengal Medical Service in 1865, and in 1871 was appointed to the Chair of Botany at the Medical College of Calcutta, and the supervision of the Royal Botanical Gardens in that city. His 'Manual of Cinchona Cultivation' presents his studies and discoveries concerning quinine, a remedy of great importance in a country so subject to malarial fever as India. He also published 'Annals' of the Botanic Gardens where he worked so long and strenuously, and several learned monographs on the Oriental flora. He was knighted on his retirement in 1898, and was the recipient of many other honours.

PROF. JULIUS THOMSEN, who also died on Saturday last, was born at Copenhagen in 1826, and from 1866 to 1891 held the Chair of Chemistry in his native city. His 'Thermochemische Untersuchungen,' 1882–1886, embodied the studies which made his name well known in the scientific world.

Two new variable stars have been detected, situated in the constellations Ursa Major and Andromeda respectively. The first of these was noticed by Herren G. Müller and P. Kempf of Potsdam; it changes slowly between the seventh and eighth magnitudes and will be reckoned as var. 1, 1909, Ursæ Majoris. It is numbered in the Bonn 'Durchmusterung' +62°1224. The other was detected by Madame Ceraski whilst examining photographic plates taken by M. Blazko at the Moscow Observatory. When brightest it is of 9½ magnitude; when faintest it sinks below the twelfth. In a general list it will be reckoned var. 2 1909, Andromedæ.

PROF. HALE's observations on Mount Wilson have shown the probability that the sunspots are generally produced by vortices or whirlpools stirring the surface of the photosphere; and also that in many cases magnetic fields are contained in them.

PROF. BURNHAM contributes to Nos. 4301–4302 of the Astronomische Nachrichten the results of a large number of double-star measures obtained with the 40-inch refractor of the Yerkes Observatory during 1908. The great object kept in view has been to note apparent changes arising from proper motion or otherwise. The rarity of measurable proper motion in stars below the tenth magnitude (except, of course, those which are moving in space with much brighter stars) renders their observation of great importance in obtaining accurate values of the proper motion of large stars.

THE Annuaire of the Société Belge d'Astronomie for 1909 includes a catalogue of the places of the principal fixed stars for 1909, lists of the most remarkable double stars, and the dates of meteoric showers.

FINE ARTS

THE SOCIETY OF TWELVE.

ONE of the most encouraging things about modern connoisseurship is its appreciation of drawings—an appreciation which is even extended to some extent to modern examples, so that there are contemporary artists who enjoy a success with this class of work as great as was enjoyed—in their own lifetime—by the majority of Old Masters. The latter, indeed, often attached absurdly little importance to their drawings, and it is an entirely healthy sign that we should have come to realize that painting is not the only possible form of art—that a drawing may be as perfect in its way, and as desirable.

Such wise patronage has made possible the steady rise in reputation of Mr. Muirhead Bone, who has shown hardly any painting, and is not even primarily known (as is Mr. Cameron, for example) as an etcher, but holds a firm place in the front rank of practical artists of the day by his ever-increasing competence and power as a draughtsman. His series of etchings in this exhibition marks, however, so decided a gain in confidence and skill that his plates are likely in future to rank as his capital achievements, while his drawings are reduced to the rôle of preparatory studies. Some of his earlier etchings were wonderful enough, but these have more ease and unctious. No. 7, Chiswick Mall, is charmingly light and spontaneous, though it suffers from the failure to discriminate between the river and the sidewalk. No. 8, Country Mews, is more closely knit, recalling by its atmosphere of golden leisure those beautiful illustrations to the 'Centes Rémois' in which Meissonier, for the first and last time in his life, demonstrated himself a master of exquisitely personal charm. Liberty's Clock (11) is the principal among the plates—a truly extraordinary work in its easy mastery of complex structure, its wealth of interest, the perfect rightness and vitality of the figures introduced. In the last respect Mr. Bone greatly excels Mr. Cameron, from whom he differs also in a greater elasticity of drawing and a preference for pitching his harmony in the major key. On the other hand, it may be objected, from a technical point of view that in this, as in the charming 'Country Mews,' there is just the faintest tendency for the darks to clog in one or two accidental blots. The larger plate would perhaps be even finer with a slight economy of black in the mass of scaffolding to the right. Rather more continuity in the perpendicular forms would have brought the admirably placed figures into nearer relation with the architecture, and given added importance to the graceful festoon of ropes.

The Portrait of the Artist (9) is a strong and sensitive piece of work outside what we have come to regard as his special genre. It compares favourably with the portrait of him, evidently done at the same time, by Mr. Francis Dodd (23); indeed, the whole group of Mr. Dodd's etchings are a little uncertain in draughtsmanship when matched with his drawings in the further gallery. The latter are searching and thorough. Among the plates the Whitworth Wallis, F.S.A. (19), is sensitive and characteristic, but betrays a little of that inclination of the perpendiculars which we are accustomed to in the man who has trained his hand in writing rather than drawing. Mr. Rothenstein shows primarily as a maker of portraits in two excellent drawings of Gerhart Hauptmann (31) and Carlo Piacci (34), his Mother and Child (32) being but a vague, though charming adumbration by comparison with certain other drawings of child life in the exhibition. Of these Mr. Clausen's Sleepy Child (82) is singularly truthful and eloquent, and Mr. Orpen's Study of a Baby (87) most shrewdly observed, and the best of his series of admirable drawings. He is the most photographic in taste of this able group of the younger draughtsmen—photographic in his insistence, above all, on smooth continuity of surface, even at the expense of that lively comparison of every change of angle in a picture which might make its linear system not so much a representation of concrete things as an equation of conflicting forces. It is in his swift summing-up of every change of direction into a prodigiously unified scheme that Mr. Augustus John is a supreme draughtsman. He seems to need the actual presence of the model to achieve this to perfection, as though it were the result half of spiritual insight, but half also of miraculous sleight of hand. In his finest work here (Study of a Girl, 40) this is borne out by the way in which, at a crucial point in the design, the challenge to the eye of a sharp contrast of black and white has led the artist to emphasize the cast shadow of the necktie down the front of the figure instead of the infinitely more structural contour beneath the girl's ribs. The lack of the latter line, repeating with rhythmical variation the hanging line of the skirt, is surely what makes the drawing bewildering at first sight, notwithstanding its subtlety and power. Such deficiency in firm plastic realization we should never find in the work of Mr. Havard Thomas, whose faults are in the opposite direction. Working more slowly, with a firmer hold on actuality, and less dependence on vision, he is in danger of offering us the anatomy and characteristics of the model rather than of the pose: with all his knowledge, he is thus, in comparison with Mr. John, wanting in dynamic force and inclined to dullness. When Mr. John works without a model, his results are by a great proportion of the public taken less seriously, indeed, it would seem that Mr. John himself approaches such exercises with less confidence in his own sincerity. This is a pity, for while The Satyr Family (42) is a rococo invention such as might have been suggested by study of certain sketches by Tiepolo, the two Studies for Decoration (41 and 45) are far more like what they purport to be than the works Mr. John has hitherto shown on these lines. Both have a weird attraction, an arresting note of colour, ruined in each case by what seems a deliberately discordant passage—beauty hovering on the paper, and destroyed in seeming wantonness, in freakish preference for surprise at any price. How different a temperament is shown by Mr. Legros in his etching Le Jardinier (16). Content to repeat an assured harmony which has almost become a habit with him, he gently caresses a matured design softened by time till it has become a little characterless. Mr. Charles Shannon is at his best when in a similar mood. His Bathers (69) is a perennially suave combination of forms with all the corners rubbed off. His lithograph Summer (29) is fairer and more beautiful, but with the same tired vagueness. When, as in the drawing of Figures Kneeling (71), he attempts closer characterization, the result is less inspired.

THE MODERN SOCIETY OF PORTRAIT PAINTERS.

HERE again it is the small gallery devoted to drawings which can be most confidently recommended to would-be sitters in search of an artist, indeed, the superior observation and greater vividness of an apparently slight presentment make it often more covetable than the usual official portrait. The eight excellent contributions of Mr. Frank Carter (34-41) range from the slight happy sketch (39) to the academic completeness of the silverpoint drawing (34). Mr. Ronald Gray's portrait study (45) has the appearance of a "speaking likeness," of an actuality such as only the finest painter could achieve—and reconcile us to—on a larger scale. Mr. Glyn Philpot's two drawings (42 and 43) exhibit the talent of the possible lithographer; and Mr. George Lambert shows three workman like drawings, and a fourth (Mrs. A. B. Wood, 51) of real refinement and charm.

None of these artists fares equally well in the galleries devoted to paintings, where Mr. Gerald Festus Kelly is the most steadily capable painter, albeit a little wanting in personality. His four portraits of men do not altogether lack sympathy, but the result is somewhat depressing. Two of his sitters are modest men, and the buffets of a brutal world have evidently been too much for them. The other two are as painfully impressed with the necessity of self-assertion. In every case the statement looks only too plausible. Mr. Fergusson is, we are inclined to think, less scrupulous. His exhibits vary much in quality, but the best two—the hat with the green bird (Mlle. R., 34) and Mlle. Herbert (37)—are endowed with an identical charm which we suspect as a trick of the painter rather than a literal presentment. Mr. Giuseppe Giusti's Col. W. C. Dickenson (26) is broadly and unctuously modelled, the best work he has yet shown. As vivid, but more brutal in painting, is Mr. Joseph Oppenheimer's Alpinist (79): obvious realism can hardly go further. Mr. W. Ablett in Sir Francis Bertie (73) shows less power of painting, than Mr. Oppenheimer, but has the feeling for fundamental necessities of portraiture which reminds us of Sir Hubert Herkomer's work. Mr. Hayward's Archibald Leitch, Esq. (74), has a well-modelled head, but its scale of form is a little small, the definition throughout rather meticulous for so abrupt a change to a blurred and ghostly background. Miss Marguerite Wells (81) is the only one of Mr. Louis Ginnett's contributions which shows him in his best line as a painter of small-scale full-length portraits.

OTHER EXHIBITIONS.

MANY of Mr. Algernon Talmage's paintings at the Goupil Gallery deal with that most fascinating and difficult class of subject—London nocturnes. He handles them with some cleverness, but without the distinction necessary to wring out their full nobility. He is happier with the obvious glitter of sunlight; the blazing Hyde Park Corner, Full Summer (18), and the lighter gaiety of The Glittering Stream (Piccadilly) (44), are sufficiently characteristic of two typical London scenes to make them desirable for that army of exiled Englishmen to whom this is indeed the City of Romance. From a purely painter's point of view some of the smaller studies are more subtle and more entirely satisfactory. We mention in particular the fresh design of The Fashionable Hour (36) and the delicacy of the October Morning (48).

At the Dudley Gallery a New Society of Water-Colour Painters is principally remarkable for two fine drawings by Mr. George Thomson. The Chalk Pit at Etaples (14) is subtle in colour, but not quite happy in the proportions of a sky so empty of detail as to make us exacting on this point. The Tree-felling at Montreuil (15) is a dark, stately design, very simple in execution. The President, Sir William Eden, has a compactly contrived Gisburn Village (48) and a view of the Haymarket Theatre well chosen, but spoilt by the sky. Mr. Stephen Spurrier's Head of a Boy (82) shows great ability in objective painting.

At the Fine-Art Society is Mr. Wilfrid Ball, who seems to owe his success solely to an instinct for popular subjects. Mr. W. Walcot, showing alongside, has higher gifts, and displays sometimes, as in No. 51, Whitehall, considerable sense of the movement and weight of traffic. The procession of carts is here admirably placed, and precisely, yet broadly characterized. More rarely, as in Nos. 24 and 44, he shows a good sense of colour. As a rule, however, he lays in a drawing in monochrome, and inserts splashes of local colour, as an after-thought—generally in too great profusion. He uses in parts of his drawings an exceedingly liquid brush, in other parts an exceedingly dry one, and to the fine ordonnance and proportion of these two technical elements, which tend brusquely to divide, he does not give sufficient attention.

SALE.

MESSRS. CHRISTIE sold on the 13th inst. the following drawings: T. S. Cooper, Three Cows on the Banks of a Stream, 50*l.*; D. Cox, A Surrey Farm, 53*l.*; Birket Foster, Lago Maggiore, 136*l.*; A. C. Gow, The Rout of an Army, 131*l.*

Fine-Art Gossip.

THE second volume of Dr. Hofstede de Groot's monumental Catalogue Raisonné of the Most Eminent Dutch Painters, translated by Mr. Edward G. Hawke, is shortly to be published by Messrs. Macmillan. It is devoted to Albert Cuyp and Philips Wouwerman. Smith gave 368 pages of large type to the two masters; but Dr. de Groot has filled about 650 pages of small type, apart from indexes, which Smith did not provide. In innumerable cases, moreover, he has enlarged and corrected Smith's descriptions, besides giving the history of the pictures during the last seventy years.

MESSRS. DENT & Co. are publishing immediately in serial form a reissue of Muther's 'History of Modern Painting.' The work will be issued in twenty-two parts, and when complete will consist of four volumes.

THE INTERNATIONAL SOCIETY OF SCULPTORS, PAINTERS, AND GRAVERS has arranged to hold a loan exhibition in Copenhagen next month with works of Mr. John Lavery, Mr. Shannon, Mr. W. Nicholson, and Whistler.

THE SLADE PROFESSOR OF FINE ART at Cambridge gives notice that Mr. W. Rothenstein will deliver a public lecture on 'A Basis for the Appreciation of Works of Art' on March 5th in the Botanical Lecture-Room. So sincere and capable a painter should be well worth hearing on the subject.

At the Atkinson Art Gallery, Southport, the thirty-first spring exhibition of pictures, &c., was opened to the press yesterday.

M. ERNEST VICTOR HAREUX, who died at Grenoble on Tuesday at the age of sixty-one, was a well-known landscape painter. He was a native of Paris, and a member of the Société des Artistes Français. He obtained medals in 1880, 1885, 1889, and 1900, whilst the Prix Rosa Bonheur fell to his share in 1904.

THERE were five candidates at last week's election at the French Académie des Inscriptions, to fill the seat rendered vacant by the death of Dr. Hamy. Three withdrew their names before the day of election, leaving the rivalry to M. Théodore Reinach and M. Paul Fournier, the former being successful by a small margin of votes. The new Academician belongs to an exceptionally able family, being the brother of M. Joseph Reinach and M. Salomon Reinach. He is the author of a number of books on historical and archæological subjects, notably 'Les Monnaies juives' and 'Les Sarcophages de Sidon.'

THE expedition of the Austrian archæologists Dr. Keil and Dr. von Premerstein to Lydia has led to valuable results in the discovery of about 380 inscriptions, some of them in old Lydian characters.

EXHIBITIONS.

SAT. (Feb. 20).—Fair Women Exhibition, New Gallery, Regent Street.
— Pictures by Early British Masters and Eminent Modern Painters, Messrs. Shepherd's Gallery.
— Royal Society of Painter-Etchers and Engravers, 5A, Pall Mall East.
TUES. Mrs. Caldwell Crofton's Water-Colours, 'Gardens of Delight and Day Dreams of the Sea,' Private View, Modern Gallery.

MUSIC

THE WEEK.

QUEEN'S HALL.—Symphony Concert.

MRS. ROSA NEWMARCH, in the programme-book of the Symphony Concert given last Saturday, prophesies that "when the symphonies of Jean Sibelius are better known they will take their place in the great unbroken series of masterpieces in this form." If that be so, it was a pity that the composer was content on Saturday to conduct two of his tone-poems which form part of Mr. Wood's regular repertory. The former, 'En Saga,' cleverly orchestrated, would prove more interesting if the composer would tell us what it is all about, for one can instinctively feel that he was working to a picture in his mind. Of 'Finlandia,' far more interesting musically, he gave an impressive performance. Prof. Hugo Becker is a distinguished 'cellist; his selection, however, of Dvorák's Concerto in B minor was not wise. The theme of the slow movement is poetical, but the rest for the most part is dry and uninspired.

ÆOLIAN HALL.—Broadwood Concert.

THE programme of the eighth Broadwood Concert on the 11th inst. was interesting. Brahms's Quartet in A minor, Op. 51, No. 2, is not often heard, yet it is one of his most genial works, and the rendering by the Rosé Quartet (Prof. Arnold Rosé and Herren Anton Ruzitska, Paul Fischer, and Friedrich Buxbaum) was thoroughly artistic. Their performance too, of Hugo Wolf's short, fresh, and piquant 'Italian Serenade' was delightful. The concert ended with Beethoven's early Quartet in F, Op. 18, No. 1.

QUEEN'S HALL.—Mr. Maclean's 'Annunciation.'

'THE ANNUNCIATION,' Bible scenes set to music for soprano, mezzo-soprano, tenor, and bass soli, chorus, and orchestra, by Mr. Alex. Morvaren Maclean, was produced under his direction at the London Symphony Concert on Monday evening. The composer, who won the Moody-Manners prize of 100*l.* for a one-act opera, 'Petrucchio,' in 1895, has now attempted sacred music, and selected a subject which, strange to say, was passed over by the principal oratorio writers. Mr. Maclean's music is modern in character, and at times very strenuous. There are interesting pages in it. The instrumental Largo which precedes the soprano solo "Behold the handmaid of the Lord" is delicate and expressive, while of the second theme effective use is afterwards made. Also the mezzo-soprano solo "Blessed art thou among women" is quiet and beautiful. Again, the final chorus in the work, with its pianissimo ending, deserves note. In addition to these sections there are occasional phrases which fall pleasantly on the ear. On the other hand, there is much that is forced, and, in the matter of harmony, harsh. At the present day rules which were long in force are being disregarded by many composers, but only those rules whose raison d'être is their antiquity can be broken with impunity. Liberty is apt to degenerate into lawlessness, and Mr. Maclean seems to have taken special pride in heaping Ossa on Pelion in the matter of dissonance. We notice, too, that harsh dissonances occur at inappropriate moments, as, for instance, to take a short example, at the words "Gabriel that standeth in the presence of God." But, after all, these and other far-fetched effects would not be conspicuous, if there were strength in the thematic material, and emotional power in the music. Such qualities, however, are not often in evidence. Then, again, there is the influence of modern Italians, and of Sir Edward Elgar, in the music; but there is no reason to blame Mr. Maclean for this; if he has sinned, it is in very good company, namely, that of the greatest composers. But in 'The Annunciation' there is not enough display of individuality to draw off one's attention from the fact. It is the work of an earnest, ambitious, and, we may add, able musician, yet it is disappointing. The performance was excellent, the choir of the Sheffield Musical Union singing with firmness and brilliancy. The London Symphony Orchestra rendered full justice to the well-scored music assigned to it. Of the four soloists, Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Edna Thornton, Mr. Gervase Elwes, and Mr. Robert Burnett, the first three sang extremely well; the last named was not so satisfactory.

The second part of the programme was devoted to Beethoven's 'Choral' Symphony under the direction of Dr. Richter.

Musical Gossip.

THE programme of the special matinée given by Miss Maud Allan at the Palace Theatre on Monday afternoon enabled her to display her talent in various ways. In Grieg's 'Peer Gynt' Suite her lively, graceful dancing was in striking contrast to her slow movements and sad demeanour in the previous 'Ase's Death.' Rubinstein's 'Valse Caprice' naturally lends itself to dancing. The same cannot be said of Mendelssohn's 'Frühlingslied,' yet Miss Allan's graphic gestures, as of one thoroughly enjoying the sights and scents of early spring, formed an effective addition to the music. With the London Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Landon Ronald, Miss Allan was seen to the best advantage.

THE directors of the new Symphony Orchestra, under the direction just named, announce six concerts at Queen's Hall:

three afternoon, on March 10th and 24th, and April 23rd; and three evening, on March 7th and June 9th and 23rd. The programmes will include as novelties Bruckner's Ninth Symphony, a Violin Concerto by Mr. Hamilton Harty, and 'Villon,' a work by Mr. William Wallace.

THE first of Mr. Thomas Beecham's concerts will take place at Queen's Hall on Monday evening. His programme consists of Mr. Delius's 'Sea-Drift,' produced at the last Sheffield Festival, and Dr. Vaughan Williams's Symphonic Impression, 'In the Fen Country,' a novelty; also Berlioz's 'Te Deum,' in which the North Staffordshire District Choral Society will take part.

MISS FANNY DAVIES will give her piano-forte recital at Steinway Hall this afternoon, the first part of her interesting programme being devoted to old Italian masters.

LA SOCIÉTÉ DES CONCERTS FRANÇAIS À LONDRES has been formed with the object of making known the best examples of contemporary French music. Four concerts will be given during the current year. The programme of the first, which will take place at Bechstein Hall next Friday, will be devoted to M. Claude A. Debussy, whose 'Danse sacrée' and 'Danse profane,' for chromatic harp and strings, will be performed for the first time in London.

THE LONDON CHAMBER CONCERT ASSOCIATION, formed for the regular performance of concerted music for wind instruments, strings, and pianoforte, gave the first of a series of six concerts at the Victoria Rooms, Kensington, last Saturday evening. The programme included an interesting Quintet in D by J. Christian Bach, and a Mozart Quartet for flute and strings.

SIR C. VILLIERS STANFORD's Choral Overture (Op. 114), 'Ave atque Vale' (in commemoration of the death of Haydn and birth of Tennyson), will be produced at the Bach Choir Concert at Queen's Hall on March 2nd.

MR. FELIX MOSCHELES will deliver a lecture on 'My Godfather, Felix Mendelssohn, as I Remember Him,' at the Studio, 80, Elm Park Road, Chelsea, next Wednesday afternoon. The proceeds will be devoted to the cause of International Peace and Arbitration.

THE COMMITTEE OF THE DUBLIN ORCHESTRAL SOCIETY has issued an appeal to the music-loving public of Ireland for additional funds to enable the Society to carry on its work. During the ten years of the Society's existence it has produced all Beethoven's symphonies and many by other great composers, as well as a large number of modern orchestral works, none of which would otherwise have been heard in Dublin. The expenses of the Society have considerably exceeded its income each year, and it could not have gone on with its work without donations. It is hoped that the outcome of the present appeal will be to put the Society on a firm financial footing.

M. PADEREWSKI's new Symphony was produced at Boston on the 13th inst. The Scherzo is not yet completed, nevertheless the Symphony is said to have taken an hour and twenty minutes in performance.

PERFORMANCES NEXT WEEK.

SUN. Concert, 3.30, Royal Albert Hall.
— Sunday Society Concert, 3.30, Queen's Hall.
— Sunday League Concert, 7, Queen's Hall.
MON. Mr. Theodore Byard's Concert, 3.15, Bechstein Hall.
— Mr. Thomas Beecham's Orchestral Concert, 8, Queen's Hall.
— Open Concert of the Strings Club, 8, Salle Erard.
— Miss Violet Ruciman's Vocal Recital, 8.15, Aeolian Hall.
TUES. Mr. Georg Henschel's Vocal Recital, 3.30, Bechstein Hall.
— Misses Meyer's Violin and Pianoforte Recital, 8.15, Bechstein Hall.
— London Trio, 8.30, Aeolian Hall.
— Oriana Madrigal Society, 8.30, Portman Rooms.
WED. Mr. Godowsky's Pianoforte Recital, 3, Bechstein Hall.
— Queen's Hall Orchestral Concert, 3, Queen's Hall.
— Misses Marion Kinghorn and Mary Lumsden's Dramatic and Violin Recital, 3.15, Salle Erard.

WED. Royal Choral Society, 8, Royal Albert Hall.
— Miss Mildred John's Violin Recital, 8.15, Bechstein Hall.
THURS. Mr. Joseph Holbrooke's Concert, 3, Salle Erard.
— Mr. Cecil Sharp's Concert Lecture, 3.30, Steinway Hall.
— Madame Kirkby Lunn's Vocal Recital, 8.30, Bechstein Hall.
FRI. Miss Ella Sprake's Vocal Recital, 3, Bechstein Hall.
— Société de la Musique Française, 8, Bechstein Hall.
SAT. Queen's Hall Orchestral Concert, 3, Queen's Hall.
— Madame Carreño's Pianoforte Recital, 3.15, Bechstein Hall.

DRAMA

THE WEEK.

KINGSWAY.—The Truants: a Comedy in Three Acts. By Wilfred T. Coleby.

THERE is so much more conventionality about this piece than there was about Mr. Coleby's "problem" play 'The Swayboat' that it looks as if, though presented later, it is really an earlier work. It contains crude melodrama, and shows sometimes an uncertainty in the handling of character that on any other explanation would be surprising in a playwright who has already revealed a free and sure touch. Possibly his change to a lighter manner may be responsible for the falling-off. Mr. Coleby styles 'The Truants' a comedy, but it is not true comedy; there is too much sentimental appeal—not to mention emotional violence—in its story, to justify such a title.

Yet, with all its shortcomings, the play deserves success for its two studies of the youth of to-day, which are as amusing as they are well observed. With such freshness and humour are these young folk portrayed that we can pardon the author his selection of so hackneyed a scheme as that of a frustrated elopement. So crisp and racy is their talk that we can overlook the staginess of the midnight bedroom-episode in which a woman seeks to intimidate a fellow-guest by pointing a pistol at his head. Mr. Coleby's would-be truants arrange to run away together without going through any preliminary marriage ceremony. One of them, Pamela Grey, is a girl-child, no less charming than she is wilful and naughty, who has adopted advanced views on the subject of matrimony, and is prepared to apply them to her own romance. The other, Bill Chetwood, is a man of impatient, masterful, roving type, who cherishes an ideal of "niceness" in womanhood, but falls in love with just the sort of girl whose opinions he most abhors. Stereotyped in his ideas of the sex, which he divides into the women one marries and those one does not, he falls in readily—though surely in defiance of all the class-conventions of his kind—with Pamela's whim because her theories are such as no man, to his thinking, could tolerate in a wife.

Where Mr. Coleby breaks down is over his representation of the woman who intervenes. It is clear enough what he wanted to express when he invented Freda Saville. He proposed, evidently, to satirize mildly the "emancipated" woman, and to suggest that her cries for freedom are largely due to disappointment or the starvation of sentiment, and usually cease when she is made happy in her love. A traveller of large experience, Freda once wrote a book advocating unconventional doctrines as to the relations of the sexes, and her influence it is which has shaped Pamela's mind. But she herself, since she has become engaged to a large-hearted man, has repented of her heterodoxy and fallen back on the old-fashioned estimate of marriage. It is she, hampered by her recorded pronouncements, to whom the playwright's irony assigns the task of arguing with her pupil and stopping the adventure. In point of fact the contradictions in her are never properly harmonized, and so her personality is only half indicated. We are told much about her. We learn the secret which she wishes to keep from her lover—that she was once the victim of a bigamist—and which Bill threatens to reveal if she thwarts his plan. We see her slap Pamela for wearing a gown in outrageously bad taste. And we watch with amused incredulity her whipping-out of the pistol when Bill dares her to carry out her threat. But somehow she seems a conventional character, and not alive, like the young couple whom she saves from spoiling their lives.

The part of Freda does not give much scope to Miss Lena Ashwell's gifts of sensibility and emotion. Far better chances fall to Miss Athene Seyler (a recruit from the Dramatic Academy which Mr. Tree founded) and to Mr. Dennis Eadie. Miss Seyler makes Pamela fascinating in her tantrums and quick fits of penitence, and shows promise of a successful stage career. Mr. Eadie hits off the hectoring, queer-tempered Bill to the life.

HIS MAJESTY'S.—The Dancing Girl. By Henry Arthur Jones.

THERE is nothing so out of date as the near past. The clothes of the later Victorian era, the fiction of the eighties and nineties in great part, and one must add, it seems, much of the drama then hailed with applause—all these things to-day wear a faded air, the more marked because they have not attained to the distinction of antiquity. Take the case of 'The Dancing Girl,' which had a twelvemonth's run at the Haymarket eighteen years ago, and was revived last Tuesday night at His Majesty's. The general lines of the story are as applicable now as they were at the time the play was first produced. In the matter of the vogue of the public dancer the playwright only anticipated events; in this respect he can lay claim, if he chooses, to prophetic insight. Then, again, the bigger scenes of the drama are human enough. A siren trying to tempt a virtuous lover into forgetting his self-respect, a puritanical old man first pleading with and then cursing his wanton daughter, a crippled girl creeping down a flight of stairs to prevent the debauchee who has saved her life from taking his own—such passages cannot but appeal to the emotions. They do so to no small degree in the present revival, but some quality has gone out of them. The sentiment and the phrases sounded a little old-fashioned on Tuesday; there was an artificial ring about the love-dialogue, and we noticed as we did not in the nineties the abundance of the soliloquies. Perhaps it is the writing that dates the play; for some reflection of the tone of the past was caught which was real then, but is artificial now.

Mr. Jones could not blame his actors for any such impression. Miss Alice Crawford, who succeeds Miss Julia Neilson as Drusilla, cannot quite compass all the emotional moments of her part, but her whole performance is picturesque. Miss Marie Löhr invests the little cripple, Sybil Crake, with just that atmosphere of pathos which Rose Norreys used to get wonderfully. Mr. Louis Calvert, delivering the old Quaker's speeches less rhetorically and more realistically than Mr. Fernandez, produces an even more painful effect than did that fine actor. Mr. Basil Gill, who replaces Mr. Fred Terry, declaims well, if in somewhat too romantic a style. Mr. Vane Tempest is as diverting a Slingsby as Mr. Fred Kerr, though his manner is curiously different. Mr. Tree's Duke remains one of his most finished stage portraits.

IN a recent addition to the excellent series of "Shakespeare Classics" Mr. Frank Sidgwick has made an able compilation and study of The Sources and Analogues of 'A Midsummer Night's Dream' (Chatto & Windus). The subject is one that lends itself to infinite speculation, and any conclusions arrived at can be based on little more than conjecture. The indebtedness of the dramatist to Chaucer's 'Knights Tale' is at best extremely problematical—indeed, the lengthy digest of that tale given here might well have been omitted—and literary investigation will scarcely throw light on the originals of Bottom and his crew; but the third section, in which Mr. Sidgwick, with almost supererogatory enthusiasm, dives into the antecedents of Oberon, Titania, and Puck, presents a fascinating study of fairy lore, both in its traditional and etymological aspects. The greater part of the volume is taken up by the "Illustrative Texts," the selection of which is as comprehensive as the circumstances allow, including as it does Golding's version of 'Pyramus and Thisbe,' portions of 'Robin Good-Fellow: His Mad Pranks and Merry Jest,' the first part of Thomas of Erceeldoune, and certain illuminating passages from Reginald Scot's 'Discovery of Witchcraft,' together with Drayton's familiar 'Nymphidia.'

Dramatic Gossip.

THE suicide of Mr. Charles Warner in New York on Thursday in last week removes an actor of the old school with considerable powers. He had recently been acting as Coupeau in Charles Reade's 'Drink,' his most effective part. He excelled in melodrama, and made many successes in impulsive and emotional characters. Charles Middlewick in the first run of 'Our Boys,' Charles Surface in 'The School for Scandal,' and Tom Robinson in 'Never Too Late to Mend,' were some of his earlier efforts. Coupeau, however, was his masterpiece, and he was said by Sarcey to have surpassed Gil-Naza, who first created the part in Paris. Latterly he played in a compressed version of Reade's drama. He is remembered by recent playgoers for telling performances in 'Heard at the Telephone,' and 'Leah Kleshna.' He was born in 1846, and his career on the stage was long, for he first appeared in 1861 at a special performance of Richelieu before Queen Victoria.

MR. AND MRS. F. R. BENSON and their Shakespearean Company will begin on April 19th the annual Shakespeare performances at Stratford-on-Avon. Fifteen plays will be presented, the special revival for this year being 'Cymbeline,' a play not hitherto produced by Mr. Benson. The following artists have kindly consented to take part in the proceedings: Miss Geneviève Ward will appear as Volumnia and Queen Margaret; Mr. Matheson Lang as Hamlet; Miss Hutin Britton as Ophelia; Mr. Henry Ainley as Shylock; and Miss Constance Collier as Portia. Mr. Forbes-Robertson and Miss Gertrude Elliott, with their company, will play 'The Passing of the Third Floor Back,' which will be preceded by Act II. sc. i. of 'Henry VIII.' in which Mr. Forbes-Robertson will give Buckingham's farewell speech. Mr. Lewis Waller will appear as Hotspur, Mr. Robert Loraine as Benedick, and Miss Ethel Irving as Beatrice.

MR. GERALD LAWRENCE AND MISS FAY DAVIS have taken the Court Theatre for a series of daily matinées and Saturday evenings, beginning on April 12th. Six plays of Shakespeare will be given, the first of which will be 'As You Like It.'

LAST Wednesday began the performance of the 'Frogs' of Aristophanes by the O.U.D.S. The Oxford Society has admittedly a high standard to keep up in view of the excellent version of the play it gave in 1892. We shall insert a notice next week from a special correspondent.

As Norman MacColl Lecturer at Cambridge Mr. Fitzmaurice-Kelly will deal with 'Spanish Drama' in five lectures on March 12th and 13th, and April 24th, 26th, and 27th.

A CYCLE of national, classical plays for the young, at reduced prices, has been arranged by the Weimar Hoftheater, acting in conjunction with the Deutsche Schillerbund, and will probably take place July 6th-24th. 'Götz von Berlichingen,' 'Minna von Barnhelm,' 'Der Prinz von Homburg,' and 'Wilhelm Tell' are to be performed. The education departments in the various States have approved of the scheme, and the higher schools and seminaries of Germany will be invited to participate in it.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—J. S. C.—A. W.—R. G.—C. H.—Received.

C. S. B.—We do not intend to discuss the subject.

No notice can be taken of anonymous communications.

We do not undertake to give the value of books, china, pictures, &c.

We cannot undertake to reply to inquiries concerning the appearance of reviews of books.

INDEX TO ADVERTISERS.

	PAGE
AUTHORS' AGENTS	214
AUTOTYPE CO.	214
BELL & SONS	236
BLACKWOOD & SONS	216
CASELL & CO.	237
CATALOGUES	214
DENT & CO.	210
EDUCATIONAL	213
EXHIBITIONS	213
GREENING & CO.	233
HEINEMANN	239
INSURANCE COMPANIES	233
LANE	216
LECTURES	213
LONGMANS & CO.	239
MACMILLAN & CO.	216
MAGAZINES, &c.	214
METHUEN & CO.	215
MISCELLANEOUS	213
PRINTERS	214
PROVIDENT INSTITUTIONS	213
SALES BY AUCTION	214
SANATOGEN	238
SITUATIONS VACANT	213
SITUATIONS WANTED	213
SOCIETIES	213
SONNENSCHNEIN & CO.	239
TYPE-WRITERS, &c.	213

MESSRS. BELL'S BOOKS.

JUST PUBLISHED, crown 8vo, 6s. net.

HISTORY OF THE LATIN AND TEUTONIC NATIONS, 1494-1514.

By LEOPOLD VON RANKE.

A Revised Translation by G. R. DENNIS, B.A. (Lond.)
With an Introduction by EDWARD ARMSTRONG, M.A.
Fellow of Queen's College, Oxford.

A thoroughly revised translation of this famous work, which Lorentz called one of Ranke's "most original and instructive contributions to history," and which gives a general account of the history of Europe during a period of the highest interest and importance.

JUST PUBLISHED, demy 8vo, 8s. 6d. net.

LIFE OF DEAN COLET, Founder of St. Paul's School.

By the Rev. J. H. LUPTON, M.A.

Late Surmaster of St. Paul's School, and formerly Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge.

With an Appendix of some of his English Writings, and a Facsimile Portrait taken from the Engraving in Holland's 'Heroölogia.'

NEW AND REVISED EDITION.

In view of the approaching celebration of the fourth centenary of St. Paul's School, special interest attaches to this new edition of Dr. Lupton's life of its founder.

Fcap. 8vo, 5s. net.

CATULLI CARMINA.

Edited, with Copious Explanatory Notes, by CHARLES STUTTAFORD.

"Intended for the class whose Latin has become rusty in consequence of the exigencies of a professional or business occupation. Well and wisely annotated for the purpose, and produced admirably."—Evening Standard.

THE

QUEEN'S TREASURES SERIES.

Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.

NEW VOLUME. READY WEDNESDAY NEXT.

JAN OF THE WINDMILL.

By MRS. EWING.

With 8 Coloured Illustrations by M. V. WHEELHOUSE, and special Title-Page, Binding, and End-Papers.

JUST PUBLISHED, demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

AN INTRODUCTION TO ECONOMICS.

By HENRY ROGERS SEAGER.

Professor of Political Economy in Columbia University.

Third Edition, Revised and Enlarged.

JUST PUBLISHED, demy 8vo, 8s. 6d. net.

ETHICS.

By JOHN DEWEY.

Professor of Philosophy in Columbia University,

and JAMES H. TUFTS,

Professor of Philosophy in the University of Chicago.

THE STANDARD AUTHORITY. WEBSTER'S INTERNATIONAL DICTIONARY.

TWENTIETH-CENTURY EDITION.

Revised and Enlarged, with an Appendix of 25,000 Words, Phrases, and Definitions.

2,348 pages. 5,000 Illustrations.

WRITE FOR DETAILED PROSPECTUS, with Specimen Pages, hundreds of Opinions of Eminent Men, and prices in various styles of binding.

London: GEORGE BELL & SONS,
York House, Portugal Street, W.C.

CASSELL & COMPANY'S ANNOUNCEMENTS

HEALTH AND COMMONSENSE

By WOODS HUTCHINSON, M.A. M.D. 6s. net.

Written, not for invalids, but for the ordinary, every-day person, this book describes in a bright, interesting, and practical manner the physical necessities of the body and the methods of obtaining the greatest efficiency from it. Popular fallacies regarding food, exercise, sleep, &c., are corrected.

"It is long since we have met with so useful a treatise on hygiene, so trustworthy a guide to commonsense, and so amusing a book of science."—Morning Post.

GARDENING IN THE NORTH

By S. ARNOTT and R. P. BROTHERSTON.

With Illustrations. Paper covers, 2s. net; cloth, 2s. 6d. net.

This book deals in a thorough and workmanlike manner with the subject of Northern Gardening, and contains practical advice on the important details of cultivation under the climatic and other conditions prevailing in the North of England and Scotland.

"The contents are very comprehensive, and cover the whole area of garden work upon the choosing and laying-out of the garden to its cultivation in all its details. Altogether the book is very practical, comprehensive, and useful, and is a valuable addition to garden literature."—Dundee Courier.

WOMEN OF ALL NATIONS

A Record of their Characteristics, Habits, Manners, Customs, and Influence.

Edited by T. ATHOL JOYCE, M.A., and N. W. THOMAS, M.A.

In 2 volumes, 15s. net each. VOLS. I. AND II. NOW READY.

Profusely illustrated with reproductions of striking and original photographs, and a series of magnificent plates in colour from paintings specially executed for the work by Norman Hardy.

"The text and the illustrations are the last word in popular anthropology. The whole thing is admirably executed throughout."—Morning Leader.

NEW FICTION

THE INTERRUPTED KISS

BY

RICHARD MARSH

With Frontispiece in Colours.

Now ready. 6s.

"Packed with genuine and enjoyable thrills."
Newcastle North Mail.

PEGGY
THE DAUGHTER

BY

KATHARINE TYNAN

With Frontispiece in Colours by WARWICK GOBLE.

Now ready. 6s.

A delightful Irish idyll, dealing with the vicissitudes of a rich young Quakeress.

A BRILLIANT NOVEL BY A NEW AUTHOR

THE LURE OF EVE

BY

EDITH MARY MOORE

With Frontispiece in Colours by J. E. SUTCLIFFE.

Now ready. 6s.

Written with extraordinary power and insight. The characters are drawn with a sureness of touch that proves the author to be a closely observant student of human nature.

THE CENTURY SHAKESPEARE

With Introduction to each Play by DR. FURNIVALL, assisted by JOHN MUNRO

Complete in 40 Volumes. Cloth, 9d. net each; leather, 1s. 6d. net each

Including 'SHAKESPEARE: LIFE AND WORK'

By DR. FURNIVALL, M.A. Ph.D. D.Litt., and JOHN MUNRO

WITH FULL NOTES AND GLOSSARIES

"From the point of view of mere technique, the books themselves are also a sheer delight. Each one contains a photogravure frontispiece by a recognized artist, a decorative title-page and end-papers; and print, binding, and paper are, to all intents and purposes, perfect."—Standard.

"A really wonderful edition, for which we predict an enormous and well-deserved popularity."

Morning Leader.

PLEASE WRITE FOR ILLUSTRATED SPRING LIST

CASSELL & CO., LTD., La Belle Sauvage, London, E.C.

THE SUCCESS OF THE SEASON.

HENRY OF NAVARRE

A Romance. By MAY WYNNE. 6s.

The Story of Mr. William Devereux's play, 'Henry of Navarre,' which is now being performed with unparalleled success at the New Theatre, by Miss Julia Neilson and Mr. Fred Terry.

Author of 'A Maid of Brittany,' &c.

"It is written with all the dash and spirit that one expects to find in a period so full of colour and movement as that of Henry of Navarre and Marguerite de Valois."

Daily Graphic.

"A stirring tale of adventure, blended with a love interest steadily progressing to a 'happy ending.'"

Daily Telegraph."A rousing romance."—Truth.

FOURTH EDITION NOW READY.

AT ALL LIBRARIES AND BOOKSELLERS.

TWO GOOD SENSATIONAL STORIES
1. OUT OF THE SHADOWS.

By CAPT. HENRY CURTIES, 6s.

Author of 'Renée,' &c.

Capt. Curties has a reputation for sound sterling work, and in the above instance we venture to think he will gain many new admirers.

2. THE SIN OF THE DUCHESS.

By HOUGHTON TOWNLEY. 6s.

Author of 'The Bishop's Emeralds,'

Mr. Townley is known as a sensational writer of the first water, and his latest work has all the elements of those qualities that go to make a thoroughly readable novel.

THE STRUGGLE FOR SUPREMACY.
LITTLE FRANCE.

By CYRUS TOWNSEND BRADY, 6s.

Author of 'Richard the Brazen,' &c.

The author has chosen a powerful theme for his new historical romance, as the story is of the time when England and France were in the throes of the struggle for the supremacy of the West. A thrilling picture is that of the storming and capture of Quebec, with the death of the gallant Wolfe, and lovers of our Navy and its glorious traditions will be enchanted by the graphic description of the great Lord Hawke's action in Quiberon Bay. Amidst the roar of the sea and the booming of the guns, there is a delightful idyll. In a word, 'Little France' should easily win all hearts.

A Breezy and Unconventional Work.

MRS. PENROSE'S PHILOSOPHER.

By HAROLD SIMPSON. 6s.

This book will appeal to all lovers of sound, healthy fiction. It is a charming love story, charmingly told. It is healthy without being affected. The author has grace and delicacy of touch. He can deal with nature without either botanizing or being blatant. The people of whom he writes are real. They convince us. The Philosopher is a delightful character, and so is Mrs. Penrose—the woman who seemed to "change her moods as easily as her clothes." The book has truth, passion, and power, and there are no better things than these in fiction.

A TALE OF A DEAD CITY.
PATCOLA.

By ENA FITZGERALD. 6s.

In an exhaustive notice of 'Patcola' in the BYSTANDER, the writer observes:

"One is always apt to be sceptical when the announcement is made that a strikingly clever novel is about to make its appearance, the author of which is only in his—or, more generally, her—'teens.' Usually the book proves to be creditable enough as the unaided effort of a youthful author, though the promise it holds of mature work is not particularly exhilarating, while what talent is shown receives an unhealthy and probably fatal stimulus from the foolishly laudatory notices given by 'inspired' paragraphists. With mixed feelings, therefore, I took up Miss Ena Fitzgerald's 'Patcola,' when I heard that the author thereof was barely eighteen. Without in any way wishing to minimise certain obvious inequalities in the story, I found it a book which well repaid the reading."

GERALD BISS'S LATEST SUCCESS.
B R A N D E D.

By GERALD BISS, 6s.

Author of 'The Dupe,' &c.

The STANDARD says: "Mr. Gerald Biss is making a genuine reputation as a writer of clean, wholesome, and stimulating sensational stories. He has not, it is true, come to the front with any great flourish of trumpets, but he has been always content to let his novels advance on their own merits in public esteem, and now it seems to be certain that he will become one of the favoured half-dozen 'masters of mystery' whose books inevitably command a hearing and a success."

GREENING & CO., LTD.,
91, St. Martin's Lane, W.C.HOW FAMOUS PEOPLE
RENEW THEIR ENERGIES.

REMARKABLE TESTIMONY.

Never was life so strenuous as now. Every one acknowledges it—the famous and the non-famous. The famous feel it most, for the strain to obtain a foremost place and keep it is universally recognized. They, however, have a great advantage over the less notable members of the community, for their friendly intercourse with the prominent physicians enables them to hear at the earliest moment of the best means science has discovered to renew the energy, nerve force, and vitality they have consumed in their work.

In consequence, they are all taking Sanatogen, the ideal tonic food and revitalizing agent to whose merits nearly eight thousand physicians have attested in writing, while practically every medical man prescribes it.

The most eminent representatives of every profession have sent voluntary testimonials recording the wonderful results obtained from Sanatogen in renewing their energies when they have been over-worked or run down. From among the most recent, the following have been chosen to give some idea of the merits of the preparation.

Mr. HENRY ARTHUR JONES, the famous dramatist, says:—

"37, Hornton Street, Kensington, W.

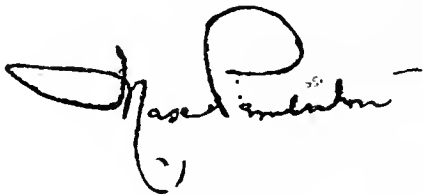

"Sanatogen seems to me a very valuable food and nerve tonic. I have several times taken a course of it when I've been run down, and always with excellent results."

Mr. MAX PEMBERTON, the eminent author and editor, writes:—

"Troston Hall, Suffolk.

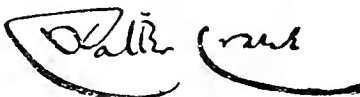

"I have been taking Sanatogen since the beginning of the year, and would not be without it under any circumstances whatever."

Mr. WALTER CRANE, the eminent authority on decorative art, writes:—

"13, Holland Street, Kensington, W.

"In recovering from a rather sharp attack of influenza, I certainly found Sanatogen, prepared with milk, beneficial in its effects."

Mr. EDEN PHILLPOTTS, the well-known writer, says:—

"Torquay.

"Sanatogen appears to be of real value to the brain worker, a useful food and splendid tonic combined. I can give it high praise from personal experience."

Considering this evidence, can any one suffering from depletion of the mental, nervous, or physical forces, afford to forego the advantages he cannot fail to derive from Sanatogen?—which, by the way, is also largely used in royal circles, where the strain of life is no less felt than among humbler people. An instructive booklet on the preparation may be obtained, post free, on application to The Sanatogen Company, 12, Chancery Street, London, W.C., mentioning the Athenæum. Sanatogen can be obtained from all chemists, in tins from 1s. 9d. to 9s. 6d.

P. & O.

PLEASURE CRUISES FROM MARSEILLES.

(Rail and Steamship connexions from London.)

S. Y.
VECTISNo. 2.—March 20 to April 16.
CONSTANTINOPLE,
GREECE,
SICILY.No. 3.—April 22 to May 20.
DALMATIA, VENICE,
CORFU, SICILY.
Fares for Cruises 2, or 3, from 30 Guineas.No. 4.—May 21 to June 12.
NAPLES, SICILY,
ALGIERS, SPAIN, &c.
Fares from 20 Guineas.

BY

P. & O. CRUISING YACHT VECTIS,
6,000 tons, 6,000 h.p.

For Passage, Illustrated Handbooks, and all information, apply Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company, Northumberland Avenue, W.C., or 122, Leadenhall Street, E.C., London.

Insurance Companies.

ACCIDENTS OF ALL KINDS, SICKNESS,
EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY, BURGLARY, AND
FIDELITY GUARANTEE RISKS

INSURED AGAINST BY THE

RAILWAY PASSENGERS ASSURANCE CO.

Capital (fully subscribed), £1,000,000. Claims paid, £5,600,000.

64, CORNHILL, LONDON.

A. VIAN, Secretary.

NATIONAL

PROVIDENT

INSTITUTION

FOR

MUTUAL LIFE ASSURANCE.

Established 1835.

ASSURANCE AND INVESTMENT.

Write for Leaflet on net cost of Endowment Assurances,
48, Gracechurch Street, London, E.C.

Applications for Agencies invited.

HIGHEST AWARDS.

CORK, 1883. LIVERPOOL, 1886. PARIS, 1886. ADELAIDE, 1887.

PARIS, 1889. CHICAGO, 1893. PARIS, 1900. ST. LOUIS, 1904.]

FRANCO-BRITISH, 1908.

O L D B U S H M I L L S.

Have you tried this—the Prize-Winning Whisky?

From all Wine Merchants.

Address of nearest Agent sent on application.

"OLD BUSHMILLS" DISTILLERY CO., LTD.,

20, Mark Lane, E.C.

Swan Sonnenschein & Co. LTD.

RAILWAY RATES.

The Method of Calculating Equitable Rates and Charges for Merchandise carried on Railways. By the late JOSEPH HORROCKS. Demy 8vo, 21s. net.

SOME WORKS ON EDUCATION. THE CYCLOPÆDIA OF EDUCATION.

New and Revised Edition. Demy 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.

REPORT ON THE TEACHING OF ENGLISH IN THE UNITED STATES.

By M. ATKINSON WILLIAMS, B.A., Lecturer in English at Southlands Training College, Battersea. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. net.

FATIGUE.

By A. MOSSO, Professor of Physiology in the University of Turin. Translated by M. and W. B. DRUMMOND. With Diagrams. 348 pp. 4s. 6d.

"A book for the student and educationist. The subject constitutes one of the most fascinating chapters in the history of medical science, and all educationists, at any rate, should obtain the book."—Yorkshire Post.

THE CHILD AND THE CURRICULUM.

By CATHERINE I. DODD, M.A. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

THE TRAINING OF THE IMAGINATION IN CHILDHOOD.

By MARGARET MACMILLAN, Author of 'Early Childhood.' Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

HOW TO TEACH A FOREIGN LANGUAGE.

By OTTO JESPERSEN, Professor of English in the University of Copenhagen. Translated from the Danish Original by SOPHIA GHLENOLSON BERTELSEN, M.A. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

THE CHILD AND CHILD NATURE.

By BARONESS BÜLOW. Eighth Edition. Crown 8vo, 3s.

INTRODUCTION TO HERBART'S SCIENCE OF EDUCATION.

By H. M. and E. FELKIN. Third Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, 4s. 6d.

THE SCIENCE OF EDUCATION.

By J. F. HERBART. Translated by H. M. and E. FELKIN. Second Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, 4s. 6d.

LETTERS AND LECTURES ON EDUCATION.

By J. F. HERBART. Translated by H. M. and E. FELKIN. Second Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, 4s. 6d.

HOW GERTRUDE TEACHES HER CHILDREN.

By J. H. PESTALOZZI. Edited and Translated by E. COOKE. Third Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s.

OUTLINES OF PEDAGOGICS.

By Prof. W. REIN. Second Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s.

EARLY CHILDHOOD.

By MARGARET MACMILLAN. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

INTRODUCTION TO HERBARTIAN PRINCIPLES OF TEACHING.

By CATHERINE DODD. Third Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, 4s. 6d.

THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS YEARBOOK, 1909.

Nineteenth Year of Issue. 3s. 6d. net.

THE SCHOOLMASTERS' YEARBOOK AND DIRECTORY, 1909.

Seventh Annual Issue. 7s. 6d.

SWAN SONNENSCHN & CO., LTD.,
25, High Street, Bloomsbury, W.C.

MR. HEINEMANN'S NEW BOOKS.

RECOLLECTIONS OF BARON DE FRÉNILLY,

PEER OF FRANCE (1768-1828).

Edited, with an Introduction and Notes,

By ARTHUR CHUQUET (Membre de l'Institut).

With Portrait. Demy 8vo, 10s. net.*

"He must be dull indeed who does not find himself engrossed in a story so natural, so witty, so vivid. These vivid and glowing accounts are full of bright, incisive little sketches of the men and women of the day—more particularly of the women—through the whole of which wit and sarcasm play."—Daily Telegraph.

AUTHORIZED BY MR. WHISTLER.

THE LIFE OF JAMES McNEILL WHISTLER,

By E. R. and J. PENNELL.

THIRD EDITION, Revised. Profusely illustrated.

Crown 4to, 36s. net. Also Edition de Luxe.*

"A masterly biography. It is rich in illustration of his personality as well as of his work."—Pall Mall Gazette.

CONQUERING THE ARCTIC ICE.

By EJNAR MIKKELSEN.

Profusely illustrated. Demy 8vo, 20s. net.*

"Admirably written and vivacious, one of the most human and winning books of travel ever published—a book that attracts us as much by its lively personality as by the breadth and intimacy of those powers of observation to which it bears witness."—Daily Telegraph.

COMPLETION OF A GREAT HISTORICAL WORK.

THE GREATNESS AND DECLINE OF ROME.

By GUGLIELMO FERRERO.

5 vols. demy 8vo, 6s. net each volume.*

Vol. V. EAST AND WEST.

The Republic of Augustus. [Next week.

* * Historical students have immediately recognized the sound scholarship upon which this work is based, while it attracts the general reader by its charm and sustained interest, its picturesqueness, and its insight into character.

NEW SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

MR. GALSWORTHY'S NEW NOVEL.

FRATERNITY

By JOHN GALSWORTHY, Author of 'The Man of Property' and 'The Country House.'

THE CLIMBER.

By E. F. BENSON, Author of 'Sheaves,' &c.

"The heroine may be likened to the immortal figure of Becky Sharp. It must be acknowledged that Mr. Benson's study is eminently successful."—Spectator.

RACHEL LORIAN.

By Mrs. HENRY DUDENEY, Author of 'Folly Corner,' &c.

"It is the real thing. The characters are excellently drawn, not from acknowledged or familiar types, but from actual palpitating life. No mature and discreet intellect is likely to follow the fortunes of Rachel Lorian without the tribute of sincere sympathy."—Daily Telegraph.

A PRINCE OF DREAMERS.

By FLORA ANNIE STEEL,
Author of 'On the Face of the Waters.'

"As a romance the book is a fine one. The intrigues are closely knotted; there is an abundance of vivid colour and picturesque background, and the narrative power grows effectively to the climax."—Saturday Review.

UNCLE GREGORY.

By GEORGE SANDEMAN. [Thursday.

SYRINX.

By LAURENCE NORTH.

"It is seldom indeed that one meets a book at once so virile and so excellent in manner and matter."—Sketch.

THE MAGICIAN. [2nd Imp.

By W. S. MAUGHAM, Author of 'The Explorer.'

"We are kept literally spellbound. The effect of devilment and horror is produced with extraordinary skill."—Morning Post.

* Prospectus of these Works on application.

WM. HEINEMANN, 21, Bedford Street, W.C.

Messrs. Longmans & Co.'s

LIST.

THE POOR LAW COMMISSION. THE BREAK-UP OF THE POOR LAW.

PART I. OF THE MINORITY REPORT OF THE POOR LAW COMMISSION.

Edited, with Introduction,

By SIDNEY and BEATRICE WEBB.

8vo, pp. xx and 604, 7s. 6d. net.

[Inland postage 6d.]

THE PUBLIC ORGANIZATION OF THE LABOUR MARKET.

PART II. OF THE MINORITY REPORT OF THE POOR LAW COMMISSION.

Edited, with Introduction,

By SIDNEY and BEATRICE WEBB.

8vo, pp. xvi and 348, 5s. net.

[Inland postage 4d.]

"This volume contains what is undoubtedly the clearest and most illuminating analysis of the causes of unemployment yet published."

DAILY NEWS.

Unemployment: a Problem of Industry.

By W. H. BEVERIDGE, Stowell Civil Law Fellow of University College, Oxford; formerly Sub-Warden of Toynbee Hall. 8vo, 7s. 6d. net. [Inland postage 4d.]

"It is a book which every one ought to have read who presumes to write or speak on the question of unemployment."—WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.

Sir George Mackenzie, King's

Advocate, of Rosenhaugh: His Life and Times, 1636(?)–1691.

By ANDREW LANG. With 4 Illustrations. 8vo, 15s. net. [Inland postage 5d.]

The Scottish Staple at Veere:

a Study in the Economic History of Scotland.

By the late JOHN DAVIDSON, M.A. D.Phil. (Edin.), sometime Professor of Political Economy in the University of New Brunswick, and ALEXANDER GRAY, M.A. With 13 Illustrations. 8vo, 12s. 6d. net. [Inland postage 4d.]

Ireland under the Stuarts and during the Interregnum.

By RICHARD BAGWELL, M.A., Author of 'Ireland under the Tudors.' Vols. I. and II.: 1603–1660. With 2 Maps. 8vo, 28s. net. [Inland postage 6d.]

Analysis of the Evolution of Musical Form.

By MARGARET H. GLYN, Author of 'The Rhythmic Conception of Music,' &c. Medium 8vo, 10s. 6d. net. [Inland postage 5d.]

An Introduction to the Science of Radio-Activity.

By CHARLES W. RAFFETY. With 27 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d. net. [Inland postage 4d.]

THE OXFORD LIBRARY—New Volume.

Immortality.

By the Rev. F. E. HOLMES, Hon. Canon of Christ Church, Author of 'In Watchings Often.' Crown 8vo, 5s. [Inland postage 4d.]

NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF 'MISS BADSWORTH, M.F.H.'

Polly Winford.

By EYREHUSSEY. Crown 8vo, 6s. [Inland postage 4d.]

This is a wholesome story of country life which ends well.

LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.

39, Paternoster Row, London, E.C.

J. M. DENT & CO.'S PUBLICATIONS.

BEETHOVEN'S LETTERS.

[Now ready.]

Critical Edition, with Explanatory Notes by Dr. ALF. CHR. KALISCHER. Translated, with Preface, by J. S. SHEDLOCK, M.A. Photogravure Frontispiece, many interesting Portraits, Facsimiles of Music hitherto unpublished, &c. 2 vols. demy 8vo, 21s. net.

This is the First Complete English Edition of Beethoven's Letters, and contains over 1,100 Letters and Notes.

A NEW SERIAL ISSUE OF THE HISTORY OF MODERN PAINTING.

By Prof. RICHARD MUTHER. New Edition, Revised and Continued by the Author to the end of the XIXth Century, with nearly 1,300 Illustrations in Black-and-White and 48 in Colours. To be completed in 22 Parts at 2s. 6d. net. Order taken for sets only. PART I. NOW READY.

OLD MASTERS.

Examples of their Work reproduced in Colour, with Notes on the Pictures and the Painters. 2 vols. royal 4to (13 in. by 10½ in.), 21s. net.

100 Coloured Reproductions of Works by various Old Masters from most of the important Art Galleries of Europe.

"Two handsome volumes.....The works selected are some of the finest of those which have found a home in the chief Galleries of Europe."—STUDIO.

A NEW LIGHT ON THE RENAISSANCE.

By HAROLD BAYLEY. Super-royal 8vo, 12s. 6d. net. Over 400 Illustrations.

The design of this work is to explain the origin and meaning of the multifarious "trademarks" and decorative designs used by the early printers and papermakers, and as far as possible to recover some of the fragrance with which these neglected emblems were once permeated. [Ready shortly.]

THE MEDIÆVAL TOWN SERIES.

A SERIES OF LITERARY GUIDE-BOOKS OF USE AND INTEREST TO ALL WHO TRAVEL.

With numerous Topographical Drawings, Reproductions from Paintings and Sculptures, Maps and Plans. Fcap. 8vo (pocketable), in grey cloth and limp green paste grain roan binding.

The Latest Volume just issued is:—

PISA.† By JANET ROSS and NELLY ERICHSEN. Illustrated by NELLY ERICHSEN.

And among the many important Towns already included in this well-known Series are:

ASSISI,* BRUGES,† BRUSSELS,† CAIRO,† CAMBRIDGE,† CHARTRES,† CONSTAN-TINOPLE,* DUBLIN,† EDINBURGH,† FERRARA,† FLORENCE,† LONDON,† MOSCOW,* NUREMBERG,* OXFORD,† PARIS,† PERUGIA,* PRAGUE,* ROME,† ROUEN,† SEVILLE,† SIENA,† TOLEDO,* VENICE,† VERONA,† MILAN.†

* Cloth, 3s. 6d. net; roan, 4s. 6d. net. † Cloth, 4s. 6d. net; roan, 5s. 6d. net.

"A pretty series, wherein art and history are deftly combined in the service of the tourist."

WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.

OLD WORLD TRAVEL.

A New and Attractive Series of Travel Books. Illustrated in Colour, square medium 8vo, 7s. 6d. net each.

The author and artist in all cases make special tours over the whole of the ground. Each volume will contain some twenty-five Coloured Illustrations and many Line Drawings in the Text.

First Two Volumes:

ALONG THE RIVIERAS OF FRANCE AND ITALY:

Written and Illustrated in Colour and Line by GORDON HOME.

VENETIA AND NORTHERN ITALY.

By CECIL HEADLAM. Illustrated in Colour and Line by GORDON HOME.

"We congratulate the author-artist and the publishers on a delightful book which is very moderate in price."—ATHENÆUM.

TREES AND SHRUBS OF THE BRITISH ISLES.

Native and Acclimatised.

By C. S. COOPER, F.R.H.S., and W. PERCIVAL WESTELL, F.L.S. 16 Full-Page Coloured Plates and 70 Black and White drawn direct from Nature by C. F. NEWALL. To be completed in 16 Parts, at 1s. net. FIRST PART NOW READY.

OUR FORESTS AND WOODLANDS

By Dr. J. NISBET. A New Edition, Revised and brought up to date. Illustrated in Photogravure and Half-Tone. Large crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

(A Volume in the Haddon Hall Library.)

THE MYSTICAL ELEMENT OF RELIGION.

Studied in the Lives of St. Catherine of Genoa and her Friends. By Baron F. VON HÜGEL. Photogravure Portraits. 2 vols. demy 8vo, 21s. net.

"The most complete and balanced attempt in any language to apply the modern scientific method to all the facts of religion on the grand scale.....The best-informed and most inspiring study of religion in our time—a mine for all future workers in that field."—DAILY NEWS.

NEW THINGS AND OLD IN SAINT THOMAS AQUINAS.

A Translation of various Writings and Treatises of the Angelic Doctor. With an Introduction by H. C. O'NEILL. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

VASARI ON TECHNIQUE.

Translated into English for the first time by LOUISA S. MACLEHOSE. Edited, with Introduction, Commentary and Notes, by Prof. G. BALDWIN BROWN. Square demy 8vo, cloth, 15s. net.

This work, the introduction to Vasari's 'Lives,' has never before been translated out of the Italian into any other European language, in spite of its enormous value to all interested in art.

LES CLASSIQUES FRANCAIS.

Edited by H. WARNER ALLEN.

A Series in the Original French. Photogravure Frontispiece. Pott 8vo, cloth, 1s. 6d. net per vol.; limp lambskin, 2s. 6d. net.

NEW VOLS.

SATIRES, EPITRES, ET L'ART POETIQUE DE BOILEAU.

Préface d'AUGUSTIN FILON.

POEMES DE VICTOR HUGO (1822-65).

Préface de L'AGUETTANT.

Full Prospectus free on application.

The finest Series of Pocket Volumes ever published.

THE TEMPLE CLASSICS.

With Photogravure Frontispieces. Cloth 1s. 6d. net; lambskin, 2s. net per volume. A full Descriptive Prospectus will be forwarded post free on application.

"No other series furnishes in so handy a form and at so small a cost so large a selection of the world's best literature."—CONTEMPORARY REVIEW.

EVERYMAN'S LIBRARY.

FIFTY more Volumes will be published on MARCH 8. This will make nearly 400 Volumes already published.

New Complete List post free on application.

J. M. DENT & CO. 15, Aldine House, Bedford Street, London, W.C.

THE ATHENÆUM

Journal of English and Foreign Literature, Science, the Fine Arts, Music and the Drama.

No. 4244.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 27, 1909.

PRICE
THREEPENCE.
REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

BRITISH MUSEUM.
The READING ROOMS will be CLOSED from MONDAY, March 1, to THURSDAY, March 4, inclusive.
E. MAUNDE THOMPSON, Director and Principal Librarian.
British Museum, February 24, 1909.

Lectures.

MR. ROGER FRY proposes to give FIVE LECTURES on 'The Language of Art,' at the ROYAL ALBERT HALL, 5.30 P.M., on FRIDAYS, February 19, 26, March 5, 19, and 26.
Tickets may be had from Mr. J. STEPNEY, 24, Bury Street, St. James's, and at door.

THE FORTUNE PLAYHOUSE,
41, BREWER STREET, W.

MADAME DE PERROT will give FIVE LECTURES (in English), ON FRIDAY EVENINGS, at 8.15.

March 5. 'Héloïse and Abelard.'
March 12. 'Mlle. de Lespinasse and d'Alembert.'
March 19. 'Madame de Staël and Benjamin Constant.'
March 26. 'Madame George Sand and Alfred de Musset.'
April 2. 'Madame de Récamier and Chateaubriand.'

Subscription Tickets, 21s. and 10s. 6d.; Single Tickets, 5s., 2s. 6d., and 1s., of the usual Agents, and CHAPPELL & CO., LTD., 50, New Bond Street, W.

Exhibitions.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF ARTS.
WINTER EXHIBITION.

Open from 9 A.M. to 6 P.M. Admission 1s.
Catalogue, 6d. Season Ticket, 5s.

DRAWINGS AND CARICATURES by the late HENRY OSPOVAT, and DRAWINGS illustrating EDGAR ALLAN POE by ARILD ROSENKRANTZ.—THE BAILLIE GALLERY, 13, Bruton Street, W. 10-6.

EXHIBITION of a Series of 60 PASTORALS by ALFRED PARSONS, A.R.A. R.W.S.
Also the WATER COLOURS and SKETCHES left by the late WILLIAM CALLOW, R.W.S.
THE LEICESTER GALLERIES, Leicester Square.

ROYAL SOCIETY OF PAINTER-ETCHERS
AND ENGRAVERS, 5A, Pall Mall, East, S.W.—The 27th ANNUAL EXHIBITION NOW OPEN, 10-6. Admission 1s.
W. F. D. STEBBING, Secretary.

Provident Institutions.

THE NEWSVENDORS' BENEVOLENT AND PROVIDENT INSTITUTION.

(Founded 1839.)

Office: (MEMORIAL HALL BUILDINGS), 15 and 16, Farringdon Street, London, E.C.

Patron—The Right Hon. the EARL OF ROSEBURY, K.G. K.T.
Trustees: CHARLES HENRY WALTER, Esq., SIR HORACE BROOKS MARSHALL, M.A. J.P. D.L. LL.D., CHARLES AWDRY, Esq., M.A. J.P. D.L., and Col. the Hon. HARRY L. W. LAWSON, M.A. J.P.

Treasurer—THE LONDON AND WESTMINSTER BANK, LTD., 217, STRAND, W.C.

The attendance of Subscribers, the Press, the Trade generally, and all interested in the objects of this Institution, is especially desired upon the occasion of the

SEVENTIETH ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING

At MEMORIAL HALL BUILDINGS, Farringdon Street, in the City of London,

MONDAY EVENING, March 8, 1909, at 7 o'clock precisely.

MR. CHARLES HENRY WALTER
(the Senior Trustee of the Institution)

will occupy the Chair.

By Order of the Committee,

W. WILKIE JONES, Secretary.

BOOKSELLERS' PROVIDENT INSTITUTION.

The ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING of the BOOKSELLERS' PROVIDENT INSTITUTION, will be held, by the courtesy of the Stationers' Company, at STATIONERS' HALL, on TUESDAY, March 16, at 7 o'clock. The Lord Mayor, Sir FRANCIS TRUSCOTT, will speak, and an excellent Musical Programme has been arranged for the Conversation which will follow.

GEORGE LARNER, Secretary.

29, Paternoster Row, E.C.

Educational.

CHRIST'S COLLEGE, BLACKHEATH, S.E.
F. W. AVELING, M.A. B.Sc.
Preparation for Universities and Professions.
Stress on Modern Languages and Science.

EDUCATION.

Parents or Guardians desiring accurate information relative to the CHOICE of SCHOOLS for BOYS or GIRLS or TUTOR in England or Abroad are invited to call upon or send fully detailed particulars to MESSRS. GABBITAS, THRING & CO., who for more than thirty years have been closely in touch with the leading Educational Establishments.
Advice, free of charge, is given by Mr. THRING, Nephew of the late Head Master of Uppingham, 36, Sackville Street, London, W.

UNIVERSITY OF LONDON.

The UNIVERSITY COLLEGE COMMITTEE will shortly proceed to appoint a QUAIN STUDENT in ENGLISH. The value of the Studentship is 150l. Candidates (who must have been Students of the College) should forward their applications on or before WEDNESDAY, March 3, to the undersigned, from whom further particulars may be obtained.

WALTER W. SETON, M.A., Secretary.
University College, London, Gower Street, W.C.

THE LONDON HOSPITAL MEDICAL COLLEGE.

(UNIVERSITY OF LONDON.)

PRELIMINARY SCIENTIFIC EXAMINATION.

Special arrangements are made to suit the convenience of Students who have just passed the Matriculation Examination of the University of London and who are anxious to commence studying for the above Examination without loss of time.

Students matriculating in January may thus enter at once without any break in their studies, so that they may be able to present themselves for the Preliminary Scientific Examination at the earliest possible date.

Zoology and Botany. By G. P. MUDGE, A.R.C.S. F.Z.S., and R. A. BUDDICOM, B.A. Oxon.
Chemistry and Physics. By HUGH CANDY, B.A., B.Sc. Lond., and O. W. GRIFFITH, B.Sc. Lond.
Fee for the whole Course, Ten Guineas.
Turner Street, Mile End, E. MUNRO SCOTT, Warden.

THE DOWNS SCHOOL, SEAFORD, SUSSEX.

Head Mistress—Miss LUCY ROBINSON, M.A. (late Second Mistress, St. Felix School, Southwold). References: The Principal of Bedford College, London; The Master of Peterhouse, Cambridge.

Situations Vacant.

EDUCATION COMMITTEE FOR THE COUNTY BOROUGH OF BRIGHTON.

PRINCIPAL OF THE MUNICIPAL TECHNICAL COLLEGE.
The COMMITTEE invite applications for the post of PRINCIPAL of the BRIGHTON MUNICIPAL TECHNICAL COLLEGE.

Candidates must be not more than 45 years of age, and must be Graduates of some University of the United Kingdom. The appointment will date from August 1, 1909, and the Salary will be 400l. (rising by two annual increments of 50l. to 500l. per annum.

Particulars as to duties and further information concerning the appointment will be forwarded on application.

Applications, accompanied by copies of not more than three recent Testimonials, should be sent to the Clerk to the Committee not later than MONDAY, March 15, 1909.

E. HACKFORTH, M.A., Clerk to the Committee.
54, Old Steine, Brighton, February 23, 1909.

HEREFORDSHIRE LOCAL EDUCATION AUTHORITY.

LEOMINSTER SECONDARY SCHOOL (MIXED).

Applications are invited for the post of HEAD MASTER of the above new SCHOOL, which will be OPENED in SEPTEMBER, 1909, working under the regulations of the Board of Education.

Accommodation, 95.
Salary 300l. per annum, and 2l. Capitation Fee on all Children above the first 50.

Applicants must be Graduates of a University.
Applications, endorsed "Head Master," enclosing copies of not more than three recent Testimonials, should be sent to W. T. SALE, Esq., Clerk to the Governors, Leominster, so as to reach him not later than MARCH 4 NEXT.

Canvassing will disqualify a Candidate.

Signed,
JOHN WILTSHIRE, County Education Secretary.
Education Office, Shire Hall, Hereford,
February 8, 1909.

BIRKENHEAD EDUCATION COMMITTEE.

GIRLS' SECONDARY SCHOOL.

Head Mistress—Miss MARY KENNEDY, M.A.

MATHEMATICAL MISTRESS WANTED NEXT TERM. Graduate with experience and training preferred. Salary 120l. rising by annual increments of 5l. subject to satisfactory service, to 145l. In fixing the initial Salary, good Secondary School experience will be considered. Botany a recommendation.—For further information apply to the HEAD MISTRESS.

Forms of Application, which should be returned without delay, may be obtained from

ROBERT T. JONES, Secretary.
Education Department, Town Hall, Birkenhead,
February 22, 1909.

COUNTY BOROUGH OF SUNDERLAND.

DAY TRAINING COLLEGE.

ASSISTANT MISTRESS REQUIRED, to enter upon duties after the EASTER VACATION. Must be a Graduate of a British University with Training College experience, specially qualified in English, and able to assist in the teaching of Method; ability to teach Hygiene or French a recommendation.

Salary at the rate of 150l. per annum. Application Forms, which may be obtained from the undersigned, must be returned by March 16.

T. W. BRYERS, Secretary.
Education Offices, 15, John Street, Sunderland.

WOOLWICH POLYTECHNIC.

The GOVERNING BODY invite applications for the appointment (part time), of a MAN TEACHER in the SCHOOL OF ART, at a Salary of 75l. per annum.—Further particulars and Forms of Application, which must be returned to the Principal not later than WEDNESDAY, March 10, may be obtained by sending to THE PRINCIPAL, a stamped addressed foolscap envelope.

TECHNICAL SCHOOL, GUILDHALL, BATH.

ASSISTANT ART MASTER REQUIRED AT ONCE for the BATH SCHOOL OF ART. Salary 90l. per annum. Applications must be received not later than MONDAY, March 8.—For further particulars apply to A. GODFREY DAY, Director of Studies.

Yearly Subscription, free by post, Inland, 15s. 3d.; Foreign, 18s. Entered at the New York Post Office as Second Class matter.

THE ATHENÆUM is published on FRIDAY AFTERNOON at 2 o'clock.

COUNTY OF LONDON.

The LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL invites applications for the undermentioned posts:—

(a) MISTRESS OF METHOD at GRAYSTOKE PLACE DAY TRAINING COLLEGE, FETTER LANE, E.C. Applicants should be qualified to share in the Theoretical Instruction and Practical Training in Teaching of all Students, and especially to undertake the training in Kindergarten and Infant School Methods. The Woman appointed will be required to begin work as soon as possible. Salary 180l. a year, rising by annual increments of 10l. to 250l. Last time for receiving applications 10 A.M. on MONDAY, March 15, 1909.

(b) SCIENCE LECTURER (Woman), at GRAYSTOKE PLACE DAY TRAINING COLLEGE, specially qualified in Nature Study and Botany. The Woman appointed will be required to undertake the Organization of the Science Teaching in the College; to help in the Professional Studies of the Students and in the Supervision of School Practice. She will be required to begin work about the END of SEPTEMBER, 1909. The Salary is 180l. a year, rising by annual increments of 10l. to 250l. Last time for receiving applications 10 A.M. on MONDAY, March 15, 1909.

(c) TEACHER OF WRITING, LETTERING, and ILLUMINATION at the L.C.C. NORWOOD TECHNICAL INSTITUTE, KNIGHTS HILL, WEST NORWOOD, S.E., for One Morning attendance (Thursdays) of about Three Hours, at a fee of 10s. 6d. an Attendance. Last time for receiving applications 11 A.M. on SATURDAY, March 6, 1909.

Applications for the above-mentioned posts should be made on the Official Form, to be obtained, together with particulars of the appointments, from the EDUCATION OFFICER, London County Council, Education Offices, Victoria Embankment, W.C., to whom they must be returned not later than the times specified, accompanied by copies of three Testimonials of recent date.

All communications on the subject of appointments (a) and (b) must be endorsed "H-1," and of appointment (c) "T-1," and a stamped addressed foolscap envelope must be enclosed. Canvassing, either directly or indirectly, will be held to be a disqualification for employment.

G. L. GOMME, Clerk of the London County Council.
Education Offices, Victoria Embankment, W.C.
February 25, 1909.

METROPOLITAN BOROUGH OF STEPNEY.

The COUNCIL of the METROPOLITAN BOROUGH of STEPNEY invite applications from persons of either sex for the position of BOROUGH CURATOR.

Applicants must not be less than 25 nor more than 38 years of age. The person to be appointed must have had scientific training in some recognized institution, experience in the work of a Natural History Museum, and also in Lecturing. The person appointed will be required to devote the whole of his or her time to the duties of the Office and to reside within the area of the Borough, and will be subordinate to, and subject to the supervision of, the Borough Librarian. A medical examination by the Council's medical examiner as to her or his constitutional fitness for the office will also be required.

The Salary will be 130l. per annum, rising by annual increments of 10l. to a maximum Salary of 150l. per annum, subject to deductions to be made pursuant to the provisions of the Stepney Borough Council (Superannuation) Act, 1905.

Applications, in Candidate's own handwriting, stating age last birthday, qualifications, experience, private address, &c., and accompanied by copies of not more than three Testimonials of recent date, must be forwarded to the undersigned, in envelopes endorsed "Appointment of Borough Curator," so as to reach him not later than noon on WEDNESDAY, March 17, 1909.

Canvassing Members or Officers of the Council in any manner whatsoever is strictly prohibited, and will disqualify applicants.

By Order,
GEO. W. CLARKE, Town Clerk
Municipal Offices, 15, Great Alie Street, Whitechapel, E.
February 25, 1909.

COUNTY BOROUGH OF HUDDERSFIELD, TECHNICAL COLLEGE.

Principal—J. F. HUDSON, M.A., B.Sc.

LADY REQUIRED, to act as LIBRARY CLERK. Knowledge of Shorthand and Typewriting essential. For particulars apply to T. THORP, Secretary.

WANTED, First-Class REPRESENTATIVE and MANAGER for the WHOLESALE CANVASSING DEPARTMENT of one of the leading PUBLISHING HOUSES in LONDON. Thorough knowledge of the Book Canvassing Trade absolutely essential.—Apply Box 1572, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

PUBLISHING.—WANTED, for a new enterprise on sound lines, and strongly financed, a capable MANAGER, thoroughly trained in all the details of the Business, and versed in the best and latest methods for developing and pushing Trade. The successful Candidate must be a Gentleman of superior education, good appearance, and address. Remuneration: Salary, with Share in Profits.—Address, in the first instance, giving general particulars, and Salary required to PUBLISHING, Box, 1575, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

Situations Wanted.

TO AUTHORS AND PUBLISHERS.—A well-known CAMBRIDGE MAN, M.A., is open to ADVISE AUTHORS, Revise Copy or Proofs, &c. Highest references.—Address M., Box 1177, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, E.C.

YOUNG LADY with sixteen years' experience of General Office work (in London), Shorthand, Type-Writing, Book-Keeping, &c., seeks RE-ENGAGEMENT, or Secretarial Post.—H. M. C., 17, Portland Place, Bath.

POST of SECRETARY DESIRED, either Resident or Non-Resident, by a LADY. Shorthand Typist, well trained; Good French, Book-keeping, &c. — Address READER, 18, Princes Square, London, W.

A CLERGYMAN'S DAUGHTER desires SITUATION as SECRETARY. Knowledge of French, Type-Writing, and Shorthand (speed 120). Experienced in Literary Work and Preparing Indexes and MSS. for Publication. — I. D., 37, Norfolk Square, Brighton.

LADY WANTS SECRETARIAL WORK Two Evenings a Week and Saturday Mornings. Type-Writing, Shorthand, German. — Box 1573, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

GERMAN and FRENCH TRANSLATIONS — from or into these Languages — undertaken by an ENGLISH GENTLEMAN. Absolute correctness guaranteed. Seven years residence in Germany as University Lecturer. Two years in France. — Write to Box 1574, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, E.C.

INDEXER DISENGAGED. Experienced in Government Blue-Book Indexing. Letter-Filing, Card-Indexing, and Typing. — Apply S., 6, Stratford Road, Kensington.

Miscellaneous.

PRIVATE SOCIAL TOURS FOR GENTLE-WOMEN. — Historic Castles of Loire Valley, APRIL. Austria, including the Danube, Vienna, Budapest, and Salzburg, JUNE. Holland and Switzerland, AUGUST. Inclusive Terms. References exchanged. — Miss BISHOP, 27, St. George's Road, Kilburn, London.

TO NEWSPAPERS AND MAGAZINES. — The AUTHOR of 'MEDICAL PHILOSOPHY' desires to WRITE on HEALTH. As Medicine teaches that all our thoughts, actions, and happiness depends on health, this is the most important subject that Editors can lay before their readers. — Write care of H. KIMPTON, Esq., Publisher, 13, Farnival Street, E.C.

PUBLIC-HOUSE REFORM. — The People's Refreshment House Association, Ltd., founded by the Bishop of Chester, manages 63 Licensed Inns. Ask for List and Report. APPLY FOR 17. SHARES. 5 per cent paid since 1899. P.R.H.A., Broadway Chambers, Westminster.

TRANSLATIONS INTO ENGLISH from French, Italian, Spanish, Portuguese, German, Dutch, Danish, Norwegian, and Swedish. — W. T. CURTIS, 10, Haringey Park, Crouch End, N.

ACCURATE RESEARCH and GENEALOGICAL WORK undertaken by R. M. GLENCROSS, M.A. LL.B. Advice also supplied to Persons drawing up their own Pedigree. Excellent Testimonials. — 3, Chalonier Street, West Kensington.

WORK WANTED in INDEXING, CATALOGUING, BIBLIOGRAPHY, &c. Good experience. Spanish, Italian, and French Translated. Research Work of any kind undertaken. — Address ALPHA, care Davies & Co., Advertising Agents, Finch Lane, Cornhill.

FIRST EDITIONS. By MATTHEW ARNOLD: Merope, Literature and Dogma, Culture and Anarchy, Poems, Second Series (1855), Griselda, St. Paul and Protestantism (1870). ROBT. BROWNING: Poems, 3 vols., Fifth at the Fair, The Inn Album, Balaustion's Adventure, The Ring and the Book, 4 vols., E. B. BROWNING: Last Poems, The Greek Christian Poets (1863), Aurora Leigh (1857). Forty other Volumes, mostly First Editions, including Allen's History of London, 3 vols. 1820 — Poems, in 2 vols., of Wm. Wordsworth (1807), and Works by Kingsley, Hughes, Morris, Byron, Craik, Lytton, Kipling, Thackeray. — Full particulars on application to EXECUTORS, Miall, Wilkins, Randall & Co., 23, St. Swithin's Lane, London, E.C.

PRIVATE ACCOUNT BOOK. — For Country or City Gentleman. Combines every requirement, from Cash Book to Balance Sheet and Income Tax. Satisfaction guaranteed or money returned. Particulars free. — McQUEEN & CO., Meat Road E., Leicester.

BED-SITTING ROOMS, very clean, just opposite the British Museum. Gas, Bath (h. and c.), Breakfast if required. — 41, Great Russell Street. Phone 1099 Gerrard.

THE DAUGHTER of a well-known Literary Man is desirous of meeting with a LADY and GENTLEMAN to SHARE her HOUSE; or would take Boarders. Rooms Furnished or Unfurnished. The House is situated on South Norwood Hill, five minutes from Norwood Junction Station, close to the Stanley Halls (where Concerts, Lectures, &c., are continually given), near the Public Library, and within a walk of the Crystal Palace, or One Station from it. Norwood is regarded as one of the healthiest places round London, and was at one time a well-known health resort. — Address C. M. Box 1562, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

Type-Writers, &c.

AUTHORS' MSS., 9d. per 1,000 words. Sermons, Plays, and all kinds of TYPE-WRITING carefully done at home (Remington). Good paper. Orders promptly executed. Duplicating from 3s. 6d. per 100. — M. L. L., 18, Edgeley Road, Clapham, S.W.

AUTHORS' MSS., NOVELS, STORIES, PLAYS, ESSAYS TYPE-WRITTEN with complete accuracy, 9d. per 1,000 words. Clear Carbon Copies guaranteed. References to well-known Writers. — M. STUART, Allendale, Kymberley Road, Harrow.

TYPE-WRITING undertaken by highly educated Women (Classical Tripos; Cambridge Higher Local; Modern Languages). Research, Revision, Translation, Shorthand, Dictation Room. — THE CAMBRIDGE TYPE-WRITING AGENCY, 10, Duke Street, Adelphi, W.C.

TYPE-WRITING, 9d. per 1,000 words. All kinds of MSS. accurately typed. Clear Carbon Copies, 3d. per 1,000. References to well-known Authors. Oxford Higher Local. Tel. 1272, Richmond P.O. — M. KING, 24, Forest Road, Kew Gardens, S.W.

TYPE-WRITING OF EVERY DESCRIPTION by EXPERT, 8d. per 1,000 words. Clear Carbon Copies, 3d. per 1,000 words. Accuracy and prompt return guaranteed. Reliable References. — NORA DICKINSON, 1, Sackville Gardens, Ilford.

NO EXTRAS WHATEVER. — TYPE-WRITING 7d. 1,000 words. Duplicating 3s. 100 sheets. All work accurately, neatly, and promptly executed. — JOSEPH GROOM, 45, Sandringham Road, Dalston, N.E.

TYPE-WRITING 9d. per 1,000 words; Carbons 3d. French and German Type-writing 1s. per 1,000. Translations. Duplicating 3s. 100 Copies (quarto), 15s. per 1,000. Best work, accuracy, and promptitude. — G. WALKER, 14, Park Road, New Cross, S.E.

TYPE-WRITING. — The WEST KENSINGTON OFFICES. Authors' MSS., Translations, &c. Legal and General Copying. Private Dictation Room. Circulars, &c., Duplicated. Usual Terms. References. Established sixteen years. — SIKES & SIKES, 223A, Hammersmith Road, London, W.

Catalogues.

FIRST EDITIONS of MODERN AUTHORS, including Dickens, Thackeray, Lever, Ainsworth; Books illustrated by G. and R. Cruikshank, Phiz, Rowlandson, Leech, &c. The largest and choicest Collection offered for Sale in the World. CATALOGUES issued and sent post free on application. Books Bought. — WALTER T. SPENCER, 27, New Oxford Street, London, W.C.

ANCIENT and MODERN COINS. — Collectors and Antiquarians are invited to apply to SPINK & SON Limited, for Specimen Copy (gratis) of their NUMISMATIC CIRCULAR. The finest Greek, Roman, and English Coins on View and for Sale at Moderate Prices. — SPINK & SON, Limited, Experts, Valuers, and Cataloguers, 16, 17, and 18, Piccadilly, London, W. Established upwards of a Century.

JUST PUBLISHED.

MANUAL of BRITISH TOPOGRAPHY. A Catalogue of County and Local Histories, Civil War Tracts, Views, Drawings, Maps, &c., connected with the Principal Localities in the United Kingdom. Illustrated with 12 interesting Portraits and Views from early Copperplates. Comprising nearly 11,000 entries, 284 pp., 8vo, cloth, 5s. net. Only 200 copies issued. — WALTER V. DANIELL, 53, Mortimer Street, London, W.

WE will send any MUSICAL PUBLICATION post free by return, and charge lowest current rates. VIOLIN MUSIO CATALOGUE, with Supplement (25,000 Publications), free for 3d. postage (published 1s.). — MURDOCH, MURDOCH & CO. Hatton House, Hatton Garden, London, E.C.

BOOKS. — ALL OUT-OF-PRINT and RARE BOOKS on any subject SUPPLIED. The most expert Bookfinder extant. Please state wants and ask for CATALOGUE. I make a special feature of exchanging any Saleable Books for others selected from my various Lists. Special List of 2,000 Books I particularly want post free. — EDW. BAKER'S Great Bookshop, 14-16, John Bright Street, Birmingham. Rhead's Staffordshire Pots and Potters, Illus., 21s., for 10s. 6d.; Ainsworth's Novels, 20 vols. 35s.; Burke's Peerage, 1907, 24s.

GLAISHER'S REMAINDER BOOK CATALOGUE For MARCH (No. 363). NOW READY, and will be forwarded on application. It comprises a specially attractive Selection of Publishers' Remainders, including many Good Bargains. — WILLIAM GLAISHER, Ltd., Booksellers, 265, HIGH HOLBORN, LONDON.

CATALOGUE No. 50. — Drawings by Turner, Prout, Ruskin, &c. — Turner's Liber Studiorum and other Engravings — Proofs touched by Turner — Constable's English Landscape — Etchings by Whistler — Japanese Colour Prints — Illustrated Books. Post free, Sixpence. — WM. WARD, 2, Church Terrace, Richmond, Surrey.

OUR CATALOGUE, No. 60, for MARCH, 1909, contains many wonderful Bargains in rare Old Books, Prints, &c. — Scottish Books of Common Prayer, First Edition, 1637, 6l. 10s.; Napoleon I.'s Campaigns — Original Prints, from 2s. 6d. each — Fancy Subjects, &c. — Paintings of the Early English School — Portrait of Mary Lamb, 10l. 10s. — superbly painted old Portrait of Henry Purcell, the Musician, 12l. 12s. — MONTHLY CATALOGUES free on application. — ANTIQUARIAN BOOK CO. 12, Brownlow St., Holborn, London, W.C.

Authors' Agents.

THE AUTHOR'S AGENCY. — Established 1879. The interests of Authors capably represented. Agreements for Publishing arranged. MSS. placed with Publishers. — Terms and Testimonials on application to Mr. A. M. BURGHESE, 24, Paternoster Row.

Printers.

ATHENÆUM PRESS. — JOHN EDWARD FRANCIS, Printer of the Athenæum, Notes and Queries, &c., is prepared to SUBMIT ESTIMATES for all kinds of BOOK, NEWS, and PERIODICAL PRINTING. — 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

Sales by Auction.

Books and Manuscripts.

MESSRS. PUTTICK & SIMPSON will SELL by AUCTION, at their Galleries, 47, Leicester Square, W.C., on THURSDAY, March 11, and Following Day, at ten minutes past 1 o'clock precisely, a LIBRARY of SEVENTEENTH and EIGHTEENTH CENTURY LITERATURE, removed from Warwick; a LIBRARY from Queen's Gate and other Properties, including Library Editions of Standard Works — valuable First Editions — Books relating to Natural History, Sport, the Drama, and Fine Arts — Topographical Works — Books with Coloured Plates — Americana — Voyages and Travels — Autograph Letters — Manuscripts — and Engravings. Catalogues in preparation.

MESSRS. CHRISTIE, MANSON & WOODS respectfully give notice that they will hold the following SALES by AUCTION, at their Great Rooms, King Street, St. James's Square, the Sales commencing at 1 o'clock precisely.

On TUESDAY, March 2, MODERN ENGRAVINGS after Rosa Bonheur and Sir E. Landseer, and ENGRAVINGS of the EARLY ENGLISH SCHOOL.

On THURSDAY, March 4, and FRIDAY, March 5 (by order of the Trustee in Bankruptcy), the valuable STOCK of DECORATIVE FURNITURE of the old-established firm of MESSRS. BERTRAM & SON, of 100 and 101, Dean Street, W.

On SATURDAY, March 6, MODERN PICTURES and DRAWINGS.

Books and Manuscripts.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on TUESDAY, March 2, and Following Day, at 1 o'clock precisely, BOOKS and MANUSCRIPTS, comprising the LIBRARY of the late Col. G. HENDERSON, J.P., of Heverswood, Brasted, Kent, and other Properties, including Documents on Vellum concerning the Worshipful Company of Horners — Hasted's History of Kent, 4 vols. 1778-99 — Works on Art and Archaeology — Sport and Travel — Americana — First Editions of English and Foreign Authors — Drama — Early Printed Books — Scarce Tracts — Publications of the Kelmscott and Doves Presses — Autograph Letters.

May be viewed. Catalogues may be had.

The Library of the Right Rev. the LORD BISHOP OF COLCHESTER (deceased), and the Library of the late FALKLAND WARREN, Esq.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on TUESDAY, March 16, and Following Day, at 1 o'clock precisely, BOOKS and MANUSCRIPTS including the LIBRARY of the Right Rev. the LORD BISHOP OF COLCHESTER (deceased); the LIBRARY of the late FALKLAND WARREN, Esq., and other Properties, comprising rare Americana — Oriental Manuscripts and Printed Books — Publications of the Kelmscott and Doves Presses — Grolier Club Publications — rare Works in English Poetry and Drama — a Collection of Tracts by Martin Luther, mostly First Editions, with fine Woodcut Borders by Holbein, Cranach, Burgmaier, &c. — fine Works in Natural History, with Coloured Plates — Fine Art Books — Collections of Military Costumes — Collection of Illustrations by George Cruikshank — Blake's Songs of Innocence and of Experience (1799), &c.

May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

Illuminated and other Manuscript and Valuable Printed Books.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on THURSDAY, March 18, and Following Day, at 1 o'clock precisely, ILLUMINATED and other MANUSCRIPTS and VALUABLE PRINTED BOOKS, comprising fine Books of Hours, Manuscript and Printed — Bibles, Antiphonals and other Service Books — Illuminated Persian Manuscripts — Italian, French, Flemish and Spanish Miniatures — a fine Flemish Antiphonale of the Fourteenth Century — Dean Swift's Own Copy of his and Pope's Miscellanies, with numerous Annotations by him — Burns's Poems, with Autograph Notes — First Edition of Walton's Angler, and Shakespeare's Poems — an interesting Bunyan Bible — Fourth Folio Shakespeare — rare Early Printed English and Foreign Books, many with fine Woodcuts — First Editions of Mrs. Browning's Works, &c.

May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

The magnificent Library of the Right Hon. LORD AMHERST of Hackney, deceased (Second and Final Portion).

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on WEDNESDAY, March 24, and Three Following Days, at 1 o'clock precisely, the magnificent LIBRARY of choice and valuable Books and Manuscripts, the Property of the late LORD AMHERST of HACKNEY (Second Portion).

May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had, price One Shilling each.

STEVENS'S AUCTION ROOMS. Established 1760. FORTHCOMING SALES BY AUCTION.

TUESDAY and WEDNESDAY, March 2 and 3, at half-past 12 o'clock.

The COLLECTION of ANTIQUE SILVER PLATE, CHINA ORNAMENTS, PICTURES, &c., formed by the late Dr. WILLIAM SPENCER LIGHTFOOT, R.N.; also Native Carvings and Ethnological Specimens, various — a Set of Three Crown Derby Vases — a Pair of Louis XV. Candelabra — an interesting Collection of Old Flags — and about 40 Lots of Baxter Prints, &c.

FRIDAY, March 5, at half-past 12 o'clock.

Cannon suitable for a Yacht.

TWO 5-pounder VAVASSEUR RIFLED MUZZLE-LOADING GUNS, mounted on Teak Carriage, sighted to 1,200 yards — a large Brass Gun — and a small ditto (Woolwich Pattern).

TUESDAY, March 3, at 1 o'clock.

The CONCLUDING PORTION of the COLLECTION of BRITISH LEPIDOPTERA formed by the late T. MADDISON, Esq., F.E.S., comprising the Remainder of the Noctuae and Geometrae.

WEDNESDAY, March 10, at 1 o'clock.

VALUABLE NATURAL HISTORY BOOKS, chiefly Entomological, being LIBRARIES formed by Dr. SHARPIN, C. H. SCHILL, Esq., W. H. E. THORNTON, Esq., F.E.S., including copies of the Annals and Magazine of Natural History, Biologia Centrali-Americana; Barrett's Lepidoptera of the British Isles, and other valuable books.

FRIDAY, March 12, at half-past 12 o'clock.

Several high-class ORNAMENTAL TURNING and SCREW-CUTTING TREADLE LATHES, including a 5½-inch Centre Screw-Cutting Lathe, with Attachments for Wheel Cutting, Milling, Slot Drilling, Taper Turning, Chucks, &c., by Birch — a 5-inch ditto Traversing Mandrel and Screw Cutting, with Birch's Dividing and Wheel Cutting Attachment, by Kennan, of Dublin, Holtzapffel, and others.

Catalogues and particulars of the above Sales may be had on application to Mr. J. C. STEVENS, 33, King Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C.

Valuable Miscellaneous Books.

MESSRS. HODGSON & CO. will SELL by AUCTION at their Rooms, 115, Chancery Lane, on TUESDAY, March 2, and Two Following Days, VALUABLE MISCELLANEOUS BOOKS, including a Selection from the Library of a Gentleman, comprising Early Printed Books — a Fourteenth-Century Horn on vellum, with Miniatures — Lydgate's Fall of Princes, 1554, Barclay's Ship of Fools (1570), Speght's Chaucer, 1598, and others in Old English Literature — Dodoens' Herbal, 1578 — Fuchs' New Kreuterbuch, 1543 — Meisner. Thesaurus Philo-Politicus, 12 parts, 1625-31, and other old Books of Emblems — A Set of the Tudor Translations — Editions de Luxe of Lamb, Tennyson, Pater, Kingsley, Lytton, Meredith, and others — Library Editions of Hakluyt's Voyages, 12 vols., Burton's Arabian Nights, 12 vols., Fielding, 12 vols., Horace Walpole, 16 vols., Large Paper, Scott, 48 vols., Goethe, 14 vols., and Schiller, 10 vols. — Crisp's Visitation of England, Wales, and Ireland, 19 vols. — Lodge's Portraits, India Proofs, 8 vols. — The Historical Writings of Gibbon, Motley, Duruy, Curtius, and others — Books on Anthropology — Presentation Copies of Cruikshank's Fairy Library — First Editions of Browning, Leigh Hunt, Dickens, Surtees, and others — also a Series of the Arundel Society's Chromolithographs.

To be viewed and Catalogues had,

Modern Books and Remainders.

MESSRS. HODGSON & CO. will SELL by AUCTION at their Rooms, 115, Chancery Lane, W.C., on WEDNESDAY, March 10, at 1 o'clock, MODERN BOOKS and REMAINDERS—Surplus Stocks of New Publications—Sets of Standard Authors, some in leather bindings—Modern Books on Natural History, Sport, and Travel—also the ENTIRE STOCK AND PLANT OF THE THIRD EDITION OF SOWERBY'S ENGLISH BOTANY, 13 vols.

Catalogues are preparing.

Magazines, &c.

THE BUILDER (founded 1842), 4, Catherine Street, London, W.C., February 27, contains:—

THE ARCHITECTURAL ASSOCIATION SCHOOLS.
THE LONDON TOPOGRAPHICAL SOCIETY.
THE PRESS AND ARCHITECTURE (Architectural Association).

THE CONCRETE INSTITUTE.
THE CARPENTERS' COMPANY LECTURES.
ESTATE FORESTRY (Surveyors' Institution).

ILLUSTRATIONS:

THE UNITED UNIVERSITY CLUB, Pall Mall East;
THE ERECHTHEION FRIEZE;
THE UNIVERSITY REGISTRY, CARDIFF;
LIBRARY BUILDINGS, ROWLEY REGIS;
REREDOS, ST. PETER'S, HAMMERSMITH.

From Offices as above (4d., by post, 4½d.), at Railway Bookstalls, Bookshops, and of all Newsagents.

THE BRITISH EMPIRE:
Its Past, its Present, and its Future.

Edited by A. F. POLLARD, M.A.

Pp. 896, 5s. net.

Fifteen Special Contributors, and over a Hundred Authorities in all parts of the Empire have collaborated in its production.

LEAGUE OF THE EMPIRE,

Caxton Hall, Westminster; and all Booksellers.

E BENEZER PROUT'S WORKS.
Bound, each net, 5s.

HARMONY: its Theory and Practice. Twenty-fourth Impression. Revised and largely Re-written.

ANALYTICAL KEY TO THE EXERCISES in the Same. Net 3s.

COUNTERPOINT: Strict and Free. Ninth Impression.

DOUBLE COUNTERPOINT AND CANON. Fourth Impression.

FUGUE. Fifth Impression.

FUGAL ANALYSIS. Third Impression.

MUSICAL FORM. Seventh Impression.

APPLIED FORMS. Fifth Impression.

THE ORCHESTRA. 2 vols. Fourth Impression.

AUGENER, Lrn., 6, New Burlington Street, and 22, Newgate Street.

IDOLATRY.

BY

ALICE PERRIN,

AUTHOR OF 'THE STRONGER CLAIM,'
'THE WATERS OF DESTRUCTION,' &c.

SECOND IMPRESSION.

Mrs. Perrin's new Anglo-Indian novel 'Idolatry' deals with the struggle between the World and the Spirit, as portrayed in the development of the two central characters of the book—a girl who has been reared in the artificial atmosphere of London society, and a young missionary who, for the sake of his calling, has renounced all earthly advantages.

"When the history of English fiction comes to be written a specially honoured place will surely be given to those romances which have been inspired by India.... In book after book Mrs. Perrin has drawn vivid, incisive sketches of not only Anglo-Indian, but native life.... 'Idolatry' is a real triumph."—Times.

CHATTO & WINDUS,

111, St Martin's Lane, W.C.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESSTHE CAMBRIDGE HISTORY OF ENGLISH LITERATURE.

Edited by A. W. Ward, Litt.D., F.B.A., and A. R. Waller, M.A.

Volume III. RENASCENCE AND REFORMATION.

"The supreme merit of the volume is the discrimination and judgment with which it brings to a focus the gradual evolution of a language, and the wonderful outburst of creative achievement in letters under the Tudors.... We have no hesitation in saying, in full view of its predecessors, that 'Renaissance and Reformation' reaches a level of literary excellence and critical discernment which surpasses anything that 'The Cambridge History of English Literature' has yet given us."—Standard.

Royal 8vo
Buckram
9s net
Half-morocco
15s net

THE CAMBRIDGE MODERN HISTORY. Planned by the late

Lord Acton. Edited by A. W. Ward, Litt.D., G. W. Prothero, Litt.D., and Stanley Leathes, M.A.

Volume XI. THE GROWTH OF NATIONALITIES.

"The new volume covers the quarter of a century between 1845 and 1871.... The skilful grouping of the material of the volume round the central idea, the supreme interest of the story at its greatest stages, and the high level of excellence maintained by the various writers make the present volume in many respects the most attractive of all the instalments of this great undertaking that have yet been given us."—Glasgow Herald.

The text of the work will be completed in twelve volumes, and there will be two supplementary volumes, making fourteen in all; one containing maps, and the other genealogical and other tables, and a general index to the whole work. Any volume may be purchased separately, bound in buckram, at 16s. net, and subscriptions of 7l. 10s. are received for the twelve volumes of the text. The complete work, in fourteen volumes may be obtained on the instalment system, in buckram, and in various leather bindings, of which full particulars will be sent on application to O A 2, H Department, Cambridge University Press Warehouse, Fetter Lane, London.

Royal 8vo
16s net

Subscription
Terms

TRAVELS IN THE ISLAND OF CYPRUS. Translated from the Italian of Giovanni Mariti. By Claude Delaval Cobham, C.M.G.

The Abbé Giovanni Mariti resided in Cyprus from 1760 to 1767 as an official of the Imperial and Tuscan Consulates. His work Viaggi per l'isola di Cipro is based almost entirely on his own observations, and is in Mr. Cobham's opinion the best account of the condition of Cyprus in the third quarter of the eighteenth century. In the present volume Mr. Cobham has supplemented Mariti's narrative with contemporary accounts of the sieges of Nicosia and Famagusta.

Crown 8vo
4s net

THE AUTHORISED VERSION OF THE ENGLISH BIBLE 1611.

Edited by William Aldis Wright, M.A., Vice-Master of Trinity College, Cambridge. In five volumes:—Vol. I. Genesis to Deuteronomy, Vol. II. Joshua to Esther, Vol. III. Job to Malachi, Vol. IV. The Apocrypha, Vol. V. The New Testament.

The text of modern English Bibles differs considerably from that of the original Authorised Version of 1611. With the idea of correcting or improving the translation, alterations have from time to time been made by printers and editors, in words and phrases, spelling and punctuation. The present edition, treating the Version as the greatest of English Classics, gives a faithful reprint of the original text, in a form intended to appeal to the reader as distinguished from the theologian. A full prospectus, with specimen pages, will be sent on application.

Crown 8vo 5 vols
Cloth, 20s net
Half rough calf, 30s net
Full morocco,
35s net and 45s net

ITALY FROM 1494 to 1790. By Mrs. H. M. Vernon.

The history of Italy in the period treated in this volume divides itself naturally into two parts, 1494-1559 and 1559-1790. Since the events of the earlier years are fully described in numerous accessible works, the author deals with them briefly, in spite of their importance, treating them rather as an introduction to the later and neglected period, about which it is difficult for the ordinary reader to obtain information.

Crown 8vo
Four maps
5s 6d net

AN INTRODUCTION TO THE STUDY OF INTEGRAL

EQUATIONS. By Maxime Bocher, B.A. Ph.D., Professor of Mathematics in Harvard University.

In this tract, which forms No. 10 of Cambridge Tracts in Mathematics and Mathematical Physics, the author presents the main portions of the theory of integral equations, following roughly the lines of historical development, with the hope of furnishing the student with a firm foundation which will serve as a point of departure for further work in this subject and its applications.

Demy 8vo
2s 6d net

THE REVISED VERSION OF SCHOOLS. A New Series of

Commentaries intended to draw attention to the importance of some of the changes made in the Revised Version, as well as to present in clear and intelligible form the best and most approved results of recent theological work. In addition to the two new volumes mentioned below, the four Gospels and the Acts of the Apostles have been published, and the remaining books of the New Testament are in preparation.

THE EPISTLES TO THE GALATIANS AND TO THE ROMANS.
Edited, with Introduction and Notes by H. W. FULFORD, M.A., Fellow of Clare College, Cambridge.

THE FIRST AND SECOND EPISTLES TO THE CORINTHIANS.
Edited, with Introduction and Notes by S. C. CARPENTER, M.A., Warden of the Caius College Mission, Battersea.

Foolscap 8vo
with Maps
1s 6d net each

CAMBRIDGE COUNTY GEOGRAPHIES. A New Series of

County Handbooks under the General Editorship of Dr. F. H. H. Guillemard.

Each volume gives an account of the history, antiquities, architecture, natural history, industries, and physical, geological, and general characteristics of the county. Each book contains two coloured maps and a large number of illustrations.

The following are the first six volumes, and others are in active preparation:—
KENT. By G. F. BOSWORTH, F.R.G.S. ESSEX. By G. F. BOSWORTH, F.R.G.S.
SURREY. By G. F. BOSWORTH, F.R.G.S. NORFOLK. By W. A. DUTT.
SUSSEX. By G. F. BOSWORTH, F.R.G.S. SUFFOLK. By W. A. DUTT.

Foolscap 8vo
1s. 6d. each

London, Fetter Lane: CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS WAREHOUSE: C. F. Clay, Manager

NEW 6/- NOVELS.

A R A M I N T A.

By J. C. SNAITH,
Author of 'Henry Northcote,' 'William Jordan,
Junior,' 'Broke of Covenden.'

SECOND IMPRESSION IN THE PRESS.

Morning Post.—"A novel which may well be the success of the Spring season. Its gaiety, mostly spontaneous, its assured air of familiarity with 'the best people,' and its frank and shameless sentimentality will carry by storm the citadel of popular esteem. It is indeed, an essentially jolly book."

GEOFFREY CHERITON.

By JOHN BARNETT,
Author of 'The Prince's Valet,' &c.

With a Portrait, fcap. 8vo, 4s. 6d. net.

POEMS by the late Rev. Dr.
RICHARD WATSON DIXON,
Late Hon. Canon of Carlisle and Vicar of Warkworth.

A Selection with a Memoir by ROBERT BRIDGES.
Times.—"Dr. Dixon's poems have high merit."

With 9 Illustrations, large post 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

PRE-TRACTARIAN OXFORD.

A Reminiscence of the Oriel 'Noetics.'

By the Rev. W. TUCKWELL, M.A.,
Author of 'Reminiscences of Oxford.'

Nottingham Guardian.—"The 'Radical Parson' has added to his 'Reminiscences of Oxford' a very interesting volume on a very remarkable group.... In Mr. Tuckwell's pages are to be found many enjoyable anecdotes, many lights on character."

THE BISHOP OF NORWICH.
JUST PUBLISHED.

With Portraits and Illustrations, large post 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

A BISHOP IN THE ROUGH.

Edited by the Rev. D. WALLACE DUTHIE, Author of 'The Case of Sir John Fastolf, and other Historical Studies.'

With a Preface by the Right Rev. THE LORD BISHOP OF NORWICH.

On MARCH 4, crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

THE IMMORTALS' GREAT QUEST.

By the Rev. J. W. BARLOW,
Ex-Vice-Provost of Trinity College, Dublin.

A new edition of a philosophical romance which was published pseudonymously in Dublin some years ago, but almost immediately withdrawn from circulation: it is practically a new book.

READY MARCH 4, crown 8vo, 6s. net.

THE WANDER YEARS.

Being some Account of Journeys into Life,
Letters, and Art.

By J. H. YOXALL, M.P.,
Author of 'Château Royal,' 'Alain Tanger's Wife,' &c.

THE CORNHILL MAGAZINE

For MARCH. Contents. Price One Shilling.

SHAKESPEARE'S EXPOSTULATION. By Sir Arthur Conan Doyle.

THE PALADIN. Chaps. 6-7. By Horace Annesley Vachell.

POPE AND THE MODERN WOMAN. By J. St. Loe Strachey.

THE PULLING OF THE STRINGS. By M. E. Francis.
REFLECTIONS ON THE POE CENTENARY. By Thomas Seecombe.

AN IMPRESSION OF MR. TAFT. By Mrs. Campbell
Dauncey.

A HIGH SCHOOL OF DANISH PEASANTS. By Edith Sellers.

THE CARIOLE. By George Young.

CHARLES DARWIN: A CENTENARY SKETCH. By Leonard Huxley.

CHARLOTTE BRONTE IN LONDON. By Sidney Lee.
PRISCILLA OF THE 'GOOD INTENT.' Chaps. 18-19.
By Halliwell Sutcliffe.

London: SMITH, ELDER & CO.

The ATHENÆUM says, in a leading article on VOLUME ONE of DR. HASTINGS' great

ENCYCLOPÆDIA OF RELIGION & ETHICS

"The general result of our examination enables us to say that the editor has risen to the height of his great undertaking. The work deserves the fullest and best encouragement which the world of readers and investigators can give it, and we hope that practical support will be granted to it in as full a measure as Dr. Hastings and the Publishers have a right to expect."

The STANDARD says:—

"The new Encyclopædia takes its place at once as a standard work. Judged by the combined quantity and quality of its contents, it may also be pronounced a very cheap book.... These Volumes will retain a position of acknowledged authority for many years to come, while no small proportion of their contents will be recognized as possessing permanent value."

In cloth binding, 28s. net; in half-morocco, 34s. net. In 12 Monthly Parts, 2s. 6d. net
each. Five Parts ready.

DR. HASTINGS' ONE VOLUME DICTIONARY OF THE BIBLE.

SECOND IMPRESSION NOW READY.

"An exceedingly valuable and comprehensive work. The clergy, educated Church workers, and laymen generally who take an interest in the careful study of the Bible will find in it invaluable assistance. It should have a large circulation, and will deserve it."—Record.

1,000 Pages, In cloth binding, 20s. net.
With Maps, &c. In half-leather, 25s. net.

New and complete Prospectuses free.

BIBLICAL CRITICISM AND MODERN THOUGHT;

Or, the Place of the Old Testament
Documents in the Life of To-Day.

By Prof. W. G. JORDAN, D.D., Queen's University,
Canada. JUST PUBLISHED. 7s. 6d. net.

THE TESTS OF LIFE:

A Study of the First Epistle of St. John.

By Rev. ROBERT LAW, B.D., Edinburgh. The Kerr
Lectures. 7s. 6d. net.

"Marked throughout by accurate scholarship, discriminating criticism, and brilliant exegesis. Mr. Law exhibits a complete mastery of the literature of his subject and a rare faculty of clear and eloquent exposition."—Scotsman.

THE BACKGROUND OF THE GOSPELS;

Or, Judaism in the Period between the Old and New Testaments.

By W. FAIRWEATHER, D.D., Kirkcaldy. 8s. net.

"This scholarly and judicious book ought to secure many readers. The author has made a contribution of solid value. The work is well planned and can be readily used by students."—Christian World.

THE BIBLE OF NATURE.

By Prof. J. ARTHUR THOMSON, M.A., University of Aberdeen. 4s. 6d. net.

A HANDBOOK OF CHRISTIAN ETHICS.

By Prof. J. CLARK MURRAY, LL.D., Montreal. 6s. net.

THE GREEK AND EASTERN CHURCHES.

By Principal W. F. ADENEY, D.D., Manchester. New Vol. "International Theological Library." 12s.

THE PAULINE EPISTLES.

By ROBERT SCOTT, D.D., Bombay. New Vol. "The Literature of the New Testament" Series.
[Almost ready.]

T. & T. CLARK, 38, George Street, Edinburgh.
14, Paternoster Square, London.

London: SIMPKIN, HAMILTON & CO., LTD.

FROM

WELLS GARDNER, DARTON & CO.'S
LIST.

REV. W. S. SWAYNE, M.A.

THE PSALM OF THE SAINTS, AND

THE SUFFERINGS OF JESUS CHRIST.
By the Rev. W. S. SWAYNE, M.A., Vicar of St.
Peter's, Cranley Gardens, Kensington. Cloth,
2s. net.

"Very full of thought, marked by much spiritual beauty."—Guardian.

REV. J. A. V. MAGEE, M.A.

GOD'S NEED OF MAN AND MAN'S

NEED OF GOD. Five Addresses given in St.
Paul's Cathedral. By the Rev. J. A. V. MAGEE,
M.A. Cloth, 1s. 3d. net.

Contents:—The Three Parables—The Discipline of Dulness—The Gospel of Consequences—Conversion —Life in the Home.

REV. E. TYRRELL GREEN, M.A.

THE SINNER'S RESTORATION. By the Rev. E. TYRRELL GREEN, M.A. Cloth,

2s. 6d.

A Series of Lenten Addresses divided into six chapters: Christ's Look—Christ's Message—Christ's Interview—Christ's Question—Christ's Charge—Christ's Command.

REV. ANTHONY DEANE, M.A.

FRIENDS AND FELLOW-

LABOURERS OF ST. PAUL. By the Rev.
ANTHONY C. DEANE, M.A. Cloth, 1s. 6d.

Outline Sketches of the Lives of Gamaliel,
Apollos, Philemon, Timothy, Priscilla and Aquila.

AT THE MASTER'S SIDE. Studies in Discipleship. Cloth, 1s. 6d.

PROFESSOR MASTERMAN.

WAS JESUS CHRIST DIVINE? An

Inquiry into the Credibility of the Incarnation.
By the Rev. J. HOWARD B. MASTERMAN,
M.A., Professor of History in the University of Birmingham. Cloth, 1s. 3d. net. [Second Edition.]

"A masterly handling of the subject.... eminently lucid and clear."—Western Morning News.

"I BELIEVE IN THE HOLY GHOST."

A Study of the Doctrine of the Holy Spirit in the Light of Modern Thought. Cloth, 2s.

CANON LESTER.

THE DESTINY OF MAN; or, the Principles of Spiritual Life in Christ. By the Rev. J. H. LESTER, M.A., Prebendary and Canon

Non-Residentiary of Lichfield. Cloth, 3s. net.

"Lucid, reasonable, and well written."
Pall Mall Gazette.

REV. CYRIL HEPHER, M.A.

THE SELF-REVELATION OF JESUS.

By the Rev. CYRIL HEPHER, M.A., Vicar of St.
John's, Newcastle-on-Tyne. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

"These addresses are dogmatic, but not obtrusively so; the main object being to show that our Lord's declarations and invitations are of practical worth to-day. We have found it a most helpful little book."—Church Times.

THE REVELATION OF LOVE. Cloth,
2s. 6d.

REV. E. A. WELCH, M.A.

THE LORE OF THE MASTER. Addresses on the Teaching of Our Lord. By the Rev.

E. A. WELCH, M.A., Rector of St. James's
Cathedral, Toronto. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

WELLS GARDNER, DARTON & CO., LTD.,
3, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C.

CHAPMAN & HALL'S NEW & FORTHCOMING BOOKS.

BRIGHTON:

Its History, its Follies, and its Fashions.

By LEWIS MELVILLE, Author of 'The First Gentleman in Europe,' &c.
Profusely illustrated. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net. [Early in March.]

This is a book dealing with the history of Brighton on its social side, and full of stories of the romances, adventures, quarrels, duels, &c., which have taken place in that City since the time when it became fashionable under the Georges. It will be extremely entertaining.

SAMUEL PEPYS:

Administrator, Observer, Gossip.

By E. HALLAM MOORHOUSE.

With many Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net. [Now ready.]

Although every one knows Pepys's Diary, there is no extant life of him which, while it is gathered from that Diary, shall aim at giving a bright and lively picture of the man himself, and also an account of the more serious work he did for the Admiralty. The Author has had access to rare Admiralty papers, and much unpublished material will appear.

MEMORIALS OF ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL.

By ARCHDEACON SINCLAIR.

With many Illustrations in Black and White and Silverpoint, by LOUIS WEIRTER. Demy 8vo, 16s. net. [In April.]

This is an authoritative history of the Cathedral from the earliest days to the present by the Archdeacon of London, and it will aim at giving a popular and at the same time an accurate account of the Cathedral's history. The pictures are a special feature, being of unusual beauty.

THE LOST LAND OF KING ARTHUR.

By J. CUMING WALTERS.

With many Illustrations. Pott 8vo, 3s. 6d. net. [In March.]

This charming little book is something between an historical work and a guide book, dealing with all those parts of England identified with the romance of King Arthur, and saying definitely what legends are associated with what places.

FRESCO PAINTING: Its Art and Technique.

With special reference to the Buono and Spirit Fresco methods.

By JAMES WARD, Author of 'Colour Harmony and Contrast,' 'Historic Ornament,' 'Progressive Design,' &c.

With 4 Plates in Colour and 31 Half-Tone Illustrations of Italian and other Fresco Paintings. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net. [Ready.]

In his new work, Mr. Ward has endeavoured to place before students some practical hints on the methods and processes of Fresco Painting, which are the outcome of his experience in the practice of the "Buono-Fresco" and the "Spirit-Fresco" systems of wall decoration. The book is handsomely produced and will be found invaluable to students, artists, and critics alike.

CHAPTERS OF MY LIFE: an Autobiography.

By SAMUEL WADDINGTON.

Large crown 8vo, 7s. 6d. net. [In April.]

Mr. Waddington is well known among all lovers of literature as a poet of rare distinction, and a biographer and critic of keen sympathy and judgment. His literary life and his experience as an official in the Board of Trade have brought him into contact with many of the most interesting men of his day, so that his reminiscences abound in striking personal touches and bright, humane revelations of attractive personalities. Original letters are quoted from Gladstone, Longfellow, Walter Pater, and many other well-known people. The whole narrative abounds in interest and variety.

THE TOWER OF LONDON:

Fortress, Prison, Palace.

By CHARLES E. HARPER.

Illustrated by the Author and from Photographs by W. S. CAMPBELL.
Crown 8vo, 6s. net. [In April.]

In this book Mr. Harper deals alike with the architecture and the living history of the Tower of London and of the prisoners whose blood was shed upon its green or hill. It is not too much to say that the intimate history of the Tower is, in fact, the history of England, and it will be found that Mr. Harper relates the story in a fascinating and interesting manner.

INSURRECTIONARY INDIA.

By DOUGLAS STORY. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. net. [In the press.]

Mr. Story has just returned from a long visit to India, where he has been in private conference with most of the principal governors of districts. His book will express the official view with regard to the present dangers of a recurrence of the Mutiny. It will be full of new material of a highly up-to-date order.

RICHARD MANSFIELD: his Life and Art.

By PAUL WILSTACH.

Profusely illustrated with Portraits in Character and with Photogravure Frontispiece. Demy 8vo, 16s. net. [Now ready.]

This is the authoritative life of the well-known American actor, and is not only a summary of his career, but a most interesting account of his private life and friendship.

AN ACTOR'S STORY.

By BRANSBY WILLIAMS.

With Portraits and Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 6s. [In April.]

This is the story of the professional life of one of the most popular music-hall performers of to-day. It abounds in anecdotes of the struggle by which a young actor makes his way, and tells many interesting stories of notable actors of the time. As the "Dickens Actor" Mr. Williams is well known, both in this country and America, and the story of how he became such is narrated in a most entertaining manner.

NEW NOVELS AT ALL LIBRARIES.

THE COMPACT:

A Story of an Unrecorded Conspiracy in South Africa.

By RIDGWELL CULLUM,

Author of 'The Watchers of the Plains.' [March 5.]

THE CITY OF BEAUTIFUL NONSENSE.

By E. TEMPLE THURSTON, Author of 'Sally Bishop.' [March 19.]

MAGNIFICAT.

By VINCENT BROWN, Author of 'Fashionable Christians.' [Now ready.]

SANDFORD OF MERTON.

By DESMOND COKE.

Entirely New Edition, Re-written, and Incorporated with 'Sandford of the Smart Set.'

Paper covers, 1s. net. [Now ready.]

The Two Novels which are being talked about in literary circles at the present time are

ARNOLD BENNETT'S

DESMOND COKE'S

THE OLD WIVES' TALE

AND

THE GOLDEN KEY.

FOURTH EDITION.

SECOND EDITION.

Ask your Librarian for them.

London: CHAPMAN & HALL, LTD., 11, Henrietta Street, W.C.

MACMILLAN'S NEW BOOKS.

Psyche's Task :

A Discourse Concerning the Influence of Superstition on the Growth of Institutions.

By Prof. J. G. FRAZER, D.C.L. LL.D. Litt.D. 8vo, 2s. 6d. net. [Tuesday.]

The book is "an attempt to sort out the seeds of good from the heap of evil which we call superstition, just as Psyche was given the task of sorting out the different kinds of seeds." The subjects dealt with are Government, Private Property, Marriage, and Respect for Human Life.

Social Life at Rome in the Age of Cicero.

By W. WARDE FOWLER, M.A., Author of 'The Roman Festivals of the Period of the Republic,' &c. With Map and Plans. 8vo, 10s. net.

The Ancient Greek Historians

(Harvard Lectures). By J. B. BURY, Litt.D. LL.D., Regius Professor of Modern History in the University of Cambridge. 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

The Characters of Theophrastus.

An English Translation from a Revised Text, with Introduction and Notes by R. C. JEBB, M.A., Fellow and Assistant-Tutor of Trinity College, Cambridge, and Public Orator of the University, 1870. A New Edition. Edited by J. E. SANDYS, Litt.D. 8vo, 7s. 6d. net. [Classical Library.]

The Acropolis of Athens.

By MARTIN L. D'OOGHE, Professor of Greek in the University of Michigan. Fully illustrated. 8vo, 17s. net.

Jimbo. A Fantasy.

By ALGERNON BLACKWOOD, Author of 'John Silence,' &c. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

Daily Chronicle.—"Jimbo" is a delicious book, and one that should be read by all who long at times to escape from this working-day world into the region of haunting and half-remembered things."

The Poor Law Report of 1909.

A Summary Explaining the Defects of the Present System, and the Principal Recommendations of the Commission so far as relates to England and Wales. By HELEN BOSANQUET. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

SECOND IMPRESSION NOW READY.

One Immortality. A Novel.

By H. FIELDING HALL, Author of 'The Soul of a People,' &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.

SEVENTH EDITION JUST PUBLISHED.

A Popular Handbook to the National Gallery.

Vol. I. FOREIGN SCHOOLS.

Compiled by EDWARD T. COOK. With Preface by JOHN RUSKIN, LL.D. Crown 8vo, leather, 10s. net.

In this new edition of Mr. Cook's well-known Handbook, not only have all recent acquisitions been included, but the Text has been carefully revised throughout.

The Fulness of Christ.

Three Sermons preached before the University of Oxford, and other Papers. By EDWARD STUART TALBOT, D.D. and LL.D. (Cantab.), Bishop of Southwark. Globe 8vo, 1s. 6d. net.

The Religion of the Common Man.

By Sir HENRY WRIXON, K.C. Crown 8vo, 3s. net.

The Other-World.

By W. GARRETT HORDER. Crown 8vo, 3s. net.

The Venture of Rational Faith.

By MARGARET BENSON. Extra crown 8vo, 6s. net.

MACMILLAN & CO., LTD., London.

Messrs. Longmans & Co.'s LIST.

THE POOR LAW COMMISSION.

THE MINORITY REPORT.

THE BREAK-UP OF THE POOR LAW.

BEING

PART I. OF THE MINORITY REPORT OF THE POOR LAW COMMISSION.

Edited, with Introduction,

By SIDNEY and BEATRICE WEBB.

8vo, pp. xx and 604, 7s. 6d. net.

[Inland postage 6d.]

The volume concludes with a Scheme of Reform of novel and far-reaching character, which is elaborately worked out in detail, involving the abolition of the workhouse and the complete disappearance of the Poor Law.

THE PUBLIC ORGANIZATION OF THE LABOUR MARKET.

BEING

PART II. OF THE MINORITY REPORT OF THE POOR LAW COMMISSION.

Edited, with Introduction,

By SIDNEY and BEATRICE WEBB.

8vo, pp. xvi and 348, 5s. net.

[Inland postage 4d.]

The final chapter on Proposals for Reform gives, in elaborate detail, the Minority's plan for solving the whole problem of Unemployment.

Unemployment : a Problem of Industry.

By W. H. BEVERIDGE, formerly Sub-Warden of Toynbee Hall. 8vo, 7s. 6d. net. [Inland postage 4d.]

"Mr. Beveridge may be congratulated on having produced what is, so far, the book on the most urgent question of the day. It is certainly one which no Member of Parliament or local administrator or social reformer can afford to leave unread."—Morning Post.

Ecclesia Discens: the Church Lesson from the Age.

By the Rev. JAMES H. F. PEILE, M.A., Vicar of All Saints', Ennismore Gardens, S.W. Author of 'The Reproach of the Gospel.' Crown 8vo, 5s. net. [Inland postage 4d.]

Sir George Mackenzie, King's Advocate, of Rosehaugh: His Life and Times, 1636(?)–1691.

By ANDREW LANG. With 4 Illustrations. 8vo, 15s. net. [Inland postage 5d.]

"Mr. Lang's brilliant pages are full of suggestive passages, his story is alive with old echoes of forgotten beliefs and 'impossible loyalties.' With admirable judgment, he contrives to present a picture of the entire age through which Mackenzie moves, resolute and arduous, like some determined minister of fate."—Daily Telegraph.

The Scottish Staple at Veere: a Study in the Economic History of Scotland.

By the late JOHN DAVIDSON, M.A. D.Phil. (Edin.), and ALEXANDER GRAY, M.A. With 13 Illustrations. 8vo, 12s. 6d. net. [Inland postage 4d.]

"We hope we have said enough to commend this book not only to the student of economic history, but to the general reader. It will appeal equally to both classes."—Aberdeen Free Press.

Ireland under the Stuarts and during the Interregnum.

By RICHARD BAGWELL, M.A., Author of 'Ireland under the Tudors.' In 3 vols. Vols. I. and II.: 1603–1660. With 2 Maps. 8vo, 28s. net. [Inland postage 6d.]

NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF 'MISS BADSWORTH, M.F.H.'

Polly Winford.

By EYRE HUSSEY. Crown 8vo, 6s. [Inland postage 4d.]

"English fox-hunting has an imaginative literature, as it has a pictorial art of its own; and this clever, readable, and high-spirited novel is true to its best traditions."—Scotsman.

LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.
39, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON, E.C.

MESSRS. CONSTABLE'S BOOKS.

A NOTABLE WAGNER VOLUME.

PERSONAL RECOLLECTIONS OF

WAGNER. By ANGELO NEUMANN. With 4 Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

"Extraordinarily interesting as a revelation of the composer's personality."—Daily Mail.

THE VALLEY OF SHADOWS. By

FRANCIS GRIERSON, Author of 'Modern Mysticism' and 'The Celtic Temperament.' Extra crown 8vo, 6s. net. [Next week.]

This volume is a new departure in autobiography, and deals with the days before the Civil War when the people were preparing to elect Abraham Lincoln and a new era was dawning for America. The book has all the interest and movement of a fascinating and realistic romance.

THE MAKING OF CANADA, 1763–1814.

By A. C. BRADLEY, Author of 'The Fight with France for North America,' 'Canada in the Twentieth Century,' &c. With Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

"Among the years of Canada's making none reckon for so much as those of the vivid and evolutionary half-century of which Mr. Bradley gives so stimulating an account in these bright and invigorating chapters."—Daily Telegraph.

AENEAS SILVIUS (Enea Silvio de Piccolomini Pius II.), Orator, Man of Letters, Statesman, and Pope. By WILLIAM BOULTING. Illustrated. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

"A welcome attempt by a writer of taste and judgment to supply an English biography of the great mediæval scholar (1405–1454), whose papacy is memorable for his efforts to form an armed confederation of Christian princes to resist the Turk."—Times.

IN THE DAYS OF THE COUNCILS :

a Sketch of the Life and Times of Baldassare Cossa (afterwards Pope John the Twenty-Third). By EUSTACE J. KITTS. Illustrated. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

"It is most interesting reading, and throws a clear light on an obscure and confused period of European history."—Aberdeen Free Press.

AN HISTORICAL INTRODUCTION TO

THE MARPRELATE TRACTS. By WILLIAM PIERCE. Illustrated. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

"An able, learned, and exhaustive investigation, from the Nonconformist point of view, of the origin, bearing, contents, and authorship of the famous Martin Marprelate Tracts called forth by the condition of the Church under Elizabeth, and designed to show the unscriptural character of Episcopacy."—Times.

NEW BOOKS BY BERNARD SHAW.

THE DOCTOR'S DILEMMA AND GETTING MARRIED. 1 vol. 6s. With Two Prefaces.

JOHN BULL'S OTHER ISLAND. In Four Acts. Paper, 1s. 6d. net; cloth, 2s. net.

MAJOR BARBARA. In Three Acts. Paper, 1s. 6d. net; cloth, 2s. net.

THE ADMIRABLE BASHVILLE AND HOW HE LIED TO HER HUSBAND. Paper, 1s. 6d. net; cloth, 2s. net.

FORTHCOMING NOVELS.

FRANKFORT MOORE.

Priscilla and Charybdis.

ALICE BROWN.

The Story of Thyrsa.

W. E. NORRIS.

The Perjurer.

LOUISE CLOSSER HALE.

The Actress.

VINCENTE IBANEZ.

The Shadow of the Cathedral.

R. W. CHAMBERS.

The King in Yellow. [New Edition.]

10 ORANGE STREET LONDON 'The LEICESTER SQUARE Country Home

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 27, 1909.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE
QUEEN ANNE AND HER COURT	247
ANDREW LANG ON JOAN OF ARC	248
THE STUDY OF COMPARATIVE RELIGION	248
THE MINSTRELSY OF ISIS	249
NEW NOVELS (The Gifted Family; Idolatry; The Greater Love; Julian Revelstone; Stranleigh's Millions; The Silent Ones)	250
THEOLOGICAL LITERATURE	250
OUR LIBRARY TABLE (The Workmen's Compensation Act; Debrett's House of Commons; The Oxford Thomson; Leland's Itinerary; Concordance to Gray's Poems; Sir Leslie Stephen's Hours in a Library; Further Experiences of an Irish R.M.; The Library of Living Thought; George Borrow; The Newspaper Gazetteer)	253-255
PARIS NOTES; 'HISTORY OF ENGLISH JOURNALISM'; THE BRITISH MUSEUM READING-ROOM	255-256
LIST OF NEW BOOKS	256
LITERARY GOSSIP	257
SCIENCE—MARETT ON THE THRESHOLD OF RELIGION; ANTHROPOLOGICAL NOTES; SOCIETIES; MEETINGS NEXT WEEK; GOSSIP	259-261
FINE ARTS—THE NEW CROWE AND CAVALCASELLE; 'FAIR WOMEN' AT THE NEW GALLERY; EXCAVATIONS IN EGYPT; THE BRITISH SCHOOL AT ROME; THE BRITISH SCHOOL AT ATHENS; NEW VAN DYCKS AT THE NATIONAL GALLERY; SALE; GOSSIP; EXHIBITIONS	262-266
MUSIC—MR. BEECHAM'S CONCERT; MR. HENSCHEL'S RECITAL; GOSSIP; PERFORMANCES NEXT WEEK	266-267
DRAMA—SHE STOOPS TO CONQUER; THE HIGH BID; 'THE FROGS' AT OXFORD	267-268
INDEX TO ADVERTISERS	268

LITERATURE

Queen Anne and her Court. By P. F. W. Ryan. 2 vols. (Hutchinson & Co.)

MR. RYAN'S plan, independently of its execution, is promising. He does not offer a consecutive narrative; indeed, we are sometimes jerked backwards or forwards through space in a most disturbing fashion. He selects certain incidents or aspects of Anne's life and Court, and groups around each of these what in his opinion will afford a lively conception of the general atmosphere as well as the particular persons concerned. Such a scheme, efficiently carried out, might have resulted in a very interesting book; and even as matters stand an uninformed reader may acquire from Mr. Ryan's rhapsodies and riotous imaginations a certain interest which may lead him later to value the sober work of responsible writers.

Unfortunately Mr. Ryan's mistakes are numerous. They begin on p. 3, where we are told that previous to the Restoration James "had fought on land and sea, and, as soldier and sailor, had covered himself with glory." The italics are our own. Mr. Ryan has probably been misled by James's title of "Lord High Admiral"; as a matter of fact, he was never at sea at all, except when crossing in a small yacht from France to Jersey. Mr. Ryan next informs us that James was married to Anne Hyde at Breda in 1659, and again at the Restoration, "this time with Anglican rites"—what were the rites, we wonder, on the first occasion?—and that "James it was who was knight enough to do her justice." Of course there was but one marriage. James was "contracted" to Anne at Breda on November 24th, 1659, at the time when he seduced her; married her because he could not do otherwise, and then behaved like a cur. To say that James was almost old enough to be the grandfather of Mary of Modena at their marriage is an odd way of stating that one was forty and the other more than fifteen. William III., besides being a "beneficent Dutchman," an "astute Dutchman," a "fragile Dutchman" who "could always take an additional dram of the fiery liquor of his native land" when his spirits needed raising, was, we learn, also a "model Lutheran," a member of "a gloomy and austere sect." Now William was not a Dutchman, neither was he a Lutheran; moreover, he was exceedingly abstemious, and probably knew no more than we do what the fiery liquor of his native land was. Danby is described as having been, before his elevation, an "obscure lawyer"—two mistakes in two words. The clouds were not dispersing in 1656; Charles II. did not forget Huddleston, or any of those who helped him in his escape; Jack Churchill never saw columns of infantry with fixed bayonets when he was a boy, nor, indeed, until after 1671; Mulgrave was not sent to Tangiers on account of his flirtation with Anne, but two years earlier. "Conde," "Père la Chase," "Wilmott," and "the Margrave of Bareith" are examples of carelessness.

It is in his treatment of Anne herself that Mr. Ryan rises to the height of the grotesque and absurd. The "death of her childhood's innocence" occurred at nine years of age, when she took part in a Court masque, at which she and her sister Mary—a matron of twelve—could be seen "pricking their ears to catch every fine point scored by the 'ladies railing with the gallants.'" A few years later, and, in spite of the death of her innocence, she is "flawless and sinless, because she is all flaws and sins—little flaws that are only foibles, and innocent little sins that every Elizabeth, and Teresa, and Agnes of them all might have sinned." It was about this time, too, that she was "a winning young barbarian" and "an untamed nymph," with feet and arms which were "classics of symmetry" worthy of a Praxiteles. Mr. Ryan admits "petulant lips and an uncertain chin"; but, on the other hand, "when Anne spoke, the syllables were music welling forth melodiously from a magic flute"; and when they did not well, they thrilled or vibrated. Anne was even "worthy of Arthurian ideals, courageous as a lioness with her ladies, but timid and gentle as a fawn with the gallant whose shadow she could have kissed." But the darker side is noted too. Mr. Ryan insists upon Anne's duplicity.

We must give one or two instances of his extraordinary way of writing. The following refers to James's second marriage:—

"One day a little bird flew into the old manor house at Richmond and there whispered something that set the ears of the Princesses of York tingling and their pulses throbbing with novel doubts and apprehensions: the word that the little bird whispered was 'Stepmother.'"

Here is Mr. Ryan's way of expressing the truism that something had happened earlier than 1688:—

"Fate, the master-smith, who on the hunting-green, to the music of the laughter of dames and gallants, had long ago fashioned the bonds that made James the slave of the Churchills, had not as yet sought the red forge of tragedy, gaping through Cimmerian night, where the King's crown was to be welded into a coronet of affliction," &c. Little birds which whisper "stepmother" and red forges which gape are sufficient indications of the scope of Mr. Ryan's fancy.

This, again, is how James appeared when annoyed by his servants:—

"I will be obeyed," thundered the Stuart, his dark brow menacing as the cliffs of his native Scotland when the purple clouds bring the sky down to the rim of the island, and cast angry shadows far out over the oily black of the waters."

The first meeting of Churchill and Sarah Jennings is thus described:—

"When these two looked full upon each other—both handsome, both audacious, he a giant in intellect, she a giantess in spirit—it was as when the lightning courses through the air, and one wonders if it is the gods at play or the gods at war."

"A fine young thing that! Pity she's as poor as a Church mouse!" doubtless thought Jack, unbending, perchance, so far as to smile upon a person who, in his opinion, was of as little moment as a palace kitten.

"Conceited coxcomb!" thought Sarah. "But, lord, what a face! What a figure! The eye! The waist!...the devil!" and Sarah could have slapped the colonel's face that he was not at her feet."

We have felt bound to draw attention to irritating defects in Mr. Ryan's treatment of a great theme. But it would be wrong to conclude that his work is without merit. Mr. Ryan has evidently studied his period with zest; he knows a good many things of minor importance which most other people do not know; and occasionally he gives us a paragraph, or a page, or even a whole chapter, which can be read with sympathy and profit. One or two episodes, such as the marriage of Abigail Hill, are amusingly described.

Here is an effective passage, effective because—in contrast to nine-tenths of the rest—it is simple and reverent:—

"As the autumn advanced, Prince George grew gradually worse, and all England knew that the end of a union, fruitful only in sorrow and disappointment, was at hand. A visit to Bath had seemingly benefited the doomed Prince. A change for the better was, however, but transitory, and in the rural solitude of Kensington Palace the Queen's consort lay down to die."

"No sweeter days in the life of Anne are there than these during which she was less the Sovereign of Britain than the wife of the man she loved devotedly. For more than twenty years he had been her faithful companion, her simple, trusting friend, rather than her lord and counsellor. His highest wisdom was the law of self-preservation. To hold what they held was the boldest flight of his daring. England was doing right well when he was permitted to get on with his carpentry without distraction. Such natures, when marred by no repulsive traits, excite in woman a special tenderness, and to Anne her big helpless George was ever but a baby, on whom was lavished all that maternal affection in which no child was left to share."

Had Mr. Ryan written consistently, or frequently, like this, there would have been some satisfaction in reviewing his book, which is well printed, and plentifully supplied with portraits.

The Maid of France. By Andrew Lang. (Longmans & Co.)

WE have seen at last the beatification—so often proposed, so long deferred—of Jeanne d'Arc; and it is interesting to observe that the theory of "clerical inspiration" lately put forward to account for her mission found no support in the pleadings and counter-pleadings which preceded her recent promotion. Indeed, as Mr. Lang is careful to note, Jeanne's concealment of her visions and revelations from her spiritual director was made a strong point against her by the advocatus diaboli in 1903. We cannot wonder at the frank joy with which our author records this fact, so gratifying from his point of view.

It must not be inferred from the foregoing remark that Mr. Lang's volume is purely controversial. It is a counterblast to the challenge sounding through the pages of the 'Vie de Jeanne d'Arc'; it is also something more—and better—than this. Apart from the criticism and the polemics, the book is good to read; and since Mr. Lang has consigned his controversial notes to the end of the volume, he who pleases may read the work as simple biography, though he can hardly fail to be impressed by the biographer's frequent hints of disagreement with a particular historian, not invariably named.

In drawing the character of his heroine Mr. Lang has an easier task than had the great Frenchman with whom he wages war, for he is content to abide by existing evidence; he constructs no subtle theories that go behind and ignore evidence, and where the mystical element in his story presents itself he does not try to explain it away. His Tennysonian attitude of "I cannot understand; I love," may be "unscientific"; at least it preserves him from the danger of rearing hypotheses starting from no historical foundation, and creating in the ordinary reader a mood of uneasy suspicion, though for minds trained in a certain school of psycho-physiology they are full of charm. We have seen in how indeterminate a likeness an attempt to reconcile such hypotheses with fact may result, even when it is conducted by an Anatole France. The lines of Mr. Lang's portrait are at least clear; and they are in harmony with our actual knowledge. Jeanne's recorded answers under examination at her trial; the penetration which detected the folly of the French coquettings and negotiations with Burgundy; the self-judgment which inspired the denial of her supposed power to work miracles, are as little consonant with the figure of the saint-simpleton to which, at times, Anatole France's pencil inclines, as is the splendid honesty of the refusal to give parole in captivity with his suggestions of feigned ecstasies. The documents present Jeanne neither as a visionary—in the ordinary sense—nor an ascetic; still less as the dream-haunted, terror-ridden creature of Dr. Dumas's imagination. Common sense and courage were, if we may trust the consensus of testimony, the dominant notes in her personality. Only once did the latter quality fail her—in the hour of abjuration in the square of St. Ouen; and, that moment of human weakness over, with what perfection of renewed courage did she confess her past fear!

Mr. Lang has a good deal to say on certain inaccuracies of quotation and reference which he has detected in the work of Anatole France; but it is not here that the strength of his contention lies. That a writer should, in the course of a voluminous work, have drawn an unauthorized inference from a date misplaced, or accepted a piece of slipshod translation unverified from the hands of a collaborator, need not, necessarily, affect our attitude towards his main conclusion, unless it can at the same time be shown that theories are dearer to him than facts, and that he is content to dismiss the latter, where they threaten to prove inconvenient, with some such remark as "Miracles do not happen." Mr. Lang claims to have established the more serious charge against Anatole France, and on the whole he makes good his claim. But in his desire to worst his adversary he sometimes presses a point dangerously far. On the question, for instance, of the purpose which brought the Laval to the Dauphin's Court, Guy de Laval's letter to his mother may serve as evidence for one side or the other.

The book contains, as a book of Mr. Lang's might be expected to do, many "curious facts" which bring the age of the Hundred Years' War nearer to our own. The newsletters of the fifteenth century, it seems, were no less mendacious in their early accounts of battles than the halfpenny journals of the twentieth. When Mr. Lang concludes that Fastolf's force at Pathay consisted mainly of "Picards and other foreigners," he is probably right; but it is strange that he does not seem aware that this conclusion, reached by him on p. 165, solves the difficulty which he raises, a few pages earlier, concerning the absence from records in England of large levies by Fastolf for this force. The summary of the trial in 1531 is admirable; that part of it which includes the questions on the sign given to the King should be read together with the discussion of Jeanne's "allegory" (Mr. Lang accepts Quicherat's interpretation of the angel and the crown) in Appendix C.

A good deal has been written during the last few weeks concerning the tardy "reparation" made by the Church of Rome to the memory of the Saint burnt by her five centuries ago. The insinuation is incorrect in fact and theology:

the Church was never at any time responsible for burning Jeanne d'Arc, whose appeal to the Pope, if made, was disallowed by a tribunal the ecclesiastical competence of which to try her case is more than doubtful. By its recent action the Church may, however, be said to have formally repudiated Cauchon and all his works, to the satisfaction of many good Catholics. To Englishmen, who are painfully aware that Warwick and his following were eager stimulators of Cauchon's servile zeal on their behalf, Mr. Lang's book will be welcome as a chivalrous effort to atone for the national share in the Maid's tragedy. He has given us the Life, "complete and critical," hitherto lacking in this country.

An Introduction to the Study of Comparative Religion. By Frank B. Jevons. (Macmillan & Co.)

MR. JEVONS'S lectures were delivered at Hartford Theological Seminary; the lectureship itself was founded in memory of the late Dr. Lamson, President of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions. The purpose is "to prepare students for the foreign missionary field, by giving them information about the faiths, rites, and customs of the peoples among whom they expect to labour." The young evangelists are likely to learn more, if they take the trouble, from their flocks about their beliefs than any one who has stayed at home can teach them. Mr. Jevons observed that the historical science of religion "is concerned with the chronological order, and not with the religious value of the facts," and he proposed to begin "from the lowest forms," though these, he added, were not necessarily the earliest forms. Man may have begun "the search for God" with higher and purer ideas of what he was searching for than several sets of inquirers are apt to suppose. Even if it were so, even if the earliest traceable form of religion were the belief in an "All Father,"

"it is a misconception of the function of the science of religion to imagine that it does, or can, prove anything as to the truth of religion, one way or the other."

This misconception, we fear, is not generally admitted to be an error. We can have no historical knowledge, in any case, about the earliest germs and forms of religious belief. If we find very backward peoples with no trace of the search after the Deity, we do find traces of it among their nearest neighbours; and among the former tribes the search may have been abandoned.

In his second lecture Mr. Jevons criticized the usual theory as to the origin of a belief in a future life. If suggested by dreams of the dead, and phantasms of the same beheld by waking eyes, by clairvoyance, telepathy, and other psychical experiences, the idea of continued consciousness after death is also suggested by the desire for it. Desire always influences belief, whether we wish to continue to be, or whether we prefer to cease. Among many of the lower races there is no belief in the inevitability of death: death entered the world by mischance: nobody is supposed to die a natural death, but all are believed to be killed by black magic. People who have risen from a cataleptic state bring back stories of the other world which they have visited; people who are dying (as Mr. Fison reports from Fiji) see their departed friends beside them. Man has been constrained to believe in a future life of some sort, and there is an immense variety of myths as to its nature.

"In this belief in the communion of spirits, wherever he may find it—and where will he not?—the missionary may obtain a leverage for his work."

As to magic, Mr. Jevons argues reasonably that neither science nor religion can be derived from magic: religion is social, while what people of the lower culture regard as magic is maleficent and anti-social. A good deal of the old white magic in Europe lay in the degradation of a prayer into a spell, as we see in many of the charms which witches were burnt for using, as Mr. Tylor remarks. "The prayer," says Mr. Jevons, "does not become a charm until the religion has disappeared entirely from it." It may be that the words of forgotten meaning which the Kaitish sing at the rites for making grass grow were originally prayers, as Mr. Jevons suggests; but this we cannot think probable, for the Australians are the reverse of a prayerful people. In one passage, referring to Australians who do mummeries to the evening star, Mr. Jevons speaks as if totems were originally "chosen" by the kindreds who use them; but this is highly improbable. He thinks that the ceremonial eating of a totem by his human kin, among the Arunta, arose when there was a belief in a god for each totem-kin, with whom his people entered into communion. We suspect that the ceremony means, and meant, no more than this. The kin, in the central and northern tribes, claim property in their edible totems. They declare, by eating a little of the grub, say, that the season for grubs is opened by them to the rest of the tribe. They also think that "unless a man did eat a little he would not be able properly to perform the ceremony of Intichiuma," say Messrs. Spencer and Gillen. Where tribes, in the south-east, have "a God, or something very like one," they have none of these so-called sacramental totemic rites; and where these rites exist, the traces of an "All Father" are very faint. The All Father has nothing to do with one totem-kin more than with another, as the very words "All Father" denote. In fact, totemism has next to no connexion with religion in Australia, where totemism is most normal: its religious associations, in more advanced societies, are parasitic.

The subject of the relations between morality and religion is much too large to be discussed in this place. Almost universally, man, as known to us, has both religion and morality, and they support each other. Where there is no religion (a very rare case), the tribal conscience keeps man up to the mark; and we do not know that the non-religious Arunta is either a better or a worse fellow than the religious Euahlayi.

Mr. Jevons, we surmise, is wrong when he thinks that, in the case of intratoticemic incest, the community expects to suffer for the sin of the individuals, that sin being an offence against "superior powers." It is true that tribes with an All Father regard the marriage rules as of his institution, but where is the proof that he is supposed to punish the tribe for the sin of the individuals? We know no such evidence. The fact appears to be that offences against marriage rules originally broke up the peace of the small exogamous group, and led to jealousy and fighting in what was little more than a family circle. We know but one sin punished, among the Australians, by the offended "superior powers," and that is the sin of showing a bull-roarer, or divulging the mysteries, to a woman. We know that a very religious man may be as bad as Gilles de Retz is said to have been, while a perfectly irreligious man may be as virtuous as any philosopher you please. Whether the race in general can be moral without religion is a question only to be settled by experiment. Meanwhile Mr. Jevons's work, though necessarily sketchy, is full of interest, and admirable in tone and expression.

The Minstrelsy of Isis: Poems relating to Oxford. Selected by J. B. Firth. (Chapman & Hall.)

MR. FIRTH has had an excellent idea, and has carried it out in a manner that leaves little to cavil at. To compile an anthology of poems relating to Oxford and Oxford life was indeed an idea so excellent that it seems incredible that it has never been attempted before. Can it be that those to whom the idea has occurred have discarded it because, though an intolerable deal of verse has been written about Oxford, most of it is remarkably bad?

From the time when Dr. Johnson described Pembroke as a "nest of singing-birds," and when Nick Amherst, in his satirical way, declared that "in Oxford crowds of stupid bards are found," down to the middle of the nineteenth century, Oxford produced verse-writers in good store, but not one of them wrote in her praise a line worthy to be remembered. Landor, Shelley, William Morris, and Mr. Swinburne found no inspiration in the haunting loveliness of the City of weathered cloister and worn court,

Grey city of strong towers and clustering spires.

In the long period between the great names of Chaucer and Wordsworth, nothing, except a few lines by George Wither and a few epigrams, is recorded here worth preserving. The sixteenth and seventeenth centuries yielded little but ecstatic commendation such as the "Oxford is Heaven, if Heaven on earth there be," of Sir John Davies. In the eighteenth century "O Alma Mater, Syntax cried"; and the same feeling, differently—and indifferently—expressed, filled many a bosom with the same "fires and genial flow" as inspired that worthy Doctor in search of the picturesque. The Tickells and Wartons and Shenstones and their tribe produced verses in abundance, and of their abundance "Oxford, all hail, delightful seat," may fairly be called typical. It seemed as if Oxford would be obliged to go to Cambridge for poets to praise her, as well as for martyrs to burn. Then at last the music and the love-born words of Matthew Arnold broke upon enchanted ears. Up till that moment the best minstrelsy of Isis had been, in truth, the musical prose of her most devoted son, Anthony Wood.

Since that time, from undergraduate to Vice-Chancellor, Oxford's sons have followed the example of the author of 'The Scholar-Gipsy,' and have been loud in her praise, and often poetical. We miss, indeed, the true Swinburnian pæan of praise, and are reminded of our longing by two fine sonnets by Mr. Theodore Watts-Dunton, dedicated to that poet. These enshrine the memory of Jowett rather than deal with the character of Oxford. We wonder for a moment almost indignantly at the absence of some perfect quatrain by Walter Savage Landor, until we remember history. But in Mr. Robert Bridges, Mr. Laurence Binyon (who contributes a charming lyric), and others, the filial example of Matthew Arnold begins to be worthily followed. Of her younger sons, however, by far the most happy and accomplished are Lionel Johnson and Mr. Quiller-Couch. The former, in a finely chosen metre, wrote with a rare historic sense of the city where

At the coign of every antique street
A memory hath taken root in stone:
There Raleigh shone; there toiled Franciscan feet;
There Johnson flinched not, but endured alone.
There Shelley dreamed his white Platonic dreams;
There classic Landor thrived on Roman thought;
There Addison pursued his quiet themes;
There smiled Erasmus, and there Colet taught; whilst Mr. Quiller-Couch has happily expressed the haunting, baffling charm of the Sphinx-like old University town:—

Know you her secret none can utter,
Her of the book, the tripled crown?
Still on the spire the pigeons flutter,
Still by the gateway flits the gown;
Still in the street from corbel and gutter
Faces of stone look down.

The late Mr. A. G. Butler had a felicitous moment when he thought of applying the metre of Tennyson's delightful travel-poem, 'The Daisy,' to

The ghost-like city, steeple studded,
Slumbering grey in a mist of green.

It is curious that the same poet could allow the Tennysonian trochaic measure, lightened by that one lilting dactyl, so skilfully introduced, to degenerate a few lines lower down, into such a non-descript dactylic jig as

Pillar and pediment, dome and gable,
Mellowed by time to a picture sweet.

This is a "very false gallop" of verse.

Do Oxford fogs, one wonders, tend to dull the ears of her poets? Mr. Fanshawe, who is much quoted here, makes such ugly collocations as "mystic skirts" and "spirit's streams."

We notice that Mr. Firth fights shy of naming the author of that popular catch 'The Bonny Christ Church Bells,' as well as that of the famous epigram concerning the sending of a troop of horse to Oxford and books to Cambridge. The latter is now, we think, generally attributed to Dr. Trapp, the first Professor of Poetry. Dean Aldrich wrote the music of the catch referred to; who was the author of the words, if not he?

The section of light verse and jeux d'esprit is so inadequate and unrepresentative that we think the editor would have been better advised to omit it altogether. We note that the sixteenth-century author of some feeble Latin verses figures as both Parkhurst and Pankhurst, and is made to invoke "Oxonium" (p. 52). A list of authors, in the absence of an Index, would have been of service. The book is illustrated by some reproductions of water-colours and old engravings of Oxford scenes which add considerably to its attractiveness.

NEW NOVELS.

The Gifted Family. By Barry Pain. (Methuen & Co.)

MR. PAIN treats his readers to a sort of crescendo of prosperity. The interest of his novel centres in a suburban stationer's shop, whence one daughter gravitates to the stage and later, following the example of her sisters, to matrimony, while the son, after learning that he is not an artist of genius, earns a substantial salary as a specialist in photo-engraving. The mispronunciations and foppiness of the shopkeeping classes furnish some mild fun, but the general tone of the writing is genial and sympathetic. The heroine is the only one of the stationer's family who is exempt from the doom of shining as a minor artistic star. She is at once tenderly and brilliantly imagined, though one regrets the slight and inadequate handling of the episode in which, but for the rather too timely decease of a mad wife, she might have forfeited Mrs. Grundy's esteem.

Idolatry. By Alice Perrin. (Chatto & Windus.)

As Christian missionaries in the East have been the subject of a good deal of satire in recent fiction, Mrs. Perrin's thoughtful presentation, in her latest novel, of two admirable missionary types will doubtless be appreciated. Her heroine is a fashionable and selfish young lady who goes to India to stay with her mother and stepfather (a missionary) as a preliminary to marrying an Army officer, whose accession to a fortune has rendered him desirable in her eyes. She falls in love, however, with a tactful, erudite, and self-denying missionary, with the result that she is radically changed, and, in making two great sacrifices, appears for a time to condemn herself to a life of loneliness. The sketch given of her stepfather's domestic and official life is masterly. The glimpses of native life and points of view are interesting, and there is a vivacious portrait of a shamelessly spoilt European child.

The Greater Love. By Anna McClure Sholl. (Fisher Unwin.)

THE woman with a past is a tolerably familiar figure in modern fiction, but she is here presented to us under conditions which, for English readers, have a certain degree of freshness. Returning, after a long residence in the artistic world of Paris, to the quiet American town where her childhood was spent, she receives at first the cordial welcome naturally accorded to a wealthy and charming widow. But one day her secret is, through the indiscretion of a relative, betrayed, and she is treated with a harshness which takes no account of extenuating circumstances, and seems in accordance with New England traditions. Her daughter, on whom the ban likewise falls, takes sides against her, and the conclusion does not promise unalloyed happiness for any of the persons concerned. Apart from its setting the book is not of particular interest, and throws no new light on its theme.

Julian Revelstone. By Justin McCarthy. (Chatto & Windus.)

AFTER a long silence Mr. McCarthy once more reappears as novelist, and merits the welcome due to his past performances. This tale reveals again in him the well-spring of sweet-blooded simplicity which was wont to characterize his early work; and 'Julian Revelstone' is even more full of faith and kindness and belief in human nature. Its open-heartedness is almost naive; and it may be claimed as an ideal love-story. A young American millionaire, disguised as his own secretary, wins the heart of an aristocratic English girl, and, despite the opposition of her family, marries her; and so the fairy tale proceeds to its happy close. Characterization was never Mr. McCarthy's strong point, but pleasant narrative always was.

Stranleigh's Millions. By Robert Barr. (Eveleigh Nash.)

STRANLEIGH'S millions were mainly the result of colossal operations on the Stock Exchange, but Stranleigh himself was a peer of the realm who with his mastery of up-to-date business methods combined aristocratic and feudal traditions of the most approved order. Regardless of expense, he championed the interests of his tenants and employees; financed, on a scale hitherto undreamt of, the inventions of impoverished genius; and, like Haroun al-Raschid, distributed benefits in the disguise of a fisherman. He was even a succourer of distressed damsels, and always to the ultimate advantage of some other man; for though every virtue and every grace were his, he had not that success with women which his complex personality, in our opinion, deserved. It is a pleasant story written with fluency.

The Silent Ones. By Mary Gaunt and J. Ridgewell Essex. (Werner Laurie.)

THE opening scenes of this striking story, which describe the return of an educated West African to his native country after a distinguished career at Cambridge, promise a powerful treatment of the black and white problem. "My learning has parted me from my own people, and has not placed me among yours," says Dr. Craven to a company of Europeans, and his mental and social isolation is finely suggested. Unfortunately, the promise of the story is not fulfilled. It soon resolves itself into a tale of adventure, which is excellent of its kind—exciting, full of atmosphere, picturesque, and attractively told. But it is not the best kind of story the authors have it in their power to write. They have a sense of character, insight, and sympathy which should enable them to write the book they led us to expect—one in which, in the person of a brave, sensitive, high-minded African such as Dr. Craven, civilization and savagery might meet in less melodramatic fashion.

THEOLOGICAL LITERATURE.

A Commentary on the Holy Bible. By Various Writers. Edited by the Rev. J. R. Dummelow. (Macmillan & Co.)—This volume is likely to prove very useful to teachers and others who wish, without much expenditure of time, to arrive at the meaning of difficult texts, to appreciate the general sense of a passage, and also to find a way to reconcile modern critical views with orthodox belief. The desire for correctness of understanding will, as a rule, be fully satisfied by the comments, and the general articles at the beginning of the work will be found as acceptable as the commentary itself. Within the compass of a hundred and fifty-three pages are here treated, in a clear and simple style, such topics as 'The Creation Story and Science,' 'Genesis and the Babylonian Inscriptions,' 'The Laws of Hammurabi,' 'The Messianic Hope,' 'The Life of Jesus Christ,' 'The Synoptic Problem,' 'The Trinity,' 'Miracle,' 'Inspiration,' and 'Bible Chronology.' The first of the articles is a 'General Introduction to the Bible,' and there are besides brief separate introductions to the Biblical books inserted before each respective commentary. Due attention has been paid to the claims of the two principal English versions. The Authorized Version, as being still in general use, has been chosen as the basis of the commentaries, "but pains have been taken to indicate the innumerable passages where the Revised Version leads to a better understanding of the original." The maps at the end of the volume enhance its value as a guide to the intelligent appreciation of the Bible in all its parts.

Among the contributors to the commentary on the Old Testament or topics connected with it are Prof. Kennett, Prof. Kent, Prof. Robinson of Chicago, and Col. Conder. The names of writers who have rendered similar service in connexion with the New Testament include those of Principal Adeney, Prof. Findlay, the Rev. F. Palmer (Rector of Andover, Mass.), and Dr. Plummer. For the names of many other distinguished scholars we must refer the reader to the volume itself.

Neither the preliminary articles nor the different parts of the commentary are, however, signed. In a work of this kind the adoption of such a plan has its merits. The reader is thereby impressed with a sense of unity rather than of diversity in the treatment of the different portions; and as a matter of fact both the commentary and the preliminary articles appear to be pervaded by the same general spirit of orthodox belief united with a proper appreciation of critical problems. Such a result is, of course, due to the careful way in which the editor and his assistants have done their part.

The Johannine Writings. By Paul W. Schmiedel. Translated by Maurice A. Canney. (A. & C. Black.)—Prof. Schmiedel, after an examination of the external evidence, cannot place the origin of the Fourth Gospel much earlier than the year 140, and cannot, from any evidence, assign the authorship to John the Apostle or John the Elder. The First Epistle of John was not written, he concludes, by the author of the Fourth Gospel; and the Second and Third Epistles probably preceded the First and also the Gospel. The Apocalypse he takes as a composite writing, of which the most important sections belong to the period 68–70. The compiler, he asserts, was not the author of the Gospel and was not the Apostle John; but he suggests that he was some person writing in the name of John the Elder. These results are most definite in a negative fashion, but they are reached with little or no attention to the arguments in favour of the Apostle as the author. In one of the sections, for example, which he names 'Mistakes as to the Condition of Things in Palestine,' he refers to the statement, and to it alone, that Caiaphas was "high priest that year," and argues that the writer assumed that the office changed hands every year. The fact that the high priest held office for life, he says, "would have been as well known to a contemporary of Jesus in Palestine as the fact that the office of emperor is hereditary is to a German of to-day." It is possible to explain the statement regarding Caiaphas without a charge against the writer of the Gospel of ignorance of Jewish customs; and, in any case, it is to be observed that Prof. Schmiedel takes no notice of such passages as John x. 22, 23, when trying to prove that the writer was not a Jew of the time of Christ Himself. In his anxiety to disprove the Johannine authorship Prof. Schmiedel contrasts the Apostle as presented in the Acts of the Apostles with the actual writer of the Gospel. "The whole view of the world," he says,

"familiar as it is with the ideas of the greatest Greek thinkers, and the boldness with which, following the example of Gnosticism, all that is traditional is swept away—all this, which we have found in the Gospel, suits no one so little as this man who had remained stationary and simply persisted in holding the standpoint of the Old Testament."

In another place he says that the writer of the Gospel

"was familiar with the best that the Greek mind and the religions of the whole world known to the people of those days had produced."

The Greek style of the Gospel does not suggest to us that the author was familiar with the ideas of the greatest Greek thinkers; and, indeed, it may be asserted that in the two extracts just quoted Prof. Schmiedel greatly exaggerates the familiarity with Greek thought, for the purpose of intensifying the contrast between the Apostle John in the Acts and the writer of the Gospel. A critic of another school could insist that, in spite of the influence of the Alexandrian philosophy on the Gospel, the writing shows most clearly a use of the Synoptic tradition, and that the author's knowledge of that tradition is much more apparent than his familiarity with the best that the Greek mind had produced. Throughout the whole book Prof. Schmiedel deals with arguments which may be adduced against the Johannine authorship of the Gospel, the three Epistles, and the Apocalypse; but there is the critical defect—and it is a grave one—that he pays little heed to the evidence, such as it is, that the Apostle was the writer.

The Gospel according to St. John. By the late Bishop Westcott. 2 vols. (John Murray.)—The basis of this work is a part of a volume by Westcott of 'The Speaker's Commentary,' but there are important changes in this second edition, as it may be called, of the book. The Greek text of the Gospel is given, and is that of Westcott and Hort. Instead of the Authorized, the Revised Version is used for the English text. Then, again, several chapters have been almost wholly, and others partially, re-annotated. The additional and the revised notes together form the new part of Westcott's work, since neither the Greek nor the English text is now published for the first time. A valuable Introduction which appeared in 'The Speaker's Commentary' is reproduced. The editor, who is the late Bishop's son, tells us that the revised commentary was compiled in the period 1883–1887; and it may be pointed out that since that time New Testament scholarship has offered many suggestions, if it has not made substantial additions to our knowledge. Nothing regarding these suggestions, often given as assertions, can be found in these volumes, and for that very reason some may regard the book as belated. There is a note, to take an example, on "The Son of Man," which is important in itself, but which does not, and cannot, consider the discussions of recent years on that term. A reference in the note, though not conspicuously lucid, indicates the Bishop's high conception of the Catholic Church. "It may well be admitted," he says, "that the early disciples did not at first apprehend all that the later history of the race enables us to see in the title. Perhaps it may have been from some sense of the mysterious meaning of the term, which had not yet been illuminated by the light of a Catholic Church, that they shrank themselves from using it."

A list of the additional notes in each volume is given by the editor; and these are few, though they furnish almost the only warrant for the republication of Westcott's work. Among the subjects treated are 'The Person and Work of the Baptist,' 'The Choice of Judas,' 'Jewish Rules for the Conduct of Trials,' 'St. John's Reckoning of Hours,' and 'Interpretations of the Number 153.' The Introduction, though written many years ago, is of great value, as it gives the best that can be said in favour of the Johannine authorship of the Gospel, and what can be said is not to be despised by any scholar.

The Problem of Theism, and other Essays. By A. C. Pigou. (Macmillan & Co.)—The new Professor of Political Economy at Cambridge gives us in seven essays some results of his thinking on philosophical subjects, and though addressed to the general reader as the result, not of the author's main work, but of a "bye-occupation," they deserve and will receive careful attention at the hands of professional students of philosophy and theology. "The spirit of the whole book is tentative, and the conclusions reached provisional," says the Preface; and this statement is so completely borne out by the essays themselves that we fear "the general reader" will not carry much away in the form of positive conclusions, even when he has derived full advantage from the careful and always interesting style in which the book is written. The first essay deals summarily with the metaphysical question of the general nature of reality, and on this—the most difficult of all discussions, and one not easily mastered by "the general reader," as Prof. Pigou sees—there is a more positive line taken than in the other essays. "Critical realism," as it is called—the view, namely, that the percipient perceives some things as they are in themselves, but other things differently—is left master of the field. "Space and time belong to independent reality, and the independent content of that envelope is not identical with the world of appearance." As to the nature of this "independent content," all that can be said is that the answer of "spiritism" is possibly right. "Nobody can prove that the independent reality does not consist exclusively of spirits, that corpuscles, for example, are not spiritual beings"; whereas the answer of materialism no longer needs refutation. This is, as we have said, the theory which is left "master of the field"—the author's own expression; but it is plainly weak to arrive at such a conclusion by a process of elimination. Without arguing the age-long controversy here, it may be noted that a theory such as this can only be of service when carefully worked out in a constructive way, the rather that "critical realism" is of all forms of metaphysic the most angular, the most exposed, and the most difficult. It is not, of course, a fair reply that a "bye-occupation" cannot be prolonged indefinitely; the point is that the substance of this essay lies really in the short negative criticisms of certain other theories, and that we are not taken to such a point in the argument that "critical realism" means more, or seems more satisfactory, than it did before.

The second essay, 'The Problem of Theism,' is a discussion of the well-known "argument from design," and proceeds chiefly by means of the "logic of chance" or "doctrine of probabilities," supplemented by a discussion of the principles on which the manifold facts of "religious experience" ought to be dealt with in answering the question whether there exists a "powerful spiritual Being who wills the good." Such facts, Prof. Pigou suggests, "may even now, on the whole, point with a doubtful and trembling hand" towards the validity of this conception.

The remaining essays—on 'Freewill,' 'The Good,' 'The Ethics of the Gospels,' 'The Ethics of Nietzsche,' and 'The Optimism of Browning and Meredith'—are uniformly clear and interesting; but there is a certain scrappiness about the first two of these, which, however, only makes one wish that the author may continue the excellent tradition, not yet wholly broken down, according to which the economist knows something about "the Good" and the philosopher is not wholly ignorant of the laws of wealth.

The Catholic Church: the Renaissance and Protestantism. By Alfred Baudrillart. With Prefatory Letter from H.E. Cardinal Perraud. Translated by Mrs. Philip Gibbs. (Kegan Paul & Co.)—This is an extremely interesting and instructive volume from a fair-minded and erudite Ultramontane, who feels, as he says, that he can serve God efficiently without lying. It presents that relation of the Reformation and the Renaissance which is gradually becoming familiar to English readers, through Miss Christie's translation of Janssen. Of Luther the author has much to say that is valuable; the more so that he escapes entirely the pitfalls into which Donifé was led by his controversial zeal. We have, indeed, rarely found a juster and more discriminating account of the great religious genius of the sixteenth century. The whole standpoint of the book is, of course, opposed to the self-complacent view of conventional writing which treats the last four centuries as so much inevitable progress from darkness to light. The translation is fairly good; but the use of proper names is misleading, and there are far too many misprints. Very often a proper name like Servetus is given only in its French form, which is unfamiliar to the English reader; Mecklenburg hardly ever appears rightly; and Goyau and Goyan on the same leaf ought to be impossible.

Some Aspects of Rabbinic Theology. By S. Schechter. (A. & C. Black.)—Prof. Schechter's new publication, consisting partly of essays previously published, shows with what an amount of enthusiasm Rabbinic theology is even now capable of inspiring some of its more talented and thoughtful adherents. Inherited religious instinct, intensified by a lifelong devotion to Rabbinical studies, no doubt lies at the base of such enthusiasm; but the need of an apologia for the attitude publicly assumed by the author must have helped to develop many of the thoughts and sentiments to which literary expression is given in the present volume. Living in an atmosphere largely pervaded by habits of thought derived in part from the New Testament and in part from the negative theories of modern criticism, a writer of Prof. Schechter's temperament cannot but feel the necessity of defending his position; the more so as the advancing tide of modernism has made inroads into Judaism itself, which are in proportion as extensive as those noticeable in different Churches of Christendom.

Several of the essays were originally written with the avowed object of disproving the conclusions arrived at in such works as Schürer's 'Geschichte des jüdischen Volkes im Zeitalter Jesu Christi' and Weber's 'System der altsynagogalen Palästinischen Theologie,' though the polemical purpose by which the work is dominated is almost throughout implied rather than fully expressed. The main question concerns the advantages or disadvantages of Rabbinic legalism, and the four central chapters are accordingly devoted to a consideration of the "Law" in one or other of its aspects. Among the other topics dealt with are 'God and the World,' 'God and Israel,' 'Election and Israel,' 'The Kingdom of God,' and 'Forgiveness and Reconciliation with God.' It is not our purpose in this place to enter upon a discussion of the theological problems themselves, but the controversy about the merits or demerits of Talmudical and later legalism brings to one's mind the illustration used in Herbert Spencer's 'First Principles' of "that perennially significant fable concerning the knights who fought about the colour of a shield of which neither looked at more than one side." Prof. Schechter looks at Jewish legalism from within, noting only the vivid appeal which it is still capable of making to large numbers of devotees; whilst writers like Schürer and Weber examine its uninviting external aspect, and are apparently not disposed to regard it as a living thing.

One of the weaknesses of Prof. Schechter's method consists in its lack of historical perspective. He has not considered it necessary "to provide the quotations given from the Talmud and the Midrash with the date of their authors, assuming that as long as there is no evidence that they are in contradiction to some older or even contemporary opinion they may be regarded as expressive of the general opinion of the Synagogue."

There is no doubt considerable justification for this view of the Talmud and the Midrash as a fairly uniform whole; but it would, from the reader's point of view, have been much better if the essential unity of Rabbinic teaching on important points had been clearly demonstrated by the "dicta" of authorities chronologically displayed. The writer would in this way have guarded himself against the suspicion that he may in one respect or another have been carried away by his own warmhearted advocacy of the entire Rabbinic scheme of life. That the Rabbis frequently differ from one another is a well-known fact. The question is only to what extent they do so, and in how far their differences concern points of doctrine that may be regarded as essential to the view of Judaism held by Prof. Schechter's school of thought; and it is therefore clear that a stricter method in the co-ordination and classification of authorities might prove a considerable help towards the elucidation of several interesting problems.

It is only fair to remark that Prof. Schechter himself warns his readers not to expect "either finality or completeness" from the work. It was, indeed, partly for this reason that he chose the title 'Some Aspects of Rabbinic Theology.' Whether, however, he is right or not in thinking "that any attempt at an orderly and complete system of Rabbinic theology is an impossible task" is a different question. To many it will seem that the Rabbinic materials are now ample, and that, apart from the aid afforded by Philo and Josephus, much may also be gained from a critical study of those parts of the New Testament which indirectly reflect the Rabbinic thought of the time. In the introductory chapter Prof. Schechter seems to strain every nerve in order to minimize the value of the extant documents as a satisfactory basis of investigation; but most critical writers would have made it their task first of all to show the amount of positive value that can be assigned to the evidence, and they would then in each instance have indicated the limitations under which the inquiry lies. Prof. Schechter, however, has not only failed to treat the positive value of the documents on which he relies, but he may also fairly be charged with over-stating the negative side of the evidence.

The volume is for the most part written in Prof. Schechter's characteristic style, which betokens quickness of perception, liveliness of imagination, and a tendency to paradox.

The Hebrew Prophets for English Readers. Edited by F. H. Woods and F. E. Powell. Vol. I. (Oxford, Clarendon Press.)—The Preface begins by saying that "this edition of the Prophets is intended for the reader rather than the student," and it may be stated at once that the plan adopted is good and serviceable. The Revised Version, which has rightly been chosen by the editors, is printed in poetical form, an obelus being placed against those marginal readings which are considered "to be distinctly preferable to the text." There are, besides a useful General Introduction, chapters prefixed to each collection of prophecies; and the value of the work is increased by the explanatory notes, the chronological and lectionary tables, and the glossary of words "the meaning of which has been modified or changed." We must remark, however, that in looking through parts of the text we often found the headings a disturbing element rather than otherwise. What need is there, for example, of a heading before the passage in Isaiah i. beginning "Ah sinful nation"? Do not the burning words of the prophet fully indicate the burden of the utterance? In putting in "a plea for the teaching of the Prophets in our public schools," the editors state that they do not wish Isaiah "explained with reference to the context" in examination papers; but they add that they would like "to see our children taught, as many children in the schools of Germany are now being taught, to feel something of the charm and beauty of what is unquestionably part of the best literature which we possess."

The present volume contains Amos, Hosea, Isaiah (i.-xxxix.), and Micah.

Elevation in the Eucharist. By T. W. Drury, D.D. (Cambridge, University Press.)—The Bishop of Sodor and Man is well known as one of the widest-minded and most scholarly of Evangelical leaders. This little book will certainly not diminish his reputation. It is an investigation, admirably conceived and executed, of the whole record of ceremonies known as "elevation." Dr. Drury has made his researches singularly complete, and includes the Eastern as well as the Western Churches in his view. What is made clear by this book is the great variety of times of elevation in the Eucharistic services, and their varying meaning. So far as we can judge, Dr. Drury fully makes out his case that elevation immediately after the consecration mainly grew up in the thirteenth century, as the definite consequence of the doctrine of Transubstantiation and its inculcation by the Lateran Council. The attempt, therefore, of certain members of the "extreme" party to represent this ceremony as in any way necessary does not seem altogether unexceptionable, in view of the late date of its introduction, while it is clearly significant of that one form of Eucharistic doctrine which the Church of England has deliberately and emphatically rejected. From an outstanding leader of the Low Church School the following sentences will be welcomed as evidence that parties in the Church are less divided than the rank and file are apt to imagine:—

"We have seen how the history of this particular elevation becomes obscured in the twelfth and thirteenth centuries by the necessity of dealing with it in relation to the newly adopted elevation after consecration. The call for some such distinction will appeal to most devout and reverent minds. Even dangerous suggestions must not lead us to ignore the distinction altogether. After consecration the Bread and Wine have a relation to the Body and Blood of our Lord, which did not exist before that act was completed. The gifts presented at the offertory are separated to some sacred use, but it is the consecrated Bread and Wine that are in such sense the Body and the Blood, that 'we receiving them' are partakers of that holy food. The dignity and honour of our Lord are brought into closest relation to them, and they are holy things for holy men."

This is a fair specimen of the sane and balanced judgment which the writer shows throughout. Altogether, in days of heated controversy, when the wildest things are said on both sides, the appearance of a book like this is welcome and refreshing. We trust that the cares of the episcopal bench will not entirely deprive learning of further works from Dr. Drury.

Jesus: Seven Questions. By J. Warschauer. (Clarke & Co.)—Among the seven questions are these: Was He sinless? Had He power to forgive sins? Did He rise from the dead? Did He die for us? The answers will not satisfy traditional orthodoxy, though the author's prayer is that they may serve to show that when modern criticism and thought have obtained a full hearing, the essential verities, "the Divinity of our Lord, the Incarnation of God in Him, and the Atonement of God and man through Him," remain more firmly established than ever. The prayer reveals the attitude of the writer to Christianity, but none the less his representations of the verities are hardly in harmony with the Creeds, whatever the truth in these representations may be. There is a wide gulf between the personality of Christ in the Nicene Creed and the personality set forth in the statement that the assurance that "God is Love could be bestowed upon us only through the complete revelation of God's character on a finite scale, that is to say, through His indwelling in an unparalleled degree in a unique and ethically perfect Being."

The incarnation in Christ, as thus represented, differs in degree, but not in kind, from that in every person who manifests love, and the writer, in another passage, states that there is only one kind of Divinity, "one Divine Spirit pervading and transcending the universe, the same above all, and through all, and in all." While every thinker admits the unity of the Divine Spirit, there remains the problem regarding the personality of Christ. Is it different in kind from that of a man, as the Creeds represent, or is it essentially the same, as Dr. Warschauer implies? Dr. Warschauer not only sets aside the Creeds in some of his expositions, but in others he also opposes the writers of the Gospels, or at least offers explanations which they would have rejected. In dealing, for instance, with Christ's power to forgive sins, he does not attempt to show that He had any legal or judicial authority, but simply asserts that as He knew the Father's mind unerringly and knew men, He could announce the Divine pardon to those prepared for it. To announce the Divine pardon is not to forgive sins. In reference to the phenomena of the Resurrection Dr. Warschauer inclines "to the view that the appearances were objective," and this admission is probably the nearest approach to orthodoxy which he makes in his book. In the chapter on the Resurrection there is also the statement, very far removed from the tradition of the primitive Church, "that of all the incidents related, those which lay the greatest stress upon the material aspect of the Resurrection are the least credible." In the answer to the question, "Did He die for us?" we have an illustration of Dr. Warschauer's treatment of the doctrine of the Atonement—one of the essential verities which he enumerates. The Saviour suffered in our stead, we are told, not "as bearing the punishment which we had incurred, but by making it possible for us to live righteously, so as not to incur the reward of wrongdoing." Dr. Warschauer, as his book everywhere shows, thinks reverently, and displays no truculence as a critic of traditional beliefs, and no bitterness against the holders of these beliefs. The questions he asks are of supreme importance, and his answers are valuable studies in religion; but they will not help to establish the doctrines of the Creeds, between which and the essential verities, as he conceives them, there is a fundamental difference.

OUR LIBRARY TABLE.

MR. FISHER UNWIN publishes The Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, a careful view of the law and cases by Mr. V. R. Aronson. The author in his Preface suggests that a compulsory system of insurance against liabilities would be an improvement in our law and practice, and gives reasons for that opinion. Inquiry by a Royal Commission is about to take place. Mr. Aronson tells us that some of the Irish cases "decide points not yet dealt with in England." Unfortunately, there are different decisions of the same points in Labour laws by Scottish, Irish, and English Courts; so that the word "decide" must be taken with reservation. Like all lawyers writing upon statutes, he regrets difficulties of interpretation, and attributes them to bad drafting. Drafting has never been perfect, and has admittedly failed to improve. But the difficulties of the subject are so great that excuse may be offered even for Governments in a time of haste. The best example of obscurity of language in connexion with Workmen's Compensation is to be found in the law as it affects the sub-contractor. The fact is that, in any given case, every man of business knows who is the responsible employer on whom the burden of compensation ought to fall; but when it is attempted to express, in terms of general application, an intention that shall be clear on all occasions, the ramifications of sub-contracting—for example, in the building trade—are found to be so complex that knots are cut. Thus the ingenuity of the Courts receives a new field of labour, remunerative to the lawyers. The public rather than the Bar is entitled to complain; but remedy is not easy. "The objectionable word 'undertaker,'" put in at the last moment by the House of Lords, was knocked out of the original Act by the present law of 1906, but compensation in sub-contract is not made simple by the change.

New difficulties have been created by section 8 of the Act of 1906, introducing the principle of compensation for industrial disease. Mr. Aronson is mistaken in believing that it is "a Royal Commission appointed for the purpose" which adds from time to time to the list of diseases in the schedule; but he is right in his explanation of the difficulties which continue to face the Departmental Committee upon the subject. They are illustrated by a scheme of compensation for saturnine poisoning which preceded the Act itself, and in some respects continues to differ from it. It is not named by Mr. Aronson. It lies so near the subject of his book that those interested in his chapter upon 'Compensation for Disease' should master the rules adopted for the Potteries, when the Potters' Insurance Company was formed, on the advice of Lord James of Hereford. By law, a workman to receive compensation must have "contracted the disease." In the case of industrial poisons the worker is often prevented from working because of the existence in him of a condition which is not health, but, on the other hand, not, for certain, actual and definite disease of the nature contemplated. Mr. Aronson discusses the position of those who "had such a disease" at a moment earlier than attention was officially directed to their case. But it is as impossible to decide with certainty whether or not a worker "has" the special "disease" named in the law as to decide with certainty whether an eccentric individual is mad or sane. For the workman "precautionary suspension" is as hard as "disease." No two experts draw exactly the same line between "suspicion" and "disease." "The blue line" on the gums, known outside this country as "Burton's line," is but a "valuable indication," and certainty can only be attained by long and costly examination—uninvited by workmen, as by employer.

The diagnosis of "occupational phthisis" is as difficult as that of "lead-poisoning."

No reviewer can peruse a book of reference. All we can do in the case of Debrett's House of Commons and the Judicial Bench for 1909 (Dean & Son) is to note that some who have had occasion to consult the previous edition, and have marked suspected errors for us, do not now find mistakes. The volume being thus pronounced normal, we add that it is as suitable to the table or the reference shelf as is 'Dod' to the bag or the Parliamentary pocket. The modern compulsory modesty of fashion diminishes the politicians and judges who supply "armorial bearings" to the pages of 'Debrett,' but boroughs and counties fill the gap.

THE "Oxford Edition" of The Complete Poetical Works of James Thomson, edited by Mr. J. Logie Robertson (Frowde), is a good and careful piece of work. We find a thorough annotation, at the bottom of the pages, of the many alterations in 'The Seasons.' To grasp the true significance of these changes it must be remembered that for descriptive composition Thomson had adopted not only the metre—that was right—but also the style and the diction of 'Paradise Lost.' Now these had been constructed by Milton for his own special purposes; with him style and diction are native and original, and are exquisitely fitted to the lofty ideas and subjects of their creator. With Thomson it is otherwise: he appropriates Milton's highly individualized language and manner—the stiff, stately, verbal and syntactical Latinisms, and all the rest of it—tricking out his thoughts in a splendid, but borrowed garb, not, as he ought, suffering them to shape themselves naturally in his own mind. Hence Thomson is, as Coleridge says, a great rather than a good poet: his thoughts are his own and genuinely inspired, but his style is false and meretricious. If we scrutinize Mr. Robertson's apparatus criticus, we shall find that many of the corrections were designed to remove some glaring Miltonic idiom or mannerism, the incongruity of which in Thomson's page, however well adapted it may have been to the use for which its creator intended it, must be manifest to a refined critical taste. Take that Latinism so frequent in 'Paradise Lost'—the substantival use of the neuter adjective or participle. This Thomson constantly employs in earlier years, but in the collected edition of 1744 it is carefully removed from many places. In 'Summer,' ll. 1106-7, the text from 1727 to 1738 ran:—

[surcharged]
With wrathful vapour, from the damp abrupt
Where sleep the mineral generations, drawn.

In 1744 "damp abrupt" becomes "secret beds." Similarly "the white abrupt" ('Winter,' l. 283) of 1730-38 is altered to "the formless wild" in 1744; and had the success of 'Liberty,' published in 1735-6, been such as to call for a second edition in the author's lifetime, no doubt "the dark abrupt" (Part IV. l. 1171) would likewise have disappeared. So, too, "the vast inane" of 'Summer,' l. 1745, becomes "the dreary void" in ed. 1744. Of the verbal changes generally it may be said that they are almost always an improvement. Unfamiliar and pedantic words are got rid of: thus "gravid" becomes "weighty"; "detruded," "imprisoned"; and "cerule" is excised. "Trickling," however, is a poor exchange for "weeping" ("a weeping thaw"), and "rude" for "chapt" ("the chapt mountain"). Here, probably, Thomson had in mind Cæsar's maxim, "Tanquam scopulum sic vites insolens verbum," as he certainly had when, in 1744, he altered

"eye" ("the still unfrozen eye," 'Winter,' l. 302) to "spring." "Eye" is rare in the sense of "source"; still, it occurs in the Douay version of the Bible ("The eie of Jacob in the land of corne and wine," Deut. xxxiii. 28), and is occasionally found in modern authors. Thomson's longer alterations are not seldom for the worse, involving a loss of raciness and vigour. His conception of the poet's function was lofty, and he endeavoured to use his pen in the service of his country. The advocates of a Two-Power Navy might do worse than reprint 'Britannia' for popular distribution.

There are a few misprints, mostly in the notes. "Soul" for sole appears on p. 143 (text); "wide" for wild, p. 193; "blest" for best, p. 242. And surely the year 1700 is the date not of the "birth" (p. xv) of Dryden, but of his death. We may add that the book is available in an India-paper edition as well as in the ordinary style—an important consideration for those lovers of books who have little room to spare.

Itinerary in or about the Years 1535-43. By John Leland. Edited by Lucy Toulmin Smith. Parts VII. and VIII. (Bell & Sons.)—Our first impression on looking through this volume is that it has been more hurriedly prepared than the previous instalments of the 'Itinerary.' An important error, which would probably be detected by few readers of the book, is corrected by the editor in her Prefatory Note. Others occur in the notes and in the Index, which is far from being complete. The omission of the Welsh names which occur in Appendix II. may be excusable, but several references to English places and families will be searched for in vain. One instance may be given, as it includes two mistakes. The village of "Estrey," near Sandwich in Kent, of which the modern form is Eastry, is mentioned on pp. 53 and 54. In the Index it is entered as "Estree," which Miss Toulmin Smith supposes to be the modern name, and the reference is given as p. 55, where it will not be found. Local names are indexed under their modern names, which are sometimes open to question. It would, we think, be better if they were indexed under the form given by Leland, with the modern name added in a parenthesis, after the manner, to take one book among many, of the Index to Thorpe's 'Diplomatarium.' The village of "Chauburne" in Wiltshire, and the stream called "Chauburne water," for instance, are indexed under "Shalbourne." We also think it would be more convenient if the 'Index of Places and Subjects' were divided under those two separate headings.

Apart from indications of haste, the book has been compiled by the editor with her usual taste and scholarship. It consists partly of a narrative of travel from the 'Itinerary,' and partly of notes from the 'Collectanea,' which were jotted down by Leland in the inconsequent form of a commonplace book. The most important section contains the notes on Kent—Hubert de Burgh's "clavis Angliæ et repagulum"—which the editor has put together from Leland's two collections. These notes are in general extremely brief, but here and there we find observations on local customs which are interesting to the antiquary and student of folk-lore. A rather fuller description than usual is given of "Borow Hilles" in Leicestershire, to which, we are told,

"every yere on Monday after White-Sonday cum people of the contery therabowt, and shote, renne, wrastel, dawnee, and use like other feates of exerceyse."

In Appendix II. are given many notes on

Wales, which might more properly have been included in the previous volume of the 'Itinerary.' These generally consist of long lists of names, but some may be of interest to the palæontologist. We are told, for instance, of a brook called Tresgirth in Carmarthenshire, at the head of which "is an hole on the hill syde where men often entre and walke in spacious rome of a whit sandy smothe soyle undar the foote, and ther men fable that dyvers prints of wormes be sene in the sands, but that none of the vermyn is sene there."

A large portion of the book consists of genealogical notes, of which the most interesting are the histories of the Berkeley and De Vere families. The latter house is said to be descended from a brother of that famous "paladin and peer" Rothuland or Rouland, "that was slaine of the paganes at Runcidevale," the modern Roncevaux. In Appendix III., which consists of a photographic facsimile of a page from the 'Collectanea,' giving a rough map of the Channel Islands, with annotations in Leland's writing, there occurs the following reference in another hand: "Bureho alias Insula rastorum vbi cuniculi multi." The first word Miss Toulmin Smith rather doubtfully interprets as "bur or buron," Normandy patois, a small house or hut; holmes, houlm, Scandinavian, an island"; while for the unintelligible "rastorum" Sir E. Maunde Thompson has suggested that the scribe may have incorrectly copied the word from a document in which the description was really "insula pastorum." Another explanation is that the word is from "rast," the stem of O. Norse röst, a strong current of water, Fr. raz, Eng. race, as in the Race of Alderney.

MESSRS. CONSTABLE send us A Concordance to the English Poems of Gray, edited by A. S. Cook, and published by the Houghton & Mifflin Company of Boston and New York. If there is a point in which we are inclined to regard the great Oxford Dictionary as somewhat backward, it is the use of quotations from standard poets. Such work is made easy by concordances. We have had for some years guides of the sort to the words of Shakespeare, Milton, Cowper, Shelley, and Tennyson (incomplete). Now the Concordance Society, organized at Yale University in 1906, has started publishing its results. Six scholars have excerpted the material for the book before us. All the words for which we have looked are duly noted, and the whole is accurately and clearly printed. The omissions are such as are reasonable, and we fully approve of the abundance of cross-references. Mr. Gosse's edition is followed. The normalization of Gray's varying spelling has been a difficult task, and the methods adopted may not appeal to all English scholars; but this is a trifling matter. The great point is that we have the words of a master of English poetry laid before us with immediate reference to the poem in which they appear. We hope the Society will continue its labours, which are one more sign of the excellent work now being done for English at Yale.

THE reissue of Sir Leslie Stephen's Hours in a Library, 3 vols. (Smith & Elder), in a new and cheaper edition, should attract many lovers of letters. These volumes are full of sound and well-considered criticism, and not the worse, perhaps, for being devoid of rodomontade and wild enthusiasm. The author freely betrays his leaning towards scepticism, but his appreciations are as likely to bear the test of time as those of any recent critic. Careful as his judgments are, Sir Leslie is not impeccable in small points of detail. Thus on re-reading the essay on Balzac we find Dr. Bianchon misspelt, and Scott's grandmother made into an "awful liar."

Further Experiences of an Irish R.M. By E. O. Somerville and Martin Ross. (Longmans & Co.)—It is difficult in a general way to appraise a sequel. The element of surprise is absent. But it is certain that the ladies who are responsible for the Irish R.M. show no diminution of their rare sense of humour in the book before us. We have all or most of the old actors in new combinations, and not a few full-blooded Irish characters that are newly presented. The contrast of farce and tragedy is as marked as ever, though perhaps no one story is so farcical as Flurry Knox's theft of his grandmother's colt, or so tragic as the death of the sentry, in the first series. Flurry is back from South Africa, with strategy unimpaired. Perhaps the chapter called 'The Boat's Share,' typical of the Irish courthouse and the peasant feuds it has to deal with, is the most suggestive in the book. The sporting stories and the illustrations are as excellent as ever.

MESSRS. HARPER begin their "Library of Living Thought" with Three Plays of Shakespeare, by Mr. Swinburne. One of the plays is 'King Lear,' so berated by Tolstoy. The others are 'Othello' and 'King Richard II.' Mr. Swinburne writes in a style of "instructed enthusiasm," as we said the other day, which is very different from the measured prose of Leslie Stephen. His striking insight is that of a poet original as well as greatly learned, so that we are inclined to regret the space occupied, in a small book by denunciations of stupidity and ignorance just enough in themselves. Messrs. Harper in their 'Publishers' Preface' explain the purpose of the series. That is well; but when they proceed to explain the merits of the writers they have secured, and analyze their work, they seem to us to be taking on themselves the critic's business. We must decline to criticize such criticism: we merely remark that publishers, like other people, should let well alone, and might realize that parents are not usually regarded as the best judges of their own offspring.

IN his monograph on George Borrow: the Man and his Work, Mr. R. A. J. Walling (Cassell & Co.) comes before the world with the air of one who has a great deal to impart; but when the book is read, it turns out that he has little. There is nothing novel in the news he brings of Borrow's Celtic bias; and his description of the Cornish tour, including a sketch of the book on Cornwall which Borrow was to have written and never wrote, is perhaps the most laboured section of a biography not too remarkable for lightness of touch: it was, he explains in his Preface, the nucleus about which the complete study grew up. Dr. Knapp's more modest reproduction of Borrow's personal jottings when on tour includes all the important facts, and makes far better reading into the bargain; moreover, since the materials are put before you without any disguise, you are free to pick and choose among them; you have not a conglomeration to deal with, which you must either leave or swallow. Mr. Walling deserves credit for tracing, and incorporating in his work, some hitherto unpublished documents and oral traditions, but he palpably overestimates their relative value. Borrow's day-to-day existence has been recounted once, and so recounted is, it must be confessed, about the same as most men's. Its romance was distilled from it by a master of romance, and a plodding biographer stylistically inclined fares badly after him.

As a critic, Mr. Walling recognizes in an occasional passage the acknowledged qualities of Borrow's mind and hand; but he does little to endow them with any kind of living appeal. He seems to write on one side as an admirer, on the other as an apologist. Neither standpoint is perhaps favourable to the best criticism, and they are not improved in combination. His apologies, too, are often as unhappy as his praise is hackneyed. To say that "Borrow's invaluable bequest is to be disinterred from the numerous pages of five books, dug out from a mass of irrelevance and banality," is to miss one of Borrow's peculiar distinctions—that evenness of manner by which, in spite of trailing sentences, he dignifies the most trivial of his themes. To state that almost every page makes it evident that he wrote with infinite difficulty is to state the contrary of the truth. One may infer that he wrote with difficulty, or had difficulty in bringing himself to write, from the time that elapsed between the announcement and publication of his books; but the books themselves betray nothing but an almost luxurious ease.

WE have received from Messrs. J. W. Vickers & Co. their Newspaper Gazetteer for 1909. This is the tenth annual issue, and the editor is to be congratulated on its usual accuracy. The revision necessitated by the many changes that have taken place during the past year has been carefully carried out. There is a selected list under Colonial, Indian, and Foreign.

PARIS NOTES.

READERS of Kinglake are familiar with his terrible portrait of De Morny, and his references to the financial speculations of that chief actor of the coup d'état. Kinglake in his first volume, dealing with the circumstances that led to the Crimean War, refers to the libel actions of 1853 and the suit brought by shareholders against Mirès and Morny. From Alphonse Daudet came the less accurate picture of Morny in 'Le Nabab,' and from the novelist's brother a more intimate revelation of facts which should not have been revealed by him. The Athenæum has already named the forthcoming publication of M. F. Loliée's 'Frère d'Empereur—de Morny et la Société du Second Empire.' Portions of the book are about to appear in Les Annales Politiques. These deal, it is understood, with the relations of Talleyrand and De Flahaut with Madame de Souza—Flahaut, much quoted by the Duchesse de Dino, being, as is known, Morny's father, and the reputed son of Talleyrand by Madame de Souza. A descent from Louis XV. is suggested for Morny through his grandmother, whose letters about her grandchild figure in a chapter styled 'Les Origines,' and who claimed "le bien-aimé" for her father—perhaps on insufficient grounds.

Kinglake describes Morny sitting at the Ministry of the Interior, which he had usurped at the coup d'état, while Flahaut rode through Paris with Louis Napoleon and King Jerome. The latter as a boy had ridden with his brother, Bonaparte, on the day of Brumaire.

M. Loliée has had access to the secret archives of "La Sureté," or political police: the "dossiers" of that department are seldom flattering. It would seem that Louis Napoleon was at first frightened of the personal ambition of his half-brother Morny. M. Loliée thinks that the confiscation of the Orleans property—"le premier vol de l'aigle"—was but the pretext for Morny's resignation in January, 1852, of which the real cause was the jealousy of the Prince-President. Kinglake, some readers may remember, represents Morny as deciding with Maupas and the boldest of the confederates to lock-up Louis Napoleon in order to prevent his spoiling their coup d'état by his indecision. It is not, we think, probable that Morny desired recognition as a member of the Imperial family, although we now learn that a decree to that effect had been prepared.

Lord Fitzmaurice, a grandson of Flahaut, has revived in his book on Lord Granville our knowledge of the Duc de Morny's special embassy to Russia: Morny's presidency of the Corps Législatif is as well known as the financial use which he made of his position. A grandson of the Duchesse de Dino, and cousin of the first Duchesse de Morny, afterwards Duchesse de Sesto, possesses a curious manuscript (written in English) professing to relate the real circumstances of Morny's death; and this is likely to be published in Le Temps. There are portions of M. Loliée's book which involve the famous founder of Le Figaro, called in his "dossier" "le Sieur Cartier, connu sous le nom de Villemessant," with the note "a publié beaucoup de journaux....qu'il a inspirés plutôt que rédigés, car on affirme que, malgré tout son esprit, il ne sait pas écrire." Villemessant's letters to Morny are given, together with the police reports upon the "antecedents" of the writer. D.

'HISTORY OF ENGLISH JOURNALISM.'

February 22, 1909.

WILL you allow me to reply to a question asked in the course of your last week's review of my book, and at the same time to correct a misapprehension in it?

Your reviewer asks: "What is the importance of the total suppression of the licensed press in its bearing upon the question of how far Cromwell's massacres extended?" He refers, of course, to the suppression which took place directly the news of the taking of Drogheda became known in 1649, and answers his question by saying: "Obviously none, for the synchronism is accidental."

The synchronism was not accidental. Not only have we definite statements to the contrary, but also there is the conclusive evidence that directly Cromwell left Ireland the licensed press was permitted to reappear. I am the first person to point out this suppression, and will recall what Lingard says, having as his object to show that communications passed between Cromwell and the "Council of State" before the news was made public:—

"It would appear from an accidental entry in Whitelock that the letters reached London on the 27th of September; on the 28th Parliament, without any cause assigned in the Journals, was adjourned to October 2nd, and on that day the official account of the massacre was made public."

To correct this: the real fact was that Walker the journalist received a letter announcing the taking of Drogheda, from that unreverend colonel of a foot regiment, Hugh Peters, Cromwell's chaplain; and that it, or (as seems most likely, from its curtness) a part of it, was read in the House of Commons, and printed and published by Walker's printer, Ibbitson, on the 27th. This immensely increases the value of Lingard's criticism, for it is thus clear that the hands of the Council of State were forced by Walker's publication. The news which they had received must have been of so shocking a nature that they did not venture to make it public until they had communicated with Cromwell, and also received his instructions. In the meantime the newsmonger blurted out a portion of the truth. That is why the periodicals were suppressed.

Lingard goes on to say that on the 27th an order was obtained from Parliament approving the execution done at Drogheda.

The news-books then rebelled, obtained a licenser not connected with Cromwell, and let out more of the truth. The further details appearing in The Perfect Diurnall—of the killing of the townsfolk in the church; in The Moderate Intelligencer—of the people leaping over the walls (compare Gardiner's criticism of Wood's account), show plainly why the journalists were prosecuted, and why the Council of State's own secretary took upon himself the office of journalist.

The untruthful modern statement that Cromwell killed only the soldiers, and not the townsfolk, originated with Carlyle; and the scientific development of it has been left to Gardiner. The most damning piece of evidence against Cromwell—the letter in the Verney MSS.—is not set out by him, and its effect is altered by him beyond recognition. Had Gardiner been aware, as clearly he was not, that the news-books were all suppressed, it is probable that the whole tenor of his story would have been considerably modified. I hardly think, however, that he would have taken your reviewer's view.

When I described some duly licensed periodicals, which appeared when Cromwell was "Protector," as "pornographic," I wished that term to be taken literally, and distinctly did not indulge in a violent description of pamphlets which every one would condemn. This enables me to say, without any discourtesy to the reviewer, that his remark that "the Royalist press in the years before the Restoration" hid its purpose "under the cloak of pornography," is utterly wrong. I think he means scurrility—a common fault on both sides—and of scurrilous pamphlets the most conspicuous example is 'Mercurius Britannicus' of 1649, written by Gilbert Mabbott, afterwards Cromwell's licenser of the press. It was not possible to cloak anything under the sheer obscenity of what was authorized by this man in 1653. There never was a press like it before, and to the best of my belief there never has been since. Even Rochester himself wrote nothing worse than the verses to which I have given references.

I add one minor point. A "sheet" was a "book," and I am so far from wishing a distinction to be inferred that I will add, "and nothing else." What we call "broad-sides" and "broadsheets" were called "tables."

J. B. WILLIAMS.

* * 1. Mr. Williams shows the suppression at work before the news of Drogheda arrives. "The Act of Parliament decided upon by the Commons on 22nd May was passed.... 20 September.... The news-books were also affected by it, though they were not its main object" (p. 120). "One measure that the Act did not contemplate was the total suppression of licensed news-books.... the Council of State became censors. The Man in the Moon on 26th September exclaims: This is liberty!.... Who stops the mouth of the Press now?" (P. 121.) "The new Act came into force on the 1st of October, and by the 12th of October, without any special order for the purpose, every one of the news-books had been swept out of existence" (p. 122). An ordinance which is decided May 22nd, passed September 20th, and recognized as stopping the mouth of the Press on September 26th, without any special order for the purpose, cannot have any connexion of design with news received September 27th. We avoid entering on any discussion of the slaughter of Drogheda, or the nature of the feelings with which the news of it was received in England.

2. We did not refer to the literature of 1653, but to that of 1659-60. No doubt the Royalists—with their usual futility—intending to be pornographic, only achieved the lewd or the scurrilous; but the attempt was made, and it covered a political propaganda.

3. Mr. Williams is in error. Broad-sides still extant are described in official correspondence as "books."

THE BRITISH MUSEUM READING-ROOM.

British Museum, W.C., February 23, 1909.

IN order to prevent inconvenience to holders of green, unlimited, reading tickets, I beg to inform you that the statement in the letter of "A Civil Servant," published in your issue of last week, to the effect that "the officials have cancelled the old green tickets," is altogether incorrect.

E. MAUNDE THOMPSON.

YOUR correspondents H. W. B. and J. S. L. (Athen., Feb. 13) studiously misrepresent everything I have said.

1. I object, not to tickets being shown on a regular system, but to surprises being sprung upon us; to an attendant suddenly pretending not to know me, when he had passed me in a few days before without a word.

2. To give a reader a ticket on an ordinary piece of card, and then blame him for not being able to produce it after thirty years (he having never been asked for it in the interim), is ridiculous.

3. The fact that, through obvious mismanagement, a number of unsuitable persons have got access to the Reading-Room, is no excuse for treating men of education and position as if they were part of a drove of cattle. I told the Secretary, in writing, who I was; he knows perfectly well that I have every claim to the use of the Reading-Room; to require me to attend, like a schoolboy, at the office, to prove my title over again, is a procedure at variance both with common courtesy and common sense.

4. I am a taxpayer. The British Museum is supported by national funds, to which I contribute. I am one of the persons occupied in various studies, literary and archaeological, for whose benefit the Reading-Room is kept up with public money. The question is, whether the Director has the right to deprive me of the use of it, except on terms which I consider inconsistent with proper self-respect.

AN EDITOR AND AUTHOR.

It is with amazement that I learn from your correspondent "A Civil Servant" that the old green tickets have been cancelled. My ticket dates back twenty-seven years; and I have always entered the Reading-Room with the air of a man who has acquired the freehold. Surely some official notice to readers should be issued if these tickets are really invalid. I know of no such notice.

G. A. H. S.

ON my "green ticket," issued more than twenty years ago, I find the words: "This ticket must be carefully preserved by the Reader; it must be produced when asked for at the Museum...." The same condition is printed on the back of my Manuscript Room ticket; and my admission ticket to the Bibliothèque Nationale says: "Les cartes....doivent être représentées à toute réquisition."

Should any reader fail to produce his ticket when asked, he is referred to the office for a permit of admission, which is given as a matter of course. As a lover of books I think it very doubtful whether persons so habitually careless as to ignore the conditions of their admission to the Library are "fit and proper persons" within the meaning of the Act which governs the Trustees.

A. 35818.

* * We cannot insert more letters on this subject.

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

ENGLISH.

Theology.

Authorized Version of the English Bible, 1611, 5 vols., 20/ net. Edited by W. Aldis Wright. The volumes can be had separately; Vol. IV. contains the now often neglected Apocrypha.

Bacon (B. W.), The Beginnings of Gospel Story, 10/ net.

Beet (J. A.), The Credentials of the Gospel, 2/6 net. A statement of the reason of the Christian hope, being the nineteenth Fernley Lecture.

Boas (Mrs. F. S.), Heroes of the Hebrew Monarchy, 1/4

Carus (Dr. P.), The Bride of Christ, 3/6 net. "A study in Christian legend lore," with several illustrations.—God, 4/6 net. An inquiry into the nature of man's highest ideal, and a solution of the problem from the standpoint of science.

Edersheim (Rev. Dr.), The Temple, 2/. An account of its ministry and services as they were at the time of Jesus Christ.

Ellis (Percy Ansley), Old Beliefs and Modern Believers, 3/6 net.

Gibson (W. R. B.), God with Us, 3/6 net. A study in religious idealism.

Hawkins (Rev. Sir J. C.), The Use of Dante as an illustrator of Scripture, 1/6

Jordan (W. G.), Biblical Criticism and Modern Thought; or, The Place of the Old Testament in the Life of To-day, 7/6 net.

Living Church Annual and Whittaker's Churchman's Almanac, 2/6 net. A Church Cyclopædia and Almanac.

Lynn (W. T.), Studies in the New Testament, Expository and Practical, 1/6 net.

Ornaments Rubric and Modifications of the Existing Law relating to the Conduct of Divine Service, 1/ net. First Report of Committee.

Peile (J. H. F.), Ecclesia Discens, 5/ net. Sermons and essays on the relation of Christianity to the intellectual and social revolutions of the day.

Richmond (W.), The Creed in the Epistles, 2/6 net. Contains a survey of the Creed of the first age of the Church as exhibited in the early Epistles of St. Paul.

Law.

Crew's Synopsis of Mercantile Law, 3/6 net.

Dodd (W. F.), Modern Constitutions, 2 vols., 21/6 net. A collection of the fundamental laws of twenty-two of the most important countries of the world, with historical and bibliographical notes.

Fletcher (J. D.), The Weights and Measures Acts, 1878-1904, 5/ net.

Jones and Bellot's Law of Children, 10/6 net.

Lightwood's Time Limit of Actions, 25/

Pease and Latter's Law of Contract, 10/6

Yearly County Court Practice, 1909, 25/

Fine Art and Archaeology.

Art Prices Current, 1907-8, 10/6 net. A record of sale prices at Christie's during the season, with an index to artists' and engravers' names.

Brown (E. B.), Ancient Churches round Cirencester, 1060-1547, 6d.

Conwentz (H.), The Care of Natural Monuments, with Special Reference to Great Britain and Germany, 2/6 net. With 10 illustrations.

Davies (N. de G.), The Rock Tombs of El Amarna; Part VI. Tombs of Parennefer, Tutu, and Ay. Part of the Archaeological Survey of Egypt, and contains 44 plates.

Konody (P. G.), Brockwell (M. W.), and Lippmann (F. W.), The National Gallery, Part VIII., 1/ net. With illustrations in colour.

National Antarctic Expedition, 1901-4: Album of Photographs and Sketches, with a Portfolio of Panoramic Views.

Portraits in the Hall of the Parliament House in Edinburgh, 21/ net. With introduction and biographical notes by A. A. Grainger Stewart.

World's Great Pictures, Part I. 7d. net. Fully illustrated, with descriptive notes of famous masterpieces of painting in the public and private collections of Europe.

Poetry and Drama.

Bithell (J.), The Minnesingers: Vol. I. Translations, 5/ net.

Butler (H. E.), Post-Augustan Poetry from Seneca to Juvenal, 8/6 net.

Carruth (W. H.), Each in his Own Tongue, and other Poems, 3/6 net.

Ingleby (Holcombe), Wenceslaus and Sabra, 2/6 net. A poem dealing with man's temptation, sorrow, and love.

Nichols (S. H.), Breath of the World, 6/ net. Poems.

White (H. J.), Homeland and Outland Song and Story.

Music.

Upton (G. P.), The Standard Concert Guide, 5/ net. An illustrated handbook of the standard symphonies, oratorios, cantatas, and symphonic poems, for the concert-goer.

Bibliography.

Black (G. F.), A Gypsy Bibliography, 1909.

Karslake (F.), Book Auction Records, Vol. VI., Part I. Yovanovitch (Voyslav M.), An English Bibliography on the Near Eastern Question, 1481-1906, 1/8. Servian Royal Academy, Second Series of Monuments, Part XLVIII.

Philosophy.

Aristotle, Nicomachean Ethics, Book VI, 6/ net. With essays, notes, and translation by L. H. G. Greenwood.—Rhetoric, 6/ net. A translation left in MS. by Jebb, and edited, with an introduction and supplementary notes by Dr. J. E. Sandys.

Dewey (J.) and Tufts (J. H.), Ethics, 8/6 net.

Empedocles, Fragments, 4/6 net. Translated into English verse by W. Ellery Leonard.

Political Economy.

Bosanquet (H.), The Poor Law Report of 1909, 3/6 net. A summary explaining the defects of the present system and the principal recommendations of the Commission, so far as relates to England and Wales.

Kirkham (S. D.), The Philosophy of Self-Help, 5/

Smith (C. D.), Natural Monopolies, in relation to Social Democracy, 2/6 net.

Webb (Sidney and Beatrice), The Break-up of the Poor Law: being Part 1 of the Minority Report of the Poor Law Commission, 7/6 net.—The Public Organization of the Labour Market, Part 2 of the Minority Report, 5/ net.

History and Biography.

Bleackley (Horace), Ladies Fair and Frail, 12/6 net. Contains sketches of the demi-monde during the eighteenth century, with 16 illustrations.

Bourinot (Sir J. G.), Canada, 5/. Revised Edition, with additional chapter by Edward Porritt.

Calendar of Entries in the Papal Registers relating to Great Britain and Ireland: Papal Letters, Vol. VIII. 1427-47, prepared by J. A. Twemlow.

Dewitt (D. M.), The Assassination of Abraham Lincoln and its Expiation, 9/6 net.

Duthie (Rev. D. W.), A Bishop in the Rough, 7/6 net. An illustrated record of eight adventurous years in the early life of the present Bishop of Norwich.

Fowler (W. Warde), Social Life at Rome in the Age of Cicero, 10/ net. Includes a chapter on topography, plans, and a map.

Maguire (T. Miller), The Franco-German War, July 15 to August 18, 1870: the Operations and the Lessons, 4/ net.

Markham (Sir C.), Life of Admiral Sir Leopold McClintock, K.C.B., 15/ net. With an introductory note by the Archbishop of Armagh, and portraits, maps, and illustrations.

Moorhouse (E. H.), Samuel Pepys, Administrator, Observer, Gossip, 10/6 net. Contains 24 portraits and other illustrations.

Ranke (L. von), History of the Latin and Teutonic Nations, 1494-1514, 6/ net. A revised translation by G. R. Dennis, with an introduction by Edward Armstrong.

Washington (George), Writings, 10/6 net. Edited by L. B. Evans.

Geography and Travel.

Mariti (Giovanni), Travels in the Island of Cyprus, 4/ net. Translated by C. D. Cobham, with contemporary accounts of the sieges of Nicosia and Famagusta.

Education.

Public Schools Year-Book and Preparatory Schools Year-Book, 1909, 3/6 net. Founded by three Public School men—Eton, Harrow, Winchester.

Philology.

Bell (R. H.), The Changing Values of English Speech 1 dol. 25.

English-Arabic Conversation Dictionary, 5/. With a Grammar, a collection of phrases, and an Arabic-English vocabulary.

School-Books.

Baker (C. McCoy) and Inglis (A. J.), High School Course in Latin Composition, 5/. Consists of three parts, arranged for practice in writing Latin during the last three years of school, and, in addition, a summary of the elements of syntax for reference.

Cassell's Elementary Geometry, by W. A. Knight, 2/6.

Evans (A. J.), A Primer of General History: Part III., Modern History, 2/6. With illustrations and tables.

Fudge (J. Hartley), Vivid Pictures from Carlyle's French Revolution, 1/. The original work abridged in a connected historical narrative.

Haynes (A. G.), The Preliminary Geography of the British Isles and India, 1/. With an introduction covering all the requirements of the Oxford Local Preliminary Examination. With 7 maps and diagrams.

Nettell (R.) and Hughes Games (H. G. W.), Exercises in Algebra, with Answers, 5/6; without Answers, 4/6

Pope's Rape of the Lock, 2/. Edited by George Holden.

Scott's Lady of the Lake, 1/. Edited, with introduction, glossary, questions, &c., by C. Linklater Thomson.

Thomas (W. J.) and Doughty (E. P.), The New Latin Delectus, Book II., 2/6. A continuation of Book I. noticed in Athen. of the 6th inst., p. 162.

Unwin (P. W.), Practical Solid Geometry, 4/6

Science.

Badgley (Col. W. F.), Heat, and other Forces, 5/ net. Part I. treats of Heat, Part II. of Physical Forces.

"Between Trent and Ancholme": in and around an Old-Fashioned Garden, 2/6 net.

Böcher (Maxime), An Introduction to the Study of Integral Equations, 2/6 net.

Boole (M. E.), The Message of Psychic Science to the World, 3/6 net.

Brauns (Dr. Reinhard), The Mineral Kingdom, Part I., 2/ net. Translated with additions by L. J. Spencer, and contains 91 plates and 275 text-figures.

Brightwen (Eliza), 5/ net. The life and thoughts of a naturalist, edited by W. H. Chesson, with introduction and epilogue by Edmund Gosse. Illustrated.

Carus (Dr. P.), The Foundations of Mathematics, 3/6 net. A contribution to the philosophy of geometry.

Finn (F.), Wild Beasts of the World, Part X., 1/ net. With coloured illustrations by L. Sargent, C. E. Swan, and W. Austen.

Gibson (R. J. H.), Biology, 1/ net. With numerous illustrations, edited by J. Reynolds Green. One of Dent's Scientific Primers.

Guttmann (Oscar), The Manufacture of Explosives: Twenty Years' Progress, 3/ net. Four Cantor Lectures.

Hulme (F. Edward), Wild Flowers in the Seasons, 3/6 net. Illustrated.

Hutchins (B. L.), The Public Health Agitation, 1833-48, 2/6 net. A course of four lectures delivered at the London School of Economics.

Jüptner (H. V.), Heat Energy and Fuels, 12/6 net.

Keane (C. Alexander), Modern Organic Chemistry, 6/ net.

Kellner (O.), The Scientific Feeding of Animals, 6/ net. An authorized translation by William Goodwin.

Knott (J.), Iron, Metallic and Magnetic, Physical and Philosophical. Reprinted from the New York Medical Journal.

Packhard (F. R.), Textbook of Diseases of the Nose, Throat, and Ear, 15/ net.

Parsons (S. J.), Malleable Cast Iron, 8/ net.

Prelini (C.), Graphical Determination of Earth Slopes, Retaining Walls, and Dams, 8/ net.

Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research, Vol. XXI., 3/ net.

Redgrove (H. S.), On the Calculation of Thermo-Chemical Constants, 6/ net.

Rosenthal (L. W.), Practical Calculation of Transmission Lines, 8/6 net.

Smithsonian Miscellaneous Collections, Vol. V., Part II. Solomon (Maurice), Electric Lamps, 6/ net.

Tilden (W. A.), Chemistry, 1/ net. With numerous illustrations, edited by J. Reynolds Green, Another of Dent's Scientific Primers.

Wadsworth (Annie), Raffia Winding and Weaving, 3/ net. Illustrated.

Winter (G.) and Ruge (C.), Textbook of Gynecological Diagnosis, 25/ net. Edited by J. G. Clark.

Wright (H. J. and W. P.), Beautiful Flowers and How to Grow Them, Part IX., 1/ net. With illustrations in colour.

Juvenile Books.

Story of a Cat, told by Herself, 6d. In words of one and two syllables.

Three Monkeys, 6d. Chiefly in words of one or two syllables.

Wintle (M. E.), Two Parrots, 6d. A tale of the Coronation.

Fiction.

Banzai, by "Parabellum," 6/. Deals with the Invasion of America by the Japanese.

Barwell (N.), Someone Pays, 6/. The story is told by means of correspondence between a number of persons.

Bilse (Lieut.), Life in a Garrison Town, 1/ net. A popular edition of the military novel suppressed by the German Government, with an introduction by Arnold White, and a summary of the court-martial.

Bindloss (H.), The Greater Power, 6/. A story of Colonial life, in which a young Englishman undertakes to reclaim a flooded valley on the Canadian Pacific Slope, and is found half dead in the snow by the daughter of a forest rancher.

Blinders (B.), Sandford of Merton and the Smart Set, 2/ net. Edited by Desmond Coke. An amusing view of up-to-date fads and language.

Brown (V.), Magnificat, 6/. Treats of a heroine of light and leading who is a "slavery" in a Bloomsbury lodging-house.

Castle (Agnes and Egerton), French Nan, 7d. net. Cheap issue of an excellent comedy of high society.

Donovan (D.), Lil of the Slums, 6/. The story is written round an incident arising out of the loss of the steamship Princess Alice in the Thames.

Fitzgerald (Eileen), A Fetish of Truth, 6/. The story deals with a man of strong character, but of humble parentage, who goes to seek his fortune in America.

Francis (M. E.), Noblesse Oblige, 6/. A story of the French Revolution in which the granddaughter of a French émigré is obliged to give dancing lessons and meets with her life romance.

Harding (N.), Thou Shalt Not, 6/. Deals with peasant life in the West of England.

Harland (H.), The Royal End, 6/. A posthumous novel in which a marriage tragedy is foreshadowed and averted.

Harrison (Mrs. B.), Transplanted Daughters, 6/. Concerned with the marriages of the three transplanted daughters.

Horniman (Roy), Nightshade. Consists of four stories, all in a minor key.

Hussey (E.), Polly Winford, 6/. A sporting novel.

McArthur (A.), The Leveller, 6/. A Russian romance presenting the opposing points of view of the people and the aristocracy.

Meadows (A. M.), The Dukedom of Portsea, 6/. The story is divided between England and Africa, and narrates the disillusionment of a Colonial who for many years has believed himself heir to estates.

Nesbit (E.), Daphne in Fitzroy Street, 6/. The Story of Daphne's adventures with Doris, and of love, art, and a Bohemian life in London.

Sandeman (G.), Uncle Gregory, 6/. Uncle Gregory dies before the book opens, leaving to his nephews and nieces a trust. The story concerns itself with the effect of this trust upon them.

Savile (F.), Seekers, 6/. A romance of the Balkans.

Sick (L. M.), The Priest of the High Fields. Authorized translation from the Danish by Tyra Engdahl and Jessie Rew.

Smedley (C.), The June Princess, 6/. The story deals with a girl's search for happiness. She battles bravely through many an adventure, and experiences different kinds of love.

Swinnerton (F. A.), The Merry Heart, 6/. The story relates the adventures of several young men and women engaged in daily work in the City.

Wallace (E.), The Duke in the Suburbs, 6/.

Warden (Gertrude), The World, the Flesh, and the Casino, 6/. Deals with the life of a young man who has been kept from a knowledge of realities and is led astray by a friend.

Watson (E. H. Lacon), The Happy Elopement, 6/. Deals with golf and love.

Wynne (W.), The Innocence of Isobel.

General Literature.

Adam (H. L.), The Indian Criminal, 10/6 net. Treats of poisoners, military pension frauds, railway thieves, dacoity, &c., and has numerous illustrations.

Benson (A. C.), The Gate of Death: a Diary, 6/ net. Second Edition, to which the author's name is now attached.

Bowles (T. G.), National Finance in 1908 and After, 1/ net. A review of the past, and a forecast of the future.—The Public Purse and the War Office, 6d. A vindication of Parliamentary control over national expenditure.

Bradshaw's Railway Manual, Shareholders' Guide and Directory, 1909. 12/.

Clergy List, 1909. Contains complete lists of the clergy in England, Wales, Scotland, Ireland, and the Colonies.

Heward (E. V.), St. Nicotine of the Peace Pipe, 5/. With 4 full-page plates and 5 text cuts.

Hodson (A. L.), Letters from a Settlement, 4/6 net. An account of the work done among the poor by the members of a social Settlement, with illustrations.

Lectures on Science, Philosophy, and Art, 1907-8. A series of 21 lectures in non-technical language, delivered at Columbia University, 1907-8.

Leane (M.), An Englishman's Castle, 6/. Articles on the poor and problems of philanthropy.

Merwin (Samuel), Drugging a Nation: the Story of China and the Opium Curse, 3/6 net.

Newspaper Press Directory, 1909, 2/. Contains particulars of every newspaper, magazine, review, and periodical published in the British Isles.

Peacock (Roger), Frontiersman's Pocket Book, 5/ net.

Ridgway (Emily), The Sweet of the Year: Thoughts from a Village Garden, 2/6 net.

Taylor (T. F.), The Fallacy of Speed, 1/ net. A short book on the results of speed in locomotion, &c.

Victorian Year-Book, 1907-8. Compiled by E. T. Drake, Government Statist. The twenty-eighth issue of a volume full of facts and figures.

Walling (W. English), Russia's Message, 12/6 net. Aims at explaining the import of the revolution, with 50 illustrations and a map.

Watt (H. J.), The Economy and Training of Memory, 1/6 net.

Pamphlets.

Lytton (Lady Constance), No Votes for Women, 3d. net. A reply to some recent anti-Suffrage publications.

Model Election of 1908, 2d. Reprinted (with modifications) from the December issue of Representation.

One and All Gardening, 1909, 2d. Edited by E. O. Greening.

FOREIGN.

Poetry and the Drama.

Dante e la Lunigiana, 9l. 50. A substantial volume of essays connected with the sixth centenary of Dante.

Philosophy.

Jong (K. H. E. de), Das antike Mysterienwesen in religionsgeschichtlicher, ethnologischer, und psychologischer Beleuchtung, 9m.

Bibliography.

Lanson (G.), Manuel bibliographique de la Littérature française moderne (1500-1900): Part I. Seizième Siècle, 4fr.

History and Biography.

Germey (Comte M. de), Souvenirs du Chevalier de Cussy, 1795-1866, Vol. I., 7fr. 50.

Lautour (Lieut. G.), Journal d'un Spahi au Soudan, 1897-9, 3fr. 50.

Peez (A. von), Die gelbe Gefahr in der Geschichte Europas, 1m.

Turquan (J.), Les Sœurs de Napoléon, 3fr.

Geography and Travel.

Praviel (A.), L'Empire du Soleil: Scènes et Portraits félibréens, 2fr.

Philology.

Grasserie (R. de la), Essai d'une Sémantique intégrale, 2 vols., 10fr. The Essai extends to nearly 700 pages.

Kyriakides (A.), Modern Greek-English Dictionary, with a Cypriote Vocabulary. Revised Edition.

Landberg (Comte de), Études sur les Dialectes de l'Arabie méridionale: Vol. II. Datinah: Part II. Commentaire des Textes prosaïques, 37fr. 50. This part alone extends to between 1,100 and 1,200 pages.

Lorenz (E.), Die Kastellanin von Vergi in der Literatur Frankreichs, Italiens, der Niederlande, Englands, und Deutschlands, mit einer deutschen Uebersetzung.

Science.

Bouquet (H.), L'Évolution psychique de l'Enfant, 1fr. 50. In the Bibliothèque de Psychologie expérimentale et de Métapsychie.

Marie (A.) et Martial (René), Travail et Folie: Influences professionnelles sur l'Étiologie psychopathique, 1fr. 50. In the same Library.

Meunier (Raymond), Le Hachich: Essai sur la Psychologie des Paradis éphémères, 3fr. In the same Library.

Fiction.

Duvernois (H.), Le Mari de la Couturière, 3fr. 50.

General Literature.

Hongrie contemporaine et le Suffrage universel, 3fr. 50. A special French edition of the Huszadik Század.

* * * All Books received at the Office up to Wednesday Morning will be included in this List unless previously noted. Publishers are requested to state prices when sending Books.

Literary Gossip.

'THE IMMORTALS' GREAT QUEST,' by the Rev. J. W. Barlow, ex-Vice-Provost of Trinity College, Dublin, which Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co. will publish on next Thursday, is a new edition of a philosophical romance published pseudonymously in Dublin some years ago, but almost immediately withdrawn from circulation. In its revised form it is virtually a new book. Mr. Barlow is the author of several philosophical and historical works, but this is his first essay in fiction.

'THE WANDER YEARS: BEING SOME ACCOUNT OF JOURNEYS INTO LIFE, LETTERS, AND ART,' is the title given by Mr. J. H. Yoxall, M.P., to a volume which he is publishing with the same firm on Thursday next.

AMONG the articles in the March number of The International will be the following: 'Sweating and the Fair Wages Report,' by Mr. Percy Alden, M.P.; 'Land Clubs and Small Holdings,' by Mr. E. R. Pease; 'The Development of the Love of Nature in Art,' by Frau Rosine Handlirsch; 'Land and Land Tax Reform in Germany,' by Dr. Adolph Damaschke (of Berlin); 'The Regeneration in Palestine,' by Mr. Albert M. Hyamson; and 'Some New Tendencies in Art,' by the editor, Dr. Rodolphe Broda.

MR. H. NOEL WILLIAMS, who is well known for his studies in biography, is publishing with Messrs. Methuen 'A Rose of Savoy,' which is a record of the life of Marie Adélaïde of Savoy, the mother of Louis XV.

THEY are also publishing 'The Foundations of the English Church,' by the Rev. J. H. Maude, and 'The Saxon Church and the Norman Conquest,' by Canon C. T. Cruttwell. Both these volumes belong to a new series of "Handbooks of English Church History," edited by the Rev. J. H. Burn.

MESSRS. T. C. & E. C. JACK's new books for the spring include 'A History of Story-telling,' by Mr. Arthur Ransome, and 'South Africa' in the "Romance of Empire" series, with text by Mr. I. D. Colvin, and illustrations by Mr. G. S. Smithard and Mr. J. R. Skelton.

MESSRS. METHUEN announce a new issue of Prof. Bury's annotated edition of Gibbon's great history, which will include illustrations and many additional notes.

MESSRS. ROUTLEDGE are publishing this spring 'First English Translations of the Classics: a Supplement to Textbooks of English Literature,' by Mr. W. J. Harris; Vol. II. of the English translation of Friedländer's 'Sittengeschichte Roms,' by Mr. J. H. Freese; and a Library Edition of Trollope's Barchester novels, 6 vols., with the original illustrations by Millais and G. H. Thomas.

MESSRS. DUCKWORTH announce "Studies in Theology," a new series of handbooks, designed to aid the interpretation of Biblical criticism. Principal Fairbairn is contributing 'An Encyclopædia of Theology,' Prof. James Orr 'Revelation and Inspiration,' and Dr. Hastings Rashdall 'Philosophy and Religion.' In each case bibliographies will be provided.

THE essay on Shelley by Francis Thompson, which recently put The Dublin Review out of print, will shortly be published in book form by Messrs. Burns & Oates. Mr. George Wyndham, who supplies an introduction, welcomes the essay as "the most important contribution to pure Letters written in English during the last twenty years." He adds an interesting personal note:—

"The older I get, the more do I affect the two extremes of literature. Let me have either pure Poetry, or else the statements of actors and sufferers. Thompson's article, though an Essay in prose criticism, is pure Poetry, and also, unconsciously, a human document of intense suffering."

The volume closes with additional 'Notes on Shelley,' also by Francis Thompson, in one of which a remarkable analogy is drawn between Shelley and St. John.

ON Monday the Manchester University Press will publish 'Malaria in Greek History,' by Mr. W. H. S. Jones, wherein he develops a thesis he has already maintained tentatively, that a great increase of malarial infection played a considerable part in the decline of the ancient Greeks.

MR. HENRY FROWDE is about to issue the 'Milton Memorial Lectures, 1908,' read before the Royal Society of Literature, edited by Mr. Percy W. Ames, the Secretary of that body.

WHEN we praised on November 2nd, 1907, the third part of Sir George Trevelyan's 'American Revolution,' we showed how he had been drawn from the life of Fox to become the historian of the American war. In Part IV. the author, we hear, is likely to return to Charles Fox and deal mainly with the relations of George III. to Parliament.

'AUTHOR AND PRINTER,' Mr. Howard Collins's handy reference book, of which a second edition appeared in 1905, is to be issued shortly by Mr. Frowde in a shilling form.

AT the sale of the library of the late J. Irvine Smith in Edinburgh last week, 'Vanity Fair' (first edition) fetched 53*l.* 11*s.*; a letter from Thackeray 13*l.* 5*s.*; and the original MS. of his first 'Roundabout Paper,' 7*l.*

ACCORDING to The Oxford Magazine of last week, "the total number of undergraduates and B.A.'s in residence has for the first time exceeded three thousand."

WE are obliged to the correspondents who have pointed out that the Lady Jane Scott mentioned last week in our review of Mr. Buchan's essays should have been called Lady John Scott.

MESSRS. SMITH & ELDER will publish on March 11th a third edition of Mr. J. Ellis Barker's book 'Modern Germany: her Political and Economic Problems, her Policy, her Ambitions, and the Cause of her Success.' The book has been brought up to date, and several chapters have been added.

AN interesting literary portrait of the Italian Prime Minister, given by The Morning Post correspondent at Rome on Wednesday last, raises controversy by the words: "The literary Prime Minister is now as rare in all countries as the Greek play bishop." To take only this country and its nearest neighbour, Lord Rosebery has written on Pitt and Peel, Mr. Balfour, a past and future Prime Minister, and M. Clemenceau, the present Prime Minister of France, are both considerable men of letters; and in France, where there still live many past Prime Ministers, M. E. Ollivier is equally remarkable in letters and oratory. The "Greek play bishop" has never been common in this country, much less in others.

AFTER Monday next students desirous of inspecting documents preserved in the Public Record Office must be supplied with a Student's Ticket. A form of application may be obtained from the Secretary of the Public Record Office, to whom it must be returned.

WITH regard to the Nelson letter sold this week at Sotheby's, and described in the press reports as "the first letter written by Nelson after he had lost his right arm," it may be noted that this letter is dated December 8th, 1797, whilst a letter signed by Nelson with his left hand, and dated from H.M.S. Sea-horse, September 1st, 1797, is described in the 'Catalogue of MSS. in the Museum of the Public Record Office' (p. 38). In this connexion it may be recalled that the daily bulletins, from the "medical journal" of the Sea-horse of the progress of Nelson's wound, were referred to in The Athenæum some years ago.

THE Faculté des Lettres of Paris has lost two of its eminent professors within the last few days. M. Victor Egger, who died suddenly at the age of sixty-one, was the son of Émile Egger (1815–85), the well-known philologist, and like his father gained distinction as a scholar. His thèse de doctorat, 'La Parole intérieure: Essai de Psychologie descriptive' (1881), was much discussed at the time. He was the author of several other books.

M. FRÉDÉRIC RAUH, who has died at the early age of forty-eight, was a native of Saint Martin-le-Vinoux (Isère), and was successively Professor of Philosophy at Vendôme, at Lons-le-Saunier, at Toulouse, and finally at Paris. He was the author of several works on morals and sociology.

THE once famous Parisian actress, known during the Second Empire as "La Mogador," died recently in Paris, where she was born in 1824. Her real name was Céleste Vénard. She married in 1853 the Comte de Chabrilan, and after her marriage turned author, writing many curious books, among which were 'Sapho,' and 'Les Voleurs d'Or'; and she continued to publish novels, &c., down to 1885. She also wrote her memoirs in five volumes, but they were suppressed on the eve of publication in 1854; in 1858 another attempt was made at publication, but again it was unsuccessful; and it was not until 1876 that her 'Adieux au Monde: Mémoires de Céleste Mogador,' appeared without hindrance.

A NEW edition of Baron von Biedermann's standard collection of all known conversations of Goethe is now being prepared with the active encouragement of leading Goethe scholars. Every effort is being made to make this final edition as complete as possible. Any one possessing additions or corrections to the first edition is earnestly requested to send them to the general editor Freiherr F. W. von Biedermann, 33, Albrechtstrasse, Steglitz bei Berlin; or to Mr. Leonard L. Mackall, Kaiser Wilhelmstrasse 13, Jena, who is editing the conversations recorded in English. The accounts of the following Englishmen and Americans have already been examined and prepared for the press: G. Bancroft, Alb. Brisbane, G. H. Calvert, J. G. Cogswell, Geo. Downes, H. E. Dwight, W. Emerson, R. P. Gillies, A. B. Granville, G. H. Lewes, John Murray, Sir Ch. Murray, H. C. Robinson (MSS.), W. R. Swifte ('Wilhelm's Wanderings'), Thackeray, Geo. Ticknor, and Jos. Wolff; but there must be others still unnoticed.

DR. ALBRECHT WAGNER, whose death at the age of fifty-nine is announced from Halle, was Professor of English at the University of that town, and author of several valuable works, among them 'Ueber den Mönch von Heilsbronn,' and 'Ueber die deutschen Namen der ältesten Freisinger Urkunden.'

THE death is announced from the United States, in his sixty-eighth year, of Dr. Carroll Davidson Wright, statistician, and President of Clark College, Worcester, Mass. He was head of the Massachusetts Bureau of Statistics and Labour from 1873 to 1888; and was U.S. Commissioner of Labour from 1885 to 1902. He wrote many reports on Labour: 'The Factory System of the United States' (1880), 'The Industrial Evolution of the United States' (1887), and an 'Outline of Practical Sociology' (1899).

THE life and memoirs of Jonas Lie, the Norwegian author, written by his son, have just been published by Messrs. Gyldendal of Copenhagen.

AT the annual meeting of the News-vendors' Institution on the 8th of March the committee will recommend the appointment of Col. Harry L. W. Lawson as President, in the room of the late Lord Glenesk.

A MONTHLY meeting of the Board of Directors of the Booksellers' Provident Institution was held last Thursday week, 11*h.* being granted towards the relief of members and widows of members. Two new members were elected, and three applications for membership were received.

AT the quarterly meeting, last Friday week, of the committee who manage the Booksellers' Provident Retreat, everything in connexion with that institution was reported as being in a satisfactory condition.

AMONG Government Publications recently issued we note: Register of the Privy Council of Scotland, Vol. I. 1661–4, third series (15*s.*); Public Trustee's First Annual Report (1½*d.*); and Protection of Literary and Artistic Works, Berne Convention, Correspondence (1*s.* 5*d.*).

SCIENCE

The Threshold of Religion. By R. R. Marett. (Methuen & Co.)

MR. MARETT, who had much to do with organizing the International Congress of Religions at Oxford last year, and has since given effective work as secretary to the University Committee for Anthropology, read before that Congress a paper on the conception of "mana"; and the happy suggestion has since been made to him that that essay should be published under one cover with other essays of his on different aspects of the same subject contributed to the British Association, the Folk-lore Society, and the Sociological Society, and to the volume of essays presented to Prof. Tylor. We have thus a complete view, in a compact form, of the facts and theories relating to the origins of religious belief as they have presented themselves to the mind of a thinker of independence, originality, and clearness.

Mr. Marett speaks of "those who dislike the introduction of native terms into our scientific nomenclature." We confess we are of the number. There is so much uncertainty as to the precise idea that the savage mind attaches to a word that successive observers discover fresh shades of meaning in it, and you can never be certain in using it whether you will be understood to mean by it the sense in which it was at first employed as a word of art, or the other senses which have been since attached to it. In endeavouring to give it a definite meaning for the use of scientific inquirers, you can never be certain that that meaning is precisely that which it bore to the native mind, or that some one with more delicate comprehension of the workings of that mind will not find another meaning for it. We cannot but think that the controversies that have raged around such words as "totem," "churinga," "orenda," and the like are due to this cause. When a scientific writer coins a word of his own, as "animism," this difficulty does not arise. The word may or may not fully express his meaning. It may be too general; it may be too particular; but he is entitled to use it, and to affix his own definition to it; and no subsequent writer is entitled to use it in a sense different from that so defined. The subsequent writer who wishes to do so must restrain himself and invent a new word of his own.

We shall endeavour, therefore, in commenting on Mr. Marett's essays, to substitute for his word "mana" the thing, as we understand it, which that word represents. He aptly calls his collection of essays 'The Threshold of Religion,' by which, we take it, he means the stage at which the savage mind makes its first entry from the outside into the ideal edifice. Now animism is clearly within the building; that first step into the building, if it can be defined at all, must therefore be, as Mr. Marett called it in his first essay, read before the British Association as far back as 1899, "pre-animistic." In the Congress paper and the Preface he to some extent qualifies that expression; and the metaphorical use of the word "threshold" must not be pressed too far, or we shall find ourselves seeking for what may be called a negative quantity. The idea which, whether previous to that of animism or not, is in Mr. Marett's opinion distinguishable from it, is that of attributing anything which goes beyond the average experiences of mankind to some power other than that of the man himself; illustrated by the examples of a successful fighter, who attributes his success to the magical power conveyed to him from a spirit or some deceased warrior through some amulet or charm, and of a cultivator, who attributes the fruitfulness of his garden to a like cause, and not to his own skill or industry. The possession of qualities which ordinary persons or things do not possess is due to some power outside the man himself, and any one who excels is not metaphorically, but literally, "gifted" or "inspired."

The question is thus raised of the distinction between magic and religion, which was drawn by Lord Avebury (then Sir John Lubbock) in his 'Prehistoric Times,' and has been since more strongly affirmed by Prof. Frazer in 'The Golden Bough.' In the second of the papers in this volume, 'From Spell to Prayer,' read before the Folk-lore Society in 1904, Mr. Marett contended that there is no essential opposition between magic and religion; and Mr. Hartland in his address to Section H of the British Association at York in 1906 expressed the same opinion. The spell helps to generate the prayer; but the spell belongs to magic, and the prayer to religion: thus magic helps to generate religion. In the essay contributed to the Tylor volume the investigation is pursued further, and taboo is shown to imply a mixture of magical and religious ideas, and not to be merely a negative magic. The analogy which Dr. Frazer drew between magic and natural science receives no support from these points of view.

The fifth and last essay in the volume approaches the subject from a different direction, having been addressed to the Sociological Society, and embodying a sociological view of comparative religion, as a branch of individual psychology and of social psychology respectively. The object to be attained being the expression, in terms as general as possible, of the observed tendencies of the human mind in the direction of religion, the treatment of the question must in the first instance be that of investigation into social phenomena. You cannot get at the origin of religion by repeating the experiment of Psammetichus, and secluding a newborn child till you find what religion he invents. As social conditions change, the beliefs and observances which accompany those conditions undergo corresponding changes, tending sometimes to the continuance and accentuation of the old ideas, sometimes to their deterioration, and even to their perversion.

Mr. Marett says truly that the last word on these matters has not yet been spoken. Abundant as the materials are becoming for the promulgation of theories on the subject of the origins of religion, and of formulæ in the science of comparative religions, those theories, and the teachings of that science, must be continually open to revision as further knowledge of the working of the savage mind, or further insight into the significance of savage beliefs and customs, is acquired. Mr. Marett has had his word to say, and has said it well and convincingly.

ANTHROPOLOGICAL NOTES.

THE annual Conférence Transformiste at Paris for 1908 was delivered by M. Henri Piéron, who took for his subject the present position of the problem of instinct. He discussed the various definitions of instinct, giving final approval to that of Prof. Lloyd Morgan in Physical Science, vi. 321. He held, however, that no definition could afford an absolute criterion. The dogma of the immutability of instincts is exploded, and the evolution of instincts is as attractive a study as the evolution of species. Their origin, transformation, disappearance, and return give rise to many obscure, but, it may be hoped, not insoluble questions.

As long ago as 1866 the late Dr. Langdon Down, in the London Hospital Reports, drew attention to the fact that idiots born of English parents sometimes resemble physically other quite distinct racial types, as Ethiopian, Malay, American, and Mongolian. Upon this Dr. Adolphe Bloch has founded a study of infantile Mongolism in the white race.

At the inauguration of the statue of Boucher de Perthes at Abbeville last year, English anthropologists were represented by Prof. Newton, who delivered an address. Many French anthropologists were present.

A fragment of a skull which has been for more than fifty years in the Museum of Natural History at Perpignan, where it was described as having been found near St. Paul de Fenouillet, a small town in the Pyrénées-Orientales, has been studied with great care by Prof. Depéret and M. Jarricot of Lyons, who consider that they have traced the actual site of the discovery, and that the skull is of great antiquity. The evidence does not commend itself to the authorities of the Society of Anthropology of Paris, who are of opinion that it is not earlier than the Neolithic period.

M. Deniker, in discussing the mean height of the various populations of Europe, classifies as of medium height those where the mean height ranges from 1,650 to 1,674 mm.; as short, from 1,625 to 1,649; as very short, from 1,600 to 1,624; as tall, from 1,675 to 1,699; very tall, 1,700 to 1,724; and excessive where the mean height is 1,725 or more. In English measure the scales are nearly equivalent to 5 ft. 3 in. for the very short, rising by one inch in each to 5 ft. 8 in. for the excessive.

In Man for February Mrs. Cunningham describes and figures pottery found in an ancient rubbish heap near Oare, Wiltshire, together with three fibulæ and other objects, which Mr. Reginald Smith attributes to the early years of the first century A.D., being of a characteristic Late Celtic type.

Mr. R. Grant Brown relates a story of a sham funeral in Burma, undertaken in the hope of cheating death, and thus saving the life of a child. Pieces of his hair, finger-nails, and toe-nails were placed in a bamboo of his exact height, and covered with his clothing, and a coffin containing them was buried with the usual ceremonies. Upon the return of the supposed mourners, however, it was found that the child had really died. Death was not to be averted by sympathetic magic of that sort.

M. J. Bacot spent six months in Yunnan, in the south-eastern border of Tibet, in the neighbourhood of the Mossos, the Lissous, the Loutzes, and the Tibetans, and has communicated to the Society of Anthropology of Paris his notes on those populations, illustrated by a series of portraits of the natives. He also passed through the country of the Lolos and the Minkias, but had not the opportunity of making detailed observations there. He noted, however, a megalithic monument about 6 kil. east of Talifou, forming a rectangular chamber 8m. by 2m. 50 by 2m., and near it a single stone, 3m. high.

SOCIETIES.

GEOLOGICAL.—Feb. 10.—Prof. W. J. Sollas, President, in the chair. Messrs. J. T. Audas, G. E. Brown, E. W. Byrde, F. Feather, T. G. Taylor, and E. B. Whalley were elected Fellows. —Dr. C. G. Cullis having been nominated by the Council, was elected Auditor of the Society's accounts for the preceding year, in place of Mr. J. V. Elsdon, who had been prevented by illness from participating in the audit.

The President announced that the Council, at its meeting that afternoon, had passed the following resolution: "The Council of the Geological Society records its sense of the very great loss which the Society sustains from the death of Mr. W. H. Hudleston, F.R.S. By his distinguished services as President and as Secretary, by the constant interest which he took in the Society's affairs, and by the distinction of his high scientific reputation, he had laid the Society under a deep obligation. The Council desires to express to Mrs. Hudleston the sincere sympathy of the Society in her bereavement."

The following communications were read: 'Note on some Geological Features observable at the Carpalla China-Clay Pit in the Parish of St. Stephen's, Cornwall,' by Mr. J. H. Collins, and 'Some Recent Observations on the Brighton Cliff-Formation,' by Mr. E. A. Martin.

At a Special General Meeting held before the ordinary meeting, the following resolution was proposed by Dr. A. Smith Woodward, and seconded by Dr. R. D. Roberts: "That it is desirable, under the existing charter, to admit women to candidature for the Fellowship of the Society, on the same terms as men." A ballot having been asked for, the resolution was rejected by 50 votes to 40.

Feb. 19.—Annual Meeting.—The officers were elected as follows: President, Prof. W. J. Sollas; Vice-Presidents, Mr. G. W. Lamplugh, Mr. Horace W. Monckton, Dr. J. J. H. Teall, and Prof. W. W. Watts; Secretaries, Prof. E. J. Garwood and Dr. A. Smith Woodward; Foreign Secretary, Sir Archibald Geikie; Treasurer, Dr. Aubrey Strahan.—The following awards of medals and funds were made: the Wollaston Medal to Mr. H. B. Woodward, the Murchison Medal to Prof. G. A. J. Cole, the Lyell Medal to Prof. P. F. Kendall, the Bigsby Medal to Dr. J. Smith Flett, the Prestwich Medal to Lady Evans, the Wollaston Fund to Mr. A. J. C. Molyneux, the Murchison Fund to Mr. J. V. Elsdon, and the Lyell Fund to Mr. R. G. Carruthers and Mr. H. Brantwood Muff.—The President delivered his anniversary address, which dealt with 'Time, considered in its Relation to Geological Events, and to the Development of the Organic World.'

SOCIETY OF ANTIQUARIES.—Feb. 4.—Dr. C. H. Read, President, in the chair.—Mr. William Dale submitted a report as Local Secretary for Hampshire, with special reference to recent finds of Neolithic implements, and of Roman coins and pottery on the site of Clausentum.—The Rev. Lewis Gilbertson exhibited a Gnostic gold ring of the thirteenth century found in London, and an early example of a seal-topped silver spoon.—Mr. P. M. Johnston exhibited some pieces of early glazing from North Stoke Church, Sussex, temporarily removed for re-leading.

Feb. 11.—Dr. Philip Norman, Treasurer, in the chair.—Mr. Miller Christy exhibited a large, ancient brazen knocker, which was, for a long period, on the front door of a small farm-house, known as Brazen-head, at Lindsell, near Dunmow, in Essex. It was, he explained, a thick, weighty casting, consisting of a circular disk, about sixteen inches in diameter, with a narrow raised rim, and had in the centre, standing up in very bold relief to a height of about six inches, the head of a lion or leopard, surrounded by tapering rolls of hair, which radiated outwards nearly to the rim; the whole being exceedingly well executed and life-like. In the creature's mouth was a modern rough iron ring, which knocked on the rim of the disk. The original ring was, no doubt, of bronze and considerably larger. Mr. Christy suggested that the knocker belonged to the thirteenth century and was of English work. It was, he said, impossible to suppose that so fine and costly a knocker could ever have been made for the door of an incon-siderable farm-house, and he surmised that it came originally from some religious house. Probably, however, it was not monastic spoil; for the farm appeared (though the evidence was not quite conclusive) to have been known as the Brasen-head (doubtless because of this knocker being on its door) since at least the year 1500, and perhaps earlier. The knocker has been noticed (as "a wolf's head of brass") by most of the Essex historians, beginning with Holman (about 1710). Mr. Christy alluded briefly to the somewhat similar, but probably earlier knockers at Durham (apparently a griffin's head) and at Brasenose College, Oxford (apparently a monkey's head), and to one or two others. He was glad, he said, to be able to announce that arrangements had been made for the acquisition of the example in question by the British Museum.

Mr. O. M. Dalton communicated some notes on a covered silver bowl of the ninth or tenth century, probably of English work, and a Persian dish of the fourth century with a figure of Sapor II. —Mr. W. de C. Prideaux exhibited a pewter coffin chalice of unusual form, with a paten inscribed IHC MERCI, found in a grave on the site of Abbotsbury abbey church; also a rubbing of the casement of the brass of an Abbot of Bindon, circa 1320, and a palimpsest brass inscription from Litton Cheney, Dorset.

Feb. 18.—Sir Richard Holmes, V. P., in the chair.—Mr. Reginald Smith read a second paper on the Gallo-Roman redware found on Pudding-pan Rock, Herne Bay, and, on behalf of the subscribers, presented the diver's report of an expedition to the site last year. Stormy weather interfered with the diving operations, and only three fragments were recovered by Mr. Pollard, the largest being coarse ware of uncertain date. Another was part of a dish belonging to the Rock Series; and the third, found at the distance of a mile, belonged to a small cup with engine-turned frieze, of thinner and better ware, dating from the first century. Details were given of 42 specimens examined in various collections since January, 1907: all presented the same features as before, the forms, colour, texture, and potters' names precisely corresponding to those of the former series, except for one new name and one new variety of a recognized form, stamped by the same potter who made the prototype. As many as 280 authenticated specimens from the Rock have now been catalogued, of which 213 bear legible potters' stamps. There are sixteen different forms, including four groups of three sizes, and thirty-six names of potters, many of whom are known to have worked at Lezoux, Puy-de-Dôme. If the theory is correct that this red ware formed part of the cargo of a boat wrecked on the Rock on its way from the Gaulish coast to London, it follows that these potters were contemporaries, and the available evidence points to 160–190 A.D. as the period of their activity. Only unornamented specimens are found on the site, and the absence of "figured" vases and "applied" decoration suggests that there was a brief intermediate period when nothing but plain ware was manufactured at Lezoux.

Specimens dredged from Pudding-pan Rock were exhibited by Messrs. Sparshott, Warner, and Evans, and Dr. Hayward, the first-named also sending three Neolithic flint implements recovered in the same way.—The Director exhibited a bronze sacrificial bowl with two fixed handles, found in the Thames near Walton, and dating from the latter part of the first century. It is of excellent workmanship, and well preserved. A certain number have been found in Northern Europe, but all were probably made in Italy.

ROYAL NUMISMATIC.—Feb. 18.—Sir Henry H. Howorth, President, in the chair.—Mr. Henry Symonds was elected a Fellow.—The following exhibitions of coins were laid before the meeting: Mr. T. Bliss, a series of silver coins of the Commonwealth of the rare date 1649, and patterns of the half-crown by Ramage of 1651, with and without the edge lettered—Miss Helen Farquhar, a cliché in silver for the reverse of a touch-piece of Charles II. showing a ship in full sail: this piece is unique, and was formerly included in the Brice, Montagu, and Murdoch cabinets.—Mr. Bernard Roth, a false British stater which purported to have been struck at Verulamium; also clippings of silver coins of Edward VI. to Charles II., found in Southwark and at Marsham, near Abingdon.—Mr. F. A. Walters, a sestertius in bronze of the Emperor Galba of the "Adlocutio" type,—and Mr. Frederick A. Harrison a silver coin struck in China, and bearing the emperor's effigy, for currency in Tibet: this is the first silver coin with the portrait of an Emperor of China.

Mr. W. J. Hocking read the second and concluding portion of his paper on 'Simon's Dies in the Royal Mint Museum, with some Notes on the Early History of Coinage by Machinery.' Taking up his subject from the middle of the seventeenth century, he mentioned the circumstances in which mill money was re-established in France, chiefly through the exertions of the engraver Varin. Mr. Hocking then related the history of its reintroduction at the English Mint. This was effected under the superintendence of a Frenchman, Peter Blondeau, who was in 1649 invited to England for that purpose by the Government. The process of cutting the blanks and the mode of lettering or engraving the rims of the coins, as carried out by Blondeau, were described and illustrated. Particulars were also given of the various dies executed by Thomas Simon for the coinage of the Protector Cromwell, which were to be used by Blondeau; and an account was supplied of the history of these dies, which from time to time had been obtained by the authorities of the Mint. The total number of the Cromwell matrices, punches, and dies now in the Royal Mint is twenty-six, besides such as were undoubtedly manufactured in the Mint at a later date. These subsequent fabrications were made by the engraver John Sigismund Tanner at the instigation of the Hon. Richard Arundell (who was appointed Master of the Mint in 1738), in order that some pieces might be struck for presentation to his friends. The differences between the originals and the copies were minutely described.

ZOOLOGICAL.—Feb. 16.—Mr. F. Gillett, V. P., in the chair.—The Secretary read a report on the additions to the menagerie during January.—Mr. C. Tate Regan exhibited sketches illustrating colour-changes in some fishes from the Bermudas in the New York Aquarium.—Mr. E. G. B. Meade-Waldo read extracts from a letter he had received from Dr. Einar Lönnberg on the hunting of the sea-elephant on South Georgia, and called attention to the necessity of steps being taken to prevent its extermination.—Dr. F. Wood-Jones presented a communication on the 'Fauna of the Cocos-Keeling Atoll,' and illustrated his remarks with lantern-slides. The work was based on collections made by the author during a stay of fifteen months in 1905 and 1906.—A paper was communicated by Mr. F. E. Beddard on 'The Anatomy of Certain Ungulata, including Tapirus, Hyrax, and Antilocapra.—Dr. E. L. Trouessart presented a paper entitled 'Le Rhinocéros blanc du Soudan (Rhinoceros simus cottoni).'

METEOROLOGICAL.—Feb. 17.—Mr. H. Mellish, President, in the chair.—Mr. E. Mawley read his 'Report on the Phenological Observations for 1908.' The most noteworthy features of the weather of the phenological year ending November, 1908, were the severe frosts early in January, the exceptionally heavy fall of snow and remarkably low temperatures in the latter part of April, and the marked periods of unusually wet and dry weather during the summer. In February and March wild plants came into blossom in advance of their usual time, but throughout the rest of the flowering season were more or less behind their average dates. Such early spring migrants as the swallow, cuckoo, and nightingale made their appearance very late. The only deficient farm crop was that of barley. The yield of wheat, oats, and beans was rather above the average; that of peas and hay very good; while the crops of turnips, mangolds, and potatoes, taken together, were the most abundant for many years. The yield of apples was under average, and that of pears and plums much under average. On the other hand, the crops of currants, gooseberries, and strawberries were almost everywhere unusually good. As regards the farm crops, this was the third good year in succession, although compared with 1906 and 1907 the yields in 1908, except in the case of turnips, mangolds, and potatoes, were much inferior to those of either 1906 or 1907.

Mr. W. Marriott read a paper on 'The Cold Spell at the End of December, 1908.' The weather during December was generally mild until Christmas Day, when a considerable change took place in the distribution of barometric pressure, and the weather assumed a wintry character. Gales occurred in many places, and snow fell more or less over the British Isles during the following week. The most remarkable feature, however, was the intense cold which prevailed over the central and south-eastern portion of England from the 28th to the 31st. The temperature on the 28th did not rise above 25° over a considerable portion of the Midlands, while on the 29th it remained below 25° over virtually the whole of England (except the south-western counties) up to within about 20 miles of the coast. On the 28th, 29th, and 30th over the greater part of the country the minimum thermometer fell below 20°; while over a considerable area it fell below 10° on the 29th and 30th. At several places the lowest temperature recorded was about zero. At Berkhamsted the thermograph showed that the temperature remained below 25° for a period of 58 hours—a most unusual occurrence. Mr. Marriott stated that the isobaric charts indicated that during this period there was a ridge or wedge of high pressure between two cyclonic systems, and that the conditions were thus favourable for the production of great cold. For December the cold was very exceptional, as the only instances in the neighbourhood of London or at Greenwich in which the maximum temperature was below 25° for the day were the following: 1796, 25th, 19°·5; 1798, 28th, 19°·5; 1816, 22nd, 24°·0; 1830, 24th, 22°·0; 1855, 21st, 23°·2; 1874, 31st, 24°·5; 1890, 22nd, 23°·7; and 1908, 29th, 25°·4, and 30th, 23°·3.

INSTITUTION OF CIVIL ENGINEERS.—Feb. 16.—Mr. J. C. Inglis, President, in the chair. The paper read was 'The Design of Marine Steam-Turbines,' by Mr. S. J. Reed.

HISTORICAL.—Feb. 18.—Annual Meeting.—The Rev. Dr. W. Hunt, President, in the chair.—The President delivered his annual address, reviewing the record of historical writing by Fellows of the Society, the volumes issued to Fellows, and the general progress of historical research during his term of office.—On the retirement of Dr. Hunt, Archdeacon Cunningham was elected President for the ensuing term of four years.—The following were elected Fellows: A. E. Brown, the Hon. Evan Charteris, H. E. Cullingworth, C. H. K. Marten, J. Munro, the Rev. R. M. Serjeantson, and H. F. B. Wheeler.

FOLK-LORE.—Feb. 17.—Miss C. S. Burne, President, in the chair.—Mr. T. C. Hodson read a paper on 'Head-hunting Tribes in the Hills of Assam,' and gave some instances of head-hunting with which he had personally come into touch in the State of Manipur. An interesting instance was that of an appeal to Mr. Hodson by a terrified Naga, a lock of whose hair had been taken by the chief of a powerful village to put beneath the main post of his new house. Mr. Hodson was able to persuade the chief to substitute the head of a stout buffalo for the lock of hair. In one village where a raid had taken place the heads were placed in a tree outside the village—perhaps a survival of tree-burial, traces of which are found amongst the neighbouring Naga hill tribes. The funeral of a chief was incomplete without the head of a human victim, it being the belief that the owner of the head became the slave of the chief in the future world. The Quoireng Nagas take heads because the possession brings wealth and prosperity to the village. It was usual to keep the heads for five days and then to return them to the village from which they were taken, or they were put into the graves of the families of the successful warriors. For three years after a successful raid, all raids against that particular village were forbidden. Before and after a raid, the warriors were subjected to strict tabus. Mr. Hodson mentioned the custom of erecting outside the village the image of a man and throwing spears at it. If the head were hit, the successful warrior would take a head; if the belly, the crops would be plentiful. The year was divided into a cultivating and a hunting period, the chief village festivals taking place between the two periods. In some of the villages were large monoliths or heaps of stones—places of great sanctity—on which the heads taken in a raid were placed. The monoliths were regarded as exercising an influence on the food supply, and were thought to have been erected to secure stability and good fortune for the family. Speaking of the opinion of earlier authorities that no young man could find a wife without having taken a head, Mr. Hodson alluded to a custom by which, on the marriage of his son, the warrior retired in his favour, thus securing a vigorous continuity of service to which the utmost value would be attached. Success on a hunting raid would serve as a mark of manhood, and as qualifying from one stage in tribal life to another. Of an admirable series of lantern-slides illustrating the lecture, perhaps the most interesting was that of a large stone circle and avenues in which the village dances and ceremonies took place. In the discussion which followed Sir Charles Lyall drew attention to similar good work being done in India; and the President mentioned an interesting custom which still obtained in Guernsey, and which had marked resemblance to the ceremonies connected with the monoliths referred to in the paper.

PHYSICAL.—Feb. 12.—Annual Meeting.—Dr. C. Chree, President, in the chair.—The Secretary read the Reports of the Council and the Treasurer, which were adopted.—The following were elected Honorary Fellows: R. Benoit and Julius Thomsen.—The following were elected officers and Council for the ensuing year: President, C. Chree; Vice-Presidents, those who have filled the office of President, together with W. Duddell, Prof. A. Schuster, S. Skinner, and W. Watson; Secretaries, W. R. Cooper and S. W. J. Smith; Foreign Secretary, Prof. S. P. Thompson; Treasurer, Prof. H. L. Callendar; Librarian, W. Watson; other Members of Council, A. Campbell, W. H. Eccles, A. Griffiths, J. A. Harker, Prof. C. H. Lees, T. Mather, A. Russell, Prof. E. Rutherford, F. E. Smith, and R. S. Whipple.—The President then delivered his address.

HELLENIC.—Feb. 16.—Prof. P. Gardner, President, in the chair.—Mr. P. Ure read a paper on 'Recent Excavations in the Ancient Greek Cemetery at Rhitsona in Boeotia.' After preliminary remarks as to the identification with Mycalessus, the modes of burial, and the dating of the graves, Mr. Ure showed illustrations of the sixth-century pottery and figurines. These comprised vases and figurines in the Boeotian Geometric style, and in other styles found in the same graves. They included various proto-Corinthian, Corinthian, and sub-Geometric types, "Naucratic" ware, "Rhodian" glass, black figure on red and yellow grounds (including an amphora with a new type of naval scene, inscribed), white lecythus, "archaic" statuette and protomai; also transitional vases, combining features of several styles and raising questions of provenance. Mr. Ure concluded by discussing "cothons" and allied types with rim to prevent spilling, and the question of their use.

Mr. W. C. F. Anderson read a paper on 'Amphipolis.' The happy change in Turkish government, he said, fostered the hope that before long it might be possible to survey and excavate many important sites. Amphipolis claimed a leading place on any list of possible excavations. It was unoccupied and fairly accessible. Hitherto brigands and marauding bands and a well-deserved reputation for malaria had kept travellers at a distance. He had visited the site in 1896 and in August last year, and photographed the chief features of the site and the few monuments that are left. Reliefs, inscriptions, and terra-cottas were found in considerable quantities, and were exported by the inhabitants by way of Cavalla. The interest of the site was that it commanded the mouth of the Strymon and the approach to the sea from the fertile Philippi Valley. It was on the Via Egnatia and on the Turkish post-road, and until early last century was a place of some importance. Here, if anywhere, remains of the pre-Grecian civilization of the Balkans might be found, for it lay on the direct road from the sea to Bulgaria, and as the "Nine Ways" must have been a place of barter and traffic. The solution of the problem of the origins of the culture of early Greece lay hidden in such sites, and of the three "store towns" of Xerxes it was the most promising for excavation. His view was that Xerxes effectively occupied the valleys of the Hebrus, Strymon, and Axios, and that various difficulties as to his line of march and retreat were explained by the trouble of having his lines of supply at right angles to his line of advance and lines of communication by sea. The site had not been touched except by peasants, since the French expedition of 1861, but a relief now removed showed connexion with Samothrace, and there could be little doubt that there was much still to be found, as the remains of the city covered about a square mile. The malaria was the chief obstacle, but there were healthy ground and safe water within easy reach of the walls, and good camping-ground could be found within three miles. Labour could be obtained, but wages were high owing to the large amount of work required by the tobacco planters in the plain of Philippa.

MEETINGS NEXT WEEK.

- Mon. Royal Institution, 5.—General Monthly Meeting.
— Surveyors' Institution, 7.—'A National Water Supply,' Mr. E. Page. (Junior Meeting.)
— Society of Engineers, 7.30.—'A New Test for Concrete,' Dr. J. S. Owens.
— Aristotelian, 8.—'The Rationalistic Conception of Truth,' Dr. F. C. S. Schiller.
— Society of Arts, 8.—'Methods of Artificial Illumination,' Lecture III., Mr. Leon Gaster. (Cantor Lecture.)
Tues. Royal Institution, 3.—'The Evolution of the Brain as an Organ of Mind,' Lecture II., Prof. E. W. Mott.
— Faraday, 8.—'On the Rate of Evolution of Gases from Homogeneous Liquids,' Mr. V. H. Veley and Dr. J. C. Cain; 'The Electro-analysis of Mercury Compounds with a Gold Cathode,' Dr. F. Mollwo Perkin; 'The Relation between Composition and Conductivity in Solutions of Meta- and Ortho-Phosphoric Acids,' Dr. E. B. R. Prideaux.
— Institution of Civil Engineers, 8.—Discussion on 'Some Recent Grain-handling and Storing Appliances at the Millwall Docks.'
— Zoological, 8.30.—'The Development of the Subdivisions of the Pleuro-peritoneal Cavity in Birds,' Miss Margaret Poole; 'The Growth of the Shell of Patella vulgata, L.,' Mr. E. S. Russell; 'The Life-History of the Agrionid Dragonfly,' Mr. F. Balfour-Browne; 'Growth-Stages in the British Species of the Coral Genus Parasmilia,' Mr. W. D. Lang.
Wed. Royal Archaeological Institute, 4.30.—'On such Portions of Sussex Churches as can be dated from Bequests in Early Wills,' Part I., Mr. R. Garraway Rice.
— Entomological, 8.—'Birds as a Factor in the Production of Mimicry among Butterflies,' Mr. G. A. K. Marshall.
— Society of Arts, 8.
Thurs. Royal Institution, 3.—'Problems of Geographical Distribution in Mexico,' Lecture III., Dr. Haus Gadow.
— Royal, 4.30.
— Linnean, 8.—'The Montane Flora of Fiji,' Miss L. S. Gibbs.
— Chemical, 8.30.—'The Action of Anhydrous Sulphuric Acid on Triphenylsilicic,' Messrs. G. Martin and F. S. Kipping; 'The Ignition Temperatures of Gases,' Messrs. H. B. Dixon and H. F. Coward; and other Papers.
Fri. Geologists' Association, 8.—'On the Sections of Inferior Oolite on the Midford-Camerton Section of the Limply Stoke Railway, Somerset,' Mr. L. Richardson; 'The Geology of the Paris Basin,' M. Gustave F. Dollfus.
— Philological, 8.—'On Frisian,' Mr. J. S. Westlake; 'Lithuanian Lord's Prayer,' Mr. L. C. Wharton.
— Royal Institution, 9.—'The Letters of Queen Victoria,' Viscount Esher.
Sat. Royal Institution, 3.—'Properties of Matter,' Lecture II., Prof. Sir J. J. Thomson.

Science Gossip.

THE CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS will publish this spring a volume of essays entitled 'Darwin and Modern Science,' in commemoration of the centenary of the birth of Charles Darwin and the fiftieth anniversary of 'The Origin of Species.' The essays, addressed primarily to the educated layman rather than the expert, will illustrate the far-reaching influence of Darwin's work, and the present attitude of investigators and thinkers towards his views. There is a brilliant list of contributors, some of whom pass in review the progress of research on lines which, though unknown or but little followed in his day, are the direct outcome of his work.

IN addition to a few figures in the text and a coloured plate in illustration of an essay by Prof. Weismann, the volume will contain two portraits of Darwin and an etching of his study at Down. The essays are preceded by a letter from Darwin's lifelong friend Sir Joseph Hooker to the editor (Prof. Seward), and a short biographical epitome of Darwin.

BESIDES being engaged on a new edition of Howard Saunders's 'British Birds,' Mr. W. Eagle Clark, of the Edinburgh Royal Scottish Museum, is working at an important book on 'Migration,' which will contain the results of prolonged study and observation of the subject on Fair Isle, the Flannan Islands, the Eddystone, and various other centres for bird-watching.

PART III. of the Annual Report of the Fishery Board of Scotland, dealing with Scientific Investigations, is just issued as a Parliamentary Paper (2s. 6d.); and we note also the appearance of a Spectrographic Determination of the Constant of Aberration and of the Solar Parallax, Royal Observatory, Cape of Good Hope (2s. 6d.).

THE death occurred yesterday week of James Hamilton, LL.D., Emeritus Professor of Pathology in Aberdeen University. After working in pathology at Edinburgh, he was appointed to the above-mentioned chair in 1882, and resigned it in 1908. Dr. Hamilton did much to maintain the reputation of the Aberdeen Medical School, and his 'Textbook of Pathology' has a high reputation. He also published 'The Topography of the Brain in relation to Disease' and the 'Pathology of Bronchitis.' Recently he had devoted himself to the diseases in sheep known as "braxy" and "loup-ill," on which he wrote a Board of Agriculture Report.

A VERY remarkable meteor, three or four times as bright as Jupiter, was witnessed by many persons over a large extent of country, last Monday evening. It appeared at 7h. 34m. (Greenwich time), and in about five seconds passed from near θ Orionis, in a north-easterly direction, to beyond β Andromedæ, and then exploded. The train remained visible in the sky for more than an hour and a half after the disappearance of the meteor.

THE sun will be vertical over the equator shortly after 6 o'clock (Greenwich time) on the morning of the 21st prox., which is therefore the day of the vernal equinox. The moon will be full at 2h. 56m. on the morning of the 7th, and new at 8h. 11m. on the evening of the 21st; she will be in perigee a little before noon on the latter day, about which time exceptionally high tides may be expected. An occultation of γ Cancri will take place on the evening (5h. 32m. to 6h. 27m.) of the 3rd, and of κ Virginis on the night of the 10th: disappearance 44m. after midnight, reappearance at 1h. 37m. on the morning of the 11th. The planet Mercury will be at greatest western elongation from the sun on the 9th, and will be visible in the morning during the greatest part of the month, passing from Capricornus, through Aquarius, into Pisces. Venus, some distance to the east of Mercury, will pass from Aquarius into Pisces on the 25th, moving in a north-easterly direction; she will be in close conjunction with the moon (about nineteen hours before it becomes new) at 1 o'clock on the morning of the 21st. Mars is moving nearly easterly in Sagittarius, and rises a little earlier each morning; he will be near the gibbous moon on the 17th. Jupiter continues to be very brilliant all night in Leo, to the south-east of Regulus. Saturn is in Pisces, and sets earlier each evening, so that he will cease to be visible before the end of next month.

ASTRONOMICAL photographers will do their utmost to note as soon as possible the registration of Halley's comet on their plates; but it is doubtful whether they will succeed before the autumn. The comet's place in the heavens is now, according to the calculations of Messrs. Cowell and Crommelin, in the northern part of the constellation Orion. But its distance from us is increasing again until May, when it will amount to more than five times that of the sun, afterwards diminishing, to about twice the sun's distance at the end of October.

ANOTHER small planet was photographically discovered by Herr Kopff at the Astrophysical Institute, Königstuhl, Heidelberg, on the 18th ult.

DURING her examination of photographic plates obtained by M. Blazko at the Moscow Observatory, Madame Ceraski has detected variability in a small star situated in the constellation Cepheus. The changes of brightness appear to range between $9\frac{1}{2}$ and $10\frac{1}{2}$ magnitudes; but the registrations being scattered over a considerable time, neither the period nor the type of variability can at present be assigned. The star will be reckoned in a general list as var. 3, 1909, Cephei.

WE have received a copy of the Report of the Superintendent (Capt. W. J. Barnette, U.S. Navy) of the United States Naval Observatory. Continued activity is shown in both the meridian and equatorial departments, but nothing of a special character. On the 21st of August Prof. W. S. Eichelberger was placed in charge of all observational work, an arrangement still in force. The sun, the moon, the large planets, standard stars, and zodiacal stars were observed with the 9-inch transit-circle—most of the satellites, three comets, fifty-eight small planets, and casual phenomena with the 26-inch equatorial. The branch observatory at the naval station, Tutuila, Samoa, was discontinued in May, because the climatic and other conditions were found by experience to be such as gave no hope that the expectations with which it was established in 1904 could ever be realized. The American Nautical Almanac Office has been since the 1st of October, 1907, under the charge of Prof. M. Updegraff (U.S. Navy).

FINE ARTS

A History of Painting in Italy. By J. A. Crowe and G. B. Cavalcaselle. Edited by Langton Douglas. Vol. III. (John Murray.)

(First Notice.)

By far the most important section of this third and latest volume of Mr. Murray's reissue of Crowe and Cavalcaselle's standard 'History' is devoted to the Sienese masters of the fourteenth century and of the earlier years of the century following—from the time of Duccio, that is, to that of Taddeo di Bartolo, and his immediate followers. The remaining space is given over to the less important early painters of Umbria, the Marches, and Northern Italy in general. Cavalcaselle's text—for as Cavalcaselle's it must, after all, in substance be considered notwithstanding its English guise and all Crowe's literary partnership and invaluable assistance—does not call for particular discussion here. Sufficient is it to say that, although in its general trend the criticism of the past thirty years has gone on building upon Cavalcaselle's foundations, without radically separating from his general estimates and judgments, the great Italian critic was not always so successful in his treatment of the artists of Siena as he was in regard to those of other schools. Still, admitting that an adequate history of Sienese art yet remains to be written, and allowing that Cavalcaselle may, at times, have failed fully to realize the true nature and aims of this particular school, one must say that he was an infinitely fairer judge of the earlier Sienese painters of the Trecento than he was of their successors of the subsequent century, in regard to whom his somewhat academic standpoint of appraisal—emancipated as it was for his day—often prevented him from showing just appreciation of a beauty and refinement which have only of recent years disclosed themselves to a discerning few. It is not, therefore, with Cavalcaselle, so much as with his most recent commentator, that we have here to deal.

After a careful perusal of Mr. Douglas's notes, we can but confess to a certain disappointment. What could be said of his last volume can be repeated with equal truth of this. To our mind Mr. Douglas does not seem fully to have appreciated either the responsibilities or the opportunities of his task. Neither in scope nor in character do his notes appear to fulfil the legitimate requirements of a present-day edition of what is, when all is said and done, one of the most important works of its kind yet written. Interesting and useful as many of these notes may be, they are of too limited a nature to provide the student with anything approaching a comprehensive synopsis of recent critical opinion in connexion with the vast material handled by Cavalcaselle. In limiting ourselves, for the moment, to that portion of the present volume which treats of the School of Siena, we are amply illustrating our objections to Mr. Douglas's too subjective methods. Thanks to the small but active group of critics who, of late years, have given special attention to Sienese painting and its varied and far-reaching influences, knowledge of Siena's art has grown apace. Mr. Douglas himself may rightly be counted as belonging to this company of enthusiastic students, and his contributions to the subject of their efforts are sufficiently well known; but he is, after all, only one among a number, and his individual opinion is far from representative of their work as a whole. What has been accomplished by Mr. Douglas's colleagues cannot well be put aside. Numberless Sienese paintings, scattered through the public and private collections of Europe and America, under misleading and erroneous attributions, have been restored by them to their real authors. The original lists of Cavalcaselle have been doubled, and in many cases tripled, by the discovery of works which have frequently cast an entirely new light upon the character and development of the painters to whom they are due. Numerous articles of a more general critical nature have appeared in various reviews, and more than one book of real value and interest has been published, within the past decade, on the long-neglected theme of Siena's art. In a few instances Mr. Douglas has taken cognizance of these additions to our knowledge; occasionally he has, by his own unaided efforts, shed some new light on unsolved problems; but the greater portion of the work accomplished by his contemporaries has met with no recognition at his hands. Its suppression or omission is as much an injustice to the reader as to the critics in question themselves. Mr. Douglas's additions, for example, to Cavalcaselle's original lists of the different painters' works, are surprisingly meagre, and comprise, in many cases, but a minor part of those which have been published by authoritative critics during recent years. Nor has Mr. Douglas always been at the pains of quoting others where quotation was their due. In a further notice we shall comment on some of his remarks in detail.

"FAIR WOMEN" AT THE NEW GALLERY.

By this show the "Internationals" prove themselves once more so admirable a body of organizers that we are tempted to wonder whether, if they had been given the handling of a winter exhibition at Burlington House admittedly aiming at the rehabilitation of modern painting, they might not have succeeded better than the Royal Academy. Even in the limited scope of the present exhibition, and handicapped as they are by the necessity of conforming to a catchpenny title, they have done good service in the way of ridding us of just a little of that superstitious reverence for Old Masters, as such, which is a serious barrier to modern artistic development.

To perform this public service is simplicity itself. It suffices to exhibit constantly Old Masters and the best modern work side by side on equal terms. We do not wish to forget the fine qualities of the former—their particular points of superiority to the work of to-day. We desire that it should be for such actual merits only that they should be appraised above the moderns—that we should be offered an opportunity of judging which of the latter bear best such comparisons. Long enough have the two been shown in watertight compartments which we enter predisposed, in the one case for reverence, in the other for carping.

The Georgiana, Duchess of Devonshire, and Child (134), by Sir Joshua Reynolds, hanging in the place of honour in the West Room, is a picture of worldwide fame, and if we compare it with Mr. J. J. Shannon's attempts at similar portraiture (204-6), we doubtless feel the superiority of the earlier painting, because almost inevitably the man who attempts to repeat the fashionable sentiment of a previous century does so at the expense of sincerity. On the other hand, we may look from the eighteenth-century canvas to the frankly contemporary work of Mr. Gerald Festus Kelly in the same room (Mrs. M. V. Leveaux, 124) without any sense of stepping to a lower plane of portraiture. This picture is the best work the artist has yet shown, and, if it does not represent his powers too favourably, marks him as one of the finest of living portrait painters. The more complex technique of Sir Joshua is obviously captivating—too obviously when, as in this instance, its lusciousness is purchased at the expense of much vague and faulty structure, much accidental smearing of sloppy paint. If paint so loosely handled takes on a certain subtlety with age, so that there are fragments of great superficial beauty, we are reminded by Mr. Kelly's picture that new paint cleanly set down for what it is worth has a sober dignity of its own—the beauty, in this instance, of simplicity and a strangely attractive moderation. Its slightly austere splendour suits the character of the sitter better than the rather specious glamour of Sir Joshua fits the delicate theme he handles, the naïveté and significance of which become sophisticated in his hands. He would never be so tactless as to look at his sitters with greater seriousness than they relished, and in this exhibition of Fair Women we might note this as the general trend of artistic development—that the earlier painters aimed at making their sitters fair, while the modern artist above all shows them as women. The taste that prefers the former attitude is not invariably a sign of superior culture, but is tinctured with the ordinary appetite for flattery rather than truth.

A real aloofness from the fashionable prettiness of the moment characterizes the typical modern painter. It may be disastrous to his prospects of success, but at least it is not a sign of commonness of mind, and the work which here represents the protagonist of the modern movement is a fine example of the paramount value of sincerity. In the nobler sense of the word Manet's portrait of his mother (122) is surely not less beautiful or less aristocratic than the productions of the best of the eighteenth-century Englishmen whose work hangs near it. Even the charming Gainsboroughs, Mrs. Elliott (135) and Lady Clarges (136), have hardly the look of fine breeding of this astonishing old lady, who is rendered with a fearless insight entirely worthy of her. How different are the means by which these painters secure the continuity of the flesh tints with the other tones of the picture! Gainsborough gets it with a mesh of fine tones quivering with delicate movement, Reynolds with a golden bath in which all the colours float, Manet by an audacious excursion into the flesh painting of the very tones of the black dress. This apparently alien element, moreover, is not blended in liquid fashion, as Reynolds blends a similarly distributed note of red in his carnations, but is left a stark statement, with nothing but the justice of its proportions to make it tolerable.

Mr. John's Woman Smiling (181) is not so highly concentrated a piece of draughtsmanship as Manet's, the head being much more vital than the rest of the figure; but it is far the best painting the artist has done, and the sincerity and certainty of its suave modelling are masculine qualities which make the picture a formidable neighbour. The penetrating, rather bitter smile of Mr. John's lady seems directed at the artificial presentment of The Duchess of Sutherland (179), by Mr. Sargent, which hangs close by, wherein the painter—perhaps at the challenge of Mr. Shannon—has produced a triumph of showy insignificance. Yet if, instead of this, the lady had had for neighbour the daintier eighteenth-century Duchess of Devonshire, we should probably still have felt the same sinister quality in her smile. Mr. Wilson Steer is of all these moderns most in sympathy with the eighteenth century—with Fragonard, perhaps, rather than the Englishmen—and by the delicacy and bloom of its colour his Portrait of Mrs. Styan (180) is equal to Fragonard at his best. In such comparison, however, the Englishman would seem a little lacking in compact logic of form, his looseness of texture resulting in an over-material look in the lady's features, compared with a slightly vapoury appearance about the head as a whole.

Along with the works of Mr. Steer, Mr. John, and Mr. Kelly, the large portrait (153) by Mr. Simon Bussy ranks as not unworthy to be set beside the best of the retrospective portion of the exhibition. Mr. Steer is a decorator with an eighteenth-century taste and an impressionist technique; Mr. Bussy an ultra-modern painter with a love for the traditional use of handsome unfretted paint. In theory the future should be his; but while we honour this large and ambitious canvas, rich in distinguished qualities, we feel that it is indeed partly by theory that he is doing his painting. It is curious to compare his severely rhythmic design with the easy unconsciousness of Courbet's superb flower piece, No. 131 (the figure in this picture is negligible), a masterly example of the painter's practice of starting in the most sombre depths of the palette, and shouldering his way up in ponderous swayings from glowering red to sombre green, till he bursts forth in a prodigal spatter of creamy whites of unctuous quality only half disengaged from the full-coloured gloom. No finer piece of virtuosity than this has been shown for a long time, the Monticellis included in the collection being but scattered and uncertain fumbings at what Courbet grasped firmly. We refer here to the typical Monticellis of romantic subjects, for there is a weirdly devised Mère de l'Artiste (227) which is like Rembrandt, if we can imagine a Rembrandt more deliberately fantastic as a colourist, and with just a little less than his usual intimacy of characterization. Virtuosity of slimmer quality, showing small grasp of form, and an absorption in the superficial qualities of paint which seems more astonishing every time it is seen, is to be found in Whistler's Symphony in White No. 3 (160). In the lighter scale of colour it has something of the same flimsy charm which we find in the deep tones of The Fairy Princess (157) and The Message (162), which show the combined work of Matthew Maris and Monticelli. Heavily charged with the same romantic sentiment, which belongs perhaps to the period as much as to the artists, is Millais's Eve of St. Agnes (137), but it has the advantage of being handled by an artist of greater staying power and deeper insight—an insight here so undeniable as to raise again the question why it later became obscured.

It will be seen from the foregoing that the exhibition at the New Gallery is of such interest as to tempt a reviewer to a notice beyond his limits. We can therefore only briefly chronicle that Miss Alison Preston (202), by Mr. George Lambert, while common in design, shows in painting a little return towards his much finer quality of a couple of years ago, and note the presence of some of the very best work of Burne-Jones (145 and 149) and the Belgian Alfred Stevens (155), and an attractive example of Madame Morizot (219), already perhaps slightly dimmed by age. The collection of the work of the late Charles Conder is hardly representative, a painted dress (114) being the finest exhibit. Among the abundance of interesting work we had almost forgotten even such a masterpiece as the Trois Danseuses (40) by Degas.

The collection of sculpture is enriched by two examples from the hand of M. Rodin and a small collection of works by Mr. Alfred Gilbert. None of the works shown is, we think, new, but they are fairly representative, the Old Fisherman's Head (294) and the Sir Richard Owen (291) showing Mr. Gilbert's powers of delicate, sensitive modelling, the Seal and the Preston Key (A and C 290), his polished craftsmanship and rich design, and it is above all when working within such apparently modest and compact limits that his greatness is apparent. The careless profusion of the Presentation Cup (307), on the contrary, is expressive of the other side of Mr. Gilbert's artistic character—the dangerous facility of imagination which dupes the man who should be its master, and pushes him to artistic enterprises on a scale not perhaps beyond his powers, but demanding more support than any artist can count on, in an age like our own, to bring them to fruition.

EXCAVATIONS IN EGYPT.

THE exploring season in Egypt has begun well, and there are already reports of successful efforts on the part of different well-known explorers. The Director-General of the Service des Antiquités, M. Maspero, passed through Luxor on Christmas Day on his annual tour of inspection, and went on to Nubia, whence he will return in time for the Congress of Archæology to be held at Cairo in April. The great Museum over which he presides has received several additions this year, one of them being a statue of alabaster of Men-kau-Ra, or Mycerinus, the fifth king, as is generally supposed, of the Fourth or Pyramid-building Dynasty. The statue, which is nearly twice the size of life, shows a beautifully modelled head with a wide and rather flat nose, and a long upper lip, which lends some colour to the legend preserved of his immorality, though Herodotus, followed in Matthew Arnold's poem, makes him a just ruler. The whole expression of his face offers a strong contrast to the majestic repose of the large granite statue of Khaf-ra or Chephren, which is its neighbour in the Museum. The Mycerinus statue was discovered at Gizeh by the American archæologist Dr. Reisner, who found on the same spot some slabs of green schist, bearing in high relief an upright figure of the same king, between the goddess Hathor and another deity who is evidently the chief divinity of a nome, and has by her side a standard with emblems. It is said that Dr. Reisner has found several examples of this tablet; and as in the two exhibited in the Museum the emblems on the standards differ, it is a fair inference that one was made for every nome in Egypt. If so, it is to be hoped that they will be speedily published, for hardly anything would do more to fill the gaps in our knowledge alike of the early history of Egypt and the Egyptian religion than an accurate knowledge of the nome signs. It is also somewhat disconcerting to those who have pronounced Hathor a foreign importation, to find her appearing so early in Egyptian history.

At Karnak, M. Legrain is continuing the magnificent work of restoration to which he has devoted so many years of his life, and the great hypostyle hall now appears nearly as Rameses II. left it. It is noteworthy that in effecting this most useful work M. Legrain has used no means but those employed by the original builders, the fallen pillars having been gradually raised to their positions by ramps or inclined planes of earth. He has also discovered to the north of the temple a prehistoric cemetery which has already yielded some results, and from which further discoveries may be expected. M. de Morgan in his 'Recherches sur l'Origine de l'Égypte ancienne' some years ago included Karnak among his prehistoric sites, and the result abundantly justifies his conclusions. Across the river, Mr. Theodore M. Davis is continuing his excellent work at the Bibân el Moluk, or Valley of the Kings, with the assistance of Mr. Harold Jones, and has discovered yet another tomb of great interest, although it is too soon to decide whether it was built for a king or other royal personage. The tomb of Si-Ptah already shows signs of damage by peeling, and it is much to be wished that means could be taken to secure copies of the inscriptions on its walls while there is still time. Although these are almost entirely chapters of the 'Book of the Dead,' and differ only in one or two places from the Theban recension published by M. Naville, every copy of that extraordinary collection of prayers, hymns, and spells is of interest to the Egyptologist. A complete publication of the inscriptions in the tomb of Horemheb is said to be nearly ready, and will doubtless be on the munificent scale adopted by Mr. Davis in his other publications. Signor Schiaparelli is also continuing his excavations in the valley near Medinet Habu known as the Tombs of the Queens, and has even added to his former brilliant discoveries. All the tombs previously discovered and opened by him have been left in perfectly good order and preservation, and only the unavoidable infiltration of water can now destroy the wonderful delicacy and colour of the paintings in them. In this case also speedy publication is desirable.

At Abydos, Mr. Ayrton, working for the Egypt Exploration Fund, has discovered and excavated a temple—probably funerary in character—of Thothmes III. in a line between the Temple of Rameses and what is known as the great Temenos of Osiris. Two small inscriptions of Thothmes III. leave no doubt as to the correctness of the attribution; but Mr. Ayrton is now searching for a secondary tomb of the same king, which he considers likely to be in the neighbourhood. Above the temple already discovered are the remains of a Coptic church in fairly good condition, and presenting some peculiar characteristics, which Mr. Ayrton hopes to be able to preserve. He is also waiting for the arrival of M. Naville, the chief of the expedition, to attack the Omm el-Gaab, or Tombs of the Kings of the First Dynasty, which will, it is hoped, now be cleared with scientific completeness. Pending this, he and Mr. Loat have paid a necessarily hurried visit to a predynastic cemetery at Mahasna which was being looted by native plunderers, and have unearthed there more than sixty untouched burials, which have yielded a rich harvest of predynastic ivories (including a very strange statuette of a male figure with a minimum of clothing), some pottery with both painted and sculptured figures of hippopotami, some wonderful stone and ivory mace-heads, and perhaps the earliest engraving known in the shape of an incised figure of a lion strongly resembling the prehistoric paintings found at Brassempouy, Mas d'Azil, and elsewhere. From the Coptic church spoken of above he has also obtained a long Coptic inscription of interest.

On the adjoining concession Prof. Garstang of Liverpool University has opened, on the road leading past the village of El Arabat, a series of tombs which appear to belong to the Fifth or Sixth Dynasty, but exhibit a mode of burial which, it is believed, has not yet been recorded. The skeleton is found lying on its back with the legs crossed, in the remains of a wooden coffin, on the middle of the lid of which was placed a large inverted shallow pot or pan of red polished ware and of beautiful workmanship. The coffin also contained in most instances a copper mirror held in front of the face, some smaller pots, and alabaster vases; and, in one case at least, a great quantity of copper implements of small size, but apparently intended for actual use. The human bones in these graves are those of a very tall race, while the women seem to have been buried in the same way as the men, and none of the bones shows any sign of mummification. It is most extraordinary that in none of these graves was found any inscribed object—the provisional dating given being obtained from the shape of the pottery—although one of them contained an alabaster table of great size and exquisite workmanship. Prof. Garstang has also obtained in the so-called "Fort" at Shuneh many jar-sealings of King Khasekhemui, the king of the Second Dynasty who united in his own person the leadership of the apparently rival confederations of Horus and Set, some of the sealings being quite different from those obtained by other excavators on the same site. The discovery by the same explorer of a tomb with an inscribed door frame and a table of offerings, the first of which, at any rate, is of the Twelfth Dynasty, affords promise of an abundant harvest in the season just begun.

Since the above was written M. Naville has arrived at Abydos, and the attack on the Omm el-Gaab site has begun. It has already yielded some seals which put the identification of King Den with the so-called Marneit beyond doubt, and has laid bare two roads bordered with pottery which have been missed by former excavators.

THE BRITISH SCHOOL AT ROME.

THE first open meeting for the present season was held on Monday, the 1st inst., in the Library of the School, and was attended by a numerous audience, including the British Ambassador (Sir Rennell Rodd), representatives of the other foreign Schools, Italian archæologists, and members of the British colony in Rome. Two papers were read, both being illustrated by lantern-slides.

The first, by Mr. H. Stuart Jones, ex-Director of the School, was entitled 'Miscellanea Capitolina' and touched on various topics connected with the work on the catalogue of the sculptures of the municipal collections in Rome, which the British School has in preparation. Mr. Stuart Jones dealt first of all with an altar in the Capitoline Museum, dedicated to Jupiter Optimus Maximus Sol Serapis by Scipio Orfitus, and assigned hitherto by archæologists (among them Mrs. Strong, who in her 'Roman Sculpture,' pl. xcvii., gives photographs of two sides of the altar) to the end of the third century A.D., to which period (about 295) the inscription undoubtedly belongs. He pointed out that the style of the sculptures was by no means in agreement with that hypothesis; that the figure riding on a bull on the back of the altar represented (the head is in part restored) an armed Syrian solar divinity; and that the altar belonged to the first century A.D., as, indeed, the style of the sculpture, and especially of the fine oak wreath on the front, rather indicates. The conclusion was, then, that the altar had been used over again by a descendant of its original dedicator, who was probably either the consul of A.D. 51, banished by Nero, or his son, banished and afterwards executed by order of Domitian. This use of older monuments a second time is by no means without parallel.

Another altar in the same Museum, also dedicated to the Sun, has again been attributed to the third century (Strong, op. cit., pl. xvi.); but it was pointed out that the style of the sculpture, and the lettering and contents of the inscription (a dedication by freedmen bearing the name Claudius, who formed part of the staff of guards of the horrea Galbæ, the warehouses by the Tiber, which had belonged to the Sulpicii, and subsequently became part of the imperial property), go to indicate the early Flavian period as a far more probable date. On one side of the altar is represented a solar divinity mounting a chariot drawn by hippogriffs, identified by a Palmyrene inscription as Malakbel, the chief god of Palmyra; the inscription also shows that the members of the warehouse police-force who dedicated the altar were of Palmyrene extraction. On the other sides we see a figure with the attributes of Saturn, to be identified as the divinity of Infinite Time who was worshipped both in the Mithraic religion and in the various Semitic solar cults; and also a representation of the child Azizus ("the Mighty One") emerging from the branches of a cypress tree. The altar furnishes the earliest evidence for the presence of the Palmyrene cult in Rome, since the earliest inscriptions from the sanctuary of this worship outside the Porta Portuensis belong to the time of Hadrian.

A third point dealt with was the question of the provenance of the famous Portland Vase, formerly in the Barberini Library, and now in the British Museum. The statement, hitherto universally accepted, that it was found within the sarcophagus in the Capitoline Museum which came from the tomb known as the Monte del Grano on the Via Tuscolana, has no foundation in fact. It rests, indeed, on two baseless conjectures—first, that the figures on the lid of the sarcophagus represent Severus Alexander and his mother Mammæa; and secondly, that the vase represents the birth of that emperor. The first mention of the vase is to be found in the work of Girolamo Tezi ('Ædes Barberinæ,' 1642), who conjectures (p. 26) that it contained the ashes of Alexander Severus; but Pietro Sante Bartoli ('Gli Antichi Sepolcri,' 1697, pl. 84) is the first to commit himself definitely to the statement that it was found within the sarcophagus. From his time this view gradually acquired currency, and is unhesitatingly accepted by some of the eighteenth-century writers on the Capitoline Museum, who even assert that the sarcophagus itself was found in the time of Urban VIII. (1623–44), who was a member of the Barberini family. The last assertion can, however, be refuted by contemporary documents. Lanciani ('Storia degli Scavi,' ii. 87) has published the official record, from the Capitoline archives, of the sitting of the Communal Council on May 4th, 1582, in which it was decided that it should be examined by a commission, to determine whether it ought to be acquired by the Commune. It did not find a place in the municipal collection until 1590, the date given in the contemporary inscription recording the fact, which was still to be seen on the pedestal which supported the sarcophagus early in the eighteenth century. A contemporary writer, Flaminio Vacca, recording the discovery, says not a word about the vase, which he would certainly not have failed to mention. It must therefore be concluded that the provenance of the vase is absolutely unknown, in default of further evidence.

The Director, Dr. Thomas Ashby, followed with a description of the villa of the Quintilii. It is situated to the left of the Via Appia, about five miles from Rome, and, though its ruins are hardly as imposing as those of Sette Bassi between the Via Tuscolana and the Via Latina, its remains cover a greater extent of ground than those of any of the ancient villas in the neighbourhood of the city. It commands a very fine view in all directions, especially towards the Alban Hills and the Sabine Mountains. It appears to be identical with the fundus ad sex columnas mentioned in a donation of 961 A.D. in the archives of S. Gregorio; while the appellation Statuario appears in bulls of the two Savelli Popes of the thirteenth century, Honorius III. and Honorius IV., and is still preserved in the name of the small stream which flows just below. The ruins only began to be called Roma Vecchia apparently in the eighteenth century, and this nickname ("old Rome") was applied also to the villa of Sette Bassi, already mentioned, and to the villa of the Gordiani (Tor de' Schiavi, on the Via Prænestina), the result being that there is often considerable difficulty in discovering the exact provenance of works of art mentioned as having been found "at Roma Vecchia" during the many excavations which took place towards the end of the eighteenth century. It seems probable, for instance, that the sculptures in the British Museum recorded as coming from Roma Vecchia really belong to the villa of Sette Bassi. The true nature of the ruins was, indeed, not yet known: some believed them to be those of a pagus, or village; and it was only the discovery in 1827–9 of lead pipes bearing the names of the brothers Quintilius Condianus and Quintilius Maximus that revealed the fact that this was their villa, of which Commodus took possession, after he had had them executed from motives of jealousy, about 182 A.D.

The excavations that have up till now been made within the area of the villa have been rather devoted to the discovery of works of art than to the recovery of its plan and internal arrangements, and these are by no means altogether clear. The most prominent remains of the villa now visible consist of two large rectangular halls, one of which was clearly a bath, while the other was decorated with fountains and statues. As has been said, the ruins are widely scattered, and the villa appears to have consisted rather of isolated buildings than of edifices having a unity of plan. The portion close to the Via Appia has been much altered. Originally a long narrow garden, of the shape of a race-course or hippodromus (a name for a garden of that form which, as Pliny's letters show, was in vogue in his day), ran from the high road towards the main buildings of the villa. Later, the garden was much extended in width, but another hippodromus was formed to the south-east of the villa itself.

The plans hitherto available are inadequate and inaccurate, and Dr. Ashby's description, which will appear shortly in the Italian archaeological periodical Ausonia, will be accompanied by new plans by Mr. F. G. Newton, a student of the School. These were exhibited at the meeting, as was also a fine series of coloured drawings by the same gentleman of the columbarium of Pomponius Hylas near the Porta Latina, the best-preserved specimen of its class, containing some important remains of paintings. It is hoped that the funds of the School will permit of the publication of these drawings in the forthcoming volume of its 'Papers'; but during the past year its income has by no means been equal to its necessary expenditure, which must be maintained if its efficiency and the standard of its publications are not to deteriorate.

THE BRITISH SCHOOL AT ATHENS.

MR. A. J. B. WACE at the meeting on the 12th inst. gave an account of the successful excavation undertaken last year at the mound of Zerelia, near Almyro in Thessaly. The previous identification of the place with the site of the temple of Athena Itonia was proved incorrect, though slight traces of a Hellenistic settlement came to light. The positive result of the excavation was the discovery of eight superimposed prehistoric settlements, well stratified, of which all except the uppermost date from the Stone Age. The pottery extends without a break from about 2500 B.C. to 1200–1100 B.C. Painted ware (red or white) is commoner in the earlier than in the later levels, and the general fabric of the pottery tends to degenerate. The stone implements, on the contrary, show considerable development. An important point chronologically is the occurrence of (presumably imported) late Mycenaean (L.M. III.) sherds in the latest settlement in connexion with characteristically Bronze Age cist-tombs. This proves that Thessaly, as compared with Southern Greece, was affected by the culture of the Bronze Age at an extremely late date.

Mr. A. M. Woodward discussed a group of Spartan inscriptions mentioning the "god Lycurgus" as chief magistrate (patronomos), to which office he was elected eleven years in succession. Lycurgus, as we know from literature, was worshipped in Sparta as a god, and had a temple there. The practice of appointing gods to public offices is not unknown in Asia Minor, but was hitherto unrecorded in Greece: in such cases the charges of the magistracy were defrayed by the temple treasury concerned. As Sparta was extremely prosperous at the date of these inscriptions (second century A.D.), we can hardly suppose that poverty made her citizens unwilling to support the burdens of the office: moreover, the continued re-election to an annual magistracy is remarkable. But it should be noted that though the code of Lycurgus continued in force down to the end of paganism, it seems to have met with some opposition: several citizens are praised in honorary inscriptions expressly for their energy in defending it. It is thus a seductive hypothesis that the magistracy of the god Lycurgus covers a political move intended to protect the Lycurgan system at a time when it was threatened with subversion.

VAN DYCK AT THE NATIONAL GALLERY.

NINE life-size portraits by Van Dyck have just been lent by Lord Lucas to the National Gallery for a lengthy period, and, as we go to press, are being hung in the East Vestibule. We describe them in the order in which they hang from left to right.

The first is a 'Portrait of Rachel de Rouvigny, First Wife of Thomas, Earl of Southampton, High Treasurer of England, as Fortune.' She wears a blue dress, is seated on clouds, and is in full view. The picture was exhibited at the British Institution in 1815, at Manchester in 1857, at the Old Masters in 1873 (No. 111), and at the Van Dyck Exhibition held at the Grosvenor Gallery in 1887 (No. 42). It was purchased out of the collection of Lord D'Arcy in 1683. Repetitions are at Welbeck and Althorp, and the finished sketch belongs to the Duke of Devonshire.

To the right hangs the 'Portrait of the Marques de Leganez.' A label on the back of the canvas states that it was "bought of Mr. Birch of Norwood, 1834." The 'Portrait of Madame Kirke,' daughter of Sir Robert and sister of Thomas Killigrew, and lady-in-waiting to Henrietta Maria, represents her in a gown of amber satin with a brown scarf which crosses her body diagonally. It was "bought by the Earl of Kent in 1682 out of Sir P. Lely's Collection," and was exhibited at the British Institution in 1815, at Manchester in 1857, at the Grosvenor Gallery in 1887 (No. 58), and at the Old Masters in 1900 (No. 5).

On the east wall, and to the left of the door, is hung the gem of the collection, the 'Children of the Balbi Family,' which was probably painted at Genoa about 1622. It was exhibited at the Old Masters in 1871 (No. 148), at the Grosvenor Gallery in 1887 (No. 29), and at Messrs. Agnew's winter exhibition in 1906 (No. 21).

To the right of the door leading from the East Vestibule into Room XVI. is placed the 'Lord John and Lord Bernard Stuart, Sons of the Duke of Lennox.' "Bought of Caspars by the Earl of Kent in 1682," it was exhibited at the Old Masters in 1873 (No. 117).

The 'Portrait of an Unknown Man,' in a black dress and wearing a white ruff and cuffs, was "bought of Mr. John Cocks in 1699," according to a label on the back. It was exhibited at the Grosvenor Gallery in 1887 (No. 26), and at the Old Masters in 1873 (No. 71). It is not in the best possible condition. On the same wall we have the 'Portrait of Elizabeth, Second Wife of the Fourth Earl of Southampton.' She wears a white dress and a light blue scarf. The canvas was seen at the Old Masters in 1873 (No. 222), and again in 1900 (No. 127), and at the Grosvenor Gallery in 1887 (No. 101). It was bought by Anthony, Earl of Kent, in 1683, from Lord D'Arcy, and has been engraved by R. Thompson.

The last of these pictures in the East Vestibule is the 'Portrait of Anne, Wife of Robert, Lord Rich,' in a black dress, which at one time belonged to Lord Wharton and the Duke of Wharton.

Exigencies of space have made it necessary to hang in the West Vestibule the ninth of these Van Dycks, which represents 'Philip, Lord Wharton,' wearing a breastplate, and holding a baton in his right hand. It was formerly in the collection of Lord Orford, and serves to remind one of the 'Philip, Lord Wharton, as a Shepherd,' at the age of nineteen, which, together with the rest of the Houghton Hall Collection, was sold in 1779 to the Empress Catherine of Russia for £35,000, and is now in the Hermitage.

SALE.

MESSRS. CHRISTIE sold on the 20th inst. the following pictures: G. F. Watts, The Coquette, 136l. Reynolds, Miss Cholmondeley, in blue dress, with pearls in her hair, 105l. French School, Portrait of a Lady, in blue and white dress, holding a mask, 123l. D. Teniers, An Interior, with three peasants before a fire, 210l.

Fine-Art Gossip.

The Burlington Magazine for March contains several interesting discoveries and suggestions. Mr. Claude Phillips points out that certain figures in a well-known Venetian picture may not unreasonably be regarded as the earliest known work of Giorgione; the finding of a half-length nude portrait by Leonardo da Vinci is announced from Italy; and Mr. Lionel Cust writes on the lost bust of Charles I. by Bernini, and in a shorter note identifies one of the Tudor portrait painters. M. Paul Lafond starts a series of articles on Spanish sculpture with the work of Juan de Juni; and there is a critical note on the landscapes of the brothers De Koninck, one of which is reproduced in photogravure as a frontispiece to the number. Indian art, the Eastern Adriatic (Mr. T. G. Jackson, R.A.), and the pottery of the Hither Orient (Mr. G. C. Pier and Dr. F. Sarre) are other prominent subjects. Mr. Weale, Mr. Campbell Dodgson, Mr. J. D. Milner, and M. Salomon Reinach also contribute notes, the last named claiming that the two accepted portraits of Joan of Arc are forged from a miniature representing Uriah the Hittite!

The Gazette des Beaux Arts for January contains an article by M. Henri Stein on Antonello da Messina. Although some of the facts have already been published by La Corte-Cailler and Giocchino di Marzo during the last five years, it is now, as M. Stein points out, clearly shown that Antonello was born in 1430, and died in February, 1479. These dates were included in the 1905 edition of the Dresden Catalogue and in the 1906 edition of the Catalogue of the Kaiser Friedrich Museum, Berlin. The current edition of the National Gallery Catalogue, issued in 1906, gives the dates of Antonello as 1444-93, but adds that it is impossible to say "what works Antonello may have produced in the last fifteen years of his life."

DURING the last few days the dates on this artist's pictures at Trafalgar Square have been altered to 1430-79. This is further proof of the excellent supervision of detail now in vogue at the Gallery.

THE fifty-fifth exhibition of the Water-Colour Society of Ireland opened this week in Dublin. The general level of the work shown is high, and the different schools of modern water-colour painting are well represented. Many admirable Irish landscape studies are shown by Irish artists.

M. PAUL ÉMILE BERTON, who died on the 15th inst., was a landscape painter of distinction, and had studied under Allongé, Delaunay, and Puvis de Chavannes. He had regularly exhibited at the Salon since 1874, having obtained medals in 1885, 1889, and 1900. His pictures were almost entirely inspired by the Forest of Fontainebleau. He was a native of Chartrettes (Seine-et-Marne).

Mlle. JULIETTE COURBET, sister of the well-known artist, has presented to the Ville de Paris six important works by her brother the "maître d'Ornans." They are mostly family portraits: one is of the artist himself with his dog, another is of the donor, a third is of the artist's father, and a fourth of Mlle. Zélie Courbet. The two others are 'Les Amants dans la Campagne' and 'Les Trois Baigneuses.' The Ville de Paris already possessed four works of the artist, and it has been decided to create a special Salle Courbet at the Petit Palais to receive these works.

AMONG the articles in the March Antiquary will be 'Notes upon the Recording of Monumental Inscriptions,' by Mr. W. B. Gerish; an illustrated paper on 'Some Very Early Types of Handguns,' by Mr. R. C. Clephan; the first part of 'The Monastic Scriptorium,' by the Rev. J. B. McGovern; and 'Natural History Notes from the Preston Churchwardens' Accounts,' by Mr. Albert Wade.

EXHIBITIONS.

SAT. (Feb. 27).—Mr. Simon Bussy's Pastels of Venice, Tyrol, and the Riviera, Goupil Gallery.
— Mezzotint and Stipple Engravings after Hoppner, Messrs. Colnaghi's Gallery.
— Miss Rachel Wheatcroft's Evening Studies in Water Colour and Tempera, Private View, New Dudley Gallery.
WED. Water-Colour by Miss Charlotte Noel, Portraits and Pictures by Miss A. V. Hammond, and Impressions in Pastel by Countess Amherst, Private View, New Dudley Gallery.

MUSIC

THE WEEK.

QUEEN'S HALL.—Mr. Beecham's Concert.

MR. THOMAS BEECHAM gave the first concert of his second series on Monday evening. There was one novelty in the programme, namely, a Symphonic Impression, 'In the Fen Country,' by Dr. Vaughan Williams. The theme heard both at the beginning and the end of the tone-poem clearly indicates a plaintive mood, and so, indeed, do all the fresh themes introduced, yet the composer has given no clue beyond the title. The more we hear of modern music, the more do we feel that a programme is needed; especially is that the case in this Symphonic "Impression." If a piece is written in sonata, rondo, or song form, a listener has something which enables him to follow the course of the music. In like manner, when a work has a poetic, or, as it seems here, a pictorial basis, it ought to be known, since form and mood or moods are determined by it. In the absence of such a key, the impression created is bound to be, and to remain, vague. Dr. Williams's music, however, is cleverly put together, and picturesque in its scoring.

Mr. Delius's 'Sea-Drift' was performed for the first time in London, but it was noticed in these columns when produced at the last Sheffield Festival. Mr. Beecham's programme opened with Berlioz's sparkling 'Carneval Romain' Overture, in which the strings of the orchestra were heard to advantage; and it ended with the same composer's 'Te Deum.' The North Staffordshire District Choir sang well in Roland Rogers's unaccompanied part-song 'The Storm,' under the direction of Mr. James Whewall; but for the impressive "Judex crederis" the voices were not sufficiently powerful.

BECHSTEIN HALL.—Mr. Henschel's Recital.

MR. HENSCHEL gave a vocal recital on Tuesday afternoon. Those among the audience who could remember the delightful recitals which he gave in London many seasons ago were pleased to find how well he has maintained his powers. As to method of vocalization and style of interpretation, they were still as fine as ever. The first group of songs by J. S. Bach, Handel, and Cimarosa, all differing in character, were rendered with masterly skill and effect: one was a sacred song, the second a bravura aria from 'Rinaldo,' and the last a lively piquant song from Cimarosa's 'Don Calandrino.' In Lieder by Beethoven and Schubert the result was equally successful. The pathos of 'Der Leiermann' was fully revealed; also the power of the wonderful 'Gruppe aus dem Tartarus.' Mr. Henschel was his own accompanist, and he could not have had one abler or more sympathetic.

Musical Gossip.

MISS FANNY DAVIES gave an interesting pianoforte recital last Saturday afternoon at Steinway Hall. The first part of her programme was devoted to old Italian composers, including Frescobaldi and A. Scarlatti. The latter as a composer of harpsichord music probably appeared for the first time on a concert programme. Mozart and Beethoven were afterwards represented, the one by his Sonata in E flat, the other by his in A flat, Op. 110. Miss Davies rendered justice both to the Italian and German masters; in fact, she was in her best form.

M. GODOWSKI, as usual, attracted a large audience to his Chopin recital on Wednesday afternoon. He gave a magnificent performance of the Sonata in B flat minor, and also played the four Impromptus and the four Scherzos, but in the latter there was now and again a tendency to exaggerate tone and sentiment. But all great pianists are tempted at times to gain public applause by means which they themselves know to be meretricious.

PERFORMANCES of Hérold's delightful opera 'Le Pré aux Clercs' will be given by the students of the Guildhall School of Music on Thursday and Friday evenings in next week and on Saturday afternoon. The last opera given was Gluck's 'Armide,' and we are glad to find that another has been selected which has not been heard for many years in London.

MESSRS. SOTHEY & Co. will sell by auction on Monday a clearly written autograph letter of Beethoven to Heinrich Joseph von Collin, author of the tragedy 'Coriolanus,' for which Beethoven wrote his overture of that name.

THE discovery of two violin concertos by Joseph Haydn just before the celebration of the hundredth anniversary of the composer's birth is indeed opportune. Joh. Gottl. Im. Breitkopf, son of the founder of the Breitkopf & Härtel firm, had, somewhere about the middle of the eighteenth century put on one side a quantity of manuscript music, and it was amongst this that the parts of the two works in question were found. In a supplement to a thematic catalogue drawn up by the firm in 1769, the concertos were indicated, but until now were regarded as lost. They were written between 1766 and 1769 for Luigi Tomasini, leader of the Prince's band at Esterhaza, and in a catalogue in Haydn's own hand the one in C is marked as "fatto per il Luigi." Haydn greatly admired this violinist's style of interpreting his music. Tomasini played a concerto at a Tonkünstler-Societät concert in 1775—his only public appearance in Vienna—and possibly it was one of the two works in question.

PERFORMANCES NEXT WEEK.

CONC.	Concert, 3.30, Royal Albert Hall.
SUN.	Sunday Society Concert, 3.30, Queen's Hall.
—	Sunday League Concert, 7, Queen's Hall.
MON.	London Symphony Orchestra, 8, Queen's Hall.
TUES.	Leighton House Chamber Concert, 4.30, Leighton House.
—	Bach Choir Concert, 8, Queen's Hall.
—	Miss Auriol Jones's Pianoforte Recital, 8.30, Bechstein Hall.
WED.	Philharmonic Concert, 8, Queen's Hall.
THURS.	Mr. Rudolf Weinman's Violin Recital, 8.15, Bechstein Hall.
—	Broadwood Concert, 8.30, Aeolian Hall.
—	Mr. Cecil J. Sharp's Concert Lecture, 8.30, Steinway Hall.
—	Opera Performance by the Students, 8, Guildhall School of Music.
FRI.	Kreisler's Violin Recital, 3, Queen's Hall.
—	Opera Performance by the Students, 8, Guildhall School of Music.
SAT.	Chappell's Ballad Concert, 2.30, Queen's Hall.
—	Miss Rita Jay's Vocal Recital, 3, Steinway Hall.
—	Opera Performance by the Students, 3, Guildhall School of Music.

DRAMA

THE WEEK.

HAYMARKET.—She Stoops to Conquer.

THE latest revival of 'She Stoops to Conquer' leaves a curious impression of incongruity. The company engaged at the Haymarket consists of players fairly equally divided between the old school and the new, and they do not mix well. Such members of the cast as belong to the former furnish acting that exaggerates the scenes of broad fun in the direction of buffoonery; interpolates business which, though it may often be time-honoured, has no justification in the text; and generally by its extravagances converts the comedy into farce. Meantime the younger school is disposed, with one notable exception, to substitute refined for robust humour, to employ a diction that is rather slow and uncertain, and to miss points in phrasing and emphasis which at any rate were secured in revivals more directly governed by stage custom. Now, though the note of Goldsmith's play, as distinguished from that of 'The School for Scandal,' is one of humour rather than wit, it ought certainly to be treated as a comedy. A Tony Lumpkin and a Miss Neville who are constantly pinching, scratching, and making faces at one another; a Mrs. Hardcastle who is little better than a farcical old harridan are not in keeping with the author's intention. On the other hand, Goldsmith's style is much breezier than Sheridan's—he pictures a much less polite, if more characteristic side of English life in the eighteenth century, so that what is required of his interpreters is not so much formality of manners as heartiness in tone, decisiveness in speech, and unflagging spirits. The action, indeed, should dash along merrily and swiftly. But quickness of pace is scarcely the quality we get from the younger actors at the Haymarket, or, indeed, their seniors.

This lack of pace is evident throughout the rendering of the first act, wherein even the Tony Lumpkin, famous as is his performance, moves rather heavily. But it is the representative of Squire Hardcastle who illustrates best the half-and-half character of the revival. An actor of the newer generation who seeks to emulate the traditional manner, Mr. Holman Clarke suggests old-fashioned dignity, but is certainly not the full-bodied, full-blooded squire of Goldsmith's idea. He is both slight in physique and thin in voice, and fails to get pungency into the old man's share of that opening dialogue in which the playwright prepares us so neatly for Young Marlow's mistake. The sarcasms are not properly pointed, and a milder-tempered Hardcastle never walked the boards. Still, in the big tirade Mr. Clarke makes amends, and he delivers the squire's indictment of his guest with an intensity no other recent exponent of the character has attained. The Tony Lumpkin of Mr. Giddens and the Mrs. Hardcastle of Mrs. Tapping belong more definitely to the old school. Mr. Giddens's is a familiar reading, and, when its excesses are allowed for, exceedingly good. Yet it would be interesting to see in the part a younger actor who would be content not to underline Goldsmith's text, and would at the same time take the scenes faster. Mrs. Tapping's work is clever enough on farcical lines, but she is rather too ready to get a laugh at all costs. So, too, is that young but experienced actress Miss Beatrice Ferrar, who once more appears as Miss Neville, and, perhaps because of her association with Mr. Giddens, distorts the character into a minx.

The Kate Hardcastle of the revival is Miss Ethel Irving, who confesses to having never seen the play acted. Hers is a strangely constrained performance, constantly betraying timidity and nervousness. She has moments of delightful archness when she lets herself go, as in Kate's parody of the bar-room swagger of Young Marlow; she does perfectly the difficult passage in which the heroine in masquerade talks of her character as her only asset. But she lacks confidence and diction. She gets almost breathless over some of the longer sentences of her part, and she does not always phrase correctly. By contrast we have in Mr. Loraine one of the best of recent Young Marlows, possessing all the buoyancy and dash of youth. The actor shows a tendency to walk through the earlier scenes and is a little too slow in the hero's bashful passages. Perhaps, too, his manner is romantic rather than that of old comedy. But in the second act he sweeps all before him, including Miss Irving herself. It would be idle to deny, however, that his acting looks very modern by the side of that of Mr. Giddens.

HIS MAJESTY'S (AFTERNOON THEATRE).—

The High Bid: a Comedy in Three Acts.
By Henry James.

SINCE we accept from Mr. Bernard Shaw "conversations" and "discussions," we can hardly condemn Mr. James's new comedy on the ground that its only positive quality is charm of dialogue, and that it lacks incident, intrigue, and plot development. What may, however, fairly be said is that the more the two central figures of the piece exchange ideas, the less distinct their characterization becomes. Mr. James has got hold of the truth that the more sophisticated of modern folk are often carrying on two sets of conversations simultaneously, that underneath, perhaps, only betraying itself in a look or gesture, a tone or emphatic word. It is processes of this sort that Mr. James expresses in his novels and short stories, and he finds a difficulty in conveying them on the stage. 'The High Bid' shows an Englishman of old family and a vivacious American widow trying to find points of sympathy, approaching and withdrawing from each other, and finally breaking down all barriers which prevent intimacy, and frankly recognizing that they are "in love." There are other persons who nominally have their place in Mr. James's comedy, but it is a subordinate place. There is a self-made man of wealth who has secured a mortgage on the hero's manor house, and suggests his daughter's hand as the price at which it may be recovered. There is this daughter, who has her own ideas of a husband. There is an old servant of the captain's who acts as showman to visitors. But strictly the play consists of a series of duologues, and the story is one of love at first sight. It was acted with gracious dignity and restraint by Mr. Forbes Robertson, and with the most delicate sense of fun by Miss Gertrude Elliott, the actress having far the better opportunities. For players requiring drama of a less elusive kind, the Afternoon Theatre Society gave as an afterpiece 'The Sacrament of Judas,' now rechristened 'A Soul's Fight.'

'THE FROGS' AT OXFORD

THE revival of 'The Frogs' at Oxford after a lapse of seventeen years has been fully justified by success. It has been certainly the best academic performance of a Greek play (except, perhaps, the unforgotten 'Agamemnon' of nearly thirty years ago) which Oxford has staged, and the one which will best bear comparison with the greatest triumphs of Cambridge, such as 'The Eumenides.' To compare it with the Cambridge 'Birds' would be less appropriate. The Oxford performance of 'The Frogs' in 1892 was much more on the lines of the two presentations of 'The Birds' than 'The Frogs' of this year. In 'The Birds' classic propriety was frankly sacrificed to the demands of modern theatre-goers by the overwhelming prominence given to the members of the Chorus in their beautiful, but entirely pantomimic disguises. It was inevitable that this should be done if the performance was to "take" at all; for 'The Birds,' Chorus apart, is a tame, uninteresting comedy. In 'The Frogs' of 1892 there was even less compromise with classical, or pseudo-classical tradition. The play was presented, as near as could be, as a modern musical burlesque. The boat scene was played to the ναυτικὸς ὄχλος of the Isis towing-path. The Chorus was given every chance by being made to act as well as sing, and by having the curtain rung down while its last notes were still vibrant. The dull scene, in which the third act is prepared for by Æacus's recital of the difficulty in Hades about the tragic throne, was helped out by the two servitors appearing from Pluto's Palace more or less fuddled, and inclined to crapulous affection and crapulous quarrel, turn and turn about. The principal parts were filled by men chosen because they were natural comedians, not because they were better Greek scholars than most—some of them were indeed a good deal worse! They were left largely to suggest and develop their own "business" according to their sense of the stage. The result may have been good, bad, or indifferent, from the point of view of Greek drama. It was at least eminently successful from the point of view of the modern theatre-goer. The fun came right over the foot-lights. The audiences rose at the burlesque and the choric chants; and the precise character of the play's success was expressed by the undergraduate's remark, overheard on the staircase of exit on the opening night, "If this was on at the Gaiety it would run for nights!"

The revival this year proceeded on the lines of compromise. Entirely controlled by a Fellow of Balliol, Mr. Cyril Bailey, it showed far more unity of purpose and carefully thought-out archaeological detail than the performance of 1892. The actors all spoke as if ancient Greek were their mother-tongue; the Chorus was not encouraged to bid for applause, but marched off soberly before the curtain fell. In fact, there was not a "curtain," in the slang sense of the stage, throughout the play. On the other hand, a pantomime "Blondin" donkey was introduced in the first scene, and provided most of the fun while he was on. Children, dressed as pantomime frogs, were expected to carry off the second scene, with help from Sir Hubert Parry's beautiful music, but little from anything which happened in the boat. The corpse was reintroduced (still in grave clothes in Pluto's hall!) to twiddle his ashon toes and give comic relief in rather ghastly fashion to the last act. Truly, classic tradition was asked to concede so much in these and other features that one wondered if it were worth while to refuse a "curtain" or two to the Chorus, and the infusion of some modern human interest into the boat scene, and the dialogue of Æacus and Xanthias in Act II. sc. iii. Compromise is likely to win general approval rather than enthusiasm; and it was just enthusiasm that seemed a little lacking last week.

Be that as it may, the performance answered admirably to Mr. Bailey's conception. It went like clockwork, smooth and sure. The stage effects were much better in most scenes, especially throughout Act III., than in 1892; the dresses—except perhaps those of the Chorus, which somehow made the Mystæ seem all twinkling legs—were most effective. In particular the dressing of Æschylus as a tragic actor was a most happy thought, which is likely to establish a tradition for all future revivals.

The scenery was striking, especially the head of the Acherusian Lake, suggested, perhaps, by Turner's 'Ulysses and Polyphemus'; and the grouping was good. But an all-important matter—the histrionic qualifications of the cast—left something to be desired. There was just one principal part filled by an actor with "hands" and a thorough knowledge of the rules of the stage, and that was the part of Euripides, played by Mr. Corbett. Æschylus (Mr. Reece) had a better chance than his predecessor of 1892, but he was rather fidgety, and incapable of the scornful repose which should have possessed him for three parts of his time on the stage. Xanthias was played by a comedian of natural talent (Mr. de Stein), but, we should judge, of little experience; and he was hampered by having to play up to the not very spontaneous fun of Mr. Howard, who filled the terribly difficult, but most important part of Dionysus. Mr. Howard lacks natural advantages for the part. He has not a comic face, and he is too tall for the fussy craven god. Dionysus needs a naturally droll actor of Mr. Weedon Grossmith's build and type. The part cannot be carried off by fidgety "business" and the use of a falsetto. Heracles (Mr. Casswell) looked his part, and Æacus was quite good. The minor characters were unusually well played, and especial praise is due to Mr. Oliphant, the Charon, and Mr. Faber, the Plathane. The latter looked the hell-hag all over. The Coryphæus (Mr. Grisewood) sang beautifully, but his mild melancholy suggested that Eleusinian initiation was an ordeal not lightly undergone. Sir Hubert Parry's music was admirably rendered, and has lost none of its charm or humorous significance. It was delightful to listen to it again both from band and chorus, with each of which Dr. Allen had done great things. Altogether this revival was a very well-considered and well-managed presentation, full of ideas, and thoroughly pleasing.

D. G. H.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—G. R. E.—W. J. G.—J. M. D.—H. M.—N. M.—Received. E. L.—Duly Noted.

We cannot undertake to reply to inquiries concerning the appearance of reviews of books.

INDEX TO ADVERTISERS.

	PAGE
AUTHORS' AGENTS	242
BAGSTER & SONS	270
BELL & SONS	268
BLACKWOOD & SONS	269
BROWN, LANGHAM & Co.	271
CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS	243
CATALOGUES	242
CHAPMAN & HALL	245
CHATTO AND WINDUS	243
CLARK	244
CONSTABLE & Co.	246
EDUCATIONAL	241
ENO'S FRUIT SALT	271
EXHIBITIONS	241
GARDNER & Co.	244
LECTURES	241
LONGMANS & Co.	246
MACMILLAN & Co.	246, 271
MAGAZINES, &c.	243
MISCELLANEOUS	242
NOTES AND QUERIES	271
OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS	272
PRINTERS	242
PROVIDENT INSTITUTIONS	241
SALES BY AUCTION	242
SHIPPING	271
SITUATIONS VACANT	241
SITUATIONS WANTED	241
SMITH, ELDER & Co.	244
TYPE-WRITERS, &c.	242

MESSRS. BELL'S BOOKS.

JUST PUBLISHED, crown 8vo, 6s. net.

HISTORY OF THE LATIN AND TEUTONIC NATIONS, 1494-1514.

By LEOPOLD VON RANKE.

A Revised Translation by G. R. DENNIS, B.A. (Lond.)
With an Introduction by EDWARD ARMSTRONG, M.A.
Fellow of Queen's College, Oxford.

ST. PAUL'S SCHOOL QUATER-CENTENARY

JUST PUBLISHED, demy 8vo, 8s. 6d. net.

LIFE OF DEAN COLET, Founder of St. Paul's School.

By the Rev. J. H. LUPTON, M.A.

Late Surmaster of St. Paul's School, and formerly Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge.

With an Appendix of some of his English Writings, and a Facsimile Portrait taken from the Engraving in Holland's
'Heroologia.'

NEW AND REVISED EDITION.

Fcap. 8vo, 5s. net.

CATULLI CARMINA.

Edited, with Copious Explanatory Notes, by CHARLES STUTTAFORD.

"Intended for the class whose Latin has become rusty in consequence of the exigencies of a professional or business occupation. Well and wisely annotated for the purpose, and produced admirably."—Evening Standard.

THE

QUEEN'S TREASURES SERIES.

Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.

NEW VOLUME. JUST PUBLISHED.

JAN OF THE WINDMILL.

By MRS. EWING.

With 8 Coloured Illustrations by M. V. WHEELHOUSE
and special Title-Page, Binding, and End-Papers.

JUST PUBLISHED, demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

AN INTRODUCTION TO ECONOMICS.

By HENRY ROGERS SEAGER.

Professor of Political Economy in Columbia University.

Third Edition, Revised and Enlarged.

JUST PUBLISHED, demy 8vo, 8s. 6d. net.

ETHICS.

By JOHN DEWEY.

Professor of Philosophy in Columbia University,

and JAMES H. TUFTS,

Professor of Philosophy in the University of Chicago.

Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

A NEW PRIMER OF ENGLISH LITERATURE.

By T. G. TUCKER, Litt.D.

Professor in the University of Melbourne, and WALTER MURDOCH, M.A.

THE STANDARD AUTHORITY. WEBSTER'S INTERNATIONAL DICTIONARY.

TWENTIETH-CENTURY EDITION.

Revised and Enlarged, with an Appendix of 25,000 Words.
Phrases, and Definitions.

2,348 pages. 5,000 Illustrations.

WRITE FOR DETAILED PROSPECTUS,
with Specimen Pages, hundreds of Opinions of Eminent Men, and prices in various styles of binding.

London: GEORGE BELL & SONS,
York House, Portugal Street, W.C.

W. BLACKWOOD & SONS'

FORTHCOMING BOOKS.

ON MARCH 1.

THE ROMAN BREVIARY.

Translated out of Latin into English by JOHN, MARQUESS OF BUTE, K.T.
A New Edition for use in England. In 4 vols. 2l. 2s. net.

ON MARCH 4.

THE SHORT CUT TO INDIA.

The Record of a Journey along the Route of the Baghdad Railway.

By DAVID FRASER,

Author of 'A Modern Campaign,' and 'The Marches of Hindustan.'

With 83 Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

This is a record of a journey from Constantinople to Bombay over the route of the projected and partly completed Baghdad Railway. When travelling in the deserts of Mesopotamia on Christmas Day, 1907, Mr. Fraser was attacked by an Arab robber and received dangerous wounds from which he did not recover for six months. His new book mainly records this adventurous journey, but it also contains an exhaustive study of many interesting aspects of the Baghdad Railway question, and includes in an Appendix the hitherto unpublished papers relating to the famous Convention of 1903.

SOME MEMORIES OF MY SPARE TIME, 1856-85.

By General the Right Hon. Sir HENRY BRACKENBURY, G.C.B.

7s. 6d. net.

REMINISCENCES.

By the Right Hon. LORD KINGSBURGH, K.C.B., Lord Justice Clerk.

7s. 6d. net.

THE ENGLISHWOMAN IN INDIA.

By MAUD DIVER, Author of 'Captain Desmond, V.C.' 5s. net.

Contents.

THE ENGLISHWOMAN IN INDIA: Maid—Wife—Mother—Hostess and Housekeeper—Contact with Eastern Womanhood—Women Workers: Female Medical Aid—Women Workers: Medical Aid and Missions—Women Workers: The Education Problem—Art Industries and Needlecraft.

PIONEER WOMEN OF INDIA: Introduction—The Indian Woman as Poet—Pundita Ramabai Sarasvati—Dr. Anandabai Joshee—The Maharani of Kuch Behar—Cornelia Sorabji.

SIDE TRACKS AND BRIDLE PATHS.

By LIONEL JAMES ("The Intelligence Officer"), Author of 'On the Heels of De Wet.' 6s.

Mr. James has used his wide travels to the best advantage. In this book he covers ground in Persia, India, Russia, South Africa, Germany, Turkey and England.

TRAVELS IN THE UPPER EGYPTIAN DESERTS.

By ARTHUR E. P. WEIGALL,
Chief Inspector of the Department of Antiquities, Upper Egypt.

Illustrated. 7s. 6d. net.

A HISTORY OF MEDIAEVAL POLITICAL THEORY IN THE WEST.

By R. W. CARLYLE, C.I.E. and A. J. CARLYLE, M.A.

VOLS. I. and II. READY. 15s. net each.

THE BEST NEW FICTION. 6/-

THE NEW JUNE

By HENRY NEWBOLT

THE GREEN CURVE

By "OLE LUK-OIE" [March 1.]

THE AFFAIR ON THE BRIDGE

By J. MORGAN DE GROOT

RECENT NOTABLE PUBLICATIONS.

SOME EIGHTEENTH-CENTURY BYWAYS, And other Essays.

By JOHN BUCHAN. 7s. 6d. net.

"The author has a wide range of interests and of reading, and his style possesses that impalpable quality of distinction which is born and not acquired."—Spectator.

"A masterpiece not only of literary but social criticism."—Glasgow Herald.

LEAVES FROM THE DIARY OF A COUNTRY CRICKETER.

By W. E. W. COLLINS. 6s.

"Anecdotes of the tented field practically unrivalled for their interest and variety."

Daily Telegraph.

"There is not a dull page in the book."

Newcastle Chronicle.

"Excellent reading and is sure to appeal to cricketers."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"Full of good stories capably told."

Glasgow Herald.

WINGED DREAMS.

By HELEN COLEBROOKE. 6s.

"A modern society story written by an author who really knows the world she is describing."

Spectator.

"Diana is a heroine worthy of George Eliot..... a charming and even brilliant story, and one that bids fair for the future work of the author."

Glasgow Herald.

"A story of excellent promise."—Globe.

THE FEAR OF LIFE.

By GERALD MAXWELL,

Author of 'The Miracle Worker.' 6s.

"A book you must read. The charming Lady Margaret is one of the most lovable heroines I have ever met in fiction."—Truth.

"A novel of unusual interest."—Court Journal.

"No other magazine that the world has known was ever privileged to make so proud a boast. BLACKWOOD remains without a rival."

Daily Mail.

BLACKWOOD

For MARCH contains:

Mount Abu By EDMUND CANDLER

The Officers of the House of Commons

By O. C. WILLIAMS

The Oxford Undergraduate, Past and Present

By THE WARDEN of Wadham College

Political Interludes—Comic and Otherwise

By Sir HENRY CRAIK, K.C.B. M.P.

Some Memories of My Spare Time

By General the Right Hon.

Sir HENRY BRACKENBURY, G.C.B.

"The Bluidy Mackenzie"

Sir Thomas Overbury—II.

By CHARLES WHIBLEY

The New June—The End By HENRY NEWBOLT

When Dog Eats Dog By "OLE LUK-OIE"

The Loss of a Lustrum

By Col. A. KEENE, R.A.

Musings without Method

Coquelin—Mme. Bernhardt and Irving—The Tradition of Molière—"Cyrano de Bergerac"

—The Cameron Highlanders

The Dominating Issue

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS, Edinburgh and London.

Shipping.

P. & O.

P. & O. PLEASURE CRUISES FROM MARSEILLES.

(Rail and Steamship connexions from London.)
S.Y. VECTIS	No. 2.—March 20 to April 16. CONSTANTINOPLE, ASIA MINOR, GREECE, CRETE, CORSICA, &c.
	No. 3.—April 22 to May 20. DALMATIA, VENICE, CORFU, SICILY. Fares for Cruises 2, or 3, from 30 Guineas.
BY	No. 4.—May 21 to June 12. NAPLES, SICILY, ALGIERS, SPAIN, &c. Fares from 20 Guineas.

P. & O. CRUISING YACHT VECTIS,
6,000 tons, 6,000 h.p.

For Passage, Illustrated Handbooks, and all information, apply Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company, Northumberland Avenue, W.C., or 122, Leadenhall Street, E.C., London.

NOTES AND QUERIES.

GENERAL INDEXES.

THE FOLLOWING ARE STILL IN STOCK:—

	£	s.	d.
GENERAL INDEX, * FOURTH SERIES ..	3	3	0
GENERAL INDEX, * SIXTH SERIES ..	0	6	0
GENERAL INDEX, * SEVENTH SERIES	0	6	0
GENERAL INDEX, * EIGHTH SERIES ..	0	6	0
* For Copies by post an additional Threepence is charged.
GENERAL INDEX, † NINTH SERIES ..	0	10	6

With Introduction by JOSEPH KNIGHT, F.S.A.

† This Index is double the size of previous ones, as it contains, in addition to the usual Index of Subjects, the Names and Pseudonyms of Writers, with a list of their Contributions. The number of constant Contributors exceeds eleven hundred. The Publishers reserve the right of increasing the price of the volume at any time. The number printed is limited, and the type has been distributed.

JOHN C. FRANCIS & J. EDWARD FRANCIS,
Notes and Queries Office, Bream's Buildings, E.C.

For Acidity of the Stomach.

For Heartburn and Headache.

For Gout and Indigestion.

D I N N E F O R D ' S

M A G N E S I A.

For Sour Eructations and Bilious Affections.

A Safe and most effective Aperient for regular use.

WORKS BY WILLIAM THYNNE LYNN.

ELEVENTH EDITION NOW READY, price Two Shillings net.

CELESTIAL MOTIONS:

A Handy Book of Astronomy.

Eleventh Edition. With 5 Plates.

By W. T. LYNN, B.A. F.R.A.S., Member of the British Astronomical Association, formerly of the Royal Observatory, Greenwich,

Author of 'Remarkable Comets,' 'Remarkable Eclipses,' 'Astronomy for the Young,' &c.

"Well known as one of our best introductions to astronomy."—Guardian.

NINTH EDITION NOW READY, fcap. 8vo, cloth, price Sixpence net.

REMARKABLE ECLIPSES:

A Sketch of the most interesting Circumstances connected with the Observation of Solar and Lunar Eclipses, both in Ancient and Modern Times.

By W. T. LYNN, B.A. F.R.A.S.

"The booklet deserves to continue in popularity. It presents a mass of information in small compass."—Dundee Advertiser.

THIRTEENTH EDITION, JUST OUT, price Sixpence, cloth.

REMARKABLE COMETS:

A Brief Survey of the most interesting Facts in the History of Cometary Astronomy.

By W. T. LYNN, B.A. F.R.A.S.

FIFTH EDITION, REVISED TO 1908, NOW READY.

Fcap. 8vo, cloth, price Sixpence net.

ASTRONOMY FOR THE YOUNG.

By W. T. LYNN, B.A. F.R.A.S.

"Nothing better of its kind has ever appeared."—English Mechanic.

SECOND EDITION NOW READY, price One Shilling.

BRIEF LESSONS ON THE PARABLES AND MIRACLES OF OUR LORD.

With an Appendix on the Names of the Apostles and 4 Maps.

By W. T. LYNN, B.A. F.R.A.S.,

Associate of King's College, London, Lay Reader in the Diocese of Southwark.

"That praiseworthy little book."—Guardian, August 22, 1906.

SECOND EDITION NOW READY, price One Shilling.

BIBLE CHRONOLOGY:

The Principal Events Recorded in the Holy Scriptures, arranged under their Probable Respective Dates, with a Description of the Places named, and a Supplement on English Versions.

By W. T. LYNN, B.A. F.R.A.S.,

Associate of King's College, London, Lay Reader in the Diocese of Southwark.

"This compendious and useful little work."—Guardian, March 14, 1906.

SECOND EDITION, fcap. 8vo, price Fourpence.

NEW TESTAMENT CHRONOLOGY:

The Principal Events Recorded in the New Testament, arranged under their Probable Respective Dates.

By W. T. LYNN, B.A. F.R.A.S.,

Associate of King's College, London, Lay Reader in the Diocese of Southwark.

London: SAMUEL BAGSTER & SONS, LIMITED, 15, Paternoster Row.

YOUR BIRTHRIGHT IS HEALTH.THE SCIENCE IN A NUTSHELL.

'Health is a Man's Birthright. It is as natural to be well as to be born. All pathological conditions, all diseases, and all tendencies to disease are the result of the transgression of physiologic and hygienic law. This is the science of health in a nutshell.'—DENSMORE.

Eno's Fruit Salt

IS NATURE'S ANTIDOTE FOR HUMAN ILLS
arising from the neglect or violation of her laws.

'Our Acts, our angels are, for good or ill, our fatal shadows that walk by us still.'

And such is life, so gliding on, it glimmers like a meteor, and is gone.'

CAUTION.—Examine the capsule, and see that it is marked ENO'S 'FRUIT SALT.' Without it you have the sincerest form of flattery—IMITATION.

Prepared only by J. C. ENO (Limited), 'FRUIT SALT' WORKS, LONDON, S.E.

AUTHORIZED TO BE USED BY BRITISH SUBJECTS.

NOW READY

THE NATIONAL FLAG,

BEING

THE UNION JACK.

SUPPLEMENT TO

NOTES AND QUERIES

FOR JUNE 30, 1900,

Price 4d.; by post 4½d.

Containing an Account of the Flag, Reprinted June, 1908.

With Coloured Illustration according to scale.

JOHN C. FRANCIS and J. EDWARD FRANCIS,

Notes and Queries Office, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

CLIFFORD'S INN.

For View of CLIFFORD'S INN, taken in 1892, see

NOTES AND QUERIES, April 2, 1892.

The same Number also contains Sketches of the ROLLS CHAPEL, OLD SERJEANTS' INN the GATEWAY, LINCOLN'S INN, &c.

Price 4½d., free by post, of

JOHN C. FRANCIS and J. EDWARD FRANCIS,

Notes and Queries Office, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

H. G. WELLS'S MASTERPIECE

Evening Standard.—" 'Tono-Bungay' is at once the strongest and most complex link in Mr. Wells's literary chain.....Arrestingly human..... The matter which goes to make 'Tono-Bungay' so notable a novel would be sufficient to furnish in ideas and observation a host of ordinary 'clever' novels."

Observer.—"The book stands quite by itself in English literature. The order of things has been attacked before with Carlylean vehemence and Ruskinian eloquence. But in making out his case in the form of a novel—and a strong, true, and brilliant novel—Mr. Wells has all the advantage of the lecturer who uses a magic lantern over the lecturer who merely talks. He gains in point, in lucidity, in persuasiveness. It may be that he attempts too much: it is certain that no one else could have done so much."

Tono-Bungay

6s.

Daily Telegraph.—"We think that we shall be within the limit of reasonable prophecy if we suggest that 'Tono-Bungay' will prove to be Mr. H. G. Wells's 'David Copperfield.'.....One of the most significant novels of modern times, one of the sincerest and most unflinching analyses of the dangers and perils of our contemporary life that any writer has had the courage to submit to his own generation. Mr. Wells has certainly done nothing to approach this book, both for courage and for conviction."

MACMILLAN & CO., LTD., London.

JUST READY.

Price 6s.

ORDER AT ONCE FROM YOUR LIBRARY.

THE HAPPY ELOPEMENT.

THE HAPPY ELOPEMENT.

THE HAPPY ELOPEMENT.

By E. H. LACON WATSON.

Other Books of interest recently published are

CHRISTINA ROSSETTI.

FAMILY LETTERS. Edited by W. M. ROSSETTI. With many Illustrations, 15s. net.

"Her letters to her family...are full of examples of her simple piety, her absolute freedom from affectation, her goodness of heart, her affection for her kith and kin." Queen.

TYBURN TREE.

ITS HISTORY AND ANNALS. By ALFRED MARKS. With many curious Illustrations from Old Prints, &c. 15s. net.

"He has treated his subject with a tense, close grip.... Untiring research and care is shown, and there is artistry in his selection of the most curious and piteous cases." Manchester Guardian.

THE

HOUSE OF BROKEN DREAMS.

By KATHLEEN WATSON, Author of 'Litanies of Life.' 2s. 6d. net.

"Touches of true maternal devotion, charming pictures of wild country, and a sense of tragedy."—Globe.

FIDDLER MATT.

By ADAM LILBURN. With many Original Full-Page Illustrations. 3s. 6d.

"A delightful story...with sympathetic and charming illustrations...Well told, and full of interest from beginning to end."—Daily Telegraph.

BROWN, LANGHAM & CO., LTD.

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS.

HISTORICAL PORTRAITS.

RICHARD II. TO HENRY WRIOTHESLEY, 1400-1600.

The Lives by C. R. L. FLETCHER.

The Portraits chosen by EMERY WALKER.

With an Introduction on

THE HISTORY OF PORTRAITURE IN ENGLAND.

Crown 4to, with 103 Portraits, 8s. 6d. net.

A HISTORY OF CANADA, 1763-1812. By Sir

C. P. LUCAS, K.C.M.G. With 8 Maps. 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

Birmingham Post.—"An achievement which entitles the author to the admiring congratulations of students of our imperial history."

Uniform with the above.

THE CANADIAN WAR OF 1812. By the same

Author. With 8 Maps. 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

CANADA. Part I. By Sir C. P. LUCAS, 6s. Part II.

By H. E. EGERTON. 4s. 6d. (HISTORICAL GEOGRAPHY OF THE BRITISH COLONIES, Vol. V.)

WELSH MEDIEVAL LAW. Being a Text of the Laws of Howell the Good, namely the British Museum Harleian MS. 4353 of the 13th Century, with Translation, Introduction, Appendix, Glossary, Index, and a Map. By A. W. WADE-EVANS. Crown 8vo, 8s. 6d. net.

A NATURALIST IN TASMANIA. By GEOFFREY

SMITH. With 33 Plates, 4 Text Figures, and a Folding Map showing the Geological Features of the Island. 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

Times.—"The book furnishes a good sketch of the natural history of Tasmania.....The illustrations, good in themselves, are excellently selected to elucidate the text: and the style of writing is in every respect superior to that of most books of travel or of natural history."

POST-AUGUSTAN POETRY: from Seneca to Juvenal. By H. E. BUTLER. 8vo, 8s. 6d. net.

ORATIONES. Tvm Creweianae tvm Gratvlatoriae in Theatro Sheldoniano Plervmqve Habita. Avctore W. W. MERRY. Feap. 4to, 6s. net.

THE INTERPRETATION OF ANCIENT GREEK LITERATURE. An Inaugural Lecture delivered before the University of Oxford. By GILBERT MURRAY. 8vo, 1s. net.

THE VALUE OF BYZANTINE AND MODERN GREEK IN HELLENIC STUDIES. An Inaugural Lecture delivered before the University of Oxford. By S. MENARDOS. 8vo, 1s. net.

HENRY BIRKHEAD AND THE FOUNDATION OF THE OXFORD CHAIR OF POETRY. By J. W. MACKAIL. 1s. net.

NEW VOLUME, OXFORD LIBRARY OF PROSE AND POETRY.

THE HEROINE. By EATON STANNARD BARRETT.

With an Introduction by WALTER RALEIGH. Feap. 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d. net; lambskin, thin boards, gilt extra, 3s. 6d. net.

THE OXFORD HYMN BOOK.

ONE MUSIC EDITION:

Crown 8vo, from 3s. 6d. net.

Also on Oxford India Paper, from 5s. net.

TWO EDITIONS WITH WORDS ONLY:

(a) Crown 8vo, from 1s. 6d. net. Bound with the Book of Common Prayer in various leather bindings, from 7s. 6d. net.

Also on Oxford India Paper, from 3s. 6d. net. Bound with the Book of Common Prayer in various leather bindings, from 10s. 6d. net.

(b) 32mo, from 6d. net. Bound with the Book of Common Prayer in various leather bindings, from 2s. net.

Also on Oxford India Paper, from 2s. net. Bound with the Book of Common Prayer in various leather bindings, from 4s. net.

Spectator.—".....Happily there seems at last some hope of better things.....We can unhesitatingly commend it ('The Oxford Hymn Book') to our readers as a very noteworthy collection of noble hymns."

RHODES OF THE KNIGHTS. By Baron

DE BELABRE. With a Frontispiece in Chromo-Collotype and 188 Maps. Inscriptions, Shields, and Photographs in the Text. Demy 4to, buckram gilt, 1l. 11s. 6d. net.

TRANSACTIONS OF THE THIRD INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS OF THE HISTORY OF RELIGIONS. 2 vols. royal 8vo, 21s. net.

Guardian.—"The work of 117 writers, most of them well-known specialists.....These two volumes provide a treasury of valuable information and of suggestive speculation."

ISRAEL'S HOPE OF IMMORTALITY. Four

Lectures by C. F. BURNEY. 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.

KANT'S THEORY OF KNOWLEDGE. By

H. A. PRICHARD. 8vo, 6s. 6d. net.

THE ETHICAL ASPECTS OF EVOLUTION.

By W. BENETT. 6s. net.

Cambridge Review.—"A scholarly and thoughtful essay on this subject, which will well repay perusal."

THE MORAL SYSTEM OF DANTE'S INFERNO.

By W. H. V. READE. 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

THE HEBREW PROPHETS FOR ENGLISH

READERS, in the Language of the Revised Version of the English Bible. Printed in their Poetical Form, with Headings and Brief Annotation. Edited by F. H. WOODS and F. E. POWELL. 4 vols. Vol. I. AMOS, HOSEA, ISAIAH (1-39), and MICAH. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.

THE JOURNAL OF THEOLOGICAL STUDIES.

Edited by J. F. BETHUNE-BAKER and F. E. BRIGHTMAN. Published Quarterly, price 3s. 6d. net. Annual Subscription 12s. net, post free. Many of the back numbers are still obtainable.

ROYAL LETTER OF BUSINESS. The Ornaments' Rubric and Modifications of the existing Law relating to the conduct of Divine Service, Convocation of Canterbury, Lower House. First Report of Committee. 8vo, 1s. net.

COMPLETE CATALOGUE (160 PAGES) POST FREE ON APPLICATION.

London: HENRY FROWDE, Oxford University Press, Amen Corner, E.C.

THE ATHENÆUM

Journal of English and Foreign Literature, Science, the Fine Arts, Music and the Drama.

No. 4245.

SATURDAY, MARCH 6, 1909.

PRICE
THREEPENCE.
REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

Exhibitions.

ROYAL ACADEMY EXHIBITION.

RECEIVING DAYS.

WATER COLOURS, PASTELS, MINIATURES, BLACK-AND-WHITE DRAWINGS, ENGRAVINGS, ETCHINGS, and ARCHITECTURAL DRAWINGS, FRIDAY, March 26. OIL PAINTINGS, SATURDAY, March 27, and MONDAY, March 29. SCULPTURE, TUESDAY, March 30.
No Artist is allowed to send more than THREE different Works.
All Works must be delivered at the Burlington Gardens Entrance. None will be received at the Piccadilly Entrance.
Hours for the reception of Works, 7 A.M. to 10 P.M.
Forms and Labels can be procured (during the month of March only) from the Academy. Applications must be accompanied by a stamped and addressed envelope.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF ARTS.

THE WINTER EXHIBITION WILL CLOSE on
SATURDAY, March 13.
Open from 9 A.M. to 6 P.M. Admission 1s. Catalogue, 6d.

ROYAL SOCIETY OF PAINTER-ETCHERS

AND ENGRAVERS, 5A, Pall Mall, East, S.W.—The 27th ANNUAL EXHIBITION NOW OPEN, 10-6. Admission 1s.
W. P. D. STEBBING, Secretary.

EXHIBITION OF ENGRAVINGS AFTER JOHN HOPPNER, R.A.

MESSRS. PAUL & DOMINIC COLNAGHI & CO. have the honour to announce that they have now on view a choice Collection of rare Mezzotints and Stipple Engravings, many in Colour, from some of the most important Works by John Hoppner, R.A.
Admission, including Catalogue, One Shilling.
13 and 14, Pall Mall East, S.W.

MODERN ENGRAVINGS AND ETCHINGS.

MESSRS. COLNAGHI have always on view a large Selection of the latest Publications in the finest Proof States, after Lawrence, Raeburn, Hoppner, Romney, &c.
13 and 14, Pall Mall East, S.W.

SIR JOHN SOANE'S MUSEUM,

13, LINCOLN'S INN FIELDS, W.C.
Interesting House, Pictures, Sculpture, Antiquities, &c. Open FREE between 10.30 and 5 on TUESDAYS, WEDNESDAYS, THURSDAYS, and FRIDAYS from MARCH 2 to AUGUST 31. Also an Autumn Season in OCTOBER and NOVEMBER. Cards for other Days and for Students may be obtained from the CURATOR.

Provident Institutions.

THE NEWSVENDORS' BENEVOLENT AND PROVIDENT INSTITUTION.

(Founded 1839.)

Office: (MEMORIAL HALL BUILDINGS), 15 and 16, Farringdon Street, London, E.C.

Patron—The Right Hon. the EARL OF ROSEBURY, K.G. K.T.
Trustees: CHARLES HENRY WALTER, Esq., SIR HORACE BROOKS MARSHALL, M.A. J.P. D.L. LL.D., CHARLES AWDRY, Esq., M.A. J.P. D.L., and Col. the Hon. HARRY L. W. LAWSON, M.A. J.P.

Treasurer—THE LONDON AND WESTMINSTER BANK, Ltd., 217, STRAND, W.C.

The attendance of Subscribers, the Press, the Trade generally, and all interested in the objects of this Institution, is especially desired upon the occasion of the

SEVENTIETH ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING

At MEMORIAL HALL BUILDINGS, Farringdon Street, in the City of London,

MONDAY EVENING, March 8, 1909, at 7 o'clock precisely.

MR. CHARLES HENRY WALTER
(the Senior Trustee of the Institution)

will occupy the Chair.

By Order of the Committee,

W. WILKIE JONES, Secretary.

BOOKSELLERS' PROVIDENT INSTITUTION.

The ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING of the BOOKSELLERS' PROVIDENT INSTITUTION, will be held, by the courtesy of the Stationers' Company, at STATIONERS' HALL, on TUESDAY, March 16, at 7 o'clock. The Lord Mayor, Sir FRANCIS TRUSCOTT, will speak, and an excellent Musical Programme has been arranged for the Conversation which will follow.

GEORGE LARNER, Secretary.

28, Paternoster Row, E.C.

Educational.

CHRIST'S COLLEGE, BLACKHEATH, S.E.

F. W. AVELING, M.A. B.Sc.
Preparation for Universities and Professions.
Stress on Modern Languages and Science.

EDUCATION.

Parents or Guardians desiring accurate information relative to the CHOICE of SCHOOLS for BOYS or GIRLS or TUTOR in England or Abroad are invited to call upon or send fully detailed particulars to MESSRS. GABBITAS, THRING & CO., who for more than thirty years have been closely in touch with the leading Educational Establishments.
Advice, free of charge, is given by Mr. THRING, Nephew of the late Head Master of Uppingham, 36, Sackville Street London, W.

THE LONDON HOSPITAL MEDICAL COLLEGE.

(UNIVERSITY OF LONDON.)

PRELIMINARY SCIENTIFIC EXAMINATION.

Special arrangements are made to suit the convenience of Students who have just passed the Matriculation Examination of the University of London and who are anxious to commence studying for the above Examination without loss of time.

Students Matriculating in January may thus enter at once without any break in their studies, so that they may be able to present themselves for the Preliminary Scientific Examination at the earliest possible date.

Zoology and Botany. By G. P. MUDGE, A.R.C.S. F.Z.S., and R. A. BUDDICOM, B.A. Oxon.
Chemistry and Physics. By HUGH CANDY, B.A., B.Sc. Lond., and O. W. Griffith, B.Sc. Lond.
Fee for the whole Course, Ten Guineas.
Turner Street, Mile End, E. MUNRO SCOTT, Warden.

Situations Vacant.

BOROUGH OF CHORLEY.

CHORLEY MUNICIPAL SECONDARY DAY SCHOOL,
PUPIL-TEACHERS' CENTRE,
AND TECHNICAL INSTITUTE (EVENING).

The CHORLEY EDUCATION COMMITTEE invite applications for the post of PRINCIPAL of the above-named SCHOOLS.

Applicants must be Graduates. Experience of both Day and Evening Work will be a qualification. Salary 275*l.* per annum. The Gentleman appointed will be required to take up his duties on AUGUST 30, 1909.

Applications, endorsed "Principal," stating age, previous experience, and accompanied by copies of not more than three Testimonials, to be sent to me not later than MARCH 13, 1909.

By Order, JNO. MILLS, Town Clerk.

Town Hall, Chorley, February 27, 1909.

COUNTY OF LONDON.

ASSISTANT INSPECTOR.

The LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL invites applications for an appointment to the post of ASSISTANT INSPECTOR in the EDUCATION OFFICER'S DEPARTMENT. The Salary will be 250*l.* a year, rising by annual increments of 15*l.* to a maximum of 400*l.* a year. The Person appointed will be required to give his (or her) whole time to the duties of the Office, and to such other duties as may be entrusted to him (or her), including the inspection of Public Elementary Schools, Evening Schools, and other Educational Institutions. Women are eligible for this appointment. Preference will be given to Candidates specially qualified in Science. Canvassing, either directly or indirectly, will be held to be a disqualification for appointment.

Applications should be made on the Official Form, to be obtained, together with particulars of the appointment, from THE EDUCATION OFFICER, London County Council, Education Offices, Victoria Embankment, W.C., to whom they must be returned not later than 11 A.M. on MONDAY, March 22, 1909, accompanied by copies of three Testimonials of recent date.

Candidates applying through the post for the Form of Application should enclose a stamped and addressed envelope, endorsed "Assistant Inspector," and Candidates who desire the receipt of their applications to be acknowledged should enclose a stamped addressed post-card.

G. L. GOMME, Clerk of the London County Council.
Education Offices, Victoria Embankment, W.C.
February 27, 1909.

COUNTY BOROUGH OF SUNDERLAND.

DAY TRAINING COLLEGE.

ASSISTANT MISTRESS REQUIRED, to enter upon duties after the EASTER VACATION. Must be a Graduate of a British University with Training College experience, specially qualified in English, and able to assist in the teaching of Method; ability to teach Hygiene or French a recommendation.

Salary at the rate of 150*l.* per annum. Application Forms, which may be obtained from the undersigned, must be returned by March 16.

T. W. BRYERS, Secretary.

Education Offices, 15, John Street, Sunderland.

WOOLWICH POLYTECHNIC.

The GOVERNING BODY invite applications for the appointment (part time), of a MAN TEACHER in the SCHOOL OF ART, at a Salary of 75*l.* per annum.—Further particulars and Forms of Application, which must be returned to the Principal not later than WEDNESDAY, March 10, may be obtained by sending to THE PRINCIPAL, a stamped addressed foolscap envelope.

MANAGING PARTNER WANTED for First-

Class NEW BOOKSELLING BUSINESS, willing to invest about 800*l.* Paying concern. Good connexion and position.—Box 1577, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

Situations Wanted.

TO AUTHORS AND PUBLISHERS.—A well-known CAMBRIDGE MAN, M.A., is open to ADVISE AUTHORS, Revise Copy or Proofs, &c. Highest references.—Address M., Box 1177, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, E.C.

A FRENCH LADY, Docteur de l'Université de Paris (Lettres), seeks a HOLIDAY ENGAGEMENT in an English Family for the EASTER VACATION.—Address R. Q., care of Prof. J. G. Frazer, St. Keynes, Cambridge.

SHORTHAND-TYPIST (19), experienced, desires ENGAGEMENT as AMANUENSIS or Business Secretary.—Miss DEAN, 3, Morpeth Terrace, Westminster.

Yearly Subscription, free by post, Inland, 15s. 3d.; Foreign, 18s. Entered at the New York Post Office as Second Class matter.

THE ATHENÆUM is published on FRIDAY AFTERNOON at 2 o'clock.

SECRETARY desires RE-ENGAGEMENT, preferably Private or Institutional. Thoroughly experienced. Type-Writing, Shorthand, Book-Keeping, French and German Correspondence, Cataloguing, Organizing. Editorial experience. Literary ability. Highly recommended. Would go Abroad.—Apply Box 1576, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

Miscellaneous.

TO NEWSPAPERS AND MAGAZINES.—The AUTHOR of 'MEDICAL PHILOSOPHY' desires to WRITE on HEALTH. As Medicine teaches that all our thoughts, actions, and happiness depends on health, this is the most important subject that Editors can lay before their readers.—Write care of H. KIMPTON, Esq., Publisher, 13, Farnival Street, E.C.

PUBLIC-HOUSE REFORM.—The People's Refreshment House Association, Ltd., founded by the Bishop of Chester, manages 68 Licensed Inns. Ask for List and Report. APPLY FOR 1*l.* SHARES. 5 per cent paid since 1899.
P.R.H.A., Broadway Chambers, Westminster.

TRANSLATIONS INTO ENGLISH from French, Italian, Spanish, Portuguese, German, Dutch, Danish, Norwegian, and Swedish.—W. T. CURTIS, 10, Haringey Park, Crouch End, N.

LITERARY RESEARCH undertaken at the British Museum and elsewhere on moderate terms. Excellent Testimonials.—A. B., Box 1062, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

REGINALD GLENCROSS, M.A. LL.B. Cantab., undertakes GENEALOGICAL and RESEARCH WORK. Three years' experience in Ulster's Office, Dublin. Highest references. Terms moderate.—3, Chalonier Street, West Kensington.

PRIVATE SOCIAL TOURS FOR GENTLE-WOMEN.—Historic Castles of Loire Valley, APRIL. Austria, including the Danube, Vienna, Budapest, and Salzburg, JUNE. Holland and Switzerland, AUGUST. Inclusive Terms. References exchanged.—Miss BISHOP, 27, St. George's Road, Kilburn, London.

WELL-EDUCATED GIRL, not under, 18 can be received on moderate terms for TRAINING in TYPE-WRITING and GENERAL BUSINESS.—Box 1578, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

TO ART COLLECTORS.

TWO VERY FINE WATER-COLOUR PRINTS FOR SALE. Issued 1851 or earlier. 'OUR LORD BLESSING THE BREAD' and Rubens's 'DESCENT FROM THE CROSS.' In perfect condition, with Original Mounts and Frames.—Offers, by letter only, to F. C. B., 6, Park Road, Harlesden, N.W.

PRIVATE ACCOUNT BOOK.—For Country or City Gentleman. Combines every requirement, from Cash Book to Balance Sheet and Income Tax. Satisfaction guaranteed or money returned. Particulars free.—McQUEEN & CO., Mead Road E., Leicester

THE DAUGHTER of a well-known Literary Man is desirous of meeting with a LADY and GENTLEMAN to SHARE her HOUSE; or would take Boarders. Rooms Furnished or Unfurnished. The House is situated on South Norwood Hill, five minutes from Norwood Junction Station, close to the Stanley Halls (where Concerts, Lectures, &c., are continually given), near the Public Library, and within a walk of the Crystal Palace, or One Station from it. Norwood is regarded as one of the healthiest places round London, and was at one time a well-known health resort.—Address C. M., Box 1562, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

Type-Writers, &c.

TYPE-WRITING 9*d.* per 1,000 words; Carbons 3*d.* French and German Type-writing 1*s.* per 1,000. Translations. Duplicating 3*s.* 100 Copies (quarto), 15*s.* per 1,000. Best work, accuracy, and promptitude.—G. WALKER, 14, Park Road, New Cross, S.E.

TYPE-WRITING undertaken by highly educated Women (Classical Tripos; Cambridge Higher Local; Modern Languages). Research, Revision, Translation, Shorthand, Dictation Room.—THE CAMBRIDGE TYPE-WRITING AGENCY, 10, Duke Street, Adelphi, W.C.

TYPE-WRITING.—The WEST KENSINGTON OFFICES. Authors' MSS., Translations, &c. Legal and General Copying. Private Dictation Room. Circulars, &c., Duplicated. Usual Terms. References. Established sixteen years.—SIKES & SIKES, 23A, Hammersmith Road, London, W.

T Y P E - W R I T E R.

KINDLY NOTE CHANGE OF ADDRESS.

MISS E. M. TIGAIT,

10, MAITLAND PARK VILLAS, Haverstock Hill, N.W.

TYPE-WRITING OF EVERY DESCRIPTION

by EXPERT, 8d. per 1,000 words. Clear Carbon Copies, 3d. per 1,000 words. Accuracy and prompt return guaranteed. Reliable References.—NORA DICKINSON, 1, Sackville Gardens, Ilford.

TYPE-WRITING. — AUTHORS' MSS. neatly

TYPED, 9d. per 1,000 words. Carbon Copies, 3d. per 1,000 words. Prompt delivery.—Miss WINIFRED LESLIE, 19, Balclava Road, Bermondsey, S.E.

AUTHORS' MSS., NOVELS, STORIES, PLAYS,

ESSAYS TYPE-WRITTEN with complete accuracy, 9d. per 1,000 words. Clear Carbon Copies guaranteed. References to well-known Writers.—M. STUART, Allendale, Kymberley Road, Harrow.

TYPE-WRITING, 9d. per 1,000 words. All kinds of MSS. accurately typed. Clear Carbon Copies, 3d. per 1,000. References to well-known Authors. Oxford Higher Local. Tel. 1272, Richmond P.O.—M. KING, 24, Forest Road, Kew Gardens, S.W.

AUTHORS' MSS., 9d. per 1,000 words. Sermons,

Plays, and all kinds of TYPE-WRITING carefully done at home (Remington). Good paper. Orders promptly executed. Duplicating from 3s. 6d. per 100.—M. L. L., 18, Edgeley Road, Clapham, S.W.

Provident Institutions.

NEWSVENDORS' BENEVOLENT AND PROVIDENT INSTITUTION.

Founded 1839.

Funds exceed 27,000l.

OBJECTS.—This Institution was established in 1839 in the City of London, under the Presidency of the late Alderman Harmer, for granting Pensions and Temporary Assistance to principals and assistants engaged as vendors of Newspapers.

MEMBERSHIP.—Every Man or Woman throughout the United Kingdom, whether Publisher, Wholesaler, Retailer, Employer, or Employed, is entitled to become a Member of this Institution, and enjoy its benefits, upon payment of Five Shillings annually, or Three Guineas for life, provided that he or she is engaged in the sale of Newspapers, and such Members who thus contribute secure priority of consideration in the event of their needing aid from the Institution.

PENSIONS.—The Annuitants now number Thirty-six, the Men receiving 25l. and the Women 20l. per annum each.

The "Royal Victoria Pension Fund," commemorating the great advantages the News Trade enjoyed under the rule of Her late Majesty Queen Victoria, provides 20l. a year each for Six Widows of News-vendors.

The "Francis Fund" provides Pensions for One Man, 25l., and One Woman, 20l., and was specially subscribed in memory of the late John Francis, who died on April 6, 1882, and was for more than fifty years Publisher of the Athenæum. He took an active and leading part throughout the whole period of the agitation for the repeal of the various then existing "Taxes on Knowledge," and was for very many years a staunch supporter of this Institution.

The "Horace Marshall Pension Fund" is the gift of the late Mr. Horace Brooks Marshall. The employees of that firm have primary right of election to its benefits.

The "Herbert Lloyd Pension Fund" provides 25l. per annum for one man, in perpetual and grateful memory of Mr. Herbert Lloyd, who died May 12, 1899.

The principal features of the Rules governing election to all Pensions are, that each Candidate shall have been (1) a Member of the Institution for not less than ten years preceding application; (2) not less than fifty-five years of age; (3) engaged in the sale of Newspapers for at least ten years.

RELIEF.—Temporary relief is given in cases of distress, not only to Members of the Institution, but to New-vendors or their servants who may be recommended for assistance by Members of the Institution. Inquiry is made in such cases by Visiting Committees, and relief is awarded in accordance with the merits and requirements of each case. W. WILKIE JONES, Secretary.

THE BOOKSELLERS' PROVIDENT INSTITUTION.

Founded 1837.

Patron—HER MAJESTY QUEEN ALEXANDRA.

Invested Capital, 30,000l.

A UNIQUE INVESTMENT

Offered to London Booksellers and their Assistants.

A young man or woman of twenty-five can invest the sum of Twenty Guineas (or its equivalent by instalments), and obtain the right to participate in the following advantages:—

FIRST. Freedom from want in time of Adversity as long as need exists.

SECOND. Permanent Relief in Old Age.

THIRD. Medical Advice by eminent Physicians and Surgeons.

FOURTH. A Cottage in the Country (Abbots Langley, Hertfordshire) for aged Members, with garden produce, coal, and medical attendance free, in addition to an annuity.

FIFTH. A furnished house in the same Retreat at Abbots Langley for the use of Members and their families for holidays or during convalescence.

SIXTH. A contribution towards Funeral expenses when it is needed.

SEVENTH. All these are available not for Members only, but also for their wives or widows and young children.

EIGHTH. The payment of the subscriptions confers an absolute right to these benefits in all cases of need.

For further information apply to the Secretary, Mr. GEORGE LARNER, 23, Paternoster Row, E.C.

Catalogues.

ANCIENT and MODERN COINS.—Collectors

and Antiquarians are invited to apply to SPINK & SON Limited, for Specimen Copy (gratis) of their NUMISMATIC CIRCULAR. The finest Greek, Roman, and English Coins on View and for Sale at Moderate Prices.—SPINK & SON, Limited, Experts, Valuers, and Cataloguers, 16, 17, and 18, Piccadilly, London, W. Established upwards of a Century.

MUSIC BY MAIL.—We will send any Musical

Publication, British or Foreign, post free, promptly. Low prices. Immense stocks. SPECIAL TERMS TO SCHOOLS. VIOLIN CATALOGUE, 25,000 Publications, post free 3d.—MURDOCH, MURDOCH & CO., Hatton House, Hatton Garden, London, E.C.; and Birmingham, Brighton, Cambridge, Newcastle, Southsea.

CATALOGUE No. 50.—Drawings by Turner,

Prout, Ruskin, &c.—Turner's Liber Studiorum and other Engravings—Proofs touched by Turner—Constable's English Landscape—Etchings by Whistler—Japanese Colour Prints—Illustrated Books. Post free, Sixpence.—WM. WARD, 2, Church Terrace, Richmond, Surrey.

GLAISHER'S REMAINDER BOOK CATALOGUE

For MARCH (No. 363).

NOW READY, and will be forwarded on application.

It comprises a specially attractive Selection of Publishers' Remainders, including many Good Bargains.

WILLIAM GLAISHER, LTD.,

Booksellers, 265, HIGH HOLBORN, LONDON.

BERTRAM DOBEL L, SECOND-HAND BOOKSELLER and PUBLISHER,

77, Charing Cross Road, London, W.C.

A large Stock of Old and Rare Books in English Literature, including Poetry and the Drama—Shakespeareana—First Editions of Famous Authors—Manuscripts—Illustrated Books, &c. CATALOGUES free on application.

MAGGS BROS.,

199, Strand, London, W.C.

DEALERS IN RARE AND VALUABLE BOOKS, PRINTS, AND AUTOGRAPHS.

CATALOGUES sent post free to all parts of the World

Export Orders Solicited.

Telegraphic and Cable Address: "Bibliolite, London."

Telephone: "Gerrard 4664."

BOOKS.—ALL OUT-OF-PRINT and RARE

BOOKS on any subject SUPPLIED. The most expert Bookfinder extant. Please state wants and ask for CATALOGUE. I make a special feature of exchanging any Saleable Books for others selected from my various Lists. Special List of 2,000 Books I particularly want post free.—EDW. BAKER'S Great Bookshop, 14-16, John Bright Street, Birmingham.—Yellow Book, 13 vols. 2l. 10s.; Round's Feudal England, 12s. 6d. for 6s. 6d.; E. Fitzgerald's Works, 7 vols. 3l. 3s.

Authors' Agents.

THE AUTHOR'S AGENCY.—Established 1879.

The interests of Authors capably represented. Agreements for Publishing arranged. MSS. placed with Publishers.—Terms and Testimonials on application to Mr. A. M. EURGHES, 24, Paternoster Row.

MR. GEORGE LARNER, Accountant and

Licensed Valuer to the Bookselling, Publishing, Newspaper, Printing, and Stationery Trades. Partnerships Arranged. Balance Sheets and Trading Accounts Prepared and Audited. All Business carried out under Mr. Larner's personal supervision.—28, 29, and 30, Paternoster Row, E.C., Secretary to the Booksellers' Provident Institution.

Printers.

FAMILY RECORDS, PEDIGREES, MEMOIRS,

&c., PRINTED under Expert Supervision, and Searches made where MS. is incomplete. Write for Estimates and all Particulars.—GERRARDS, Ltd. (The Westminster Press), Producers of Printing of Distinction, at 411A, Harrow Road, London, W.

ATHENÆUM PRESS.—JOHN EDWARD

FRANCIS, Printer of the Athenæum, Notes and Queries, &c., is prepared to SUBMIT ESTIMATES for all kinds of BOOK, NEWS, and PERIODICAL PRINTING.—13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

Sales by Auction.

STEVEN'S AUCTION ROOMS, Established 1760.

FORTHCOMING SALES BY AUCTION.

TUESDAY NEXT, at 1 o'clock.

The CONCLUDING PORTION of the COLLECTION of BRITISH LEPIDOPTERA formed by the late T. MADISON, Esq., F.E.S., comprising the Remainder of the Noctua and Geometrae.

WEDNESDAY NEXT, at 1 o'clock.

VALUABLE NATURAL HISTORY BOOKS, chiefly Entomological, being LIBRARIES formed by Dr. SHARPIN, C. H. SCHILL, Esq., W. H. E. THORNTON, Esq., including copies of the Annals and Magazine of Natural History, Biologia Centrali-Americana, Barrett's Lepidoptera of the British Isles, and other valuable Books.

FRIDAY NEXT, at half-past 12 o'clock.

Several high-class ORNAMENTAL TURNING and SCREW-CUTTING TREADLE LATHES, including a 5½-inch Centre Screw-Cutting Lathe, with Attachments for Wheel Cutting, Milling, Slot Drilling, Taper Turning, Chucks, &c., by Birch—a 5-inch ditto Traversing Mandrel and Screw Cutting, with Birch's Dividing and Wheel Cutting Attachment, by Kennan, of Dublin, Holtzapffel, and others. Also a quantity of FISHING TACKLE, including Rods, Reels &c., by Hardy, Cummins, Slater, and other good Makers.

TUESDAY, March 16, at half-past 12 o'clock.

A great variety of ETHNOLOGICAL SPECIMENS from the SOUTH SEA ISLANDS, including some very fine painted Masks, Spears, Carvings, &c., the Property of a LADY. Also Chinese and Japanese Curios, Pictures, Prints—English and Foreign China—and the usual Miscellaneous Assortment.

FRIDAY, March 19, at half-past 12 o'clock.

The COLLECTION OF MICROSCOPES and MICRO EFFECTS formed by the late Dr. W. J. GRAY, of Cheltenham.

TUESDAY and WEDNESDAY, March 23 and 24, at 1 o'clock.

The COLLECTION of BRITISH LEPIDOPTERA formed by the late J. PARDOE, Esq.

TUESDAY, March 30, at half-past 12 o'clock.

WORKS of ART, ETHNOLOGICAL SPECIMENS, &c.

Catalogues and particulars of the above Sales may be had (when ready) on application to Mr. J. C. STEVENS, 33, King Street, Covent Garden, London W.C.

Coins and Medals.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on MONDAY, March 8, at 1 o'clock precisely, COINS and MEDALS, comprising English Coins in Gold and Silver, from William I. to George IV.—a few Tokens and War Medals—Roman Coins—Continental, Colonial, and Oriental Coins—Coin Cabinets and Numismatic Books.

May be viewed. Catalogues may be had.

Porcelain, Old English Pottery, and other Works of Art.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on TUESDAY, March 9, at 1 o'clock precisely, PORCELAIN, OLD ENGLISH POTTERY, and other WORKS of ART, including the COLLECTION of a GENTLEMAN, comprising fine Pieces of Stafford, Ralph Wood, Whieldon, Wedgwood, Astbury, Lambeth, Delft, and other Pottery—Plymouth, Bristol, Chelsea, Longton Hall, Swansea, Nantgarw, Worcester, and other Porcelain, &c. Another Property, including a Series of fine Minton Plates, and a Salon Cabinet, and Wall Brackets. Other Properties, comprising fine Wedgwood, in Blue and White and Black—Salt Glaze Jars and Teapots, Swansea and Worcester Porcelain, &c.

May be viewed. Catalogues may be had.

The Collection of Coins and Medals, the Property of JOSEPH WILLIAMS, Esq. (deceased), of Waterloo, Liverpool.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION (by order of the Executors), at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on WEDNESDAY, March 10, at 1 o'clock precisely, the small but choice COLLECTION of ANGLO-GALLIC, ENGLISH, and SCOTTISH COINS and ENGLISH and FOREIGN COMMEMORATIVE MEDALS, &c., the Property of JOSEPH WILLIAMS, Esq., deceased, of Waterloo, Liverpool (sold by order of the Executors); a fine SELECTION of ENGLISH GOLD and SILVER COINS of CHARLES I. and II., the Property of a MILITARY OFFICER; an Officer's Gold Medal for the Battle of Chateaugay, awarded to Lieut.-Col. de Saluberry, H.M. 60th Foot, Ghuznee Silver Medal, presented to Lord Auckland, Governor-General of India, a COLLECTION of ANGLO-SAXON, ENGLISH, and FOREIGN COINS, &c., the Property of a LADY; Coin Cabinet, &c.

May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

The Collection of English Porcelain of J. LOWRY LIGHTFOOT, Esq.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on THURSDAY, March 11, and Following Day, at 1 o'clock precisely, PORCELAIN, POTTERY, and other WORKS of ART, including the COLLECTION of ENGLISH PORCELAIN of J. LOWRY LIGHTFOOT, Esq., comprising Worcester, Chelsea, Crown Derby, Derby, Bristol, and other Porcelain; the COLLECTION of a GENTLEMAN consisting of Old Stafford and other English Pottery—Masonic Jewels, Badges, &c.—a few Bronzes—Oriental Porcelain; also a Violin, made by A. Stradivarius in 1715, in fine condition, the property of a BARONET.

May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

The Library of the Right Rev. the LORD BISHOP OF COLCHESTER (deceased), and the Library of the late FALKLAND WARREN, Esq.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on TUESDAY, March 16, and Following Day, at 1 o'clock precisely, BOOKS and MANUSCRIPTS including the LIBRARY of the Right Rev. the LORD BISHOP OF COLCHESTER (deceased); the LIBRARY of the late FALKLAND WARREN, Esq., and other Properties, comprising rare Americana—Oriental Manuscripts and Printed Books—Publications of the Kelmscott and Doves Presses—Groslier Club Publications—rare Works in English Poetry and Drama—a Collection of Tracts by Martin Luther, mostly First Editions, with fine Woodcut Borders by Holbein, Granach, Burgmaier, &c.—fine Works in Natural History, with Coloured Plates—Fine Art Books—Collections of Military Costumes—Collection of Illustrations by George Cruikshank—Blake's Songs of Innocence and of Experience (1759), &c.

May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

Illuminated and other Manuscripts and Valuable Printed Books.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on THURSDAY, March 18, and Following Day, at 1 o'clock precisely, ILLUMINATED and other MANUSCRIPTS and VALUABLE PRINTED BOOKS, comprising fine Books of Hours, Manuscript and Printed—Bibles, Antiphonales and other Service Books—Illuminated Persian Manuscripts—Italian, French, Flemish and Spanish Miniatures—a fine Flemish Antiphonale of the Fourteenth Century—Dean Swift's Own Copy of his and Pope's Miscellanies, with numerous Annotations by him—Burns's Poems, with Autograph Notes—First Edition of Walton's Angler, and Shakespeare's Poems—an interesting Bunyan Bible—Fourth Folio Shakespeare—rare Early Printed English and Foreign Books, many with fine Woodcuts—First Editions of Mrs. Browning's Works, &c.

May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

The magnificent Library of the Right Hon. LORD AMHERST of Hackney, deceased (Second and Final Portion).

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on WEDNESDAY, March 24, and Three Following Days, at 1 o'clock precisely, the magnificent LIBRARY of choice and valuable Books and Manuscripts, the Property of the Right Hon. LORD AMHERST OF HACKNEY, deceased (Second Portion).

May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had, price One Shilling each.

Books and Manuscripts.

MESSRS. PUTTICK & SIMPSON will SELL by AUCTION, at their Galleries, 47, Leicester Square, W.C., on THURSDAY, March 11, and Following Day, at ten minutes past 1 o'clock precisely, LIBRARIES removed from Warwick and Queen's Gate, including SEVENTEENTH and EIGHTEENTH CENTURY BOOKS and TRACTS in Original Binding—First Editions of Modern Authors, including some Autograph Presentation Copies—Bound Sets of Standard Works—Works on Natural History, including a fine copy of Bewick's Birds and Quadrupeds, First Edition, uncut—Books relating to the Fine Arts, including Ruskin's Works, by Cook, Library Edition—Property's Miniature Art—Audsley and Bowles, Ceramic Art—Racinet, L'Ornement Polychrome—Boydell's Shakespeare Gallery—Holbein's Portraits, by Chamberlaine—Ackermann's Oxford University, 2 vols.—Blagdon's India—Purcell's Orphans Britannicus—Parkinson's Theatrum Botanicum—Voyages—Travels—Americana—a fine Collection of Autograph Letters, including one of Lord Nelson to Lady Collingwood, dated 1798—Coloured Prints, Drawings, &c.

Catalogues may be had.

Modern Books and Remainders.

MESSRS. HODGSON & CO. will SELL by AUCTION, at their Rooms, 115, Chancery Lane, W.C., on THURSDAY, March 11 and Following Day, at 1 o'clock, MODERN BOOKS and REMAINDERS—Surplus Stocks of New Publications—Sets of Standard Authors, some in leather bindings—Modern Books on Natural History, Sport, and Travel, &c.; to which are added MISCELLANEOUS BOOKS in VARIOUS BRANCHES OF LITERATURE, including The Vale Press Shakespeare, 40 vols.—Burton's Arabian Nights illustrated, 17 vols.—Hakluyt Society's Publications, 20 vols., 1598-1907—Topographical Works—Folio Books of Engravings—First Editions of Modern Authors, &c.

To be viewed and Catalogues had.

Miscellaneous Books.

MESSRS. HODGSON & CO. will SELL by AUCTION, at their Rooms, 115, Chancery Lane, W.C., on THURSDAY, March 18, and Following Day, at 1 o'clock, MISCELLANEOUS BOOKS, including the LIBRARY of a GENTLEMAN (by order of the Executors), and other Properties, comprising a Collection of Books relating to London and the Southern Counties, some extra-illustrated—Volumes of Topographical Engravings—Books on Heraldry and Genealogy—Eighteenth Century Books of Travel—a few Autograph Letters, &c., also the Library of the late J. L. ROGET (removed from Maida Vale).

Catalogues are preparing.

The Stock and Plant of Sowerby's Botany.

MESSRS. HODGSON & CO. will offer for SALE DURING MARCH, the VALUABLE PROPERTY of OWERBY'S ENGLISH BOTANY, 13 vols., comprising the entire Stock and Plant of the Third Edition of this Standard Work.

Rare and Valuable Books, including a Selection from the Library of a Nobleman.

MESSRS. HODGSON & CO. will SELL by AUCTION, at their Rooms, 115, Chancery Lane, W.C., DURING APRIL, a SELECTION FROM THE LIBRARY of a NOBLEMAN, comprising Buck's Views in Great Britain, 4 vols.—the Works of Piranesi (early Impressions), and other Architectural Books—Early Works on Gardening—Folio Volumes with Engravings—Old Atlases—Tracts relating to the Popish Plot—Le Sacre de Louis XV., in morocco by Padeloup—La Galerie du Palais Royal, in old French morocco—Albums of Original Water Colour Drawings, &c.

Catalogues are preparing.

A Collection of Books Relating to America.

MESSRS. HODGSON & CO. will SELL by AUCTION, at their Rooms, 115, Chancery Lane, W.C., DURING APRIL, a COLLECTION OF BOOKS RELATING TO AMERICA, comprising Early Voyages and Books on Navigation—Works relating to the First Settlements of the Colonies and to the American Indians—Tracts and Pamphlets on the Revolution—Histories of the States and Counties—Travels in Canada and Hudson's Bay—Books on Central and South America, and the West Indies—American Printed Books, &c., mostly in old calf bindings or in the original boards.

Catalogues are preparing.

MESSRS. CHRISTIE, MANSON & WOODS respectfully give notice that they will hold the following SALES by AUCTION, at their Great Rooms, King Street, St. James's Square, the Sales commencing at 1 o'clock precisely:—

On THURSDAY, March 11, and FRIDAY, March 12, PORCELAIN, the Property of THOMAS CHAMBERLAIN, Esq.; and Porcelain, Objects of Art, and Decorative Furniture from various Sources.

On SATURDAY, March 13, the REMAINING WORKS of the late DAVID FARQUHARSON, A.R.A. A.R.S.A.

Magazines, &c.

THE NINETEENTH CENTURY AND AFTER. MARCH.

THE FUTURE OF CONSTITUTIONAL TURKEY. By Prof. A. Vambéry, C.V.O.

INDIA REVISITED. By Lieut.-Col. C. F. Massy, late Commissioner in the Punjab.

SCOTTISH ORDERS AND CATHOLIC REUNION. By the Rev. Archibald Fleming, D.D.

THE MAKING OR MARRING OF THINGS MILITARY. By Lieut.-Col. Alsager Pollock.

A YEAR WITH THE PUBLIC TRUSTEE. By E. K. Allen.

THE DEFAMERS OF SHAKESPEARE. I. By Sir Edward Sullivan, Bart.

THE MISSING ESSENTIALS OF ECONOMIC SCIENCE. By W. H. Mallock.

SOME SUGGESTIONS TOWARDS A SOLUTION OF THE EDUCATION PROBLEM. By Lady Frederick Cavendish.

EDWARD FITZ-GERALD: a Personal Reminiscence. By Mary Eleanor Fitz-Gerald-Kerrich.

A LESSON FROM AUSTRALIA. By Senator E. Pulsford.

TRADITION versus ENQUIRY IN IRISH HISTORY. By Mrs. John Richard Green.

CALIGULA'S GALLEYS IN THE LAKE OF NEMI. By St. Clair Baddeley.

HOW WE CAME TO BE CENSORED BY THE STATE. Concluded. By Gertrude Kingston.

OXFORD AND THE WORKING CLASSES. By J. B. Rye.

IRELAND "IN EXTREMIS." By Ian Malcolm.

London: SPOTTISWOODE & CO., Ltd., 5, New Street Square.

LINNEAN SOCIETY OF LONDON.—The OFFICIAL RECORD of the DARWIN-WALLACE CELEBRATION of JULY 1, 1908, is NOW READY, and may be had of Messrs. WILLIAMS & NORGATE, 14, Henrietta Street, W.C.; Messrs. LONGMANS, GREEN & CO., 39, Paternoster Row, E.C.; or at the Society's Rooms, Burlington House, W. Price, sewed, 4s.; cloth, gilt top, 5s.

EBENEZER PROUT'S WORKS. Bound, each net 5s.

HARMONY: its Theory and Practice. Twenty-fourth Impression Revised and largely Re-written.

ANALYTICAL KEY TO THE EXERCISES in the same. Net 3s

COUNTERPOINT: Strict and Free. Ninth Impression.

DOUBLE COUNTERPOINT AND CANON. Fourth Impression.

FUGUE. Fifth Impression.

FUGAL ANALYSIS. Third Impression.

MUSICAL FORM. Seventh Impression.

APPLIED FORMS. Fifth Impression.

THE ORCHESTRA. 2 vols. Fourth Impression.

AUGENER Ltd., 6, New Burlington Street, and 22, Newgate Street.

CONTEMPORARY REVIEW.

Edited by Sir PERCY BUNTING.

MARCH. 2s. 6d.

MINISTERS AND THEIR CRITICS. By E. T. Cook.

EUROPEAN FEDERATION: an Interview. By Charles Lowe.

M. ANATOLE LE BRAZ AND THE AWAKENING OF BRITANY. By Ernest Rhys.

CONSTITUTIONAL REFORMS IN INDIA. By the Hon. G. K. Gokhale, C.I.E.

THE LEPERS OF MOLOKAI. By Jack London.

SPIRITUAL HEALING. By Dr. A. T. Schofield.

THE EXORCISM OF HYDROPHOBIA. By E. L. Butcher.

THE PESSIMISTIC TENDENCY OF PANTHEISM. By W. S. Urquhart.

THE YOUNG GENERATION IN GERMANY. By Eulenspiegel.

JOAN OF ARC, M. ANATOLE FRANCE, AND MR. ANDREW LANG. By Winifred Stephens.

POOR RELIEF IN SWITZERLAND. Part II. By Edith Sellers.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS. By Dr. E. J. Dillon.

RECOLLECTIONS OF VICTOR HUGO. By Caroline R. de Havilland

REVIEWS OF BOOKS.

London: HORACE MARSHALL & SON.

THE BUILDER (founded 1842), 4, Catherine Street, London, W.C., MARCH 6, contains:—

RECENT DISCOVERIES IN ROME AND OSTIA.

TO THE RESCUE OF BATH.

PROPOSAL FOR LAYING OUT THE PARADE GROUND AND ST. JAMES'S PARK (with illustrations).

THE SMOKE ABATEMENT EXHIBITION, SHEFFIELD. CARPENTERS' HALL LECTURES.

TESTS OF REINFORCED BRICKWORK.

THE LONDON MASTER BUILDERS' ASSOCIATION.

ILLUSTRATIONS:

CHURCH AT BARNET;

POLICE OFFICES, SUTTON (SURREY);

DECORATION OF CHANCEL, ESSEX CHURCH, NOTTING HILL GATE;

FACTORY, LIMEHOUSE;

CHURCH OF OUR LADY OF COMPASSION, WILLESDEN GREEN;

BATH STREET, BATH (proposed to be destroyed);

DECORATIVE SCULPTURE FOR THE PAPPELPLATZ, BERLIN.

From Offices as above (4d., by post 4½d.), at Railway Bookstalls, Bookshops, and of all News-agents.

NOW READY.

THE NEWSPAPER PRESS DIRECTORY AND ADVERTISER'S GUIDE for 1909.

THE SIXTY-FOURTH ANNUAL ISSUE.

Price 2s. net; post free, 2s. 6d.; foreign 3s. 2d.

C. MITCHELL & CO., Advertising Agency, Mitchell House, 1 and 2, Snow Hill, Holborn Viaduct, London, E.C.

STANLEY PAUL'S

NEW 6/- NOVELS

THE CITY OF THE GOLDEN GATE

E. Everett-Green

DID SHE DO RIGHT?

A. J. Macdonnell

THE DREAM—AND THE WOMAN Tom Gallon

THE BROKEN SNARE Ludwig Lewisohn.

BANZAI! "Parabellum"

THE LEVELLER Alexander McArthur

PRIESTS OF PROGRESS G. Colmore

FORTHCOMING NOVELS INCLUDE—

THE TRICKSTER G. B. Burgin

STOLEN HONEY Ada and Dudley James

THE FLAME DANCER F. A. Mathews

IN CALVERT'S VALLEY M. Prescott-Montague

THE GAY PARADISES Mrs. Stephen Batson

THE ADVENTURES OF A PRETTY WOMAN Florence Warden

AN ADVENTURE IN EXILE Richard Duffy

THE BOTTOM OF THE WELL Frederic Upham Adams

THE QUEEN OF FINLAND Fred. Whishaw

THE GHOST PIRATES W. Hope Hodgson

CO-HEIRESSSES E. Everett-Green

SHOES OF GOLD Hamilton Drummond

THE SECRET TERROR "Brenda"

STANLEY PAUL'S NEW BOOKS

THE ROMANCE OF FRA FILLIPO LIPPI

10s. 6d. net

A. J. Anderson

THE SAMARITANS

10s. 6d. net

James A. Montgomery

POLITICAL ANNALS OF CANADA

10s. 6d. net

A. P. Cockburn

A CHILD'S GUIDE TO MYTHOLOGY

5s. net

Helen A. Clarke

A CHILD'S GUIDE TO PICTURES

5s. net

Charles H. Caffin

THE LITTLE ADVENTURES OF MISS KITTY TIPSY TOE

2s. 6d. net

L. M. Sill

MODERN ARTISTS 25s. net

7s. 6d. net

Christian Brinton

THE APPRECIATION OF THE DRAMA

3d. net

Charles and C. A. Caffin

FRENCH GARDENING WITHOUT CAPITAL

3d. net

E. Kennedy Anton

WOMAN IN MUSIC 3s. 6d. net

1s. net

George P. Upton

BALLADS OF BRAVE WOMEN

1s. net

A. H. Miles

STANLEY PAUL & CO.
Clifford's Inn, Temple Bar, E.C.

Swan Sonnenschein & Co. LTD.

SOME NEW AND FORTHCOMING BOOKS.

OPINIONS ON MEN, WOMEN, AND THINGS.

By the late HARRY QUILTER. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d. net. Also an ÉDITION DE LUXE of 50 Copies on art paper, bound in vellum, 3l. 3s.

RAILWAY RATES.

By the late JOSEPH HORROCKS. Demy 8vo, cloth, 21s. net.

The method of calculating equitable rates and charges for merchandise carried on railways.

STUDENT'S TEXT-BOOK OF ZOOLOGY.

By ADAM SEDGWICK, M.A., Professor of Zoology and Comparative Anatomy in the University of Cambridge. Profusely Illustrated.

THE THIRD VOLUME, COMPLETING THE WORK, IS NOW READY.

Vol. I. PROTOZOA TO CHAETOGNATHA. 18s.

Vol. II. CHORDATA TO MAMMALIA. 21s.

Vol. III. COMPLETING THE WORK. 24s.

NEW VOLUME OF THE SPECIAL CAMPAIGN SERIES.

THE RUSSO-JAPANESE WAR.

DOWN TO THE BATTLE OF LIAO-YANG. By Capt. F. R. SEDGWICK, R.F.A. With numerous Maps. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s. net.

A NEW AND ENLARGED EDITION OF TEXT-BOOK OF PETROLOGY.

By FREDERICK H. HATCH, Ph.D. With numerous Illustrations, 7s. 6d. net.

NEW IMPRESSION OF FEUDAL ENGLAND.

By J. HORACE ROUND. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d.

NEW IMPRESSION OF SKEPTICS OF THE ITALIAN RENAISSANCE.

By the late Rev. J. OWEN. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d.

STUDIES IN ROMAN HISTORY. (Second Series.)

By E. G. HARDY, M.A. D.Litt. Fellow and Tutor of Jesus College, Oxford. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

ETHER ISLANDS.

A Supposal. By FRANCIS RAM. Crown 8vo, 6d.

DRAMATIC SCENES FROM GREAT NOVELISTS.

Adapted by ROSE I. PATRY, Author of 'Practical Handbook on Elocution.' Crown 8vo, cloth, 1s. net, paper 6d. net.

NEW VOLUME OF THE NEW CLASSICAL LIBRARY.

THE INSTITUTES OF GAIUS. (Extracts.)

The Digest. Title XLV. Translated by J. GRAHAM TRAPNELL, B.A. LL.B. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. net; leather, 4s. 6d. net.

NEW, REVISED, AND ENLARGED EDITION OF CONTEMPORARY SOCIALISM.

By JOHN RAE, M.A. Demy 8vo, cloth, 5s. net.

HISTORY AND ETHNOGRAPHY OF SOUTH AFRICA.

Vol. I. THE PORTUGUESE IN AFRICA. [Now ready.]

Vol. II. FORMATION OF CAPE COLONY BY THE DUTCH. [Shortly.]

Vol. III. ACCOUNT OF THE DUTCH, PORTUGUESE, HOTTENTOTS, AND BANTU. [In preparation.]

THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS YEARBOOK, 1909.

Nineteenth Year of Issue. 3s. 6d. net.

THE SCHOOLMASTERS' YEARBOOK AND DIRECTORY, 1909.

Seventh Annual Issue. 7s. 6d.

SWAN SONNENSCHN & CO., LTD.,
25, High Street, Bloomsbury, W.C.

ENGLISH REVIEW.

2s. 6d.

Monthly.

No. 4. Vol. I.

MARCH, 1909.

EMILE VERHAEREN, HENRY
JAMES, JOSEPH CONRAD, H.
GRANVILLE BARKER, H. G.
WELLS, ETHEL CLIFFORD,
VIOLET HUNT, G. K.
CHESTERTON, &c.

AN ARTICLE ON THE

SECRET HISTORY OF THE RUSSIAN INTERNATIONAL SPY SYSTEM,

With special reference to

The AZEFF Scandals,

AND A

Censored Article

BY HILAIRE BELLOC, M.P.

ON THE

SOURCE OF INFORMATION.

DUCKWORTH & CO. Henrietta Street, W.C.

THE BRITISH TAR

IN FACT AND FICTION

The Poetry, Pathos, and Humour of the Sailor's Life

With Frontispiece in Colour and 130 Illustrations from Old Prints, &c.

By COMMANDER C. N. ROBINSON, R.N.,

AUTHOR OF 'THE BRITISH FLEET.'

With Chapters on the place of the Sea Officer and Seaman in Naval History

By JOHN LEYLAND, Author of 'The Blockade of Brest.'

Demy 8vo, cloth extra, gilt tops, 15s. net.

"Of inestimable value in our naval history and literature—containing many pregnant comments. For the tout ensemble of the book we have nothing but praise. A rare volume, the first of its kind in our nautical literature."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"There are so many points of interest in the book that it would be a pleasure to expatiate among them even to prolixity, but we cannot indulge in such freedom."—Times.

HARPER'S LIBRARY OF LIVING THOUGHT.

Fcap. 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d. net; leather,
3s. 6d. net.

"Short studies on great subjects by distinguished living men."—Standard.

FIRST THREE VOLUMES:

A. C. Swinburne THREE PLAYS OF SHAKESPEARE

"Leads us to so many fine points of observation."—Daily Telegraph.

Leo Tolstoy THE TEACHING OF JESUS

"Will set students thinking."—Christian World.

W. M. Flinders Petrie PERSONAL RELIGION IN EGYPT BEFORE CHRISTIANITY.

"Shows what Christianity meant to those who actually heard the teaching of the Way."

Please write for full particulars of this Series.

A REMARKABLE FIRST NOVEL BY AN ENGLISH WRITER.

DIANA OF THE SWAMP

ROY N. CLARKE. 6s.

"A thoroughly good story, excellently presented, and the characters well and sympathetically observed."—Daily Telegraph.

"A very successful work, the interest becomes intense, and the last scene is highly dramatic. The characters are well marked, and the plot is developed with a quite unusual skill."

Belfast Newsletter.

BY THE AUTHOR OF 'THE COMIC SIDE OF SCHOOL LIFE.'

MERRY MOMENTS WITH SCHOLARS

HENRY J. BARKER. 1s. net.

Cover Design by J. HASSALL.

"The reader will find many a laugh in these examples of unconscious juvenile humour."

Birmingham Post.

"Much delight to readers who are fond of a good thing."—Scotsman.

HARPER'S

MARCH NUMBER
Now Ready,

CONTAINING

CONTRIBUTIONS BY NORMAN DUNCAN, G. A. BIRMINGHAM, W. D. HOWELLS, &c.

ILLUSTRATIONS TO HENRY VIII. by E. A. ABBEY, R.A. With

Comments by Prof. CHURTON COLLINS.

A NATURALIST IN THE TROPICS. By M. B. BEEBE.

WONDERS OF THE STEEL INDUSTRY. By W. G. BEYMER.

60 ILLUSTRATIONS by FRANK CRAIG, E. SHIPPEN GREEN, and others.

7 COMPLETE STORIES and Part IV. of a New Serial: THE INNER SHRINE

HARPER & BROTHERS, 45, Albemarle Street, London, W.

MESSRS CONSTABLE'S SPRING BOOKS

THE ROMANTIC MOVEMENT IN ENGLISH POETRY. By ARTHUR SYMONS. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

PLAYS, ACTING AND MUSIC: a Book of Theory. By ARTHUR SYMONS. Crown 8vo, 6s. net. [Shortly.]

THE VALLEY OF SHADOWS. By FRANCIS GRIERSON, Author of 'Modern Mysticism' and 'The Celtic Temperament.' Extra crown 8vo, 6s. net. [Next week.]

SIX MASTERS IN DISILLUSION. By ALGAR THOROLD. Crown 8vo, 6s. net. [Next week.]
Penetrating studies of Anatole France, Huysmans, Maeterlinck, Fontenelle, Merimée, and Fabre.

PERSONAL RECOLLECTIONS OF WAGNER. By ANGELO NEUMANN. Translated from the Fourth German Edition. With Portraits and one of Wagner's Letters in Facsimile. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net. [Ready.]

THE GIRLHOOD OF QUEEN ELIZABETH: a Narrative in Contemporary Letters. By F. A. MUMBY, Editor of 'The Letters of Literary Men.' With an Introduction by R. S. RAIT, M.A., Fellow of New College, Oxford. With numerous Portraits, Views, and Facsimiles. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

AN HISTORICAL INTRODUCTION TO THE MARPRELATE TRACTS. By WILLIAM PIERCE. Illustrated. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net. [Ready.]

THE STORY OF THE HOUSEHOLD CAVALRY, 1661 - 1902. By Capt. Sir GEORGE ARTHUR, Bart., late Second Life Guards. With Photogravure Portraits and other Illustrations, including 6 Coloured Plates. 2 vols. Super-royal 8vo, Edition de Luxe limited to 35 copies, 10l. 10s. net. Ordinary Edition, 3l. 13s. 6d. net.

GLIMPSES OF THE TWENTIES. By WILLIAM TOYNBEE, Author of 'Vignettes of the Regency.' With Photogravure Frontispiece and 24 Plates. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. net. [Next week.]

AENEAS SILVIUS (Enea Silvio de Piccolomini—Pius II.), Orator, Man of Letters, Statesman, and Pope. By WILLIAM BOULTING. Illustrated. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. net. [Ready.]

THE LAST DAYS OF PAPAL ROME. By R. DE CESARE, Author of 'Last Days of the Kingdom of Naples.' Translated from the Italian by Miss HELEN ZIMMERN. Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

FAMOUS WOMEN OF FLORENCE. By EDGCUMBE STALEY, Author of 'The Guilds of Florence,' 'Tragedies of the Medici,' &c. Photogravure Frontispiece and 7 Plates. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

CONTEMPORARY FRANCE. By GABRIEL HANOTAUX. Vol. IV., 1877-1900. Translated from the French. With Portraits. Demy 8vo, 15s. net.

RACIAL PROBLEMS IN HUNGARY. By "SCOTUS VIATOR" (R. W. SETON-WATSON). With 42 Illustrations of Peasant Art and Costume, including 6 in Colour, and a Map of Hungary. Demy 8vo, xxviii + 540 pages, 16s. net. [Ready.]

ECONOMIC HERESIES. Being an Unorthodox Attempt to appreciate the Economic Problems presented by 'Things as They Are.' By Sir NATHANIEL NATHAN. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net. [Next week.]

ENGLISH HERALDIC BOOK STAMPS: Figured and Described. By CYRIL DAVENPORT, F.S.A. Illustrations. Super-royal 8vo, 25s. net.

HISTORIC ROMAN COINS. By G. F. HILL, Author of 'Historic Greek Coins.' Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

FORTHCOMING NOVELS

FRANKFORT MOORE

Priscilla and Charybdis

ALICE BROWN

The Story of Thyrsa

W. E. NORRIS

The Perjurer

LOUISE CLOSSER HALE

The Actress

VINCENTE IBANEZ

The Shadow of the Cathedral

H. M. RIDEOUT

Dragon's Blood

R. W. CHAMBERS [New Edition.]

The King in Yellow

NEW BOOKS BY BERNARD SHAW

THE DOCTOR'S DILEMMA and GETTING MARRIED. With 2 Prefaces. 1 vol. 6s.

JOHN BULL'S OTHER ISLAND. In Four Acts. Paper, 1s. 6d. net; cloth, 2s. net.

MAJOR BARBARA. In Three Acts. Paper, 1s. 6d. net; cloth, 2s. net.

THE ADMIRABLE BASHVILLE AND HOW HE LIED TO HER HUSBAND. Paper, 1s. 6d. net; cloth, 2s. net.

THE BIOGRAPHY OF A SILVER FOX. By ERNEST THOMPSON SETON. With numerous Illustrations by the Author. Demy 8vo, 5s. net.

A CONCORDANCE TO THE ENGLISH POEMS OF THOMAS GRAY. Edited by ALBERT S. COOK. 8vo, 10s. 6d. net. [Ready.]

PORCELAIN: Oriental, Continental, and British. A Book of Handy Reference for Collectors. By R. L. HOBSON. 49 Plates. Demy 8vo, 6s. net. [Second Edition ready.]

UNIVERSITY ADMINISTRATION. By CHARLES W. ELIOT, President of the Harvard University. Crown 8vo, 6s. net. [Ready.]

NATIONAL INDEPENDENCE; or, a Common-sense Policy. By FRANCIS FRANCIS. Fcap. 8vo, cloth, 1s. net; paper, 6d. net. [Ready.]

IDEAS OF A PLAIN COUNTRY WOMAN. By the "Country Contributor." Crown 8vo, 235 pages, 3s. net.

THE DOMINION OF DREAMS. By FIONA MACLEOD. A New Edition in Pocket Form. Cloth, 2s. 6d. net; leather, 3s. 6d. net.

SPRING LIST ON APPLICATION.

10 ORANGE STREET
LEICESTER SQUARE

LONDON W.C.

'THE COUNTRY HOME'

Messrs. Longmans & Co.'s LIST.

Unemployment: a Problem of Industry.

By W. H. BEVERIDGE, formerly Sub-Warden of Toynbee Hall. 8vo, 7s. 6d. net. (Inland postage 4d.)
"It is a book which every one ought to have read who presumes to write or speak on the question of unemployment."—Westminster Gazette.

TWO NEW BOOKS BY MR. ANDREW LANG.
SECOND IMPRESSION.

The Maid of France: being the Story of the Life and Death of Jeanne d'Arc.

With Maps and Portraits. 8vo, 12s. 6d. net. (Inland postage, 5d.)
"The most exhaustive, the most authoritative, and the most delightfully told story of the life of the Maid of Orleans that has yet been written in the English language."—Standard.

Sir George Mackenzie, King's Advocate, of Rosehaugh: His Life and Times, 1636(?)–1691.

With 4 Illustrations. 8vo, 15s. net. (Inland postage 5d.)
"Mr. Lang's brilliant pages are full of suggestive passages, his story is alive with old echoes of forgotten beliefs and 'impossible loyalties.'"—Daily Telegraph.

The Dawn of the Catholic Revival in England, 1781–1803.

By BERNARD WARD, F.R.Hist.S., President of St. Edmund's College, Ware. With numerous Portraits and other Illustrations. 2 vols. 8vo, 25s. net.
[On Monday next.]

Old Irish Folk Music and Songs; a Collection of 842 Irish Airs and Songs hitherto Unpublished.

Edited, with Annotations, for the Royal Society of Antiquaries of Ireland by P. W. JOYCE, M.R.I.A., President of the Society. Royal 8vo, 10s. 6d. net. (Inland postage, 5d.)

Germany in the Later Middle Ages, 1200–1500.

By WILLIAM STUBBS, D.D., formerly Bishop of Oxford. Edited by ARTHUR HASSALL, M.A. With 2 Maps. 8vo, 7s. 6d. net. (Inland postage, 4d.)

A History of English Journalism to the Foundation of the 'Gazette' (1667).

By J. B. WILLIAMS. With a Portrait of Charles II. and 5 Facsimiles. 8vo, 10s. 6d. net. (Inland postage 5d.)
"Mr. Williams is to be congratulated on a successful attempt to plough a way through the drifts of English journalism during the Great Rebellion."—Athenæum.

The Human Species: Its Specific Characteristics considered from the Standpoints of Comparative Anatomy, Physiology, and Pathology.

By Dr. LUDWIG HOPPE, of Stuttgart. Translated from the German. With 7 Plates and 217 Illustrations in the Text. 8vo, 10s. 6d. net. [On Monday next.]

NEW NOVEL OF COUNTRY LIFE BY THE AUTHOR OF 'MISS BADSWORTH, M.F.H.' Polly Winford.

By EYRE HUSSEY. Crown 8vo, 6s. (Inland postage 4d.)
"English fox-hunting has an imaginative literature, as it has a pictorial art of its own; and this clever, readable, and high-spirited novel is true to its best traditions."—Scotsman.
"A really capital novel with a distinct sporting flavour about it."—Field.

TWO NEW VOLUMES OF THE SILVER LIBRARY.

Price 3s. 6d. each.

Lysbeth: a Tale of the Dutch.

By H. R. HAGGARD. With 26 Illustrations.

Pearl-Maiden: a Tale of the Fall of Jerusalem.

By H. R. HAGGARD. With 16 Illustrations.

LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.
39, Paternoster Row, London, E.C.

MR. HEINEMANN'S NEW BOOKS. CONQUERING THE ARCTIC ICE.

By EJNAR MIKKELSEN.
Profusely illustrated. Demy 8vo, 20s. net.
"Admirably written and vivacious, one of the most human and winning books of travel ever published."—Daily Telegraph.

RECOLLECTIONS OF BARON DE FRÉNILLY, PEER OF FRANCE (1768–1828).

With Portrait. Demy 8vo, 10s. net.
"He writes with all the Gallic vivacity and charm. There are many vivid events vividly described in this enthralling volume."—Daily Chronicle.

AUTHORIZED BY MR. WHISTLER. THE LIFE OF JAMES MCNEILL WHISTLER.

By E. R. and J. PENNELL.
THIRD EDITION, Revised. Profusely illustrated. Crown 4to, 36s. net.
"A masterly biography. It is rich in illustration of his personality as well as of his work."—Pall Mall Gazette.

COMPLETION OF A GREAT HISTORICAL WORK. THE GREATNESS AND DECLINE OF ROME.

By GUGLIELMO FERRERO.
Vol. V EAST AND WEST:
The Republic of Augustus. 6s. net.
"Historical students have immediately recognized the sound scholarship upon which this work is based, while it attracts the general reader by its charm and sustained interest, its picturesqueness, and its insight into character."

ROMANCES OF THE FRENCH REVOLUTION.

By G. LENOTRE,
Author of 'Marie Antoinette.' 2 vols. 20s. net.
"An admirable book. The author combines Professor Morse Stephens's zeal for burrowing in archives with Carlyle's delight in the human interest of his subject. All the stories are good."—Times.

NEW SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

A Second Large Impression is Now Ready of
MR. GALSWORTHY'S NEW NOVEL,
FRATERNITY.

By JOHN GALSWORTHY, Author of 'The Man of Property' and 'The Country House.'
"There are many things in this book that are unforgettable; there are whole chapters that are masterpieces of delicate and restrained workmanship."—Standard.

RACHEL LORIAN. [2nd Imp.]

By Mrs. HENRY DUDENEY, Author of 'Folly Corner,' &c.
"It is the real thing. The characters are excellently drawn from actual palpitating life."—Daily Telegraph.

UNCLE GREGORY.

By GEORGE SANDEMAN.
SYRINX.
By LAURENCE NORTH.
"It is seldom indeed that one meets a book at once so virile and so excellent in manner and matter."—Sketch.

A PRINCE OF DREAMERS.

By FLORA ANNIE STEEL,
Author of 'On the Face of the Waters.'

"As a romance the book is a fine one. The intrigues are closely knotted; there is an abundance of vivid colour and picturesque background, and the narrative power grows effectively to the climax."—Saturday Review.

THE CLIMBER.

By E. F. BENSON, Author of 'Sheaves,' &c.
"The heroine may be likened to the immortal figure of Becky Sharp. It must be acknowledged that Mr. Benson's study is eminently successful."—Spectator.

WM. HEINEMANN 21, Bedford Street, W.C.

MR. MURRAY'S NEW BOOKS.

GEORGE CANNING AND SOME INTIMATE FRIENDS.

Containing hitherto Unpublished Letters, Jeux d'Esprit, &c.
Edited by Capt. JOSCELINE BAGOT.
With Portraits. Demy 8vo, 30s. net.

"It is a fascinating circle of people to whom we are introduced. All interested in the movements of the puppets who make history must study these fascinating and illuminative volumes. Two magnificent volumes adorned by some admirable reproductions of famous portraits."—Daily Telegraph.

THE LIFE OF ADMIRAL SIR LEOPOLD MCCLINTOCK,

The Great Arctic Explorer and Discoverer of the Fate of Franklin. By Sir CLEMENTS MARKHAM, K.C.B. F.R.S. With Maps and Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 15s. net.

GENTLEMAN ERRANT.

The Travels and Adventures of Four Noblemen in Europe in the Fifteenth and Sixteenth Centuries. By Mrs. HENRY CUST. With Map and Portraits. Demy 8vo, 12s. net. [Ready next week.]

This book narrates in a picturesque style the travels, adventures, and manners of four gentlemen who wandered over the world in search of anything they could find which was worth the having; wives, wealth, politics, and war attracted all of them, and, touching life at every point, their records give a lively and first-hand picture of the times they lived in. The notes are drawn from authoritative sources, many of which are quoted for the first time. The volume, while entertaining in itself, possesses serious historical value.

NEW NOVEL BY MISS R. MACAULAY. THE SECRET RIVER.

By the Author of 'The Furnace,' 'Abbots Verney,' &c. 2s. 6d. net.
JOHN MURRAY, Albemarle Street, W.

NOTICE.

NOTES AND QUERIES.

THE VOLUME

JULY to DECEMBER, 1908,

WITH THE

INDEX,

Price 10s. 6d.,

IS NOW READY.

* * The INDEX separately, price 6d.;
by post, 6½d.

Also Cases for Binding, price 1s.;
by post, 1s. 2d.

JOHN C. FRANCIS & J. EDWARD FRANCIS,
Notes and Queries' Office, Bream's Buildings, E.C.

SOME R.T.S. ANNOUNCEMENTS.

A New and Important Missionary Biography. Demy 8vo, cloth gilt, 6s. net.

THE LIFE OF GEORGE GRENFELL, CONGO MISSIONARY AND EXPLORER.

By the Rev. GEORGE HAWKER. With Photogravure Portrait, Maps, and 32 Full Pages of Illustrations.

The achievements of George Grenfell as explorer and geographer have been scientifically treated by Sir Harry Johnston. Mr. Hawker has addressed himself to the task of giving the life story of a man who was first of all a missionary.

The 400th Anniversary of the Birth of Calvin. Just ready. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 2s. 6d.

JOHN CALVIN: the Man and his Work.

By the Rev. C. H. IRWIN, M.A. With Portraits and numerous other Illustrations.

The Times says:—"Mr. Irwin tells his story tersely and instructively." The British Weekly says:—"It is an admirable short biography."

The Daily Chronicle says:—"Mr. Irwin's Calvin is popular in style and well informed in all its facts."

The Glasgow Herald says:—"It is a handy, simple, and well-indexed account of the Reformer, his system, and his general influence."

Dr. ALEXANDER WHYTE says:—"This is a compact, popular, and every way capital life."

The Christian World says:—"It is well worth reading as a summary of the man and his work."

A Fascinating Book after the style of 'The Chronicles of the Schonberg-Cotta Family.'

THE LAST DAYS OF JOHN HUS. A Historical Romance.

Translated from the Original Czech. With an Introduction by W. R. MORFILL, Professor of Slavonic Languages in the University of Oxford. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 2s. 6d. With 24 Illustrations by the Eminent Painter, JAN DEDINA.

This book is illustrated by pictures of remarkable interest. Never before has such a graphic account of the Council of Constance, and the trial, condemnation, and death of Hus been given to English readers.

"IN REMEMBRANCE OF ME."

AN ANSWER TO THE EUCHARISTIC CONGRESS OF SEPTEMBER, 1908.

By the Rev. F. S. WEBSTER, M.A. Fcap. 8vo, cloth gilt, 1s.

Contents:—(1) The Real Presence. (2) The Nature of the Gift. (3) Faith Indispensable. (4) Is the Lord's Table an Altar?

THE TRIUMPHS OF THE CROSS.

BRIEF COUNSELS ON FAITH AND DUTY.

By ROBERT F. HORTON, D.D. Small crown 8vo, cloth, 1s. net.

This little book purports to be a reminder of the beginning and the end of a Christian life, an epitome of the things which really matter for one who would be a good soldier of Jesus Christ.

THE CHILDREN IN THE KING'S HIGHWAY.

TALKS TO CHILDREN ON THE SECOND PART OF 'THE PILGRIM'S PROGRESS.'

By the Rev. CHARLES BROWN, President of the Baptist Union. With Coloured and other Illustrations by HAROLD COPPING. Large crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 2s. 6d.

NEW EDITIONS.

FOXES' BOOK OF MARTYRS. An Edition for the People.

Prepared by W. GRINTON BERRY, M.A. With 7 Illustrations printed in Colours. Large crown 8vo, cloth, 2s.

JAMES GILMOUR OF MONGOLIA: his Diaries, Letters, and Reports.

Edited and Arranged by RICHARD LOVETT, M.A. New and Improved Edition. With 3 Coloured and several other Illustrations. ("Great Men Series," No. 5.) Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 1s. 6d.

Uniform with 'Sketches of Jewish Social Life.'

THE TEMPLE: its Ministry and Services in the Time of Christ.

By the Rev. Dr. ALFRED EDERSHEIM. Cheap Edition. Large crown 8vo, in attractive binding, cloth gilt, 2s.

The Athenæum says:—"The author knows the varied topics he discusses better than most scholars in England. There are few who will not learn from a volume which has the results with little of the show of learning."

IAN MACLAREN'S ST. JUDE'S. New Popular Edition.

Crown 8vo, 288 pages, in cloth, 1s. net.

The British Weekly says:—"In literary power 'St. Jude's' is equal to the best of Dr. Watson's writings."

The Glasgow News says:—"There are lights and shadows, tragedy and comedy, numerous fine touches in this volume, and a deal of the pathos which abounded in the Drumtochty stories."

The Glasgow Herald says:—"There is a delicate garnishing of humour."

JOSEPH HOCKING'S THE CHARIOTS OF THE LORD.

With 4 Coloured Illustrations by ADOLF THIEDE. Large crown 8vo, attractively bound, cloth gilt, 2s. ("The Bouverie Florin Library," No. 4.)

AMY LE FEUVRE'S THE MAKING OF A WOMAN.

Author of 'Probable Sons,' 'Odd,' 'A Bit of Rough Road,' &c. New Edition. With 4 Illustrations by VICTOR PROUT. Large crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 3s. 6d.

'The Making of a Woman' is an intensely interesting love story, possessing that charm of style, that depth of tenderness, and that happy characterization which are naturally associated with Miss Le Feuvre's work.

MACMILLAN'S NEW BOOKS.

Psyche's Task: a Discourse Concerning the Influence of Superstition on the Growth of Institutions. By J. G. FRAZER, D.C.L. LL.D. Litt.D. 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.

The book is "an attempt to sort out the seeds of good from the heap of evil which we call superstition, just as Psyche was given the task of sorting out the different kinds of seeds." The subjects dealt with are Government, Private Property, Marriage, and Respect for Human Life.

Social Life at Rome in the Age of Cicero.

By W. WARDE FOWLER, M.A., Author of 'The Roman Festivals of the Period of the Republic,' &c. With Map and Plans. 8vo, 10s. net.

Monuments of Christian Rome

from Constantine to the Renaissance. By ARTHUR L. FROTHINGHAM, Ph.D., Professor of Archaeology and Ancient History at Princeton University. Illustrated. Extra crown 8vo, 10s. 6d. (Handbooks of Archaeology and Antiquities. [Tuesday.]

The Ancient Greek Historians

(Harvard Lectures). By J. B. BURY, Litt.D. LL.D., Regius Professor of Modern History in the University of Cambridge. 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

The Characters of Theophrastus.

An English Translation from a Revised Text, with Introduction and Notes by R. C. JEBB, M.A., Fellow and Assistant-Tutor of Trinity College, Cambridge, and Public Orator of the University, 1870. A New Edition. Edited by J. E. SANDYS, Litt.D. 8vo, 7s. 6d. net. [Classical Library.]

The Acropolis of Athens.

By MARTIN L. D'OOGE, Professor of Greek in the University of Michigan. Fully illustrated. 8vo, 17s. net.

WRITING PAPER EDITION FOR MARGINAL NOTES.

The New Testament in the Original Greek.

The Text Revised by BROOKE FOSS WESTCOTT, D.D., and F. J. A. HORT, D.D. Demy 8vo, 5s. net.

Notes of a Botanist on the Amazon and Andes.

Being Records of Travel during the Years 1849-1864. By RICHARD SPRUCE, Ph.D. Edited and Condensed by ALFRED RUSSEL WALLACE, O.M. F.R.S. With Illustrations and Maps. 2 vols. 8vo, 21s. net.

Jimbo. A Fantasy.

By ALGERNON BLACKWOOD, Author of 'John Silence,' &c. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net. Morning-Post.—"It is a powerful piece of work, very closely thought out and knit."

The Novels of Henry James.

ÉDITION DE LUXE. In 23 vols. 8vo, 8s. 6d. net each. Vol. XII. THE ASPERN PAPERS; THE TURN OF THE SCREW; THE LIAR; THE TWO FACES.

NEW 6/- NOVELS.

TONO-BUNGAY.

By H. G. WELLS.

SECOND IMPRESSION.

One Immortality.

By H. FIELDING HALL, Author of 'The Soul of a People,' &c.

Mars as the Abode of Life.

By PERCIVAL LOWELL, A.B. LL.D., Author of 'Mars and its Canals,' &c. Illustrated. 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

The Religion of the Common Man.

By Sir HENRY WRIXON, K.C. Crown 8vo, 3s. net. Guardian.—"A notable contribution to the increasing number of books which are written not for the expert, but for the cultivated, thinking layman."

MACMILLAN & CO., LTD., London.

Werner Laurie's Publications for the Spring, 1909

PAUL VERLAINE: His Life, His Work
By E. Lepelletier £1 1s. net

TRAGEDIES OF THE MEDICI
By Edgumbe Staley 12s. 6d. net

LOLA MONTEZ: an Adventure of the Forties
By Edmund B. d'Auvergne 12s. 6d. net

THE LOVE STORY OF EMPRESS JOSEPHINE
By James Endell 12s. 6d. net

THE COMING SCIENCE
By Hereward Carrington 7s. 6d. net

THE CATHEDRALS AND CHURCHES OF BELGIUM
By T. Francis Bumpus 6s. net

OLD ENGLISH TOWNS
By William Andrews 6s. net

EARLY CHRISTIAN HYMNS
By D. J. Donahoe 6s. net

THE EDUCATION OF THE WILL
By T. Sharper Knowlson 6s. net

HOROSCOPES AND HOW TO CAST THEM
By Comte C. de Saint Germain 6s. net

STRANGE STORIES FROM A CHINESE STUDIO
By Professor H. A. Giles 6s. net

GENERAL LEE: Man and Soldier.
By T. Nelson Page 6s. net

FIGHTS FORGOTTEN
By Henry Sayers 6s. net

THE MODERN MOTHER
By Dr. H. Lang Gordon 6s. net

NIGHTS WITH THE GODS
By Emil Reich (Doctor Juris) 6s.

THE KING AND ISABEL
By the Author of 'The Adventures of John Johns' 6s.

LOVE AND A WOMAN
By Charlotte Mansfield 6s.

THE END OF THE ROAD
By Stanley Portal Hyatt 6s.

RETRIBUTION
By C. Ranger Gull 6s.

A GENTLEMAN FROM PORTLAND
By C. Ranger Gull 6s.

RED LOVE
By G. de S. Wentworth James 6s.

COUSINS AND OTHERS
By Katharine Tynan 6s.

THE ISLE OF LIES
By M. P. Shiel 6s.

GOD'S MAGDALEN
By Olive Christian Malvery 6s.

THE SILENT ONES
By Mary Gaunt and J. Ridgwell Essex 6s.

THE ADVENTURES OF LOUIS BLAKE
By Louis Becke 6s.

THE EMPRESS OF THE ANDES
By Florence Warden 6s.

LIL O' THE SLUMS
By Dick Donovan 6s.

THE TEARS OF DESIRE
By Coralie Stanton and Heath Hosken 6s.

THE DUKEDOM OF PORTSEA
By Alice Maud Meadows 6s.

THE ADVENTURES OF AN EMPRESS
By Helene Vacarasco 6s.

EVERYDAY ELECTRICITY
By Frank Broadbent, M.I.E.E. 3s. 6d. net

EVERYDAY ASTRONOMY
By H. P. Hollis 3s. 6d. net

ROADS TO RICHES
Thornton Hall 3s. 6d. net

STORIES FROM THE GREEK LEGENDS
C. Gasquoine Hartley 3s. 6d. net

CAMBRIDGE COLLEGES
R. Brimley Johnson 2s. 6d.

THE GARDEN BOOKLETS
K. L. Davidson 6 vols. 1s. net each

THE NIGHT SIDE OF LONDON
Robert Machray, illustrated by Tom Browne, Sixpenny Edition

WERNER LAURIE, Clifford's Inn, London.

BEMROSE & SONS' LIST.

In the press.

MEMORIALS OF OLD LANCASHIRE.

Edited by Lieut.-Col. FISHWICK, F.S.A. Beautifully illustrated. In 2 vols. demy 8vo, cloth extra, gilt top, price 25s. net.

Among the contents are the following articles: Historic Lancashire—Roman Lancashire—Old-Time Travel in Lancashire—Salford Old Ford—Lancashire Legends—The Siege of Lathom—Elswick Congregational Church, the Mother of the Fylde Nonconformity—Old Grammar Schools—Manchester Old Church—Witches and Witchcraft—A Vicar in Trouble—Houses of Yeomanry and Peasantry in the Seventeenth Century—Cartmel Priory—Castles and Fortified Houses—Ormskirk Town and Church—Some Old Lancashire Authors—Early Wigan—A Lancashire Squire of the Eighteenth Century—Liverpool—Music in Lancashire in the Eighteenth Century—Crosses of Lancashire—Chetnam College—Furness Abbey—High Furness—Old Paris Registers—Preston Guild—Heysham Church—Roods, Screens, and Lofts—Old Widnes—Hoghton Tower—Old Fountains of Leyland and West Derby Hundreds.

In the press.

MEMORIALS OF OLD MIDDLESEX.

Edited by J. TAVENOR-PERRY. Beautifully illustrated. Demy 8vo, cloth extra, gilt top, price 15s. net.

Among the contents will be found articles on: The County of Middlesex—The Ancient Churches of the County—The Rood-Screens—The Battlefields—Holland House—Fulham Palace and the Bishops of London—The Pilgrimage of the Brent—Syon Convent and House—Chiswick Villa—The Parks and Historic Houses—The Story of Chelsea—Harrow-on-the-Hill: its Church and School—The Riverside Haunts of the Poets and Painters.

MEMORIALS OF OLD ESSEX.

Edited by A. CLIFTON KELWAY, F.R.Hist.S. Dedicated by kind permission to the Right Hon. the Earl of Warwick, Lord Lieutenant of Essex. Beautifully illustrated. Demy 8vo, cloth extra, gilt top, price 15s. net.

"Will be one of the most essential volumes in the library of every man and woman who has an interest in the county."—Southend Telegraph.

MEMORIALS OF OLD SUFFOLK.

Edited by VINCENT B. REDSTONE, F.R.Hist.S. Beautifully illustrated. Demy 8vo, cloth, gilt top, price 15s. net.

Dedicated by kind permission to the Right Hon. Sir W. Brampton Gurdon, Lord Lieutenant of Suffolk.

"Rich in new material for students of local history, and always written in a manner that makes its learning attractive."—Scotsman.

"Will be found one of the most comprehensive works dealing with our famous county."—Bury and Norwich Post.

THE LAST FORMED SEE OF THE ANGLICAN CHURCH.

THE CATHEDRAL CHURCH AND SEE OF ESSEX.

By the Rev. J. CHARLES COX, LL.D. F.S.A. Contains an outline Story of the founding of Christianity in the Kingdom of the East Saxons in the Seventh Century, and pursues the history of the Church in Essex. Crown 8vo, with many illustrations. Paper covers, price 1s. 6d. net: cloth gilt, price 2s. net; postage, 2d. extra.

"To Churchmen generally...should prove especially interesting."—Church Family Newspaper.

"Of great interest to Anglicans residing in the lately established See."—Globe.

A TEACHING PRIEST.

A brief Memoir of the Rev. F. W. VERNHAM. By KATHERINE E. VERNHAM. With a Foreword by the Rev. A. T. FRYER. With 4 illustrations. Crown 8vo, bound paper cover, price 1s. net; post free, price 1s. 2d.

"A charming production, every page teeming with interest."—Western Mail.

London: BEMROSE & SONS, LTD.,
4, Snow Hill, E.C.; and Derby.

SATURDAY, MARCH 6, 1909.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE
RECOLLECTIONS OF A SPINSTER AUNT	281
SANDY'S HISTORY OF CLASSICAL SCHOLARSHIP ..	282
SIMON FRASER, LORD LOVAT	282
GOVERNOR POWNALL OF MASSACHUSETTS ..	283
NEW NOVELS (Jimbo; The Archdeacon's Family; A Son of the Emperor; John Broome's Wife; The Straw; Links in the Chain; Diana of the Swamp; The City of the Golden Gate; Captain Vanion's Business; The Unloved)	284
VERSE	285
THE FUTURE OF THE POOR	286
OUR LIBRARY TABLE (Le Maréchal Canrobert; The Great English Letter-Writers; Excerpta Cypria; Brougham and his Early Friends; Democracy and Character; Tortures et Supplices à travers les Ages; Hutchinson's Charles and Mary Lamb; The Newspaper Press Directory; Upper Norwood Athenæum)	287-289
LIST OF NEW BOOKS	289
LITERARY GOSSIP	290
SCIENCE—EXPERIMENTAL ELASTICITY; THE WORLD'S GOLD; RESEARCH NOTES; SOCIETIES; MEETINGS NEXT WEEK; GOSSIP	292-294
FINE ARTS—THE NEW CROWE AND CAVALCASELLE; THE ROYAL SOCIETY OF PAINTER ETCHERS AND ENGRAVERS; PASTELS BY MR. SIMON BUSSY; SMITH'S 'CATALOGUE RAISONNÉ'; CARAN D'ACHE; THE NEW PICTURE GALLERY AT THE VATICAN; MADAME HENRIETTE RONNER, R.I.; SALES; GOSSIP; EXHIBITIONS	294-298
MUSIC—WORKS BY M. DEBUSSY; DEBUSSY CONCERT; PHILHARMONIC CONCERTS; BACH CHOIR; VIN-CENZO BELLINI; GOSSIP; PERFORMANCES NEXT WEEK	298-299
DRAMA—THE REAL WOMAN; THE TUDOR FACSIMILE TEXTS; GOSSIP	299-300
INDEX TO ADVERTISERS	300

LITERATURE

Recollections of a Spinster Aunt. Edited by Sophia Beale. (Heinemann.)

OPINIONS vary about spinster aunts, as was repeatedly revealed in the debates which preceded the passing of the Deceased Wife's Sister Act. For our part we regard them as a necessary, beneficent, and often charming part of the creation. They look after our children when we want to go away for an unimpeded holiday, and they make frocks for the little girls. In all our experience of the species, however, we have never met with a spinster aunt who was a barefaced tarradiddle or a prophet. Yet Miss Beale's relation, born in the Early Victorian age, must be one or the other. Perhaps some expert medium will induce this most interesting and lively old lady to open communications and inform the listening world how she contrived to foresee so many events which certainly had not happened when she professed to write the gay and humorous letters ascribed to her in this volume. In a letter placed by the editor between September, 1871, and January, 1872, we read of a young girl "knitting belts for Kitchener's Horse," whereas Kitchener's Horse, or rather Fighting Scouts, did not come into being till nearly thirty years later. In another letter, dated in 1882, there is a reference to "what was, years ago, described as the 'greenery-yellow Grosvenor Gallery' style"; but 'Patience' was first produced on April 23rd, 1881, which is not so many "years ago" as to excuse the misquotation of "greenery-yallery." A matinée of 'Die Walküre' placed before a letter of 1871 strikes one as what is vulgarly called "previous." Were there "Tottenham Court Road suites" of furniture in 1855? Would a lady in "the early sixties" write "we intend to smash up all young-ladyisms"? A letter also placed in "the sixties" refers to people's "temperament" and to "Bacteria and Microbes" which "in those days...had not yet been discovered." We only mention one or two points among many which strike us as suspicious or singular. After all, the aunt may have been an Early Victorian Cassandra.

But there is no need to multiply anachronisms, and it is rude to speculate about a lady's age. If we seem to trace different hands in this entertaining book, it may perhaps be owing to our studies in the Higher Criticism, which is apt to dishevel the ideas of the sanest critic. Miss Beale, after all, is responsible for her precocious relation, who, if she corresponded with anybody, certainly did not correspond to the Duke of Illyria's picture of

The spinsters and the knitters in the sun,
And the free maids that weave their thread with bones.

She is a notably emancipated aunt, and expresses her opinions on religion, conventions, music, and art with delightful candour and freshness. Painting is her profession, and music her passion; and she has much to say on both arts which is distinctly suggestive. If her criticisms on French impressionist painters and the gouache process seem rather advanced, and even prophetic, for her age, they are full of insight; and her taste in landscape, wherein she prefers the lank, waving willows of France to "our stodgy elms and oaks," has much to be said for it. She is generally good on nature, and we can even sympathize with her depreciation of the nightingale, which would be more coolly judged if it were a day-singer.

She avows herself a "Puseyite," and gives a gruesome sketch of St. Martin's-in-the-Fields in the old days when pious peers occupied the pews which looked like stage-boxes—only they had glass windows—on either side of the altar, and on their entrance "threw up the sash-windows: then they drew a seat to the front and laid their books upon the velvet ledge, for all the world as people do at a theatre, and one expected to see a fan and an opera-glass." Those were the days when "Popish practices" were eyed with deep suspicion, and the spinster aunt, kneeling during the office of the Eucharist in Westminster Abbey, was curtly told by the verger, "If you are not going up, you must go out!" She had her compensations when she went to All Saints', Margaret Street, and heard her favourite Batiste organ voluntaries, which she afterwards tried to reproduce at "St. John's"; but as she was going there she was waylaid by a tract-distributor in Oxford Street, who presented her with a pamphlet headed "To a Drunken Ostler: where are you going, young man? To the gin palace." With more delicate irony a letter to her, misdirected Parkhurst, instead of Parkeston, was returned to the writer with these official graffiti: "Not I. of W. Try London, N. Not Parkhurst Rd., Holloway, N. Retd. from H.M. Prison, Holloway, and not known there." Her devotion to Batiste, by the way, received a sad shock when, after hearing his exquisite playing at St. Eustache, Paris, she "conceived a burning desire to see this divine soulful organist; so I waylaid him at the foot of the organ staircase. The door opened, and he came forth from the darkness. What did I see? A little fat Frenchman filling up the turret stairs with a bald head and commonplace pasty countenance. Alas! it is a mistake to desire to see the envelope of a great mind or of a poetic soul. He is the finest organist I ever heard, not even excepting Saint-Saëns."

Yet the Spinster Aunt cannot appreciate "Johann Sebastian"; but then even her remarkable genius for anachronism did not inspire her to hear Bach at his organ. In her case the love of music and painting wholly shut out all liking for poetry:—

"I never read poetry if I can get prose. Between ourselves, if the most exquisite poetry ever written was contained in the only printed book, that book would be rarely opened by me—never if the house contained a piano. Surely there is no reason why the devotee of poetry should be so superior to the music-lover?...A person's soul may be full of the melody of musical sounds, and yet be deaf to the melody of musical verse. So again colour and form may be strongly developed in one man as regards the plastic arts, but the harmony and form of a poem he finds quite incomprehensible."

But if the Spinster Aunt does not love poetry, she has a genial flow of humour to make up for the loss. Her descriptions of the shrewd talk of the two servants Betty and Nancy are racy indeed, and she takes the precaution of referring to the devil as "Him" with a capital H. There is an admirable suggestion for founding Parochial Homes for engaged couples, with an annexe where young musicians could practise the piano, because the lovers would not notice the discords; and she offers a solution of the Irish Church difficulties. She would establish the Roman Catholic as the State Church:

"The R. C.s might not agree, but I doubt them refusing loaves and fishes even with loss of some independence. From an artistic point of view, the cardinals would look well sitting up in scarlet as they do in 'Henry VIII.'"

In a book of this kind there is no need to dwell on inaccuracies, but it seems a pity that the Spinster Aunt, writing apparently in "the sixties," did not consult Mr. Lionel Cust's article in the 'Dictionary of National Biography,' published in 1898, before stating that Nicholas Stone died in 1699 and his son John "in the same year as his father." The true dates seem to be 1647 and 1667. But we do not go to the Spinster Aunt for "facts." Miss Beale has produced a refreshing and lively book, full of good things, and however she "put together" these "old letters," she has done it very well.

A History of Classical Scholarship. By John E. Sandys. Vols. II. and III. (Cambridge, University Press.)

THESE volumes bring Dr. Sandys's work to a close. They are a marvel of compression and a marvel of accuracy; more, they are not only readable, but they also hold the attention. Dr. Sandys has the art of interpolating personal touches and anecdotes amongst his mass of details, thus reminding us continually that we are reading of human lives. It does, indeed, strike the reflective mind with a sense of the insignificance of the single life when we see one man's work after another compressed into a dozen lines of small print; yet we feel sure that most of these men would be content if their work, or the spirit of it, lasted, even if it were no more than one stone in the temple of learning that their hands should have laid. Most of these scholars were men of this dignified sort; few were like Facciolati, content to live by the work of a subordinate, whose credit he did his best to take. Scholars, it is true, have their vanities and their little weaknesses: they are human. But their ambitions are mostly high, their self-devotion great. We feel this specially in the account of the struggles of scholars in early Germany. Food, wealth, clothing, even health, were all second to the love of learning; no disadvantages were too great, no toil too heavy, for these men, and it is no wonder that they left their mark. Men of this sort have been known in all countries; there are some alive still; but hardly so many altogether as in Germany in the early days. This kind of scholar is not made by County Council bursaries.

The second volume deals with the Revival of Learning in Italy, 1321-1527, and the sixteenth, seventeenth, and eighteenth centuries (excluding Germany); the third completes the survey down to the present day. The former includes the years of most enthralling interest, when the Latin classics were discovered anew, and Greek literature introduced to Europe. What a time it was—when any man might find a new author or a new book, and when the new books were not a treatise on 'The Constitution of Athens,' but Livy, Cicero, or Catullus, Homer, and Sophocles, and Plato! when printers were themselves scholars; and although men had to live, the master-passion of the age was not the love of money, but of great spirits and great ideas! It is a story which can never lose its charm.

As we glance at our notes, we do not know what to mention in such a wealth of matter. It is instructive to see that the clergy were afraid of the new learning. A monk in 1551 was heard to declare in the pulpit:—

"They have recently discovered a language called Greek, against which we must be on our guard. It is the parent of all heresies. I observe in the hands of many persons a work written in that language, called the New Testament. It is a work teeming with brambles and vipers. As for Hebrew, all who learn it immediately become Jews."

In the twentieth century the tables are turned. It is the apostles of Progress who hate Greek, and Greek is saved by the country parsons: as for Hebrew, who would learn Hebrew? There is no money in Hebrew. In the great age of learning even the dumb creation was affected by the mode. Fabretti of Urbino, who spent his time in delving among ruins and vaults, was aided by his horse:—

"This wise and faithful animal, named Marco Polo, had acquired, it is said, the habit of standing still, and as it were pointing, when he came near an antiquity; his master candidly owning that several things which would have escaped him had been detected by the antiquarian quadruped."

The earlier scholars had more esprit, the later more learning; and the imagination is staggered by the achievements of a Boeckh, a Fabricius, or a Mommsen. It is certainly true that learning for a long time obscured the more human influences of antiquity; and amongst the scholars of the eighteenth century one feels the creeping paralysis that has resulted in a mechanical system. Now we see a reaction, partly due to the influences of archæology and excavation, partly to the genius of the teacher. The methods of the great schoolmasters of the past, a Guarino or a Vittorino, of Vives and Cordier, of Erasmus and Scaliger, continued by a few men of genius like Comenius and Gesner, were obscured by the grammarian's ideal, which resulted in intellectual death: the modern who wishes to save for the young something of the bright intellectual life of the past may find many useful hints in these volumes. It is a striking comment on our English system that few schoolmasters in this generation show much evidence of scholarship: in the last generation there were several; and in the nineteenth century a large share of the work of research was done by the German schoolmaster.

We must not forget to mention that these volumes are enriched with a large number of portraits. We are truly grateful for these, since even the old prints show somehow the characteristic marks of personality, and enable us to understand the men better. There are also comparative tables showing for each century, in parallel columns, the names and dates of the chief scholars. These and the Bibliography are very useful. We append one or two corrections: ii. 196, read North for Florio; 243, note³ belongs to Holland's 'Plutarch,' not his 'Livy'; iii. 408, Badham met Cobet first in 1843 (Cobet, 'Brieven an Geel,' p. 399).

Simon Fraser, Lord Lovat: his Life and Times. By W. C. Mackenzie. (Chapman & Hall.)

SIMON FRASER, LORD LOVAT, has been commemorated with Titus Oates in a volume called 'Twelve Bad Men.' His life was also written by Hill Burton, but without the industry and fullness of information which Mr. Mackenzie brings to his task. Mr. Mackenzie has made good use of documents among the Additional MSS. of the British Museum which were unknown to Hill Burton, and he studies Lovat in an impartial spirit, attempting neither to whiten nor blacken his character. Some difficult points are cleared up, a few errors of long standing are corrected, and we see Lovat as the able, ambitious, unscrupulous Scot, very vain, very insinuating, and devoted above all things to his clan, his ambition being to raise it and himself at least to the level of the Argyles and the Huntlys.

Simon began life by four years of hard reading at his University, Aberdeen, as he tells us, for he was then a younger son, and probably hoped to make the Bar a step to political life. The death of his elder brother made him the defender of the right of his father, Thomas Fraser of Beaufort, to the Lovat title and estates, then held by his cousin, his father's nephew. This Lord Lovat married Lady Amelia Murray, daughter of the Marquis of Atholl, and sister of that Lord John Murray who declined to join the great Dundee before Killiecrankie. Lord Lovat was induced by the Atholls to make his daughter Amelia his heiress, thereby cutting out the father of Simon and Simon himself. Now the barony of Lovat was a male fief, as the Supreme Court of Scotland recognized in 1730. Simon was thus kept out of what was legally his own, and to get his own was his honest and natural desire. His finances did not permit him to try the remedy of the law, and his conduct took the form of violent actions. It may be doubted whether his marriage with the Dowager Lady Lovat, aged thirty-one when Simon was about twenty-one, should be considered a "rapt" or a "rape." The law decided that it was the latter, and also found Simon, in absence, guilty of high treason. These two verdicts oppressed him: he lived a wandering, brigand-like life when in the North, and naturally found his way to the exiled Court of St. Germain. Then came his semi-official visit to ascertain the state of feeling in Scotland (1703). Mr. Mackenzie succeeds, where others have failed, in disentangling the two Murrays, John and James, who are mixed up in this affair. John accompanied Lovat, and defended his honesty after Lovat returned to France; but James took the opposite view, and influenced the Courts of Versailles and St. Germain against Simon, before John Murray was able to arrive with his favourable report. Meanwhile, in this country Lovat had spun a web of intrigue round Queensberry, who, on his information, revealed a Scottish plot, hoping to crush his rival Atholl. But the information was so incorrect that Queensberry lost office. Lovat was accused of returning to France as a spy of England; Robert Fergusson the plotter informed against him, and Sir John Maclean with other Scottish connexions of James saved themselves by throwing guilt on Simon. In France Mary of Modena, Berwick, and Middleton were all persuaded of Lovat's treachery, Middleton dissembling his hatred to an extent which Mr. Mackenzie blames. Whether it were wicked or not to deceive that arch-deceiver Simon is a question for political casuists. Simon was long a captive at Angoulême; he became a Catholic, and professed his belief at his death.

Simon had a quarrel with the world, and in 1715, with that pleasing writer Major Fraser of Castle Leathers, he managed to return to England. Mar's rising was running its course, and Simon, after many adventures well known through the book of "the poor Major," raised his clan in the interests of the House of Hanover and the Protestant religion, took the town of Inverness, and did all the harm in his power to the Jacobite cause. Consequently he recovered his estates and title, and was in a position which he thoroughly enjoyed—a cock of the North. How he was vexed by the English Government, which began to distrust him; how in 1736-7 he entered into relations with the Cause; how he played for a ducal title from James, wrecked the Jacobite party in 1745 by his futile vacillations, and lost his head in 1746 is a familiar tale.

The merit of Mr. Mackenzie lies in his patient and careful disentangling of the most complicated knots of intrigue (Lovat's marriages are as intricate as his political plots); in his new information, notably the love-letters of Lucy Jones to Simon; and in his fair dealing with a character which had some sympathetic traits, such as loyalty to clan and kindred. That Mr. Mackenzie does much in the way of clearing the Earl of Mar from the charge of military ineptitude we fail to see. He had a larger force than ever followed Montrose or Dundee, but he neither led them to victory, nor even kept them supplied with powder, though that commodity is a product of human skill, and could easily have been manufactured in Perth. As Mr. Mackenzie himself says, Mar "had excellent material at his disposal, and a more energetic commander would undoubtedly have used it to a better purpose." Simon's egregious vanity was not quite compatible with a sane mind; his brutality in the matter of the rapt or rape is not easily condoned; and to trust him was a fatal error. But it would be unfair to regard him as a monster of iniquity: he was more like a better-educated Barry Lyndon with a much wider field for his operations. The Jacobites had a tenderness for his memory, though he twice dealt deadly blows to their cause; and nobody can deny him the virtue of courage.

Perhaps the most interesting portrait in the book is that of "the poor Major," Fraser of Castle Leathers, a "very pretty man" in the trows. Unluckily, we are told nothing about the artist; was the Major painted in France? Mr. Mackenzie, by the way, throws some light on Sir Alexander Maclean of Otter, a very gallant soldier under Dundee, and later colonel of a regiment in the French service. "There is no conclusive evidence that the Col. Maclean who betrayed Ormonde (1715) was Sir Alexander." Was there more than one Col. Maclean then in the French service, and is there any certainty that Sir Alexander was alive in 1715?

Thomas Pownall, M.P., F.R.S., Governor of Massachusetts Bay, Author of the Letters of Junius. By Charles A. W. Pownall. (Henry Stevens, Son & Stiles.)

THERE was room for a brief biography of Governor Pownall, since he played no inconsiderable part in the affairs of his time, and in many ways anticipated the modern theory of Colonial administration. But it is to be feared that Mr. Charles Pownall has to a large extent defeated his own end by developing the career of his kinsman to the prodigious length of some 460 pages, with a prolix supplement on 'The Colonies under Kings George III. and Edward VII.' He writes with ability, and his work is unmistakably the outcome of painstaking research. The Record Office, the British Museum, and eighteenth-century literature have supplied him with evidence which on several important points amplifies or corrects previously accepted ideas about the Governor. Unfortunately, he has not known what to reject. We are compelled to follow Governor Pownall, after his return from America, in the House of Commons, through one session after another, though he was admittedly a poor speaker and destitute of political influence. Worse still, we have to peruse analyses of nearly all his writings, though a good deal of them is of little value, notably his disquisitions on Roman antiquities and the origin of the European races. There was some reason for Horace Walpole's sneer at "pert Governor Pownall, who accounts for everything immediately, before the Creation or since."

The eagle eye of Chatham discerned in Pownall, who had originally gone to America as secretary to Sir Danvers Osborne, the Governor of New York, a fitting instrument for breaking down the French ascendancy in America. Pownall, according to his own statement, which is evidently trustworthy, pointed out that victory was to be attained by striking directly at Quebec; and that the expedition should be twofold, one part sailing up the St. Lawrence from England, the other operating from the Colonies. This communication was made to the Minister while Pownall was visiting England in the latter part of 1756. In February, 1757, the Gazette announced that he had been appointed Captain-General and Commander-in-Chief of Massachusetts Bay, in the room of the incompetent Shirley. Mr. Charles Pownall tells with much detail the story of the Governor's vigorous administration. There can be no two opinions as to the loyalty with which he backed up the military and naval commanders, or the tact with which he managed the Massachusetts Assembly, a body that required riding with a very light rein. But, when Quebec had fallen, the Lords of Trade thought that British authority must be reasserted. Pownall was transferred to the better-paid, but unimportant Governorship of South Carolina. He did not take up the appointment, but returned to England; and after serving on the Continent as Commissary-General, he never held public employment again.

In the House of Commons Pownall kept ostentatiously clear of party, in days when it was necessary to be among the "friends" of this statesman or that. He thereby doomed himself to impotence, especially as his views were much too enlightened for general acceptance. Thus Pownall urged that the American Colonies should be given direct representation in the Imperial Parliament; he drew a determined line between external and internal taxation; and he recommended negotiations for peace while the majority were obstinately bent on continuing the war. Pownall even suggested that he should go as an unofficial agent to the Colonies with a proposal that Britons and Americans should combine to suppress the Indians:—

"I will without commission, without pay or the expectation of any reward whatsoever, go myself to the Congress and make the proposal. And though I take with me no commission by which Government may be committed.... I will find a way to give assurance to the Congress that they may act on my proposal. I will put myself as a hostage into their hands for the truth of what I propose and for the good faith of Government. On this ground I am ready to set out this moment. I feel not a little happy that what I have said is well received by the House. Whether it will be accepted and adopted by Government I know not, I feel I have done my duty."

But to all his advice and entreaties the Government turned a deaf ear. It is conceivable that he talked and wrote too much. A later generation of politicians was wont to exclaim in dismay, "Here comes Stuart with his eternal Poles!"

Mr. Charles Pownall boldly describes his kinsman as "author of 'The Letters of Junius,'" his theory being that Francis wrote them at Pownall's dictation. This idea is fifty years old, so far as Pownall is concerned; and various coincidences can be adduced in its favour, such as the apparent idleness of the Governor's usually indefatigable pen while the Letters were being published, and Lord Shelburne's saying that "the grounds of secrecy had been removed by death" two months after Pownall had passed away. Mr. Charles Pownall might also have quoted the third Lord Holland's impression of Francis's conversations that "he always seemed to me to know or imply something about Junius, but to deny strictly his being the author" ('Further Memoirs of the Whig Party,' Appendix D). But these and the other points cleverly elaborated by Mr. Charles Pownall fall very far short of proof. It is one thing to discredit Francis's authorship as opposed to penmanship; it is another to bring that authorship home to Pownall. The theory seems to us to break down absolutely in the important matter of style. We can see no resemblance whatever between the sharp, antithetical sentences of Junius, and the undistinguished prose of Pownall. A conceivable emendation of the theory would be that Francis or another "wrote up" rough notes supplied by the Governor. But that again would be a mere conjecture, unsupported by tangible evidence.

NEW NOVELS.

Jimbo. By Algernon Blackwood. (Macmillan & Co.)

MR. BLACKWOOD relates the psychic adventures of a timorous boy during the period of coma following concussion of the brain. Fright, in the form of a winged giant, captures his discarnate spirit, and imprisons it in a house resembling "the Empty House," which he has dreaded ever since an indiscreet governess suggested that it was haunted by evil. His attempt to escape by means of wings, which he is taught to use by the governess's ghost, is the motive of a distinctly clever and even poetic fantasy of aviation. The total effect would be stronger if Mr. Blackwood had revealed or appeared to reveal a doctrine about fear which would uplift the reader, but one leaves these pages with just as much respect for the power of fear as one had before perusing them.

The Archdeacon's Family. By Maud E. King. (John Murray.)

MISS KING's story is the work of a close observer and a clever writer who has not yet mastered the rules of construction nor the value of omission. She gives her readers too intricate a study of the careers and emotional experiences of two of the three sons of Archdeacon Tatham. These are both influenced by the same woman, for the charming Hilary's weakness which is ultimately to be his ruin begins with the pretty Welsh peasant girl who later, as a famous singer, calls out all the strength of renunciation as well as the sweetness in the sturdier character of the younger brother. Their stories are true enough to life, and in themselves admirably told, but include a superfluity of detail, while they are not closely enough woven to satisfy the dramatic purposes of fiction. The characterization is all excellent. Mrs. Tatham, the witty, eccentric little old lady whose worldly ambition, thwarted by the spiritual temperament of the Archdeacon, is centred in her sons, is an excellent creation.

A Son of the Emperor. By Newton V. Stewart. (Methuen & Co.)

MR. NEWTON STEWART, a new recruit to the ranks of historical novelists, has chosen the natural son of the great Emperor Frederick II., Enzo, for a time King of Sardinia and Corsica, as the hero of his romance of the Middle Ages. Enzo, who is represented as having a singularly charming personality, played a prominent part in the final struggles of the Guelfs and the Ghibellines, and especially before his tragic eclipse he was an active and useful asset in his father's prolonged duel with the Papacy. The author must be thanked for having avoided the note of brutal cruelty frequent in novels of mediæval Italy. If he errs, it is rather in a touch of sentimentality in his characters, especially with regard to the heroine Bianca of Bologna. They are, however, on the whole pleasant people to read about; there is no lack of stirring and interesting incident; and the gorgeous atmosphere of the Renaissance is well sustained.

John Broome's Wife. By E. B. Moffat. (Fisher Unwin.)

HELEN RIVERS, a young girl driven to despair by her lover's betrayal and desertion, is prevented from drowning herself by a blind man, who, through his infirmity, has himself drained the cup of bitterness. John Broome is a complete stranger to her, but he at once conceives the chivalrous notion of giving the desperate girl his name and protection. Unfortunate misunderstandings which arise on their wedding day do not tend to simplify their relations, which are further complicated by Broome's frantic jealousy when his wife becomes a mother, though it is not until the end of the story, through another woman's jealousy, that he discovers her lover's identity with his own favourite cousin and heir. Meantime a mutual love has grown up between the strange couple, which proves strong enough to override all barriers. Miss Moffat has treated a situation which is in many points conventional with some freshness, and she has evident feeling for a dramatic situation; but the end is commonplace, and less successfully handled than the earlier chapters.

The Straw. By R. Ramsay. (Hutchinson & Co.)

ALTHOUGH this novel may be read appreciatively as a Leicestershire hunting and racing romance, it is more interesting and imaginative than such a description would imply. The principal character, Lord Tokenhouse, is an almost perfect example of the man of secret power, the human counterpart of the dark horse who leaves the favourite behind. He is also a powerful instrument of Nemesis. "The Straw" is a lovable woman whom a villainous major marries for her money. Humour is provided by a burlesque burglary and the operations of two gentlemen farmers called the Babes.

Links in the Chain. By Headon Hill. (John Long.)

THE acumen of the amateur detective of fiction is apt to become tedious, but Kenrick Herriot, the Home Office official with "a clean-shaven, actor-like face," in this story, though not above discerning a vital clue in the chance juxtaposition of brown and white breadcrumbs on a table-cloth, displays, on the whole, unusual and refreshing common sense. The mystery which taxes his powers—to wit, the murder of a dissolute old baronet, brained by a decanter in his own dining-room at dead of night—coupled with unjust suspicions, is scarcely novel in conception. The details, however—comprising a Bond Street clairvoyant of the adventuress type, together with a lady (the widow of the baronet) suffering from homicidal mania—are treated with freshness and a laudable regard for relevancy; while suspense is skilfully maintained to the end.

Diana of the Swamp. By Roy N. Clarke (Harper & Brothers.)

SOME picturesque portraits of Virginian negroes render this story readable, despite the bald sensationalism of its plot. The title-character is a negress who, in the days of slavery before the Confederate war, cursed the family of her Spanish master, who had killed her son in a fit of ill-temper. The chain of catastrophe ends with a murderer's suicide, before which we have the spectacle of an innocent young doctor in the dock.

The City of the Golden Gate. By E. Everett-Green. (Stanley Paul & Co.)

THIS is not a good story, nor is it well told, while its illustrations are humorously grotesque. It is a sensational tale of a beautiful girl who is dominated by a handsome villain with hypnotic gifts. She flees from his baleful neighbourhood to San Francisco, which leads to the introduction of the earthquake. Naturally the handsome hypnotist turns up there, and things happen in a melodramatic fashion.

Captain Vanion's Business. By Walter Dalby. (Alston Rivers.)

THERE is more study of character in this than in most books of adventure, though in the main it is a story of incident and travel in a wild part of Africa. It is long and fairly well written. Its detail is good, and gives evidence of painstaking work. These facts will more than compensate the ordinary novel-reader for the other notable thing about the story, which is that in essentials it is all wrong. As a study of character it hinges upon impossible premises. Forget these, and the story itself proceeds most satisfactorily. Continue to bear in mind the central motive which takes the heroine to Africa, and the rest is spoilt.

The Unloved. By Ethel Hill. (Greening & Co.)

MISS ETHEL HILL makes a great strain upon her readers when she asks them to believe that an enlightened, healthy, level-headed young woman, as her heroine is represented to be, should have chosen to be the mistress of a brutal and unattractive scoundrel who did not even love her. Mary Primrose, when she classed herself with the "unloved," was no doubt an instance of a person whom the world is content to take at her own valuation, since whilst she discoursed upon love and liberty and the "true harvest of womanhood," she refused in the beginning to contemplate any of these in the accepted fashion. There are a good many characters introduced, merely for the purpose of discussing, sometimes with effect, the social and economic problems of the day; but it is a depressing book, since no solution to these is offered, and the ultimate peace which Mary is supposed to find is unconvincing.

VERSE.

MR. LAURENCE BINYON'S London Visions (Elkin Mathews) is a reissue of verses already printed, together with certain additions. Many of the pieces of the calibre of 'Narcissus' or 'The Mother,' though too slight to challenge criticism on their own merits, afford some justification for the author's wish that the whole should be regarded as "a single corporate poem." But with this concession granted the work remains singularly uneven, and lightness verging on triviality, alternating with passages both laboured and ponderous, produces a general effect of inchoateness which is distinctly disappointing. Apart from this failing—which must needs be a serious detriment to the value of the book—there are many excellent things in Mr. Binyon's 'Visions.' He has caught the atmosphere of London—especially the London of evening and the small hours—with a subtlety and suggestion essentially his own. Witness the following from 'Mother of Exiles':—

Ships on far tracks are stemming through the night;
South, east and west by foreign stars they steer;
Another half-world in the sun lies bright;
The darkness and the wind are here.

And now the rare late footfall scarce is heard,
But the wind cries along the emptied street;
In cowering lamplight flicker the fine drops
To vanish wildly blurred;
A hunted sky flies over the housetops.
Importunate gusts beat,
Shaking the windows, knocking at the doors
As with phantasmal hands,
A crying as of spirits from far shores
And the bright underlands,
Seeking one place
That is to each eternal in the hue
The light, the shadow of some certain hour,
One pang-like moment years cannot efface.

To the many everyday features of London life—Hyde Park oratory, building operations, road-mending, and the like—Mr. Binyon brings a large leaven of that power of transfiguring common things which is the poet's birthright; but he is at his best only while he holds to what may be termed the contemplative vein. Attempts to depict the definite vicissitudes of definite persons demand a lesser degree of aloofness than that which sees an impressive symbolism in the figure of a "house-breaker," axe in hand, standing "on high in the torch glare," or finds food for picturesque meditation in sunsets and the night-glow of London skies. For this reason the tragic note in such poems as 'Martha' or 'John Winter' is unreal—with a remoteness from the conditions of life described hardly atoned for by graces of imagery or diction—and is, moreover, not entirely untainted with sentimentalism. Had the author chosen to present the older work comprised in the volume in a revised and emended form, much that is weak might have been eliminated. As it is, he has preferred, as he tells us in his Preface, to leave it unaltered, and has come through the ordeal with distinction.

Experiences. By Katharine Tynan. (A. H. Bullen.)—There is little that is striking in Mrs. Hinkson's new poems, and many of them, in their leaning towards facile triviality make severe demands on the reader's indulgence. For example, the application of such epithets as "delicious," "exquisite," and the like, to gorse, hills, and other natural objects, suggests rather the chastened enthusiasm of the tea-table than a serious poetical conception, and is in harmony with the spirit of elementary metrical commonplaces like

Outside my open window
A stretch of village green,
Freshness of quiet morning
Is on the peaceful scene;

or

This is the last time we shall sit and see
The dreaming hills so dear to you and me;
The last time that this mountain wind so cool
Shall lave us in its freshness beautiful.

Lines of this description scarcely soar above the customary level of hymnody, and are typical of the greater part of this little volume, where potential daintiness is consistently brought to nothing by an injudicious laxity of technique. For the rest, the genuine lyrical instinct evident in the stanzas called 'A Memory' goes far to palliate the familiar sentimentalism of their theme, and two poems of a religious tone, 'The Garden' and 'The Man of the House'—each reverently conceived and prettily expressed—are worthy of all praise.

Mr. A. C. Benson's gently meditative volume Poems (John Lane) belongs to a subjective, almost self-conscious order of poesy. In his capacity of "the Poet" he communes with woods and rivulets, and lets his fancy play, in delicate, not always too significant fashion, round flowers, beasts, and birds, culling therefrom the pensive optimistic musings, relative to the future state and laws divine, which to a well-ordered mind are soothing and seemly. The "poet's" rightful atmosphere is in his conception one of aloofness and detachment, symbolized in a beautiful stanza from the ode called 'Monnow':—

Here will I lie a little, till the sun
Slope westward, and the vale be brimmed with shade,
And hear the babbling waters briskly run,
Till every drowsy sound, the clinking spade,
Lowing of cattle from the windy down,
Crying of cocks, the slowly creaking wain,
In deep content the peaceful thought shall drown,
Ay, even the measured puffing of the train,
That hurries busy hearts from town to dusty town.

These lines are admirable in their picturesque suggestion, but they are succeeded by a lengthy admonition of the stream Monnow, including the tracing of its course to the sea, as well as a multitude of the "just reflections" beloved of Dr. Johnson, which, being neither new nor trite, may be said to have attained to the ideal of mediocrity. The omnipresence of the poet's Ego gives rise, here and elsewhere, to a sense of self-centred seclusion which, combined with the trim monotony born of infinite care and unfailing nicety of diction, provides a cage rather than a setting for the spontaneous impulses of the singer. Again, there is thought that is in itself poetry, forging for itself, as it were, its own fetters of expression, which no excess of polish will vitally impair or improve; there is also the thought which is capable of being expressed poetically in verse, and for this—the divine fire being absent—recourse must be had, among other things, to that prop of conscientious versifying, the adjective; and what may be termed the adjectival spirit is strong on Mr. Benson. To "set and reset the curious epithet" (the phrase is from the author's poem on Gray) is a weakness that may be too freely indulged; it is akin to the over-scrupulousness that will add and alter, many times,

Till all be ripe and rotten,

This tendency is doubtless responsible for the phrase

Where bulged the buxom plum, and such a conjunction as

The outrageous splendours of the Morn;
while the perils incident to a well-stored mind could hardly be more cogently set forth than in these frankly reminiscent lines from 'At the Grange':—

Nay, nay! be master of thy fate;
Knit close the bonds that shall endure;
And if thou canst not yet be great,
Be calm, be pure!

But if the volume as a whole reveals no striking poetical personality, it is not without its flashes of real beauty, which atone for much. Of such is the following picture of the fenland; of the Wooded islands crowned with byre and barn,

Where all day long the Goodman biding hears
No sound save clack of waters, or the drum
Of bittern, or the curlew's whistle faint,
Or scream of ruffs, that stamp the marge to mire,
Or booming of a culver down the marsh,
Or grave entreating bells, that ring the folk
To sermon, in the pauses of the wind.

Finely conceived too, is the simile which concludes the sonnet on Keats:—

Thy name is writ in water, ay, 'tis writ
As when the moon, a chill and friendless thing,
Passes and writes her will upon the tide,
And piles the ocean in a moving ring;
And every stagnant bay is brimmed with it,
Each mast-fringed port, each estuary wide;

while for its lyrical spontaneity, in notable contrast to the prevailing spirit of the book, the final poem, 'In a College Garden,' deserves quotation:—

Birds that cry so loud in the old, green, bowery garden,
Your song is of Love! Love! Love! Will ye weary not nor cease?
For the loveless soul grows sick, the heart that grey days harden;
I know too well that ye love! I would ye should hold your peace!
I too have seen Love rise, like a star; I have marked his setting;
I dreamed in my folly and pride that Life without Love were peace.
But if Love should await me yet, in the land of sleep and forgetting—
Ah, bird, could you sing me this, I would not your song should cease!

Mr. Benson's aptness for the Laureate-like task of writing both decorously and with distinction on topics of public interest—like the death of her late Majesty and the Japanese alliance—is also, we think, significant of his limitations.

Poems, by J. Griffyth Fairfax (Smith, Elder & Co.), shows lyrical talent above the ordinary, and an imaginative power as welcome as it is rare. Many of the poems are Hellenic in their inspiration, and of these the soliloquy of Ariadne may be singled out for the sustained and dignified beauty of its blank verse, of which the lines following—on Nemesis—deserve quotation:—

Late, late she hastens, and her tread is soft
As if she went on flowers who carries death,
And holds the keys of night. Her eyes are calm,
With a far glimmer like a dying fire
That takes from winds of hate a fiercer glow,
And burns most vivid when it seems most dim.

Equally good—with the same measure of suggestive imagery and discerning craftsmanship—is the poem to Circe, where the sorceress is thus described:—

Thou upon a throne wast sitting
Silver, and thy thoughts went flitting,
Silver shapes that murmured,
While thy golden hair was floated
Round the column ivory-throated,
Proud in bearing,
Proud in wearing,
Like a crown, thy golden head.
Blood upon the snow, a jewel
In a fillet bound thy brows,
Like an evil thing, and cruel,
Prisoned in a sinless house;
Whence a flame went turning, turning,
Piercing keen and subtly burning,
From the fires of hatred fed
By the furies never dead.

Among numerous short lyrics, of which the prevailing excellence more than atones for occasional triteness and triviality, mention should be made of the delightful, memory-awakening lines on 'The Upper River,' and, in particular, the daintily fanciful little poem 'Moths,' beginning:—

Little brothers of the dusk,
Flitting when the moon is low.

Something of the atmosphere of Mr. Fairfax's work may be owing to Shelley, something to William Morris, and much to Mr. Swinburne; but it possesses individuality, fresh and distinct, by virtue of which its author may go far.

Songs of London. By Herbert E. A. Furst. (Gowans & Gray.)—Light verse, except in the case of parody, can ill afford to forgo the bonds of metre; and for driving home a point there is no device so efficacious as the apt rhyme. Hence Mr. Furst's satire, prone to find expression in measures both rhymeless and irresponsible, wastes much of its force, and in the presentation, for example, of such an excellent idea as that contained in the lines called 'An Important Event in Piccadilly' savours of the crude rather than the incisive. More finished in effect, because set forth in the comparative straitness of blank verse, is 'Gerusalemme Liberata,' with its three parts or stages, entitled respectively 'Whitechapel,' 'Maida Vale,' and 'Park Lane'; while the impression of 'London E. (From the Great Eastern),' as a familiar picture of civilized desolation portrayed with striking, if saturnine individuality, deserves quotation—

And Satan slammed the Gates of Hell,
Go, take the Tunnel on the left, said he;
The End of which is where I join thee next.
A smell of sulphur—Beelzebub was gone.
I walk along a dark and clammy path
Till I emerge once more into the light,
Upon a platform—high and damp and cold.
A drizzling rain soon soaks my very bones;
Cold blows the wind:
I'm waiting.
So far as I can see are roofs and chimney pots,
And squalid streets,
And lumbered yards, with here and there some washing
Hung (in the wet) to dry.

The clouds stand still, and shed incessantly
Ironie waters over all the scene.
My wearied pulse beats low, my heart grows chill;
Now Satan comes with scowls and heavy frowns;
I thank my fate for hope of Satan's Grill.
We leave, but where we met were Hackney Downs.

Our criminal system, promiscuous charity, and the Bank are among Mr. Furst's other topics; but the continual emphasizing of obvious forms of "class distinction," which seems the burden of his song, is a satirical phase which, to be cogent, demands a greater depth of insight than is discernible in this volume.

Sir Christopher, and other Poems, by A. E. Jessup (Nutt), shows good taste in diction, and ample knowledge of what is really fitted for poetical treatment. But the pieces are as a rule too obscure in meaning, and too overloaded with detail. 'Sir Christopher,' which occupies over forty pages, inculcates a striving against sin and self, but by what means the ideal is to be attained is not clear. The next poem, 'She Heedeth Not,' is also obscure to us. 'The Typhoon' contains some effective imagery, but would gain by simplification and reduction. Mr. Jessup has plenty of ideas, but is hardly master of his "thick-coming fancies."

Mr. Walter Earle's verses Thoughts by the Way (Allen & Sons), inscribed to the memory of G. F. Watts, are principally devotional in character, and in their relation to the general public esoteric, being apparently based, in many cases, on purely personal associations. The following stanzas from one of the many poems entitled 'A Thought' are characteristic:—

Men follow his wake, and claim they make the reform by the laws,
But their eyes all the time are blind to the great inspiring
Cause,—

Things have to be dreamt and felt before they are seen and known,
The Spirit surely is real if the body can be God's own;

and the same may be said of the lines:—

Shrine of transcendent Hope! If now upon this earth
We reach behind the veil of mysteries,
Who knows the fuller possibilities
When hand and mind and heart
Shall consecrate their art
In all the perfect Beauty of the second Birth?

The author is over-disposed to content himself with poetical formulæ, and his reflections—sincere, if scarcely profound or original—have little in the way of suggestiveness or imagery to commend them.

Conradin: a Philosophical Ballad, by C. R. Ashbee (Gloucester, Essex House Press), is in the nature of an allegory, intended presumably to point the oft-told moral that in this imperfect world the spirit of light and progress is, at the outset, doomed to apparent failure. Conradin, the hero, sets out at the head of "twice ten hundred mounted men" to win a so-called "Sicilian Paradise," and encounters a variety of mysterious persons—a ragged boy, a knight, a scholar, and a Sibyl (whose utterances, however, are of little assistance to the reader)—before being finally overthrown and executed. The complaisant vagueness of the narrative might have been redeemed by the quality of the verse; but the latter is, like its theme, crude and slipshod, and its general level is sufficiently indicated in the lines:—

Prince, as you ride, Oh, take with you
This wreath of Amaranth and rue,
It blooms in the deathless tombs of kings;
It may help you to ward off evil things.

A wealth of classical reminiscence—including a startling allusion to the bones of Aristotle, that lie

In the tomb that swings between earth and sky—and some striking illustrations by Mr. P. A. Mairet, fail to add poetical significance to the volume.

THE FUTURE OF THE POOR.

SINCE the appearance of the excellent volume of Mr. Beveridge reviewed by us a fortnight ago we have been weighed down by books and pamphlets, and have had the opportunity of perusing the Reports, though not the evidence, of the Poor Law Commission. Mr. Beveridge has covered the entire ground: other contributions to the literature of the wide-reaching questions opened by the inquiry are more polemical. We select for special notice a small book by Mrs. Bosanquet, The Poor Law Report of 1909 (Macmillan), and the volumes of Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Webb. Mrs. Bosanquet is one of "the Majority," although that majority is diminished by individual dissents unknown to mere newspaper readers. Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Webb in their attack upon the Majority find, for example, powerful assistance from the admirable "Memorandum" of Dr. Downes printed between the hundreds of ponderous pages belonging respectively to the Majority and Minority Reports. It is unnecessary for us to follow our notice of the work of Mr. Beveridge by a full account of that of Mrs. Bosanquet, and we confine ourselves to naming points of novelty and some matters of doubt. The new problems of Insurance are not fully faced by either side. To say this is not to blame the writers, who themselves point out the reasons why fresh inquiry must be undertaken with regard to proposals at present crude. Mrs. Bosanquet in one passage appears to use the term "Invalidity" in a different sense from that in which translators of German and French schemes have introduced it to us, and intermediate between this Continental use and the English habit of confusing "Invalidity" with "Sickness." Mrs. Bosan-quet suggests that the best means of promoting insurance is to induce and enable Friendly Societies to cover permanent disability, and also to attract the ill-paid multitude who still stand outside their organization. One of the difficulties besides cost is the extraordinary difference in this respect between Scotland and England: Ireland, as we know, presents even greater discrepancy in "providence," but for reasons other than those which apply to the northern kingdom. Mrs. Bosanquet and her colleagues of the Majority seem to favour "the Belgian scheme," but "have attempted no estimate of what the charge to the State might be." Actuaries consulted by the Commission have introduced the term "Illness," and their opinion illustrates the reasons why permanent separation of funds between Sickness and "Invalidity," meaning Disablement, has been found unworkable in Germany. We may point out that in this country there is a further difficulty, namely, that Disablement, which runs into Sickness on one side, runs into Workmen's Compensation on the other. In the United Kingdom the entire cost of compensation for accident and for scheduled Diseases of Occupation is borne by the employer. No one proposes to throw on the employer more than a fraction of the cost of general Disablement or Invalidity. Obviously the breaking-up of the Poor Law, as recommended both by the Majority and the Minority of the Royal Commission, may involve a struggle as to the large fringe of assisted human life which cannot be scientifically divided between accident, sickness, old age, and invalidity. Neither, for the most part, do our amateur advisers face the great difference in the mind of the young worker, called on to set aside for insurance a portion of his wage, between old age under seventy, unemployment, sickness, and general disability. Mr. Ramsay Macdonald has expressed an opinion upon this subject well worth consideration; but observers with equal facilities for judging the opinion of the poor have come to an opposite conclusion. Death is the only dead certainty; and hence the willingness to insure for "death benefit." The rest are doubtful.

Mrs. Bosanquet, like all her colleagues, inclines towards public help to the unemployed benefit funds of the trade unions, but points out that "it is the highly-skilled and, therefore, most highly-paid workmen who are insured, for in most cases the trade unions of unskilled workmen give no unemployment benefit."

A larger question still lies behind all proposals made to the public in the last few weeks. Those who have special acquaintance with the subject insist, as a part of any complete scheme, on a vastly extended power of locking-up the less desirable elements among the population. Is there the slightest chance that this "remedy" will be adopted? Among those who are to be treated by "detention" are the sufferers from certain classes of disease, "unmarried mothers" (except where exempted for reasons given), and "leafers," as well as persons who neglect their families or make them chargeable to the public "owing to habits of... idleness," &c. All readers of eighteenth-century literature are aware of the results produced in England, France, and the American Colonies by such treatment of these classes in "houses of correction."

The volumes of Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Webb entitled The Break-up of the Poor Law and The Public Organisation of the Labour Market: The Minority Report, Parts I. and II. (Longmans), are of the highest interest. The authors attack their colleagues of the Majority for their "morbid wish to alter names, in order to give a flavour of generosity to the new Poor Law.....The good old-fashioned term 'detention' is deemed 'infelicitous,' and whenever the.....Authority wishes to detain a pauper against his will, the instrument will be disguised as an 'order for Continuous Treatment.'"

When the Majority pass from this "illusory nomenclature," they do not escape whipping, and are, not without justice, charged with an "unconcealed purpose....to withdraw the relief of distress from popular control." Even one of the Majority, Dr. Downes, dissents, we may note in passing, from the "proposal to sweep away the representative system in this field of Local Government, contrary to national instinct and established principle, and fraught with danger." We doubt if there is much popular control about any of the proposals set before us. Compared with the County Council, the despised and rejected Board of Guardians represents the principle of popular local election. The difficulty of finding men who can win rural seats at County elections, and spare the time to sit on committees in the county town, limits in practice the choice to the old, and generally excellent, county magistrates. "Popular" County Councils are to be found here and there, but not over the greater part of rural England.

The authors are the first to admit that the details of their schemes need much consideration in respect of applicability to the rural population of sparsely inhabited counties. That the vast revolution, scientifically recommended by the minority, and also contemplated by their colleagues of the Majority, can be carried in the present Parliament or the next is admittedly a dream. With what portions of the project are we to begin? With the Metropolis perhaps, at the cost of the London rates, but not, if that be so, without vast expenditure, if real efficiency is to be secured. Mrs. Sidney Webb will perhaps be shown, when we have the volumes containing her examination of the witnesses, to contemplate, for the whole of England, a beginning with the children and the sick. Even this smaller part of the task will not be cheap and will not be easy. Let us take, for example, the destruction of the present haphazard system of treating the casual sick—persons, for instance, of the servant class, stricken by street accidents—by "Rival Authorities." The poor will never consent to public Infirmarys, maintained from rates or taxes, becoming schools of scientific surgery. Private hospitals supported by gifts or endowments will continue, in our opinion, to be necessary unless surgical science is to decline. We note in passing that where our authors complain of "popular" payment of insufficient salaries to medical officers they do not draw a sharp distinction between the Metropolis and the rest of England. In London there is the Common Poor Fund, and the centralization forced on the Local Government Board by common charge for salaries makes that office virtually the dictator of salaries in London. Many of the obvious difficulties are, however, fairly faced, though not completely overcome in the admirable pages devoted to the subject, and in the negative, though not perhaps the positive, "Conclusions."

The case of the mentally afflicted is another which presents difficulties greater than are admitted by the reformers. If all the feeble-minded are to be dealt with by the State, the nation will find itself burdened—perhaps rightly, but at terrible cost—with the hundreds of thousands of old people afflicted with some slight "senility" officially classed as "paralysis of the aged" or "senile dementia." These people fill our rural workhouses, but are still numerous in the family homes of the self-respecting poor.

Even when we come to children, the problem to be faced is far from simple. An article in The Contemporary Review points out that the most scientific cantons of Switzerland differ absolutely in regard to boarding-out. Were it practised on a large scale under national control, it is probable that the public conscience would be suddenly aroused, by some frightful scandal, to demand the destruction of the system which had but just been made general.

We will not give up our pages to the discussion of the problem of the division of duties between the existing sanitary authorities charged with the public health, and the County Committees proposed for the supervision of the greater portion of the new schemes. Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Webb have seen that it will be useless to charge the smaller rural district councils with work of the nature thrown upon them under the plan as it stands on paper.

As they write from the Collectivist point of view, note should be taken of the admission in the Introduction to their Second Part that "even under a completely organised Socialist State.....the same national organisation for remedying Unemployment would be needed.....For the Socialist State would still have to meet cyclical fluctuations of demand.....seasonal fluctuations in the volume of employment," and other difficulties often ascribed to Capitalism and competitive industry.

We have enjoyed the intellectual treat of reading Mrs. Webb on Mrs. Bosanquet, but still look forward to that of reading Mrs. Bosanquet on Mrs. Webb.

OUR LIBRARY TABLE.

THE fourth volume of M. Germain Bapst's Le Maréchal Canrobert deals with the visits of the King of Prussia, Bismarck, and the Emperor of Russia to Paris during the Exhibition of 1868, and with the early stages of the war of 1870 up to the battle of Borny, in which some of Canrobert's divisions were engaged, but of which he gives only a bald account. The picture presented of the confusion in French counsels, and of the lack of due preparation for a war known to be inevitable, is as distressing to the reader as that of Zola's romance. It is perhaps the more painful that Canrobert, while blaming the Emperor and the Empress, and explaining their differences, does not appear to wish to throw responsibility on any one party, still less on any single person. All suffer by his account, and the fashion in which he picks out the Ollivier Ministry and General Trochu as most obviously in the wrong does not convince, but has rather the air of Court and military prejudice. The real truth appears in the page in which, depicting the agony of the opening of the war, Canrobert writes:—

"All of us had wished for the war, believing—hard as rock—in the invincibility of our army, never ceasing to repeat as an axiom 'Where the French soldier is, there is victory.'"

It was for this reason that the warnings of the Emperor as to the superior numbers of the well-trained Prussian troops were hardly heeded—even by himself. Louis Napoleon and his chosen Minister of War accepted without a struggle a reduction of the French regular army of first line from 510,000 to 473,000 men; but in their hearts they believed that this number would crush an invasion not likely, in their belief, to last many days before it was succeeded by a French offensive movement across the Rhine. Had, indeed, the Second Empire been able "to put in line" a force—existing on paper in July, 1870—of half a million regular troops of long service, matters might have gone otherwise as the result of a first victory. The numbers were wanting: the Prussian generals at the review of 1868 had counted with their own eyes battalions which paraded in Paris with less than two-thirds of the strength that they should have presented on that day. Such, however, is the picture drawn by Canrobert of the condition of the French plans and of the French Staff that it is doubtful whether even the military qualities of the French army could have had their fair chance upon a battle-field. The French plan of campaign of 1867 and 1868 appears to have held good up to the very moment of war. In two mysterious passages Canrobert states that the Archduke Albert of Austria, dissatisfied with the French arrangement of army corps and armies, broke up the whole French organization at the last moment, and replaced it by another never understood by the generals to whom in succession were assigned, in panic haste, the positions of Minister of War and Commander-in-Chief of the Army of the Rhine. No date is given, but we doubt if it had been known until the publication of these pages that military schemes had been prepared between France and Austria later than the early spring of 1870. It is possible, but not probable, that a revelation of the exact facts may follow as a result of the examination of French dispatches in the archives of the Foreign Office now being undertaken by the Commission of which M. Bourgeois and M. Joseph Reinach are at the head. It is not always possible to distinguish in the text of M. Bapst what is Canrobert's own, and we are unable to discover in any important instance the source of Canrobert's information. He is wholly wrong as to the Prussian preparation for the war, and believes that as late as the end of 1869 Bismarck had begun to doubt of the certainty of success; while he alleges that it was the advent of Parliamentary government under the Ollivier Ministry of January, 1870, which induced Bismarck "to start the Spanish candidature as a red rag to the Gallic bull." It is strange that M. Bapst has not added words to the text, or foot-notes, pointing out the facts now known as to the Hohenzollern candidatures of 1868 and 1869. So, too, with regard to the designs of France on Belgium, where Canrobert asserts that "the foreign press, especially in England, found the [Prussian] affirmations supported by large subsidies." In one passage, indeed, Canrobert asserts that it has been the interest of successive Governments in France to keep us in the dark about the true story of the origin of the war. That we have been kept in the dark is certain, but we fail to see the interest of the Republic, and have long wondered that publication was never contemplated by the French Government until 1908. On the Austrian alliance Canrobert tells us nothing that is new, unless we may accept the curious allusions to the "intervention of the Archduke Albert before the declaration of war."

Concerning the action of the Empress Eugénie, Canrobert repeatedly contradicts himself; but we find discrepancies without surprise, as the Empress used varying language to people of different kinds: presiding at the Cabinets, and holding one language to her ministers, while assuming, in private, another tone in her telegrams to the Emperor. It is not certain at what exact moment the Empress turned from exaggerated belief, amounting to certainty, in French success, here based on Biblical texts quoted by her after the manner of the old King of Prussia, and adopted a policy based on the future of her son. Canrobert repeatedly shows that long before Gravelotte the Empress expected her husband to seek death upon the field of battle, and inextricably mingled the future of France and the Bonaparte succession in her mind and policy. The intention of the Emperor to return to Paris, and that of the Empress-Regent to prevent his return, are clearly brought out by the conflicting orders as to the horses and baggage of the Emperor here given in the text. Canrobert hits the Empress very hard, but finally declares that the Empress-Regent in her "terrible situation" came to think "only of the country," and refused to contemplate the shedding "of a drop of French blood by my order or for our personal cause." Our readers will remember that the letter of the King of Prussia to the Empress, retained by Count Bernstorff, the Prussian Ambassador in London, and recently published by his son, appears to contradict this attitude. It also upsets Canrobert's repeated suggestion that Bismarck refused to contemplate the existence during the war of any Government in France with which it was possible to treat for peace. The fact was that he treated all the time with two Governments, and played them off the one against the other. The character of Bazaine is powerfully described by his old rival, and we are not inclined to differ from Canrobert in this remarkable, but sinister portrait. The Bernstorff volumes complete his story.

The Great English Letter-Writers. By William J. and Coningsby W. Dawson. 2 vols. (Hodder & Stoughton.)—The modest appearance of these volumes, which are the first instalment of "The Reader's Library," may lead the hurried observer to misjudge them. On examination it will be found that this anthology of English letters is a competent and scholarly piece of work, in which only the tiresome habit of christening each letter reminds us, from time to time, that we are reading a popular handbook.

The greatest merit of the collection is its admirable catholicity; the editors have exercised discrimination and self-restraint, and have thus escaped the common fault of anthologists—excessive quotation from their favourites. If Charles Lamb occupies rather more than his share of the book, it is an excess of which few will complain. For our own part, we could have wished to hear less of F. W. Robertson. But who was ever content with an anthology? Errors of omission are always manifest to our lively and sensitive prejudices, wherefore it should be remembered that in this case such omissions are often to be accounted for by difficulties of copyright.

Undoubtedly it is a grave fault in this book that the letters are not arranged in chronological order; instead, they are classified under garish and sometimes inappropriate headings, as 'Tribulations of Genius,' 'Crises,' 'Bygone Lovers.' This defect the editors have endeavoured to remedy, and have succeeded in palliating, by a couple of excellent introductory essays, in which 'The Development' and 'The Art and Attainment' of English letter-writing are succinctly, but adequately treated. They pass skilfully over a good deal of debatable ground, with a step which is confident always, and sometimes a little overbold. To give but one instance: in the first essay we are told that "the art of letter-writing, instead of being a decaying art, is precisely one of those forms of literary expression in which growth and progress are most clearly visible." We are afforded no better reasons for accepting this revolutionary opinion than questionable inferences drawn from the present state of society, and the examples of FitzGerald, Stevenson, Keats, and Carlyle, three of whom are hardly to be reckoned moderns, in contradistinction to Horace Walpole and Cowper, who represent the older school of English letter-writing.

If the eighteenth century was the golden, the mid-Victorian period was the silver age of letter-writing; but from the mid-Victorian period we have already travelled far. The editors, however, would have us believe that letter-writing is just entering upon its golden age. They may be right, but they cannot prove it by references to mid-Victorian letters. In the second essay, it is true, this bold statement is prudently qualified. The writer admits that the penny post and the morning paper have done something to debase the art; also he offers a far better argument in support of his original view than any adduced in the first volume, namely, that he has himself received during the last twenty years a number of letters of the very highest order. Yet we are not convinced. Would Charles Lamb himself have been so lavish of his happy conceits if innumerable penny and halfpenny papers had been bidding against each other for a weekly, or perhaps a daily, column of gossip? Have the editors reflected on the sombre truth that to-day those who can write will publish, and those who publish become professional writers? The author is a man of business who has no superfluity of time or energy for writing beautiful letters. "Demandez-vous à un menuisier de vous envoyer quelques copeaux?" replied Théophile Gautier to one who begged him to write, and indeed the published letters of modern authors are too often no better than "shavings." In a dignified and leisurely world flourished the art of letter-writing, which, we fear, along with other good things, is about to vanish from a world that is neither leisurely nor dignified.

We congratulate the editors and the publishers on the first volumes of this series. 'The Great Essayists' and 'The Great Historians' are to follow, and we confess ourselves curious to see how they propose to do justice to the latter. Let us hope that, in spite of difficulties, they will maintain the high standard set by their inaugural volumes.

Excerpta Cypria: Materials for a History of Cyprus. Translated and transcribed by Claude D. Cobham. (Cambridge, University Press.)—Mr. Cobham, late Commissioner of Larnaca, is known to students of Cypriot history and antiquities by his publications in The Owl (a newspaper of Nicosia) and his valuable 'Bibliography of Cyprus,' of which four editions have appeared, and a fifth, considerably increased, is appended to the present handsome volume. The excerpts consist of translations and transcriptions of passages of foreign and English writers, chiefly travellers, beginning with Strabo, and ending with Prof. G. G. Gervinus of Heidelberg. They will be convenient as a work of reference to the few who are interested in Cyprus, and will certainly prove most useful to any student who undertakes to write on the mediæval or modern history of the island. Many of the extracts are from works which are very rare and difficult of access. The excerpts from Falchetti and Sozomeno are derived from unpublished MSS. Some of the easily accessible passages might well have been omitted. Sir John Maundeville, for instance, is within everybody's reach. And if Mr. Cobham thought it desirable (apparently in the interest of readers ignorant of Latin, a class which, we should say, he need not have considered) to give a translation from Benedict of Peterborough (which is published in the Rolls series and is in most libraries), surely he ought to have furnished also the relevant parts of the 'Itinerarium Regis Ricardi,' which was used and transcribed by Geoffrey Vinsauf, and, like Benedict, was edited by Stubbs. It would have been much more useful to include the Θρήνος τῆς Κύπρου (in the siege of Nicosia in 1570), published a couple of years ago in the Athenian Δελτίον. Both the text and a translation are given of the pamphlet of Neophytus 'On the Misfortunes of the Land of Cyprus,' and it is noticed that "there is an English version in the Rolls series, but it was not at hand, and our translation is new." Mr. Cobham might have informed himself that the "English version" is by Stubbs ('Memorials, &c., of Richard I.,' vol. i., 1864) and is accompanied by the text. His own translation does not appear to be quite so good as that of Stubbs in point of accuracy. For instance, he reproduces περινοίαις by "questionings" (Stubbs "plans"), ὄγκον by "exaction," instead of "weight." "A divine impulse" (θεία ῥοπή) suggests a subjective motive ("divino instinctu"), which is not meant (Stubbs "providence," rightly). Ἡ σύγκλητος βουλή is the technical phrase for "senate" or "council," and should not be rendered "assembly." For παραδείσων ποικίλων Stubbs has "cunningly-devised pleasantries," Mr. Cobham more correctly "variegated gardens." Λακινίων, which both translators (after Cotelier) take to mean "pigs," is probably corrupt. Nearly all the pieces were originally published locally, at Nicosia or Larnaca, and this may explain the inclusion of the two or three which seem superfluous.

Brougham and his Early Friends: Letters to James Loch, 1798–1809. Edited by R. H. M. Buddle Atkinson and G. A. Jackson. Vol. III. (Privately Printed.)—Messrs. Atkinson and Jackson have rounded off their two volumes of Brougham's early correspondence by a third, consisting of biographical appendixes. They are adequately done, though the editors modestly disavow any claim to originality. The sketch of Brougham might have been strengthened by references to Creevey, Sir J. Arnould's 'Life of Lord Denman,' and other obvious sources, but still it serves its purpose. The same remark applies to the rest of the biographical notes; and editorial honesty cannot go further than in the case of Messrs. Atkinson and Jackson, since they set forth in order the names of the persons about whom they have failed to collect information.

Democracy and Character. By Reginald Stephen. (Williams & Norgate.)—This volume contains the "Moorhouse Lectures" for 1908 by a canon of St. Paul's Cathedral, Melbourne. The lectureship was founded in memory of the Australian episcopate of Bishop Moorhouse, afterwards Bishop of Manchester; and among the subjects mentioned in the foundation is included this—'The Social Aspects of the Christian Faith in their Widest Application.' Of books similar in origin and subject to the present there is, of course, a plentiful supply, but Canon Stephen's book is much too clear and thoughtful to be neglected in this country; and we should expect it to have a wide public and a sound influence in Australia. Within the narrow limits of seven lectures, and under the limitations imposed upon him by the lecture form, he has discussed some important issues of politics in a democratic country with strong practical common sense and the right kind of theoretical learning. His quotations are, perhaps, more numerous than they need have been, but they are invariably from those who have a right to be heard, and not, as often happens in this kind of book, from the inferior journalism of the time. We believe that sincere politicians would agree generally with the author's views throughout, and regard his statement of political principles as at once well balanced and inspiring. His second lecture, on 'The Need of Independence,' is particularly good; and his criticism of the Competitive System (Lecture V.), if not in any way novel, is fresh and stimulating in no small degree.

Tortures et Supplices à travers les Ages, by Fernand Mitton (F. de Valmondois), which comes to us from M. H. Daragon of Paris, is a disappointing book. It contains little that is new, and much that is superfluous. It is out of place, surely, to discuss the mental torture of the French prisoners of war in 1870. The history of torture and the history of punishment were both alike worth writing; and both alike, without pandering to unpleasant tastes, would require careful discrimination and classification. M. Mitton has recounted many facts, but he has not dealt with the subject at all exhaustively, nor has he treated it scientifically. He makes no attempt to differentiate and classify, or to trace the psychological history of cruelty. There is no necessary connexion between torture and punishment. In any scientific discussion of the subject it would be well to treat separately torture as part of the legal system, intended to obtain confession, or, by ordeal, to establish guilt or innocence, and to consider how far it was universally in use, and how far modified; torture as an angel of pain invoked by religious enthusiasts ("Hounds of the Lord") as a means of persuasion or persecution; torture as a kind of punishment; torture voluntarily endured as a form of asceticism and self-abasement; and torture as an amusement, as it was practised notably by the Italian and Sicilian despots, whether in the crude form that appealed to Ezzelino da Romano, or in the more refined forms that the worst of the Roman Emperors loved. Such tyrants seem to have derived pleasure from the resultant sensation of horror combined with the exhibition of their own power and superiority, just as a child does from pulling a fly to pieces. In all these cases man appears lower than the beast, for even cats do not torture mice—they practise with them.

The enumeration of the many methods and implements of torture devised by the inhumanity of man would be an unpleasant, but necessary task; M. Mitton's list is incomplete, and lacks arrangement; nor does he distinguish between the cruder methods of the ancients and the increasingly ingenious devices of later times, nor mark the great division between mere bodily and refined mental torture, culminating in those forms in which, as in Poe's story of 'The Pit and the Pendulum,' and the dripping water, the time element is skilfully introduced. It is confusing to mix up this side of the subject with details of modern prison management. The problems of prison discipline and the punishment of criminals are still far from having been satisfactorily solved in this country or any other, but the solution of them will not be furthered by books that confuse the issue by classing punishment and torture as one and the same thing. We fancy that offenders are no longer stood in the pillory in America.

MR. THOMAS HUTCHINSON'S admirable edition of The Works of Charles and Mary Lamb (Frowde), noticed by us on January 16th, has now appeared in that India paper which gives us "infinite riches in a little room." The two volumes (of 863 and 857 pages) are available separately, in red binding, or bound together in blue. In each case we have two portraits of Lamb included, and a third on the cover. That these volumes will be welcomed everywhere we hope and believe, for this is one of the rare and pleasant hopes which seem certainties.

The Newspaper Press Directory. (Mitchell & Co.)—The most important event in the newspaper world during the past year was "the change in the proprietorship of The Times, a new company being formed at the termination of the disagreement among the original proprietors. The new company has a capital of 750,000*l.*, and the chief shareholders are Lords Rothschild, Cromer, and Northcliffe."

The Westminster Gazette has "been sold by Sir George Newnes to a wealthy and influential group of Liberals, who have formed a company with a capital of 150,000*l.*" The losses by death include Lord Glenesk; Mr. T. D. Taylor, of The Bristol Times and Mirror; Sir James Knowles; and Mr. David Syme, of the Melbourne Age. We spoke recently of Mr. Syme's remarkable influence in Australia. The notice of him here gives the following measures which he "was instrumental in placing upon the statute-book women's suffrage, marriage with deceased wife's sister, old-age pensions, payment of Members of Parliament, the compulsory sale of land for village settlements, and the Federation of Australia."

Mr. George E. Leach contributes an article defining the position of the Press under the new Press Act as to the admission of reporters to meetings. The information concerning the various newspapers and periodicals both in Great Britain and the Colonies, is given with the usual accuracy.

THE Record of the winter meetings and summer excursions of the Upper Norwood Athenæum for last year shows this useful institution to be in a flourishing condition. During the thirty-two years it has been in existence it has done good work, and can now boast of being one of the oldest rambling societies, if not the oldest, in the kingdom. During 1908 six counties were visited, and the winter visits included the Cutlers' and Stationers' Halls and the Temple. At the Cutlers' Hall the visitors were welcomed by the Master of the Company, Mr. Charles Welch, who showed them the charter from Henry V. dated 1417, a little earlier than the one described by Stow. There are also preserved records from 1503 to the present time, a roll of accounts of about 1442, and books of accounts from 1586. At the Stationers' Hall Mr. Jonathan Downes read a paper treating of the history of the Company.

Among summer excursions was one to Tadworth and Kingswood, conducted by Mr. Charles Wheeler. At Kingswood the Curfew is still rung every night at nine o'clock. Other rambles were to Warwick, Hitchin, and the Crays and Orpington. The last of the season was to Esher, conducted by the chairman, Mr. Frederick Higgs. All the papers read at the meetings show the usual careful preparation and research, and the illustrations add to the value of the 'Record,' which is edited, as in previous years, by Mr. Theophilus Pitt.

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

ENGLISH.

Theology.

- Bell (Rev. C. C.), The Treasury of Jesus, 6d. net. Brief reflections for Lent.
 Counsels and Precepts, 3/6 net. Translated from the French, with a preface by the Rev. G. Body.
 Cruttwell (C. T.), The Saxon Church and the Norman Conquest, 2/6 net. A volume in the English Church Library.
 Cutten (G. B.), The Psychological Phenomena of Christianity, 12/ net.
 Gayford (Rev. S. C.), Life after Death, 2/6 net. Reprinted from The Treasury.
 Harwood (G.), The Bible as a Book, 1/ net. Primers for Bible Students, No. 2.
 Hoyt (A. S.), The Preacher, his Person, Message, and Method, 6/6 net.
 Liddon (Canon), Christ's Conquest, and other Sermons, 6d.
 Maude (J. H.), The Foundations of the English Church, 2/6 net. Another volume of the English Church Library.
 New Things and Old in Saint Thomas Aquinas. A translation of various writings and treatises of the Angelic Doctor, with an introduction by H. C. O'Neill.
 Pecoock (R.), Book of Faith, 5/ net. A fifteenth-century theological tractate, edited from the manuscript in the library of Trinity College, Cambridge, with an introductory essay, by J. L. Morison.
 Sherran (W.), The Rebels of the Reformation, 1/ net. English Revolutionary Leaders, No. 2.
 Special Forms of Service sanctioned for Use in the Diocese of Southwark, 2/6.
 Sunderland (J. T.), The Origin and Character of the Bible, and its Place among Sacred Books, 3/6 net.

Law.

- Atkinson (C. M.), The Magistrate's General Practice, 1909, 20/

Fine Art and Archaeology.

- Archæological Survey of Ceylon: Epigraphia Zeylanica, Vol. I. Part IV., 5/ net.
 Calvert (A. F.), Madrid, 3/6 net. An historical description and handbook of the Spanish capital, with 453 illustrations.
 Holmes (C. J.), Notes on the Science of Picture-Making, 7/6 net.

Poetry and Drama.

- Arnold (M.), Selected Poems, 2/. Edited with introduction and notes by H. B. George and A. M. Leigh.
 Cunningham (L. A.), Roses and Shamrock, 5/ net.
 Frampton (R. G. D.), Nora and the Shepherd, and other Poems, 3/6 net.
 Later Recitations in Verse: Serious and Humorous, 2/6. Compiled and edited by Ernest Pertwee.
 Maquarie (A.), The Voice in the Cliff, 1/ net.
 Presland (J.), Joan of Arc, 5/ net. A drama in five acts.
 Shakespeare Problem, by E. A., 1/ net. A paper for students.

Philosophy.

- Le Bon (Gustave), The Crowd, 1/ net. New Edition. A study of the popular mind.
 Watson (J. M.), Aristotle's Criticisms of Plato, 3/6 net.

Political Economy.

- Francis (Francis), National Independence; or, a Commonsense Policy, 6d. net. A Protectionist essay.
 John Bull's Open Door: a Plea for It to be Shut, by a London Business Man, 1/ net. An endeavour to show that Free Trade is at present unsuited for this country.
 Knight's Synopsis of the Majority and Minority Reports of the Royal Commission on the Poor Law and Relief of Distress, 1/ net. Adapted to meet the special requirements of members of local authorities and local officials.
 Rogers (J. E. T.), The Economic Interpretation of History, 2/6 net. A cheap edition of this notable book.

History and Biography.

- Calendar of State Papers, Foreign Series, of the Reign of Elizabeth, May–December, 1582, preserved in the Public Record Office, 15/. Edited by A. J. Butler.
 Clayton (J.), Wat Tyler and the Great Uprising, 1/ net. English Revolutionary Leaders, No. 1.
 Edwards (C. E. H.), An Oxford Tutor, 1/6 net. A brief life of the Rev. Thomas Short, a well-known Oxford don.
 Ferrero (Guglielmo), The Greatness and Decline of Rome: Vol. V. The Republic of Augustus, 6/ net. Translated by the Rev. H. J. Chaytor. For review of Vols. III. and IV. see Athen., Jan. 9, 1909, p. 33.
 Firth (C. H.), Edward Hyde, Earl of Clarendon, as Statesman, Historian, and Chancellor of the University, 1/ net. A lecture delivered on Feb. 18.
 Hardy (E. G.), Studies in Roman History, Second Series, 6/ net.
 Lodge (E. C.), The End of the Middle Age, 1273-1453, 2/6. With an introduction by R. Lodge, and fourteen maps.
 MacNutt (F. A.), Bartholomew de Las Casas: his Life, his Apostolate, and his Writings, 15/ net. With portraits and maps.
 Merejkowski, Marcus Aurelius, 1/6 net. An essay translated from the Russian by G. A. Mounsey.
 Norfolk Antiquarian Miscellany, Second Series, Part 3, 7/6. Edited by Walter Rye.
 O'Brien (R. B.), The Life of Lord Russell of Killowen, 1/ net.
 Rappoport (Angelo S.), Royal Lovers and Mistresses, 16/ net. The romance of crowned and uncrowned kings and queens of Europe. Illustrated.
 Renwick (J.), Life and Work of Lord Rosebery, 1/ net. With portrait.
 Ruskin (John), Letters, 1827-89, 2 vols. Edited by E. T. Cook and A. Wedderburn. Part of the Library Edition.
 Sedgwick (F. R.), The Russo-Japanese War: First Period—The Concentration, 5/ net. With maps and plans. Special Campaign Series.
 Signals and Instructions, 1776-94. Edited by Julian S. Corbett for the Navy Records Society.

Geography and Travel.

- Fraser (D.), The Short Cut to India, 12/6 net. The record of a journey along the route of the Baghdad Railway, with 90 illustrations, maps, and sketches.

Lane (J. M.), A Varied Life by Sea and Land, 1856-91, 6d.
 Lloyd (A.), Every-Day Japan, 12/ net. Written after twenty-five years' residence and work in the country, with introduction by Count Hayashi, and contains 8 plates in colour and 96 reproductions from photographs.

Sports and Pastimes.

International Horse Show, Olympia.

Education.

Carnegie Trust for the Universities of Scotland, Seventh Annual Report, for the Year 1907-8.
 Graves (F. P.), A History of Education before the Middle Ages, 5/ net.
 Handbook to the Technical and Art Schools and Colleges of the United Kingdom, 3/6 net. Compiled from official information, with an Index to courses of instruction.
 London University: University College Committee Report, February, 1908-9.
 Schoolmaster's Year-Book and Directory, 1909, 7/6 net.

Folk-lore.

Frazer (J. G.), Psyche's Task, 2/6 net. A discourse concerning the influence of superstition on the growth of institutions.

Philology.

Gaudel (Mlle. V.), The Ideal System for acquiring a Practical Knowledge of French, 3/ net. Arranged to meet the requirements of all students.
 Harrison (H.), Surnames of the United Kingdom, Part 9, 1/ net. A concise etymological dictionary.
 Jussier (J. J.), Piers Plowman, the Work of One or of Five. Reprinted from Modern Philology.
 Some XXth Century English, by a West-Country Wiseacre. Notes on journalistic and other jargon of the day.

School Books.

1 and 2 Corinthians, 1/6 net. Revised Version, edited, with introduction and notes for the use of schools, by S. C. Carpenter.
 Galatians and the Romans, 1/6 net. Revised Version, edited, with introduction and notes for the use of schools, by H. W. Fulford.
 Perry (W. J.), The Intermediate History of England, Political, Social, and Constitutional, 3/6. Contains notes and maps.
 Stout (J. F.), Tacitus, Germania, 2/6. University Tutorial Series.
 Tales that are Told, Part VI., 1/6. Part of the Royal Treasury of Story and Song.

Science.

Barrett (Edmund), The Family Doctor, 5/. A dictionary of domestic medicine and surgery.
 Barrington (A.), and Pearson (K.), A First Study of the Inheritance of Vision and of the Relative Influence of Heredity and Environment on Sight, 4/. With one plate and three diagrams in the text. Eugenics Laboratory Memoirs, No. V.
 Bockenhimer (P.), Atlas of Clinical Surgery, 3 vols. 86/ net. English adaptation.
 Dawson (E. Rumley), The Causation of Sex, 6/ net. A new theory of sex, based on clinical materials, &c. Illustrated.
 Denison (T. S.), The Primitive Aryans of America, 2 vols. 50. Dealing with the origin of the Aztecs and kindred tribes, and the place of the Nautl or Mexican in the Aryan group of languages.
 Finn (F.), The Wild Beasts of the World, Vol. I., 10/6 net. Illustrated with 100 reproductions in full colours from drawings by L. Sargent, C. E. Swan, and W. Austin.
 Green (J. R.), Botany, 1/ net. With numerous illustrations. One of Dent's Scientific Primers.
 Haslam (A. P.), Electricity in Factories and Workshops: its Cost and Convenience, 7/6 net.
 Hooper (W. E.), The Motor-Car in the First Decade of the Twentieth Century, 126/ net.
 Johns (C. A.), British Birds in their Haunts, 7/6 net. Edited, revised, and annotated by J. A. Owen. Illustrated.
 Jones (W. H. S.), Malaria and Greek History, 5/ net. Includes also the History of Greek Therapeutics and the Malaria Theory, by E. T. Withington.
 Ketchum (M. S.), The Design of Highway Bridges, 16/ net.
 Münsterberg (H.), Psychology and Crime, 5/ net.
 Myers (C. S.), A Textbook of Experimental Psychology, 8/6 net. With 66 figures and diagrams.
 Pearson (Karl), The Scope and Importance to the State of the Science of National Eugenics, 1/ net. Eugenics Laboratory Lecture Series. New Edition.
 Report of the Darwin-Wallace Celebration, held on Thursday, July 1, 1908, by the Linnean Society of London 4/
 Schryver (S. B.), The General Characters of the Proteins, 2/6 net. An attempt to review the chief properties of the proteins, with the object of determining how far they are of value for devising methods of isolation and identification of individual members of the class.
 Sedgwick (Adam), A Students' Textbook of Zoology. Vol. III., 24/
 West (C. Ernest) and Scott (Sydney R.), The Operations of Aural Surgery, together with those of the Intracranial Complications of Suppurative Otitis Media, 7/6 net.
 Wright (H. J. and W. P.), Beautiful Flowers and How to Grow Them, Vol. I., 10/6 net. Illustrated with 100 plates in full colours from paintings by Beatrice Parsons and others.

Juvenile Books.

Cooke (F. E.), England, 1/6 net. A popular history for young people.

Fiction.

Askew (Alice and Claude), Felix Stone, 6/. Has to do with attempted suicide and a love-affair connected therewith.
 Barnett (J.), Geoffrey Cheriton, 6/. A story of friendship lasting from schooldays into manhood.
 Bilse (Ex-Lieut.), Dear Fatherland, 1/ net. A new edition.
 Blondelle-Burton (J.), Within Four Walls, 6/. The scene is laid in the days of Henry of Navarre and Marguerite of Valois.
 Brown (M. C.), Bitter-Sweets, 1/. Three short stories.

Chambers (R. W.), The Firing Line, 6/. The story treats of rich American society, and the scenes are laid at Palm Beach, Florida, in New York, and the Adirondacks.
 Cobb (T.), Mrs. Whiston's House Party, 6/. After many years' desertion a husband meets his wife—married as an illiterate girl, but grown into a cultured woman.
 Coventry (E.), Catherine; or, an Unfortunate Decision, 3/6
 Garvice (C.), The Scribblers' Club, 1/ net. Described as a volume of sketches. Contains 8 illustrations.
 Haggard (H. Rider), The Yellow God, 6/. An African story, with 3 illustrations by A. C. Michael.
 Harris (J. C.), The Bishop and the Bogie-Man, 2/6 net. With illustrations by Charlotte Harding.
 Level (M.), The Grip of Fear, 6/. A journalist seeks for experience, gets arrested for a murder, and narrowly escapes capital punishment.
 Lowe (C.), The Prince's Pranks, 6/. Introduces the present Kaiser and Bismarck.
 Maclaren (Ian), St. Jude's, 1/ net. With frontispiece by Harold Copping. Popular Edition.
 Newbolt (H.), The New June, 6/. Has to do with the Carthusian house of Mount Grace Priory.
 Oxenham (J.), My Lady of Shadows, 6/. The story deals with a somewhat difficult and delicate situation, the complete lapse of memory on the part of a bride immediately after the wedding.
 Ryven (G.), The Royal Law, 6/
 Sedgwick (S. N.), The Last Persecution, 6/. Concerned with the Yellow Peril, and has a frontispiece in colour.
 Slade (A. F.), The Alternative, 6/. The story of a marriage failure in which a wife falsely charges herself with an intimacy.
 Stoker (Bram), Snowbound, 1/ net. The record of a theatrical touring party.
 Trevena (J.), The Dartmoor House that Jack Built, 6/. We are told that it is "a huge joke throughout," a satire based on the popular conception of Dartmoor.
 Vaizey (Mrs. G. de Horne), The Conquest of Chrystabel, 6/. The hero is obliged to marry some one within three months on account of a fortune. Has a frontispiece by Francis Hodge.
 Wells (H. G.), The Food of the Gods, and how It came to Earth, 7d. net. In Nelson's Library. For review of first edition see Athen., Oct. 15, 1904, p. 512.
 Whishaw (F.), The Degenerate, 6/. Is concerned with modern revolutionary Russia.

General Literature.

Berge (Madame), Every Woman her Own Dressmaker: the Moulding Method of Practical Dressmaking, 3/6.
 Chambers of Commerce Year-Book, 5/ net.
 Clement (L.), The Ancient Science of Numbers, 3/6 net.
 Drumkey's Year-Book for East Africa, 1909, 7/6 net. A calendar, directory, and gazetteer for the British East Africa and Zanzibar protectorates, and containing information about Uganda and German East Africa, arranged and compiled by Y. S. A. Drumkey.
 Everyman's Library: Cicero's Offices; Milman's History of the Jews, introduction by Dr. H. Jones, Vol. I.; The Koran, translated by the Rev. J. M. Rodwell, introduction by the Rev. G. Margoliouth; Letters of Charles Lamb, 2 vols.; Plays of Christopher Marlowe, introduction by E. Thomas; Froude's Reign of Edward VI. and Reign of Henry VIII., 3 vols., introduction by L. Williams; Jules Verne's Secret of the Island, translated by W. H. G. Kingston; Boswell's Journal of the Tour to the Hebrides; Balzac's At the Sign of the Cat and Racket, and other Stories; Hugo's Les Misérables, 2 vols., 1/ net each.
 Lamb (C. and M.), Works, 5/ net; 2 vols., 3/ net each. Edited by T. Hutchinson. See p. 289.
 MacCorkle (W. A.), Some Southern Questions, 6/ net. Six addresses on questions in which the Southern States of the Union are interested.
 Merry (W. W.), Orationes tum Creweianæ tum Gratulatoriæ in Theatro Sheldoniano Plerumque Habitiæ, 6/ net. Latin Speeches, ranging over twenty-seven years, by the Oxford Public Orator.
 Prestage (E.), Portuguese Literature to the End of the Eighteenth Century. A lecture delivered at Manchester University on Feb. 1, 1909.
 Quilter (Harry), Opinions on Men and Things, 7/6 net.
 'Shipping World' Year-Book, 1909, 6/ net.
 Skrine (J. H.), Pastor Ovium, 5/ net. The day-book of a country parson.
 Svaraj, No. I., 6d. Edited by S. B. C. Pal. A fortnightly organ of Indian nationalism.
 Thomas (W. B.), Our Civic Life, 1/ net. One of the Citizen Books.
 Yoxall (J. H.), The Wander Years, 6/ net. A volume of mixed essays on life, art, and travel.

Pamphlets.

Arbuthnot (Ven. G.), A Plain Guide to the Communion Office, 1d.
 Downes (Dr.), Memorandum on the Reports of the Royal Commission on the Poor Laws and Relief of Distress, 2d. Reprinted from the official Report.
 Freeman (F. L.), Weeds and Flowers in the Soul's Garden, 1d. A book for Lent.
 Oliphant Memorial. An account of the inaugural ceremony in St. Giles' Cathedral, Edinburgh, July 16, 1908.
 Otley (Rev. R. L.), Prayer, 1d.
 Parry (E. A.), The Disadvantages of Education, 3d. net. A paper read before the Manchester Principal Teachers' Association, on Feb. 12.
 Sharpe (Rev. A. R.), Church Reform, 3d. Heyford Papers, No. 7.
 Stevens (W. J.), Lawns, 1d.

FOREIGN.

Engelkemper (W.), Heiligtum u. Opferstätten in den Gesetzen des Pentateuch, 2m. 60.
 Gregory (C. R.), Einleitung in das Neue Testament, 10m.
 Reinach (S.), Orpheus: Histoire générale des Religions, 6fr. Has a Bibliography and an Index of Names cited.
 Scherer (C. C.), Religion u. Ethos, 4m. 40.
 Torge (P.), Seelenglaube u. Unsterblichkeitshoffnung im Alten Testament, 5m.
 Windisch (H.), Die Frömmigkeit Philos u. ihre Bedeutung f. das Christentum, 2m. 50.

Fine Art.

Bensa (T.), La Peinture en Basse-Provence, à Nice et en Ligurie depuis le commencement du Quatorzième Siècle jusqu'au milieu du Seizième. With a preface by M. Gabriel Hanotaux.

Poetry and the Drama.

Barbey d'Aurevilly (J.), Le Théâtre contemporain: Vol. III. 1869-70, 3fr. 50. Part of the Edition du Centenaire.
 Bary (A. de), Le Vent dans les Arbres, 3fr. 50. Short poems.
 Kiefer (K.), Körperlicher Schmerz u. Tod auf der attischen Bühne, 2m. 50.
 Lamorte (G. F. de), L'ardua Sentenza: alla gloria Eterna di Napoleone I., 2l.
 Swinburne (A. C.), Chants d'avant l'Aube, 3fr. 50. Prose translation by Gabriel Mourey. In the Bibliothèque cosmopolite.
 Wilde (O.), Théâtre: Vol. I. Les Drame, 3fr. 50. Contains 'Véra' and 'La Duchesse de Padoue.' Also in the Bibliothèque cosmopolite.

Bibliography.

Reichling (D.), Appendices ad Hainii-Copingeri Repertorium Bibliographicum: Additiones et Emendationes, Part V., 10m.

Philosophy.

Stern (C. u. W.), Monographien üb. die seelische Entwicklung des Kindes: Part II. Erinnerung, Aussage u. Lüge in der ersten Kindheit, 5m.

History and Biography.

Bordeaux (H.), Portraits de Femmes et d'Enfants, 3fr. 50. Includes studies of the Comtesse de Boigne, Mlle. de Lespinasse, and Mistral.
 Philippon (E.), Les Ibères: Étude d'Histoire, d'Archéologie, et de Linguistique, 5fr. Has a preface by M. d'Arbois de Jubainville.
 Rudler (G.), La Jeunesse de Benjamin Constant, 1767-94, 10fr.
 Susta (J.), Die römische Kurie u. das Konzil v. Trient unter Pius IV., Vol. II., 17m.

Philology.

Böhtlingk's (O.) Sanskrit-Chrestomathie, 2m. 50. Third Edition, revised by R. Garbe.
 Bruggencate's (K. ten) Engelsch Woordenboek, 5fl. 70. English-Dutch and Dutch-English Dictionary, edited by L. van der Wal.
 Cappeller (C.), Kālidāsa's Sakuntalā (kürzere Textform), mit kritischen und erklärenden Anmerkungen, 5m.
 Esswein (H.), August Strindberg im Lichte seines Lebens u. seiner Werke, 4m.
 Launis (A.), Lappische Juoigos-Melodien, gesammelt u. hrsg., 8m.
 Marthold (J. de), Le Jargon de François Villon: Argot du Quinzième Siècle, 6fr. Has 7 illustrations.

Fiction.

Doyle (A. Conan), Un Début en Médecine: La grande Ombre, 3fr. 50 each. Both translated by Albert Savine as part of the Bibliothèque cosmopolite.
 Jaloux (E.), Le Reste est Silence, 3fr. 50. A boy tells the story of his mother's life.
 Kipling (R.), Au Blanc et Noir, 3fr. 50. Another translation by M. Savine.

General Literature.

Grappe (G.), Dans le Jardin de Sainte-Beuve, 3fr. 50. Contains essays on Hugo, Dumas père, George Sand, Quinet, Mérimée, Balzac, and Sainte-Beuve.
 Piobb (P.), Les Mystères des Dieux: Vénus, 6fr.

* * All Books received at the Office up to Wednesday Morning will be included in this List unless previously noted. Publishers are requested to state prices when sending Books.

Literary Gossip.

MESSRS. LONGMAN will publish Prof. Mackail's book, 'The Springs of Helicon: a Study of the Progress of English Poetry from Chaucer to Milton,' on the 15th inst. It consists of his lectures at Oxford, 1906-1908, revised and slightly expanded. In his Introduction the Professor points out that the masters of poetry "not only repay, but require, perpetual reinterpretation. To each age, to each reader, they come in a new light and bear a fresh significance."

MESSRS. BLACKWOOD announce the 'Life of Field-Marshal Sir Neville Chamberlain,' by Mr. G. W. Forrest, who has had the advantage of consulting a mass of letters and documents collected by Miss Harriet Chamberlain, the General's sister; 'Sir Walter Scott's Friends,' by Miss Florence MacMunn; and 'The Englishwoman in India,' by Mrs. Maud Diver, whose Indian stories have been a success.

THE OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS are publishing this spring 'The Forerunners of Dante,' a selection from Italian poetry before 1300, edited by Mr. A. J. Butler; 'Ionia and the East,' lectures by Mr. D. G. Hogarth; 'Historical Essays' by H. F. Pelham, edited by Prof. Haverfield; and 'Tudor and Stuart Proclamations,' and 'Roger Bacon's Works' (hitherto unpublished), which are both edited by Mr. Robert Steele.

MESSRS. CASSELL include in their spring list 'The Show Girl,' a story of unconventional Paris by Mr. Max Pemberton; 'The Red Saint,' by Mr. Warwick Deeping; and 'The Love Brokers,' by Mr. A. Kinross, an attack on marriage law and the lawyers concerned in it.

SIR ISAAC PITMAN & SONS will publish immediately an English translation of Major de Bouillane de Lacoste's recent work, 'Autour de l'Afghanistan,' in a preface to which M. Georges Leygues discusses, from the Frenchman's point of view, the Asiatic problem.

THE same firm have in hand 'Native Life in East Africa,' by Dr. Karl Weule, translated with notes by Miss Alice Werner, and 'Three Years' Sport on the Mozambique,' by M. Vasse, translated by Dr. R. Lydekker.

THE forthcoming number of The Classical Review (March) will contain, inter alia, articles by the Rev. T. Nicklin on 'The Aims of Classical Study, with Special Reference to Public Schools'; and by Dr. Verrall on 'The Death of Cypsilus, alias Lycidas.'

A FINAL volume of the Library Edition of Ruskin is to be issued by Messrs. George Allen, which will consist of 'A Complete Bibliography,' 'A Catalogue of Ruskin's Drawings and MSS.,' Addenda and Corrigenda, and an Index to the whole work which will run to at least 100,000 references. The edition will thus maintain its character as one of the most elaborate ever issued of a great writer's works.

MR. ELKIN MATHEWS will have ready about the end of March 'Artemision: Idylls and Songs,' by Mr. Maurice Hewlett. He also announces 'The Meaning of Happiness' and 'A Few Lyrics,' by Miss Laurence Alma Tadema; 'River Music, and other Poems,' by Mr. W. R. Titterton; and 'Transcripts from Heine,' by the Rev. George Tyrrell.

The Athenæum has on more than one occasion in past years expressed regret at the loss of the letters of J. S. Mill, such as those to Tocqueville, in a correspondence of which we have the other half. It is now rumoured that some of John Stuart Mill's letters, as well as those addressed to him to which they reply, are likely to reach the public.

WE hear that Lady Ermyntrode Malet is printing for private circulation an unfinished narrative by her husband of events at Constantinople and in Egypt during the time that he was there. We believe that Lord Sanderson will edit the volume.

THE DEAN OF WESTMINSTER is to preside at a meeting on behalf of the proposed Bunyan Memorial in the Jerusalem Chamber of Westminster Abbey on the 26th inst. Addresses will be delivered by the Archbishop of Canterbury and Dr. Clifford. The first list of subscribers to the fund will be reported at the meeting. All those who desire to be associated with this memorial are requested to communicate as soon as possible with the Secretaries, Bunyan Memorial, 4, Southampton Row, W.C.

THE annual meeting of the British Society of Franciscan Studies will be held next Wednesday afternoon in the Jerusalem Chamber, when the Dean of Westminster will lecture on 'Westminster in the Twelfth Century.'

DR. SIMON S. LAURIE, Emeritus Professor of the Institutes and History of Education in Edinburgh, who died on Tuesday last in his eightieth year, was one of the leading educational experts of Scotland. Educated at the High School and University of Edinburgh, he began his career as secretary to the Education Committee of the Church of Scotland, and subsequently took similar appointments in the Endowed Schools (Scotland) Commission of 1872, and the Association for Promoting Secondary Education in Scotland, founded in 1876. He wrote much on philosophy and education, including the 'Philosophy of Ethics' (1866), and 'Primary Instruction in Education' (1867) and 'Life and Educational Writings of J. A. Comenius' (1881), both of which went through many editions. His 'Language and Linguistic Method in Schools' (1890), 'Institutes of Education' (1892), and 'Historical Survey of Pre-Christian Education' (1895) also passed through more than one edition. His Gifford Lectures at Edinburgh of 1905 and 1906 were published under the title 'Synthetica'; and he also wrote, under the name of "Scotus Novanticus," 'Metaphysica nova et vetusta' and 'Ethica.'

MESSRS. SOTHEY'S sale on the 19th inst. will include a number of important rarities, one of which is Swift's own copy of 'Miscellanies in Prose and Verse,' consisting chiefly of contributions by Swift and Pope. This set contains several hundred MS. corrections, and was in Lord Powerscourt's sale at Dublin a few weeks ago. Another rarity is Walton's 'Compleat Angler,' 1653.

MR. A. F. R. WOLLASTON writes from the Savile Club:—

"I have been invited to write a Life of the late Prof. Alfred Newton. If any of your readers, who have letters or reminiscences or other interesting information about Prof. Newton, will be kind enough to communicate with me, I shall be exceedingly grateful to them. I will of course undertake to return letters, &c., to the senders."

A PAMPHLET will appear very shortly, edited by Col. Colomb, entitled 'Mr. Nicholas Wakespear on "The Baconian Heresy."' This is an attempt to prove the plenary inspiration of Shakespeare.

MR. W. A. B. COOLIDGE writes from Grindelwald:—

"In your last week's review of 'Leland's Itinerary' 'Bureho alias Insula rastorum' is mentioned as doubtful. Is not the island wanted either that of Bréchou, or that of Burons, which are situated respectively W. and E. of Sark, one of the Channel Islands? And cannot we boldly read 'rattorum' for 'rastorum'? The word 'Rattus' is given in Du Cange."

THE MANCHESTER UNIVERSITY PRESS is publishing this week the 'Introduction to Mediæval Welsh' by the late Prof. Strachan, which had been announced as ready last November. Its appearance, however, was delayed by a copyright suit now happily terminated.

'A MANUAL OF AMERICAN LITERATURE,' specially written for the Tauchnitz edition by the professors of the English Department of Cornell University, and edited by Mr. Theodore Stanton, will be published at Leipsic and New York early this month. The American edition will be issued by Messrs. Putnam. This volume clears up the authorship of two American novels which made some stir in their day—'Democracy,' and 'The Bread-Winners.'

THE APPROPRIATION ACCOUNTS show that the national expenditure on the official 'History of the South African War' up to March 31st, 1908, was 33,000*l.*, and the receipts from royalties on the book—killed by the better Times history—were 600*l.* The balance to the bad was 32,404*l.* 3*s.* The 'History of the Russo-Japanese War' cost about 1,657*l.*, and copies sold produced 45*l.* The net loss in this case to March, 1908, was 1,612*l.* 2*s.* 8*d.*

WE notice the death at the age of fifty-nine at Halle of Dr. Hermann Ebbinghaus, Professor of Philosophy at the University of that town. His most important work was connected with experimental psychology. His books include 'Ueber das Gedächtnis,' 'Eine neue Methode zur Prüfung geistiger Fähigkeit,' und ihre Anwendung bei Schulkindern,' and an 'Abriss der Psychologie.'

VICE-ADMIRAL REINHOLD VON WERNER whose death is reported from Charlottenburg in his eighty-fourth year, was the author of a number of works dealing with naval subjects—among them, 'Die Preussische Marine,' 'Erinnerungen und Bilder aus dem Seeleben,' 'Berühmte Seeleute,' and 'Bilder aus der deutschen Seekriegsgeschichte.'

EGINHARD VON BARFUS, whose death at the age of eighty-three is announced from Munich, was at one time an officer in the Prussian army, and served also in the East Indian army of the Netherlands. He wrote a number of novels and several books of travels: 'Durch alle Meere,' 'Bis in die Wildnis,' 'Im Lande der Buren,' and 'Auf Samoa.' He also translated Mr. Rider Haggard's 'Beatrice' and Mr. Kipling's 'The Light that Failed.'

RECENT Government Publications of interest include: Calendar of Papal Registers—Papal Letters, VIII., 1427–47 (15*s.*); Calendar of State Papers, Foreign, 1582 (15*s.*); and a Blue-book of the Education Department containing Financial Statistics for England and Wales (9*d.*).

SCIENCE

OUR LIBRARY TABLE.

Experimental Elasticity. By G. F. C. Searle. (Cambridge, University Press.)—The want of an elementary work on elasticity treated from the point of view of the experimental physicist has long been felt among students and teachers of physics. The student with only a limited knowledge of mathematics who wishes to study elasticity has found himself confronted with the difficulty of obtaining a textbook on the subject which, while not too advanced, will yet give an adequate account of the elementary theory, and an explanation of the principal experiments on elasticity which usually form part of a course on experimental physics. Mr. Searle is therefore to be thanked for having removed this difficulty by collecting and arranging in this short volume the valuable laboratory notes which he has composed during the last twenty years for use in the Cavendish Laboratory.

The book is divided into three chapters, of which the first deals with the elementary theory of elasticity. Starting with a general account of the elastic properties of materials and the statement of Hooke's Law, the author proceeds to investigate the nature of the strains produced by subjecting an elastic material to stresses and to develop the relations which exist between the elastic constants.

The second chapter is devoted to a consideration of some special problems in elasticity which are of particular interest from a practical point of view, such as the bending and torsion of rods and blades. In this chapter, too, is included an account of the strains produced in cylinders and rectangular rods under tension and torsion when the pull or twist is not applied evenly over the ends of the cylinder or rod. The author has been fortunate in securing in this portion of the work the co-operation of Dr. Filon, who has done much to develop this interesting and difficult subject.

The first two chapters, which are thus devoted to the theory of elasticity, are followed by a third which gives an excellent account of the practical methods usually employed to investigate the laws of elasticity and measure the elastic constants. First are given experiments to verify Hooke's Law, and then follow the usual experiments for determining Young's Modulus by the stretching of a wire, including the elegant and delicate modification of the method devised by Mr. Searle himself, in which the change of length on loading a wire is compared with the length of a wire stretched by a fixed load, the change being indicated by a spirit level supported by the two wires. The chapter also contains accounts of other methods of determining Young's Modulus, and the measurements of the modulus of rigidity and Poisson's ratio by the usual methods employed for these purposes. There is further an account of Lord Rayleigh's reciprocal relations and methods of testing them; and lastly some interesting experiments are described on the energy dissipated through torsional hysteresis. The volume closes with a series of useful short notes on some important dynamical principles, and a final one on "hints on practical work in physics," in which the author gives a humorous criticism of the errors into which students frequently fall when doing practical work, and some advice as to the best methods of avoiding them.

In his Preface Mr. Searle promises volumes similar to the present one on Experimental Optics, Mechanics, Electricity and Magnetism, and Heat and Sound. We look forward to the publication of these volumes, which with that under notice should form an exceedingly useful series on experimental physics.

The World's Gold. By L. de Launay. Translated by Orlando C. Williams. (Heinemann.)—To those who are acquainted with the recent scientific literature of France, Prof. de Launay will be known as a prolific writer on geology, especially in its relation to mining; and it is a pleasure to meet with one of his works in an English dress. M. de Launay always writes clearly and well, and his work on gold may be read with much interest, whether the reader be geologist, miner, metallurgist, or economist. His object seems to have been to bind together the technical and the economic branches of his subject. For this purpose he discusses, as a geologist, the conditions under which gold occurs in nature; traces in detail the geographical distribution of the metal; describes the various methods of dressing and reducing gold ores; and finally rises to the economic study of gold.

Scientific improvements in the treatment of the ores, such as the invention of cyaniding, have revolutionized the gold industry in recent years. Vast bodies of ore formerly rejected for their poverty are now utilized, more or less profitably; and this development, not less than the discovery of new fields, has led to an unprecedented output of the precious metal. Yet the present supply, so far from being excessive for our needs, is considered by the writer hardly to meet them. M. de Launay writes, however, as an optimist: he has no fear of an early exhaustion, or even serious diminution, of our resources, and he looks to countries like Mexico and the South American republics, not to mention Central Asia, as likely to contribute largely to the world's gold supply in the future. For the next twenty years at least he foresees a yield as large as our present production, if not, indeed, larger. At the same time he has no dread of over-production or depreciation in the value of the metal. In fact, like most authorities, he holds that as time goes on poorer and poorer ores will come to be worked, and, as the cost of extraction will then necessarily increase, there may rather be a tendency to a rise in the value of gold.

It remains to be said that the work is introduced by an appreciative chapter from the pen of M. Charles A. Conant. The translation has been done with accuracy and judgment.

RESEARCH NOTES.

A REALLY striking experiment in further proof that the Alpha particle emitted by radio-active substances is an atom of helium is described by Prof. Rutherford in last month's Philosophical Magazine. As the author puts it, the problem was to find a substance sufficiently thin to allow the Alpha particles to escape, but impervious to the passage of helium, and then to ascertain whether helium would appear in an outer vessel into which the Alpha particles were, as he expresses it, "fired." The desired substance he found in excessively thin glass, and he succeeded in producing a tube of this less than one-hundredth of a millimetre thick, through which the greater part of the Alpha particles emitted by radium A and C passed easily. After filling this tube with radium emanation, he surrounded it with a larger and much longer one exhausted to a high vacuum, and with a kind of mercury-pump arrangement which caused any gas contained in it to gather at the top. After twenty-four hours, no trace of the yellow line of helium was seen, but it appeared after two days. In four days both the yellow and green lines showed brilliantly; and after six days all the stronger lines of the helium spectrum were visible. Control experiments showed that this was due, not to the diffusion of the gas through the walls of the tube, but to the actual presence of the Alpha particles themselves in the outer vessel; and the possible objection that the helium was present in the walls of the outer tube, and was liberated on their bombardment by the Alpha particles, was met by other experiments. There seems, therefore, no further room for doubt that the Alpha particle of radium, after losing its charge, is an atom of helium.

Another much-disputed point in radio-activity has also been set at rest by the announcement by M. Jacques Danne of a new radio-active substance intermediate between metallic uranium and uranium X, which it is proposed to call radio-uranium. According to his communication to the Académie des Sciences, he obtained it by the treatment of some twenty kilogrammes of nitrate of uranium, and found that it had a radio-activity that more than doubled itself at the end of forty-four days. Uranium, therefore, comes into line with thorium and actinium, each of which produces a product, called radio-thorium in the one case and radio-actinium in the other, which comes between the simple substance and thorium X and actinium X respectively. The likeness between the different very radio-active substances is further increased by the discovery announced by Dr. Otto Hahn in the Physikalische Zeitschrift at the close of last year, that he had, with the assistance of Fräulein Meitner, discovered a further product of actinium, which he calls actinium C. According to him, it emits both Beta and Gamma rays and possesses a "period" of 5 minutes and 10 seconds, or double that of actinium B.

The January number of The Philosophical Magazine contains an article by Mr. W. Makower on the number of Beta particles expelled by radium, in which he comes to the conclusion that the number emitted per second by radium C in radio-active equilibrium with one gramme of radium amounts to 5.0×10^{10} , which seems considerably less than that already given by Prof. Rutherford. He also thinks he has obtained proof that the Beta rays are absolutely stopped, and not merely scattered, on meeting obstacles like glass of sufficient thickness, and that virtually the same amount of absorption takes place with glass as with aluminium. This experiment enables us to estimate the negative charge carried away from a known quantity of radium in radio-active equilibrium with its disintegration products, and fitly rounds off the "counting" experiments carried out by Prof. Rutherford and his lieutenants at Manchester, which have done so much to bring accuracy into our knowledge of the radio-active substances.

The "direction" of wireless telegraphy—or, in other words, the propagation of long ether-waves in one direction only—is receiving increased attention, and Prof. Macdonald's note on it in a recent number of the Royal Society's Proceedings can be recommended as a rather short cut to the theory of the subject. As the author puts it, the essential feature of the various systems of directed wireless telegraphy is the interference of two sets of waves differing in phase, and proceeding from sources at a distance apart. He also gives us an insight into the practical differences between the German and Italian methods now in use and that adopted by Mr. Marconi, but without expressing any preference for one over the others. The paper is perfectly clear as well as concise, and is worth the attention of every one practically interested in the development of the new modes of communication. It should have some influence on the researches now being made by Prof. Branly and others into what is called tele-mechanics, or the art of transmitting power to a distance by waves in the ether and without wires.

Prof. Fleming in last month's Philosophical Magazine describes what is in effect an apparatus for the production of the electric current by an entirely new method. He fills an exhausted tube with a liquid alloy of potassium and sodium, and concentrates on the mercury-like mirror thus formed a beam from an electric arc lamp. A platinum plate inside the tube, and above the mirror, then receives a negative charge which is capable of measurement by a galvanometer, and Prof. Fleming seems to consider it possible thus to form a battery capable of giving a current of high electromotive force by the impact of light alone. His explanation of the phenomenon is that the ultra-violet rays of the spectrum "facilitate or cause" an escape of negative electrons from the metal on which they fall, and that this effect is greatest in the most electro-positive metals. He suggests that this may be the same with the particles of dust in the atmosphere, and may thus account for the imperfect transmission of long ether-waves in daylight. However this may be, the experiment is of very great interest, and raises more than one question of the kind which are more easily asked than answered, as to the source and path of the energy which is thus communicated to the electrons, and which gives them the power to escape from the metal in which they are imprisoned. It should be remembered that metallic potassium and sodium disintegrate directly they come in contact with moisture, and that Prof. Fleming's experiment is not to be repeated without strict attention to the precautions he gives.

In the current number of the Royal Society's Proceedings Mr. Jervis-Smith continues his investigation into the glow produced in an exhausted globe rotating in the circumstances described in the account of the Royal Society's soirée in May last (see The Athenæum, No. 4203). He now uses a silica bulb rotated to four or five revolutions per second until the glow is produced, when the bulb is slowly discharged through a wet string, and the glow disappears. If a magnetic field be established in the neighbourhood, the glow reappears, and the author's last experiments were undertaken to decide if the nature of the residual gas necessarily left in the globe on exhaustion exercised any effect on the phenomenon. The neon placed at his disposal by Sir William Ramsay gave a reddish glow when subject to the electrostatic field, but no afterglow, and was but feebly affected by the magnetic field. Air gave a brilliant after-glow in the magnetic field, even when the electrical conductor was placed at such a distance that no primary glow was produced. Oxygen gave the most brilliant effects, and hydrogen (which necessitated the use of a glass bulb) some less brilliant. A silica bulb rotated against a camel's-hair brush or the finger gave somewhat similar results in a magnetic field when exhausted as before. It may be remarked that phenomena resembling the above sometimes take place when a glass tube exhausted to a high degree is exposed to a high-frequency current and then removed from the apparatus. Mr. Jervis-Smith offers at present no explanation of his phenomena, but they seem to point to a kind of electrical hysteresis or lag, as if the electrons, when set in violent vibration, took some time to reach again a state of equilibrium.

In the Revue Générale des Sciences for January the Abbé Moreux discusses the possibility of the existence of an atmosphere on Mars, and his paper, although not strikingly original, is a good summary of what is known on the subject. The conclusion to which he comes, with some reserves, is that Mars does possess an atmosphere, and even clouds, although its air must be less dense than that of the earth. He does not seem inclined to believe, without further proof, in the existence of the so-called canals, which have lately received a new explanation by M. Deslandres. According to the communication of M. Deslandres to the Académie des Sciences, which appeared in the Comptes Rendus at the close of last year, the upper layer of the sun's atmosphere was completely mapped out at the observatory at Meudon during the latter part of last autumn, and shows among other things a series of sharply defined long filaments which seem to be situated along alignments for considerable periods. As M. Deslandres points out, these markings seem to have much analogy with the supposed canals of Mars.

In the current number of Science Abstracts there appears a digest of papers by Mr. D. F. Comstock on the indestructibility of matter, the irregularities in the periodic law exhibited by the atomic weights of the elements, and an explanation of gravitation, to which I hope to return later. F. L.

SOCIETIES.

LINNEAN.—Feb. 18.—Dr. D. H. Scott, President, in the chair.—Miss H. Stuart Chambers, B.Sc., was admitted a Fellow.—Mr. David Reekie was elected a Fellow.—The President announced that two vacancies existed in the list of Foreign Members, caused by the deaths of Prof. Alfred Giard and Prof. Karl Möbius.—The President then left the chair, and was succeeded by Lieut.-Col. Prain.—A discussion on 'Alternation of Generations in Plants' was opened by Dr. W. H. Lang. An animated discussion followed, the speakers being Prof. F. O. Bower, Dr. D. H. Scott, Prof. J. Bretland Farmer, Prof. F. W. Oliver, and Mr. A. G. Tansley.

ROYAL INSTITUTION.—March 1.—Sir James Crichton-Browne, Treasurer and V.P., in the chair.—Sir George Wyatt Truscott, the Lord Mayor, Mr. A. E. Garrett, Mr. D. Jones, Mr. E. Lunge, Dr. J. H. Openshaw, and Miss Power were elected Members.—The Hon. Secretary reported the death of Prof. Julius Thomsen, the distinguished Danish chemist, and an Honorary Member of the Institution, and a resolution of condolence with the family was passed.

SOCIETY OF ENGINEERS.—March 1.—Dr. J. S. Owens read a paper on 'A New Test for Concrete.'

ARISTOTELIAN.—March 1.—Mr. G. E. Moore, V.P., in the chair.—Dr. F. C. S. Schiller read a paper on 'The Rationalistic Conception of Truth.' The paper examined two important implications of Rationalism—viz., that truth was "independent" of man, and that knowledge was of a "transcendent" object—and exhibited the ambiguity of both terms.

1. If knowledge is to be possible, the "independence" of truth can mean no more than that its relation to man does not affect its nature. Hence there is no necessary connexion between being true and being known. Truth therefore becomes independent of verification, and unverifiable truth may exist both for man and for God. This inference has rightly been drawn by several Rationalists. But the only way of proving the actual existence of unverifiable truth is to make this doctrine allege (and thereby prove) itself as the example required. Once, however, one unverifiable truth has been conceded, any number may exist. Hence the Rationalist is enabled to assert whatever he pleases and to declare it to be unverifiable truth. This explains why no proof of the a priori can ever be produced, and gives Rationalism a great controversial advantage, but reduces it to subjectivism.

2. In discussing the "transcendence" of the object of knowledge it is necessary to distinguish (1) the transcendence of the object of thought as such. This is, however, possessed by the "unreal" and worthless as well as by the "real," and so is merely formal and not important. (2) objects of true perception are recognized by us as transcending the process of perceiving, but this transcendence is not absolute: it is essentially pragmatic, and relative to the function of such reals to organize our experience. Hence (3) it is a mistake to interpret it metaphysically as involving a real which is unconnected with our thought. To do so makes truth dependent on copying an unknowable real, and so impossible by definition. The only ways of avoiding this are (1) Scepticism and (2) Humanism. But the former of these needs to be eked out by the "practical makeshift" of a pragmatic view of truth, if it is not to paralyze action and be fatal to life. Hence Humanism is the only completely adequate conception of truth.—The paper was followed by a discussion.

BRITISH NUMISMATIC.—Feb. 24.—Mr. W. J. Andrew, President, in the chair.—The following were elected Members: Col. John W. R. Parker, Lieut.-Col. G. B. Croft Lyons, Capt. Neville R. Wilkinson (Ulster King-of-Arms), Capt. J. Sydney Henderson, Prof. F. P. Barnard, Miss K. Addison-Scott, Miss E. Stokes, and Messrs. G. M. Clark, P. Edelston, C. Goddard, J. A. D. Hale, H. W. Harding, O. S. Horn, G. F. Lawrence, W. M. Maish, W. Mayes, R. Pearce, A. H. Pocock, A. J. V. Radford, L. Ridout, M. Rosenheim, P. W. Steer, and H. Symonds.

The President continued his tentative contributions to 'A Numismatic History of the Reign of Stephen' with a section on 'The Duke's Money; Coins of Robert and William, Earls of Gloucester; Baldwin de Redvers, Earl of Exeter and Devon; William de Moion, Earl of Somerset and Dorset; and of Patrick, Earl of Salisbury and Wilts,' quoting Hoveden's record that when Duke Henry, afterwards Henry II., came over, he issued a new coinage, and not he only, but also the bishops, earls, and barons coined their own money. To Henry's first expedition in 1149 Mr. Andrew assigned the profile types of the class Ruding, sup. part ii., plate ii., Nos. 9 and 11; and to his then adherents William, Earl of Gloucester, and Patrick, Earl of Salisbury, coins bearing similar reverses struck at Wareham and Salisbury, the latter being No. 21, the full legends of which he believed to be: obv. PATRICOM, rev. STANNING: ON: SA. Henry passed through England to Carlisle to be knighted at Whitsuntide, 1149, where a coin reading IOHAN: ON: CA was probably issued on that occasion. In 1153 he landed with his forces, probably at Wareham and Christchurch, which were then held by William, Earl of Gloucester, proceeding by Sherborne to Bruton, and thence by Devizes to Malmesbury and Wallingford. The earls of the West of England rose in his cause, and the evidence of the money preserved to us of this period closely corroborates that of the chronicles and charters. The general type issued was Hks. 260, and of Henry's own money we find the mints of Wareham, Sherborne, Taunton (?), Wiveliscombe, and Malmesbury; whilst of his earls' coinage we have Wareham, Dorchester, and Devizes as the mints of William of Gloucester; Dunster and Christchurch of William de Moion; and Exeter of Baldwin de Redvers. To the siege of Lincoln in 1144 Mr. Andrew assigned certain coins of type Hks. 269, which bore on the obv. the name ROBERT, which he believed represented Robert, Earl of Gloucester, and he suggested that they were issued for the payment of the garrison. He also attributed other coins, varieties of Hks. type 270, to the mints of Devizes, Malmesbury, and Sherborne.

Mr. Shirley Fox exhibited a short-cross penny of Henry II. and eight groats of Henry VI. He pointed out that all the groats showed a flawed pellet, and attributed the flaw, which breaks down the circumference of the pellet, to the punch used in sinking the die. He then advanced the theory that the dies used for some of the short-cross pennies were not engraved in the usual way, and he maintained that the design reproduced upon the coins was sunk into the die by means of a variety of punches. The straight lines and curves of the inscription and design on the obverse of the penny were classified by Mr. Fox, and in support of his theory he established the fact that the great number of different markings on the coin are distributable into as few as ten groups. From this he argued that ten punches were used by the die-sinker in producing the design and inscription dealt with. Mr. Fox illustrated his thesis by building up an enlarged facsimile of the short-cross penny by means of paper diagrams, drawn to scale, and respectively representing the face of the particular punch adjudged to have been used.

Exhibits:—In addition to the coins mentioned, Mr. Fox exhibited a groat of Edward III. on which the back of the B in MYB is wanting, and a groat of Henry VII. with K instead of C in the king's name. Miss Helen Farquhar: a silver-gilt box decorated upon fourteen facets with portraits and heraldic designs, attributed to about 1618, Raleigh, Bacon, the Earl of Nottingham, and King James being represented. Mr. L. L. Fletcher: metal tickets issued by the East India Company's recruiting departments in London and Liverpool. Mr. W. Sharp Ogden: three pennies of Edward I.—one of Lincoln with the mint-name lettered VIN 'COL'; two of London, one reading EWI 'R' and IVI 'TAS', and the other bearing a wide crown with clearly defined pearls. Mr. Ogden also exhibited a penny of Edward II. of Durham, with a cross-pattée curved to the left at top and bottom like a cross-moline, for m.m. Mr. S. M. Spink: a unit of Charles I. from the Exeter mint (unpublished), and an angel of Henry VIII. with a castle for m.m., and the letter h and the rose omitted from the field of the reverse (unpublished).

MEETINGS NEXT WEEK.

- MON. Society of Arts, 8.—'Modern Methods of Artificial Illumination,' Lecture IV., Mr. Leon Gaster. (Cantor Lecture.)
— Surveyors' Institution, 8.—'Giant London: the Evolution of a Great City, its Growth in Size and Value,' Mr. J. G. Head.
— Geographical, 8.30.—'Explorations in Central Asia,' Dr. M. A. Stein.
- TUES. Royal Institution, 3.—'Evolution of the Brain as an Organ of Mind,' Lecture III., Prof. F. W. Mott.
— Colonial Institute, 8.—'The Development of Empire Trade and Industry,' Mr. B. H. Morgan.
— Institution of Civil Engineers, 8.—'Concrete and Masonry Dam Construction in New South Wales,' Mr. L. A. B. Wade.
— Anthropological Institute, 8.15.—'The Veddas,' Dr. C. G. Seligmann.
- WED. Geological, 8.—'Some Notes on the Neighbourhood of Victoria Falls,' Mr. T. Coltrington; 'A Contribution to the Petrography of the New Red Sandstone of the West of England,' Mr. H. H. Thomas.
— Society of Arts, 8.—'The Application of the Microscope to the Study of Metals,' Mr. W. Rosenhain.
- THURS. Royal Institution, 3.—'Recent Advances in Agricultural Science,' Lecture I., Mr. A. D. Hall.
— Royal, 4.30.
— Institution of Electrical Engineers, 8.—'The Dielectric Strength of Compressed Air,' Mr. E. A. Watson.
— Society of Antiquaries, 8.30.
- FRI. Astronomical, 5.
— Physical, 8.—'The Effect of Radiations on the Brush Discharge,' Mr. A. E. Garrett; 'On Pirani's Method of measuring the Self-Inductance of a Coil,' Mr. E. C. Snow; 'Exhibition of a High-Potential Primary Battery,' Mr. W. S. Tucker; 'On the Least Moment of Inertia of an Angle Bar Section,' Mr. H. S. Rowell.
— Royal Institution, 9.—'Modern Submarine Telegraphy,' Mr. S. G. Brown.
- SAT. Royal Institution, 3.—'Properties of Matter,' Lecture III., Prof. Sir J. J. Thomson.

Science Gossip.

THE OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS are to publish a volume of the remarkable 'Bushman Paintings' which we noticed last year, and which, we then hoped, would secure some permanent record.

MESSRS. GEORGE PHILIP & SON'S spring announcements include: 'Practical Elementary Science,' in three parts, by Mr. T. Samuel and Mr. H. Foxcroft; 'A Guide to Geographical Books and Appliances,' prepared by Mr. J. F. Unstead and Mr. N. E. MacMunn, edited by Mr. A. J. Herbertson; 'School Gardening,' by Mr. W. E. Watkins, and Mr. A. Sowman; 'A Rational Geography,' Part II., by Mr. E. Young; and 'Our Own Islands,' by Mr. H. J. MacKinder.

THE UNIVERSITY OF CAMBRIDGE is about to establish a Chair of Astrophysics, and the first Professor to occupy it will be Mr. Hugh F. Newall, F.R.S., who has filled the office of President of the Royal Astronomical Society during the last two years, being succeeded in February (when he delivered his closing address) by Sir David Gill. In addition to the instruments (hitherto used by Sir William Huggins) which, as has been already mentioned in The Athenæum, have been presented to the University by the Royal Society, some valuable spectroscopes have recently been offered by Major Hills, and accepted.

THE EDINBURGH ROYAL SOCIETY took possession on Monday night of part of their new premises, 22, George Street. The President, Sir William Turner, will declare the premises formally open at a later date, when they are completed.

DR. T. G. LONGSTAFF, the well-known Alpinist and explorer of Nepal and Tibet, will undertake a fresh Himalayan expedition in the spring. His destination is the Eastern Karakoram, where he hopes to reach both the Saichar and the Saltoro glaciers. He will be accompanied by Lieut. Morris Slingsby, but on this occasion he will not take with him any Alpine guides.

PROF. TURNER states that the variable star, 2, 1909, Andromedæ, recently announced by Madame Ceraski, has been found registered on plates taken at Oxford for the Astrophysical Catalogue, the first as far back as November 9th, 1893, when the magnitude was 8.8. In 1895 this was a little above the 9th, but rose to 8.5 on October 15th, 1907. From that time it would seem, from the Moscow observations, to have sunk continuously to the twelfth at the end of last year.

Two more small planets were photographically discovered by Prof. Max Wolf and one by Herr Kopff, at the Astrophysical Institute, Königstuhl, Heidelberg, on the 18th ult.

IN our Science Gossip last week (p. 262, col. 1, l. 16), for "north-easterly" read north-westerly. The meteor appears to have been seen over the whole of the South of England and a large part of the North of France.

FINE ARTS

A History of Painting in Italy. By J. A. Crowe and G. B. Cavalcaselle. Edited by Langton Douglas. Vol. III. (John Murray.)

(Second Notice.)

PASSING to Mr. Douglas's notes in themselves, we do not find in them sufficient excuse for the deliberate neglect of other critics which we mentioned in our last article. Many of them, despite their assertive tone, are not above discussion. Space, however, obliges us to limit ourselves to a few examples. Mr. Douglas, for instance, starts with the questionable statement that Simone Martini's influence was more powerful, both in Siena and abroad, than was that of the Lorenzetti. The consensus of modern critical opinion, as well as the testimony of the Trecento painting of Italy, points to the reverse. As in his 'History of Siena,' Mr. Douglas still valiantly supports Dr. Richter's and Prof. Wickhoff's opinions by insisting upon the "Rucellai" Madonna as a genuine work of Duccio. We agree with Mr. Douglas that the majority of modern critics have become converted to the rather obvious fact of the Siennese parentage of this much-discussed and world-famous painting; but we cannot accept his conclusions that we have here a work by Duccio himself, rather than by some one among his more able followers. Putting aside all questions of quality and stylistic differences (conclusive as they appear to the present reviewer), it is far from proved that the "Rucellai" Madonna was in reality painted in 1285, or that it is, of necessity, identical with the picture known to have been ordered of Duccio in that year. The mere existence of a document recording the commission of such a picture in that particular year is hardly sufficient to do away with those morphological and qualitative differences which divide the "Rucellai" altarpiece from all of Duccio's admittedly genuine works. Nor do Mr. Douglas's arguments for the authenticity of this picture, put forward on other occasions, ingenious though they be, succeed in convincing us. We are, happily, not alone in our opinion that we have here a superlative example of Duccio's school; such an opinion is already held by critics of authority.

But if we cannot accept the "Rucellai" Madonna as a genuine work of the master's hand, we can still less accept as his such an evident school-work as the enthroned Madonna in the church of the Badia a Isola. Following a comparatively modern tradition, Mr. Douglas boldly ascribes this work to Duccio's so-called "second period." In the case of the "Rucellai" Madonna, the close similarities to some of Duccio's works which that picture unquestionably exhibits in certain parts may be said, not without some show of reason, to justify the arguments of those who would have it a work of the great master himself; but surely no such defence can be sustained in regard to the altarpiece of the Badia, which bespeaks a very different hand, and a vastly wider divergence from the master's style. The acceptance of such a work as this would, in fact, necessitate an entire reconstruction of Duccio's artistic personality as we know it. Morphological reasons alone, apart from all other considerations of quality, technique, and style, would suffice to contradict Mr. Douglas's attribution in this case.

In regard to Duccio's followers, Ugolino and Segna, we cannot agree with Mr. Douglas in eliminating from the list of the former artist's works such a characteristic creation as the polyptych in the Museo di S. Croce at Florence, rightly ascribed to him by Cavalcaselle. Such a hypercritical attitude on Mr. Douglas's part ill accords with his previous acceptance, as a work of Ugolino's brush, of such a picture as the Giottesque 'Coronation of the Virgin' in the Florentine Academy. We are glad to find, however, that Mr. Douglas does not here insist upon this attribution, given by him in his 'History of Siena.' We cannot, again, accept the one work which he chooses to illustrate as an example of Segna's manner—the large altarpiece now in the Pinacoteca at Città di Castello. This work—which, by the way, Mr. Douglas fails to recognize as identical with the picture which was formerly in S. Domenico of Città di Castello, and was tentatively cited by Cavalcaselle as a possible work of Pietro Lorenzetti's earlier years—has little in common with Segna's style, and is by another of Duccio's followers, who executed several panels existing in Siena and the neighbouring country-side.

To the list of Simone's works, and of those of the Lorenzetti, Mr. Douglas adds nothing that is not already known. Following Cavalcaselle, he still gives to Pietro Lorenzetti and his immediate followers the frescoes of 'The Thebaid,' 'The Last Judgment,' and 'The Triumph of Death' in the Campo Santo at Pisa—works which, for all their evident traces of Pietro's influence, show no real signs of the master's own handiwork, and appear to us to belong to a considerably later date than that of Pietro's death. Whether these works are due to native Sienese artists at all seems, indeed, questionable. The influence of both Pietro and Ambrogio extended, as we know, far beyond the walls of their native city, and Pisa herself was not entirely destitute of painters. As to Simone, Mr. Douglas would have done well to submit the altarpiece ascribed to that artist, once in the Opera del Duomo at Orvieto, and now in the collection of Mrs. Gardner in Boston, U.S.A., to a more searching examination. He might in consequence have been more inclined to agree with other critics in ascribing this interesting work rather to Simone's brother-in-law, Lippo Memmi. The one additional panel which Mr. Douglas gives to Simone's pleasing pupil Naddo Ceccharelli—now belonging to Prince Liechtenstein—has already been described by Cavalcaselle in the Italian edition of his 'History.' Mr. Douglas does not appear to have recognized certain other unsigned pictures by Naddo, in different collections, all of which bear, we think, the impress of his manner.

No new light is thrown on such interesting minor painters as Bartolo di Fredi, Luca di Tomoné, and Andrea Vanni, although Bartolo, at least, may be said to call for a better understanding of his not unimportant art. Paolo di Giovanni Fei is, on more than one occasion, strangely confused with Andrea Vanni. The editor contributes an appendix to the chapter on Bartolo di Fredi and his school, in the shape of a note on the little-known painter Andrea di Bartolo. Mr. Douglas seems to have forgotten, however, that Andrea's masterpiece, the beautiful 'Assumption' recently left by Mr. Yerkes to the Metropolitan Museum of New York—which he reproduces here, as if it were for the first time—was published and minutely described by Mr. Berenson not less than three years ago. Among other paintings attributed by Mr. Douglas to Andrea is one of the most charming, and to us one of the most characteristic, works of Paolo di Giovanni Fei—the little 'Madonna delle Nevi' of the Siena Cathedral. Taddeo di Bartolo is enriched, again, by one of the finest of Lippo Memmi's figures, the St. Peter of the Louvre, where, it is true, it has long borne Taddeo's name in the face of its parentage.

In regard to the earlier painters of Umbria and the Marches, Mr. Douglas's notes contain little that can be said to enlarge upon his text. We may, however, point out that the one new departure which they do contain in connexion with Allegretto Nuzi of Fabriano—i.e., the remarkable influence exercised by Bernardo Daddi upon that artist's work—far from being a "commonplace of modern criticism," is, in fact, a theory but recently advanced by one of Mr. Douglas's contemporaries. To our knowledge of the early art of Modena, Bologna, and Northern Italy—of late the object of careful treatment on the part of Signor Venturi and others—the editor's notes add little that is new, and call for no particular discussion. Mr. Douglas might here have hazarded a correction of Cavalcaselle's somewhat unjust estimate of such an interesting minor painter as Jacopo Avanzi of Bologna, who has suffered not a little at the hands of his more famous namesake of Padua. He might also have insisted on the Sienese derivations of Barnaba da Modena's pleasing art, and, whilst admitting the Sienese influence clearly visible in the works of Vitale, might well have remarked it, in a still stronger degree, in those of Lippo Dalmassi and certain others. In speaking of such a rare master as Michelino da Besozzo we should have mentioned the charming example of that painter's brush recently acquired by the Museum of Berlin.

So we might proceed at length to point out what we regard as deficiencies in Mr. Douglas's notes, were it not for the ungrateful nature of such a task, as well as the undoubted merit of much of his editorship where he has permitted himself a broader cast in the waters of modern criticism. As it is, we can only repeat that we should not have dwelt so long as we have done upon these deficiencies, were it not for the important character of the work Mr. Douglas has been called upon to accomplish, and his consequent obligations to modern criticism in general—obligations which, as we have already pointed out, he seems only partially to have realized. We had hoped for a wider and more serenely impartial system of annotation than that which Mr. Douglas has shown in the last two volumes entrusted to his care. Only by such an open and comprehensive attitude can justice be done to a modern edition of Crowe and Cavalcaselle's monumental work, and only by such a treatment can it be made to keep its well-deserved place as the foremost work of reference in regard to the history of Italian painting. Mr. Douglas's task is not yet at an end. We hope that his methods will broaden with the forthcoming volumes.

THE ROYAL SOCIETY OF PAINTER ETCHERS AND ENGRAVERS.

THIS Society displays on the present occasion such a good average of work that we regret that the absence from its ranks of some of the most distinguished etchers in England prevents its being entirely representative. Since the secession of Mr. Strang and Mr. Cameron, and the gradual withdrawal of M. Helleu from the highest rank of etchers, the exhibitions of the Society have been mainly remarkable for the work of Mr. Robert Spence, Mr. Brangwyn, and

M. Béjot. To this list of principal exhibitors may be added this year the names of Mr. Alfred Bentley and Mr. Sydney Lee. Mr. Bentley's principal plate, Boatbuilders, Rye (24), is modest in aim and proportions, but its clear and elastic draughtsmanship and handsome composition make it very attractive. Its form is flowing and gracious, and Rembrandt in his lighter key of colour has evidently been an influence in suggesting Mr. Bentley's conception of landscape drawing. This influence would be felt strongly if we could compare the plate with the best work of M. Béjot, whose clearness has a more sophisticated brilliance and less tranquillity. The plates contributed by the Frenchman on this occasion show him as passing through an unfortunate phase. He is breaking up his designs into an exaggerated light and shade which destroys their unity, and prevents that comparison of multitudinous, yet closely related forms which makes a city so amusing a place to idle in. This view of things is well expressed in Mr. Ernest Lumsden's Towers of Notre Dame from North (30), which, without being at all crowded with figures, yet calls up for us the delicate hum of town life—of many interesting things simultaneously presented—of past and present nicely interwoven into a vision absorbingly attractive even to a superficial observer.

This superficial city charm has always lent itself to interpretation by the etcher. One might fancy that his needle (gliding over the copper without penetrating appreciably its fine surface) must continually whisper the ancient maxim, "Glissez, n'appuyez pas." At a later stage of the technique, it is true, the acid gnawing into the copper offers other counsel, and it is at this stage that Mr. Frank Brangwyn feels the suitability of etching to his peculiar gifts. Even before the acid touches the plate, however, we fancy many parts of the work would give a very appreciable print as drypoint, so trenchant is the stroke by which the artist renders the most strenuous side of city life. His largest plate, Old Hammersmith (129), is finely drawn, and handsomely composed as a piece of line, but ruined by over-emphasis of the pool of light in the centre of the design, which reminds us of the circle of limelight that follows a popular actor over the stage. We should like to see a clean print of this plate in order to judge whether this is the result of vicious printing, or whether what should be the finest example of Mr. Brangwyn's work as an etcher has been actually spoilt by weakness for melodrama. The Inn of the Parrot, Dixmuden (196), is a very inferior design, but the Church of St. Nicholas, Dixmuden (208), is nobly ordered, if still slightly marred by the stressing of the central light. In this case the defect might easily be remedied by emphasizing the darks to the spectator's left. Sky and church would then blend as light together by comparison with the splendid sombre mass which would make up the great field of the picture. Both these large plates are drawn with liquid and unctuous continuity, indicating abounding vitality and nervous force.

Mr. Sydney Lee in San Pedro (271) handles a sombre architectural scheme with more severity than Mr. Brangwyn, but has none of his genial inventiveness. The aspect, however, is well chosen, the simple black silhouette of a figure well placed. Creative power, on the other hand, as opposed to finely cultivated observation, is apparent in Mr. Spence's work. The large Rheingold (50) shows his limitations. It is flaccid in line, and seems inspired by decadent examples. In his illustrations to George Fox's Journal, however (which when complete will constitute one of the most important series of etchings issued in our day), he continues to prove himself a modern primitive of irresistible sincerity. In the firelight subject Fox and the People of Dreams (61) we have a powerful rendering of humanity at a moment of great dramatic significance. We are conscious of tremendous spiritual issues which make life momentous, and the sense of high import betrays itself in a tensivity of execution beside which Mr. Brangwyn's splendid amplitude looks slightly loose and rhetorical. The one has a style confident and homogeneous. The other is driven to coin on the spur of the moment, a new expression, but his desperate shifts have a sharp eloquence which more than atones for a certain strangeness of form, and by this rugged power Mr. Spence's plates, so quaint of aspect, penetrate their envelope of costume and period, and bring the past before us in its true importance. Herein he is almost the only artist of the present day who ranks as a fine historian, and modest as his work is in scale, it is the most important in these exhibitions.

Of the less important work, there are the mezzotints of Mr. Frank Short (76) and Mr. David Waterson (177), excellent in their way, but too realistic in design for one to disengage them confidently from the possibilities of super-artistic photography. In line work—when it is in the hands of a man with more feeling for tone than line, and with an outlook as literal as (indeed, more literal than) that of the two artists just named—we are sometimes made to feel the same comparisons, and the very accomplished Portsmouth Fishing-Boats (193), by Mr. W. L. Wyllie, affects us much as would a representation of the same scene on the cinematograph—which admittedly implies a certain degree of exhilaration. Work apparently more within the possibilities of photography, but really removed by the discriminating clarity inherent in line, is shown in a certain number of drawings of trees and the like, such as the Nettles and Hemlock (121) of Miss Constance Pott, The Cedar (125) by Sir Charles Holroyd, and the blossom studies by Miss Anna Airy (176, 206, and 219), and this is a field which might be more worked with advantage. We must mention also the thorough technique of Mr. Lawrence Philips's Castle of Chillon (266), of the book-plates of Mr. Sherborn (99) and Mr. Eve (114), and of the Paris subjects of Mr. Herman Webster (48 and 49). Mr. Charlton's Harbour Bar (78) is the best of his plates—as literal as the others in execution, but redeemed by the choice of a subject giving long simple lines, the design of which remains imposing even under such treatment. Great proficiency of its kind is to be found in the dainty lacework of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Watson (71 and 73), wherein the drawing is photographic, but the values most tactfully adapted to purposes of prettiness. There are also good portrait studies by Mr. Malcolm Osborne (132) and Mr. George Gascoyne (163), and noteworthy landscapes by Mr. Frank Newbolt (1), Miss Katherine Kimball (34 and 237), and Mr. Mortimer Menpes (209).

PASTELS BY MR. SIMON BUSSY.

A DEMAND for quite small pictures is almost all that is left for living artists in the way of art patronage, and in catering for this demand the proprietors of galleries have been far too prone to rely on the productions of painters vowed to the manufacture of such articles, and nothing further; and it is to this restricted outlook that we must trace the dullness of the majority of minor exhibitions. The show of Mr. Bussy's pastels at the Goupil Gallery, and the collection of Mr. George Thomson's water-colours which preceded it, make us hope for the inauguration of a better system. If small buyers can be induced to invest, not in the glib imitation of a complete picture, but in the frankly slighter notes of a serious painter, there is no reason why they should not get work of permanent charm, and at the same time assist materially in raising the standard of artistic production. These colour-notes by Mr. Bussy are very simple, but very deliberate and individual—no fleck of pigment but has its place in the scheme. Occasionally, perhaps, an unreasoning partiality for certain tones of deep yellow may be felt; but as a rule the harmony is complete, particularly in the studies of evening skies over sombre pine woods—subjects in which the tender sequence of hues is set down with singular perfection. Environs de Menton (4), Petite Mare dans le Tyrol (6), and Petit Lac dans le Tyrol (22) may be cited as beautiful examples of such schemes of dusky pearl-like colour, and they are but a few of many. Harmonies of blazing scarlet and orange Mr. Bussy handles with not quite the same certainty, but on occasion with a biting force and truth which are remarkable. Ile vénitienne (19) and S. Nicoletto del Lido, Venise (26), are examples which thus startle by their subtle verisimilitude while dealing with effects which in themselves are hackneyed enough. This choice of familiar themes is the exception, however, in the work of an artist who is a very fresh observer of nature, and at the same time bent on setting down his observations with a high degree of that economy of hand and loyalty to the nature of his material which count for so much in pictorial suavity and completeness. Colour in the present series is his particular subject of research. The form is but little laboured, yet in the majority of cases he shows a good instinct for space-design.

SMITH'S 'CATALOGUE RAISONNÉ.'

JOHN SMITH'S 'Catalogue Raisonné of the Works of the Most Eminent Dutch, Flemish, and French Painters,' of which Messrs. Sands & Co. have just issued a literal reprint, is a remarkable book, and has maintained an undisputed authority as a work of reference for just 80 years: the first volume was published in 1829, and the ninth—the valuable supplement—in 1842. It is probably the only reference book on art in English which has enjoyed so long a life and has not been superseded, either wholly or in part. Bromley's 'Engraved Portraits,' it is true, was published in 1793; but that is more of a list than a treatise, and so far as mezzotints are concerned it was rendered useless by Chaloner Smith's great compilation, which, after no long interval, has been in part superseded by monographs on many of the leading men dealt with by him.

Dr. Hofstede de Groot's 'Catalogue of Dutch Painters,' of which the first volume was reviewed at length in The Athenæum of August 8th last, will not, even when completed, entirely supersede Smith's 'Catalogue,' for Dr. de Groot has confined his scholarly attention entirely to Dutch painters, and has thrown overboard the Flemish and French artists who find a place in Smith. So far, however, as the Dutch section goes, Dr. de Groot has not merely superseded Smith, but has really produced an entirely new work.

The appearance of this admirable reprint en bloc of nine volumes is a sort of retribution. A book in constant demand, it has of late years been the sport of some of the second-hand booksellers, who have apparently combined to force it up in the open market to a price far beyond the reach of less wealthy collectors, and those who have in one way or another to do with pictures. From 14*l.* in 1889 it rapidly advanced to 40*l.* in 1899, and then to 49*l.* in 1901. The rapid and disproportionate rise in the auction value of the book was obviously due not to any sudden and widespread want, but to a process of inflation not unknown on the Stock Exchange. The "fall" came much sooner than was expected, and from an entirely unexpected reason—namely, the knowledge, first that Dr. de Groot was preparing a revised edition, and secondly that Messrs. Sands were about to place a large edition of the reprint on the market. 'Book-Prices Current' records in cold type the result, and from its pages we see that during the last season or two sets of the original issue have sold for 20*l.*, 13*l.*, 11*l.*, and 10*l.*; and a still further drop is probable. Picture-dealers are usually well able to pay a good price for an indispensable work of reference, but there are others to be considered—people to whom such a book as Smith's 'Catalogue' is absolutely essential, and to whom 30*l.* or 40*l.* is a very serious outlay. It is not sufficient that the book is available both in the Print-Room and in the Library of the British Museum, and in most of the public libraries in the metropolis and in all the large provincial cities and towns. We shall doubtless hear much to the effect that the new edition is not to be compared with the old, with its stout hand-made paper and so forth. As a matter of fact, it is quite as good, but there will always be a demand for odd volumes of the old issue to complete imperfect sets.

Apart from the advantage of bringing down the extravagant price demanded for the original edition, the wisdom of reprinting the work as a whole is seriously open to question. To have edited it and brought it up to date would have involved a vast amount of labour; but to have tinkered with it would have been unwise in the extreme. With the exception of the pictures in public and royal collections, probably 80 per cent of those enumerated by Smith have changed hands once or more. Many other important pictures by the various artists have come to light during the last half-century, whilst many of those described by Smith have disappeared, for the present at least. Looking through this reprint, therefore, is much like wandering in a long picture gallery in which most of the canvases have been cut out of the frames, or like taking a century-old guide-book on a tour in Rome. The collections of William Beckford, Lord Northwick, Foster of Clewer, Higginson of Saltmarshe, C. Bredel, H. A. J. Munro, Fountaine, Lord Lonsdale, the Baron Verstolk de Soelen, and the King of Holland, to mention only a few at random, have all been dispersed.

Smith never imagined the length to which his 'Catalogue' would extend. He contemplated that it might need "four or even five volumes." In the preparation of the first he met with difficulties which "frequently induced him to relinquish the idea of offering it to the public," partly on account of the "great uncertainty of remuneration." There was, however, no lack of welcome from the press of 1829. The Athenæum gave it six columns, and The Literary Gazette nearly three; and the promise to continue the work if the author were sufficiently encouraged was fulfilled in 1830, when the second part appeared. The others followed in rapid succession, and by 1837 the whole series had appeared, the Supplement coming out five years later.

One may search the usual reference books in vain for any biographical particulars of John Smith, the author of this classical 'Catalogue.' The Gentleman's Magazine, which can generally be relied upon for obituary notices of public men up to the sixties of the last century, is silent on the subject of his death, which was not recorded in The Athenæum, The Literary Gazette, or The Times. I am able, however, to supply two brief facts, copied by a descendant from the family Bible: the first that Smith was born in 1781, and the second that he died on August 8th, 1855. He was all his life a picture-dealer—first in Great Marlborough Street, and afterwards at 137, Bond Street—and assisted in the formation of nearly all the great collections made during the earlier years of the nineteenth century. His 'Catalogue' is dedicated to Sir Robert Peel, for whom he had acted as picture expert for twenty years (i.e., 1809–1829), and it is chiefly to his enterprise and wide knowledge that we owe the select collection of Dutch and Flemish pictures of Peel which now forms such an important part of the National Gallery. Smith and Nieuwenhuys—the latter catalogued the collection of the King of Holland—were the leading picture-dealers of London for many years, and both as experts and men of business enjoyed the confidence of all who had dealings with them.

In his great and prolonged enterprise Smith was assisted by George Stanley, about whom also the ordinary books of reference are silent; but I have discovered that he died circa 1856–7, in the seventy-sixth year of his age. His son, who is still hale and hearty at eighty-seven, was abroad at the time of his father's death, the first intimation of it he received being an announcement of the funeral on his return to England after a long absence. George Stanley died in or near Camberwell. He was for many years in business as an auctioneer, chiefly in Bond Street, and some of his most important sales were those of Prince Lucien Bonaparte's fine collection of pictures, dispersed at Stanley's rooms, 29, St. James's Street, in May, 1816, and Richard Cosway's library, which he sold at Cosway's late residence, 20, Stratford Place, in 1818, and the choice collection of pictures, sold (also on the premises) in May, 1821.

George Stanley was associated with Smith in one of the latter's triumphs of picture-dealing. Smith, in his long note to the entry of Rubens's 'Chapeau de Paille' (i.e. Poil) in the 'Catalogue Raisonné,' ii. 229–31, states that it "was purchased by the Writer, in conjunction with another person," at Antwerp on July 29th, 1822, for 32,700 florins, which with the auction duty of 10 per cent, and other incidental expenses, is about 3,000 guineas. Smith's "another person" was C. J. Nieuwenhuys, but throughout the affair Smith and Stanley were working in collaboration, and went together to Antwerp to examine the picture when it was on view. Smith and his associates were prepared to go to 40,500 florins. The work was publicly exhibited in March, 1823, at Mr. Stanley's auction-rooms, 21, Old Bond Street. The price of admission was a shilling, and the "Memorandum of the Picture," written by Stanley, was sixpence, one of the conditions of admittance being that "no person will attempt to sketch or copy from the picture." "Never," says Smith, "did any other picture receive such universal admiration and applause.... During the four months of its exhibition nearly 20,000 persons visited it." The speculators cleared 1,000*l.* by the exhibition, and sold the picture to Sir Robert Peel for 3,500 guineas.

After holding a large number of sales of various kinds, Stanley gave up auctioneering and took to literary work. His adoption of a new calling seems to have synchronized with the preparation of Smith's 'Catalogue Raisonné.' How far, or to what extent, the collaboration extended we shall probably never know. Stanley is not anywhere mentioned in the 'Catalogue' as an assistant, but it may be assumed that his help, both in the biographical descriptions and in the literary portion of the various entries, was considerable. He published nothing under his own name until Smith's 'Catalogue' was finished, or nearly so; and in 1848 his 'Classified Synopsis of the Principal Painters of the Dutch and Flemish Schools,' was issued by Henry G. Bohn, an excellent little book now rarely met with. Then came a new edition—the second—of Bryan's 'Biographical and Critical Dictionary,' issued by Bohn in 1849, based largely on the editor's MS. notes and memoranda of pictures, prints, and other matters relating to the fine arts and artists made "during the last thirty years." He added 1,300 new names in all. It may be pointed out that the name of the editor of the second edition of Bryan is repeatedly given as "J. Stanley" in the new edition published by Messrs. Bell & Sons. Stanley's edition of Bryan is remarkable for the fact that it included the first good notice of Gillray, "and this article appears to be" (observes a later writer on Gillray) "the most important authority appealed to by subsequent writers in elucidation of his career." Stanley seems to have known Gillray, and happened to be passing Mrs. Humphrey's house in St. James's Street when the caricaturist, shortly before his death, made an attempt at suicide by jumping out of the window of an upper storey.

W. ROBERTS.

CARAN D'ACHE.

THE death on Friday in last week of M. Emmanuel Poiré, who enjoyed a worldwide reputation as a caricaturist under the name of Caran d'Ache (a manipulation of the Russian for lead pencil), removes a black-and-white artist of remarkable gifts and versatility. Born in Moscow in 1858, the grandson of a captain in Napoleon's "Grand Army," Caran d'Ache was French in every respect except birth. At the age of twenty he settled in Paris, and served the regulation period in the French army, on leaving which he for a time held a post as draughtsman in the War Office. A friendship with Richard O'Monroy (the Vicomte de Saint-Genies) opened up a new source of livelihood to the War Office draughtsman, and he quickly became a popular contributor of unconventional caricatures to Gil Blas, the Vie Parisienne, the Caricature, and the Figaro. The astute manager of Le Chat Noir, Rudolphe Salis, enlisted the artistic aid of the new caricaturist, and to the decoration of that bizarre cabaret he contributed a series of four drawings illustrating 'La Retraite de Russie.' The pictures, drawings, stained-glass windows, and other decorations of this historic place were kept together until March 22nd, 1904, when the collection was dispersed at the Hôtel Drouot.

Caran d'Ache was essentially French in his work, and in spite of several attempts to popularize him in England and America, he never really found acceptance in either country. He was frankly anti-British, like M. Willette, but in both cases the antipathy was national rather than individual, for no Frenchman could be more charming than he in the company of an Englishman. Caran d'Ache was peculiarly at home in "taking off" the lighter side of French frivolity, particularly life in the barracks.

His work during the last twenty years has been enormous. Two admirable collections of his best pictures and drawings have been issued of recent years. The more important was that which appeared as the fifth part of L'Album, on the cover of which was perhaps his most famous hit, a whole-length portrait of 'Sa Majesté Guillaume II.' with the facial representation of an eagle. He was the creator of the "Histoires sans Paroles," which, curiously enough, made the fortune of the Fliegende Blätter. Another excellent collection of his works was published in "Les Maîtres Humoristes" series in 1907; and No. 70 of L'Assiette au Beurre (Jan. 4, 1902), the whole of which was illustrated by him, showed a new departure of his inventive genius.

For the last two or three years Caran d'Ache has been profitably busy in yet another vein, the manufacture of toy figures cut in thin wooden board. The vogue of these has been enormous, and large quantities have been sold in this country, in spite of their high prices. Many prominent figures in Paris literary and social life have been caricatured in this manner. As a popular caricaturist in black and white Caran d'Ache had grown rather out of date, and other men had taken the place from which this versatile man had somewhat unexpectedly fallen.

THE NEW PICTURE GALLERY AT THE VATICAN.

By the courtesy of the Director of the Vatican Pinacoteca, Monsignor Misciattelli, we were recently enabled to give our readers a description of the new Gallery, and a general notice of the proposed arrangements of the pictures (see Athenæum, Jan. 9). We also stated that it was expected the Gallery would be open to the public towards the end of February. The announcement was written previous to the earthquake at Messina and Reggio, a national disaster which has caused the abandonment or postponement of numerous projected functions throughout Italy. In the present case it is, happily, only a brief postponement, arising from the withdrawal of the workmen who were finishing the Gallery, to fit up certain chambers at the Vatican which, in accordance with the Pope's directions, were to be converted into a hospital for the reception of sick and wounded from Calabria and Sicily. At present both Monsignor Misciattelli and the architect, Prof. Comm. C. Sneider are in agreement that the Gallery will be finished by the 18th inst. The Gallery may be visited by his Holiness on the 19th, the festa of St. Joseph; from the 20th to the 31st it will be open by special invitation; and on April 1st to the public.

On one point there will be a slight departure from the original proposal: the Byzantine pictures will not be placed in Room I. It appears that the Vatican authorities were not aware of their wealth in this department of pictorial art. Instead of some twenty panels, it has been discovered that there are nearly one hundred. These have always belonged to the department of the Library, but, whether from want of wall-space or of interest in the art, only few of them had been exhibited, the rest being stored in cabinets. When, however, the present Prefect of the Library, Padre F. Ehrle, heard of the proposal to exhibit the few examples shown in the Museum of Christian Art, he placed the whole of the collection at the disposal of his colleagues. It was then seen that the series would be too numerous to be included in Room I. along with the trecentisti Italian pictures. It has therefore been determined to add a supplementary room to the Gallery, devoted to their special exhibition.

MADAME HENRIETTE RONNER.

THE death, announced on Wednesday, of this distinguished lady, calls for more than a passing notice, for Madame Ronner was one of the best of the painters who have found artistic inspiration in cats. She has humanized the cat just as Landseer humanized the dog. Madame Ronner, who attained to the great age of eighty-seven, came of a family of artists: her grandfather, father, and an uncle and aunt were all artists of talent. Her father, Josephus Augustus Knip, was a well-known animal and landscape painter, who enjoyed a considerable vogue in France as well as in his native country, Holland. Madame Ronner was born at Amsterdam on May 31st, 1821, and received her art instruction from her father, who, however, unfortunately, became blind at the age of fifty. The daughter was from her earliest childhood fond of drawing, and at the age of fifteen received unexpected encouragement, inasmuch as one of her pictures sent to an exhibition at Düsseldorf found a purchaser. In 1850 she married Mr. Telco Ronner, and they went to live in Brussels, where she had remained ever since.

Curiously enough, most of Madame Ronner's existing early sketches and studies are of dogs, but she also painted landscapes and still life. Her first picture to create a widespread sensation, 'La Mort d'un Ami,' was exhibited at Brussels in 1860: it represents a hawker with a Belgian cart drawn by two dogs, one of which is lying dead, with the owner kneeling on the stones, mourning his lost beast of burden. Since the sixties Madame Ronner had devoted herself almost entirely to cats, finding in them an inexhaustible fund of inspiration.

Though her work was frequently to be seen on the Continent, Madame Ronner did not exhibit in London until 1891, but up to 1903 she was represented nearly every year by one or more pictures. In 1877 the King of the Belgians conferred upon her the Cross of the Leopold Order, an honour rarely granted to women. Examples of her work are in the public galleries at the Hague, Amsterdam, and Dordrecht, and in 1892 the French Government purchased one of her pictures. In 1891 'The Henrietta Ronner Album' was published in three languages—Dutch, French, and English; whilst M. Émile Wesley contributed an admirable work on her art to the first volume of 'Dutch Painters,' edited by Max Rooses, and published in London by Sampson Low & Co. in 1898.

SALES.

THE notable feature of the sale at Christie's last Saturday was N. Maes's Portrait of an Old Lady, in black dress with white ruff and cuffs, seated in a chair, which realized 2,152*l.* The following pictures were also sold: J. van Goyen, A Town on a River, with a cathedral, 273*l.*; River Scene, with buildings, boats, and figures, 190*l.* Opie, Col. Donald Macleod of St. Kilda, 152*l.* Beechey, Portrait of a Lady, in black dress, 630*l.* Hoppner, Sir Vyell Vyvyan, 7th Baronet, in brown coat and white vest, 136*l.* G. Lundens, A Party of Children playing Blind Man's Buff near a Cottage, 105*l.* Morland, A Gipsy Encampment in a Wood, 210*l.*

Messrs. Christie also sold on the 24th ult. the following engravings: A. Dürer, The Small Crucifixion, 140*l.* The Knight and Death, 175*l.*; Adam and Eve, 190*l.*; Melancholia, 190*l.* Rembrandt, Ephraim Bonus, 110*l.* The Story of Letitia, after Morland by J. R. Smith, 60*l.* The Fortune-Teller, after Peters by W. Ward, 105*l.* Lady Grey and Children, after Laurence by S. Cousins, 84*l.* Dulce Domum, and Black Monday, after Bigg by J. Jones, a pair, 71*l.*

Fine-Art Gossip.

PROF. C. J. HOLMES has in the press 'Notes on the Science of Picture-Making,' which are addressed to the young painter rather than the beginner; and Mr. Laurence Binyon will publish shortly 'The Mind of the Artist,' thoughts and sayings illustrating the principal movements in European art. Messrs. Chatto & Windus will publish both these books.

MESSRS. CHATTO & WINDUS are also publishing in "The Art and Letters Library" 'Stories of the Spanish Artists' until Goya, collected and arranged by Luis Carreño, and 'Stories of the French Artists from Clouet to Ingres,' collected and arranged by Mr. P. M. Turner. There will be an ordinary and a special edition, the latter having four additional illustrations.

THE "FLORENCE PRESS BOOKS" of the same firm are to include 'The Little Flowers of St. Francis,' translated by Prof. T. W. Arnold, and Stevenson's 'Virginibus Puerisque' with illustrations by Mr. Norman Wilkinson.

THE OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS announce the fifth volume of Dr. Farnell's book on 'The Cults of the Greek States.'

By the death of Mr. Joseph Swain at the age of eighty-nine we lose one of the last of the engravers of the sixties, a period famous for fine work upon the woodblock. Swain shared with the brothers Dalziel the engraving of designs by Millais, Fred Walker, Boyd Houghton, Sandys, and others. Every one of Sir John Tenniel's cartoons went through his hands.

A SERIES of lectures has been given in Dublin under the auspices of the Arts and Crafts Society of Ireland. The lectures included one on 'Cabinet Making,' by the Earl of Mayo, President of the Society; on 'Tapestry Weaving,' by Miss Gleeson; on 'Bookbinding,' by Miss Fitzpatrick; and on 'Enamelling,' by Mr. Oswald Reeves.

THE death is announced from New York of Mr. Russell Sturgis, architect, and writer and lecturer on art subjects. He was the editor of a 'Dictionary of Architecture,' in three volumes; and author of 'European Architecture,' 'How to Judge Architecture,' and about 500 monographs or papers dealing with decorative art. One volume of his 'History of Architecture' has just been published, and another is in proof form; for the rest only rough notes exist. Mr. Sturgis was born in Baltimore in 1836, started in life as a practical architect, and studied architecture in Europe. The greater part of his life was spent in New York; and he gradually exchanged architectural work for writing.

M. RAYMOND BALZE, who died yesterday week in Paris at the age of ninety, was born in Rome, the son of French parents, and studied art in Paris under Ingres, and in company with his brother Paul. Raymond Balze painted a large number of religious pictures, some of which are to be found in the churches of the Midi, and also historical subjects, in which he preserved the classical style of his master. Two of his works were in last year's Salon, one of which was based on the familiar legend indicated by the title, 'Sixte-Quint reçoit ses Nièces, et, choqué de leur Costume, dit, "J'ai bien des Nièces, mais ce sont des Blanchisseuses."'

THE Comte du Passage, who died recently at the Château de Froben (Somme), was a cavalry officer by profession, and studied sculpture under Mène and Barye. He first exhibited at the Salon in 1865, and his work had been familiar there since that date. His exhibits were nearly always of the chase, cavaliers, and animals; but he obtained a wide success with some of his historical subjects, notably one of Jeanne d'Arc. The Comte was seventy years of age.

M. RAPHAËL COLLIN has, after an unusually protracted contest—there were nine ballots—been elected to the Académie des Beaux-Arts, in place of M. Hébert, who died in November last. At the final ballot M. Collin had nineteen votes, against twelve given for M. Gervex and three for M. Roybet.

THE next Salon of the Société des Artistes is to include a special exhibition of the works of Albert Maignan, and also, it is expected, a selection of the works of M. Hébert, two members of the Society who have passed away since last year's Salon. The conférences and the séances musicales, which formed attractive features last year, are to be continued.

EXHIBITIONS.

SAT. (March 6).—Mr. Herbert P. Dollman's Water-Colours, 'A Smiling Land,' Messrs. Graves's Gallery.
— New Society of Painters and Sculptors, Second Exhibition, Rowley Gallery.
— Miss E. M. Paterson's Water-Colours, 'From the North Sea to the Adriatic,' Mr. T. McLean's Galleries.
THURS. Mrs. F. A. Hopkins's Water-Colours, 'Pleasant Landscapes of Normandy,' Private View, Mount Street Galleries.
SAT. (March 13).—Paintings of Flowers and Gardens; and Miss Donald-Smith's Paintings, 'Venice and the Lagoons,' Private View, Baillie Gallery.

MUSIC

THE WEEK.

QUEEN'S HALL.—Works by M. Debussy.

M. CLAUDE DEBUSSY's music, by its originality, delicacy, charm, and, in his orchestral works, admirable colouring, is most interesting. The composer casts aside the forms in which Beethoven, modifying and enlarging them, forcibly expressed his thoughts and feelings; and he records in his own way impressions he has received, frequently from nature. He mixes his harmonic as well as his orchestral colours with striking ingenuity and effect. In spite, however, of his many strong points, one cannot but wonder whether the composer, in casting aside, to use his own expression, the "wrinkles and paint" of the past, has not also cast aside some of the qualities which have given strength and lasting value to much of the music of the classical masters. Haydn was guided by Carl Philipp Em. Bach, Mozart by Haydn, and Beethoven by all three, but especially Mozart, yet in time their individuality became fully manifest, and indeed strengthened by what may be termed their years of apprenticeship. Is M. Debussy's art merely a genre, or the opening of a new path? This must be left to time to decide. Meanwhile let us recognize and enjoy the works of an able and sincere artist.

At the Symphony Concert last Saturday afternoon he conducted his three Nocturnes for Orchestra. They were composed in 1890, and the music is more readily grasped than was the case with that of the 'Sea Sketches,' which were played last year at these concerts, and under M. Debussy's direction. The title of No. 1, 'Nuages,' shows what inspired the composer. The simple, delicately coloured "cloud" figure, also the mournful recurring phrase telling of human feeling, form the sole material of the short movement. No. 2, 'Fêtes,' with its lively music, which slightly recalls Berlioz, and the processional theme announced by three muted trumpets which interrupts it, is both picturesque and poetical. Concerning the third, 'Sirènes,' in which Mr. Smallwood Metcalfe's choir took part, we hesitate to speak, for the performance was not satisfactory.

BECHSTEIN HALL.—Debussy Concert.

ON the previous evening the Société des Concerts Français (MM. Willaume, Marel, Macon, and Feuillard) gave their Debussy Concert. The programme included the Quartet in G minor, of which a most refined rendering was given. Mlle. Hélène M. Luquiens, in the impassioned 'Trois Chansons de Bilitis' and other songs, proved herself an accomplished artist and a sympathetic interpreter of the composer's music; moreover, the excellent accompanist, M. Yves Nat, must not be forgotten. M. Ricardo Viñes played pianoforte solos skilfully, yet with hardly his usual fine feeling.

The programme ended with the 'Danse Sacrée' and 'Danse Profane' for chromatic harp (Madame L. Wurmser-Delcourt) and accompaniment of strings, but though well rendered the impression they created was peculiar rather than pleasing.

QUEEN'S HALL.—Philharmonic Concerts. Bach Choir.

AT each of the last two Philharmonic Concerts there was a new conductor. On February 18th Signor Luigi Mancinelli gave a firm rendering of Beethoven's C minor Symphony, also of the interesting and effectively scored Prelude to the second act of Goldmark's 'Die Königin von Saba.' Mr. Arthur Hervey conducted his pleasing, picturesque tone-poem 'Summer,' originally produced at Cardiff. M. Godowski's performance of Chopin's F minor Concerto was clever and brilliant, while that of Brahms's 'Paganini' Variations was wonderful as regards technique. In the quiet numbers his playing was most delicate and refined, but in others he drew the attention of the audience to himself rather than the music.

Last Wednesday the conductor was Herr Bruno Walter from Vienna, and his fresh and sympathetic interpretation of Schumann's First Symphony in B flat was properly appreciated. Miss Ethel M. Smyth has arranged her Overture to her opera 'The Wreckers' for concert performance, and, we may add, made the end much stronger. The fine rendering under Herr Walter's direction proved most successful. Herr Emil Sauer was the pianist, and he gave a striking, yet restrained reading of the solo part of Beethoven's E flat Concerto; a little more feeling, however, in the slow movement and in parts of the Finale would have been acceptable. In Chopin's 'Allegro de Concert' he had a splendid opportunity of showing his delicacy of touch, strength of finger, and faultless technique.

The Bach Choir gave a concert on Tuesday evening. Two of Bach's cantatas were included in the programme, the 'one sacred,' 'Wachet, betet,' the other secular, 'Der zufriedengestellte Aeolus'; but the rendering of both was far from satisfactory. They can hardly have been properly rehearsed. Considering the name the society bears, we think every effort should have been made to present these works in a worthy manner. The programme, too, was very lengthy, and it was long past ten o'clock before Sir Charles Stanford's new Choral Overture 'Ave atque Vale' even began. The work was written in memory of Haydn, who died in 1809, and Tennyson, who was born in the same year. Verses from Ecclesiasticus are sung by the choir, and at the words regarding famous men, "such as sought out musical tunes," a part of Haydn's 'Emperor's Hymn' is introduced. Sir Charles's music is bold and dignified. In one quiet passage, "Their bodies are buried in peace," there was a touch of true pathos. He conducted his own work, the rest of the concert being under the direction of Dr. H. P. Allen.

Vincenzo Bellini: a Memoir. By William A. C. Lloyd. (Sisley.)—Bellini's operas have now almost passed into oblivion, and it is seldom that his name is seen even on a concert programme. The beauty and tenderness of his melodies, especially when they were sung by the great vocalists of the first half of the nineteenth century, were, however, powerful attractions. In the matter of technique the composer was weak, and though our author thinks that the age of Tritto (viz., eighty-four), Bellini's teacher of counterpoint at the Naples Conservatorio, had much to do with this, the weakness nevertheless remains a fact. Further, his orchestration was thin, but Cherubini admitted that fuller accompaniments would not improve Bellini's lovely melodies. Bizet is said to have tried to rescore 'Norma,' but gave up the task, declaring it to be impossible. Of 'Norma,' Wagner praised the rich flow of melody, adding that "even the most determined opponents of the new Italian school of music do this composition the justice of admitting that, speaking to the heart, it shows an inner earnestness of aim." But an opera of which the chief merit lies in the charm of its melodies would not pass muster at the present day, so there seems little chance of a revival of Bellini's works. Mr. Lloyd acknowledges their weak sides, and his constant reference to the beautiful, tender, or pathetic melodies becomes a little wearisome. His book nevertheless is interesting. His account of the Italian opera composers of the second half of the eighteenth century, and of the classical school giving place to the romantic in Italy, is concise and instructive; while his remark that "it will not be far wrong to say that the first definite realization of romanticism came from Vienna, when in 1805 Beethoven produced his great opera," deserves note, for Weber is constantly mentioned as the founder of romantic opera. Then the description by Bellini himself of his method of writing an opera, and of his endeavour to study carefully the characters of his dramatis personæ before composing, shows that the words of his books were not looked upon by him as mere pegs on which to hang his music. In his concluding chapter Mr. Lloyd answers some objections which have been raised against the school to which Bellini belongs. In it he declares that "the tendency of much, though not all, of the music of to-day to overstep the boundaries of art is apparent." The boundaries of the art of music, as hitherto practised, are certainly being overstepped; yet this may indicate the birth of a new art, a combination of arts even in instrumental music.

Musical Gossip.

MR. ROBERT ARTHUR will begin at the Coronet Theatre on April 26th a season of Italian grand opera, when Mr. Louis Hillier is to introduce to London an Italian operatic combination.

A FESTIVAL at Vienna to commemorate the hundredth anniversary of the death of Haydn will be held from the 25th to the 29th of May. The Imperial Chapel, the Opera, the Philharmonic Society, the Conservatorium, the Rosé Quartet, &c., will take part in it. The conductors will be Felix Weingartner, Carl Luze, Franz Schalk, Ferdinand Loewe, and Eugen Thomas. During the festival meetings of the International Society of Music will be held. There will be a notable gathering of musicians from Germany, France, Italy, America, and England.

PERFORMANCES NEXT WEEK.

SCN.	Concert, 3.30, Royal Albert Hall.
—	Sunday Society Concert, 3.30, Queen's Hall.
—	Sunday League Concert, 7, Queen's Hall.
TUES.	M. Emil Sauer's Pianoforte Recital, 3, Queen's Hall.
—	Miss Susan Metcalfe's Song Recital, 3.15, Bechstein Hall.
—	Leighton House Chamber Concert, 4.30, Leighton House.
—	Miss Maud Dixon's Pianoforte Recital, 8.30, Bechstein Hall.
WED.	Madame Frickenhau's Pianoforte Recital, 3, Bechstein Hall.
—	Mr. Archy Rosenthal's Pianoforte Recital, 3, Aeolian Hall.
—	New Symphony Orchestra, 3, Queen's Hall.
THURS.	Madame Carreio's Pianoforte Recital, 3, Queen's Hall.
—	Mr. Theodore Byard's Concert, 3.15, Bechstein Hall.
—	Mr. Cecil J. Sharp's Concert Lecture, 3.30, Steinway Hall.
—	Miss Auriol Jones's Pianoforte Recital, 8, Bechstein Hall.
FRI.	Miss Susan Metcalfe's Song Recital, 3, Bechstein Hall.
—	Mr. Thomas Dunhill's Chamber Concert, 8.15, Steinway Hall.
SAT.	London Ballad Concert, 3, Royal Albert Hall.
—	Queen's Hall Orchestra, 3, Queen's Hall.
—	Madame Wieniawski's Vocal Recital, 3.15, Bechstein Hall.
—	London Chamber Concert Association, 8.30, Victoria Rooms, Kensington.

DRAMA

THE WEEK.

CRITERION.—The Real Woman: a Play in Three Acts. By Robert Hichens.

SOMEHOW Mr. Hichens loses his sense of proportion when writing for the playhouse. His method in fiction is to build up carefully both the scheme and the settings of his stories by innumerable touches of detail, and he needs plenty of time to set the drama in motion as well as to indicate its surroundings. Now that is just what is not permissible in the theatre; so that he starts there with a handicap. Then, too, he has always been attracted by the bizarre and the abnormal, and seems unable to bring to the stage that faculty of seeing human facts in their relative importance which is an essential in the playwright. In 'The Medicine Man' Mr. Hichens and his collaborator, Mr. Traill, exaggerated the phenomena of hypnotism, and conceived that this one theme, presented without variation or dramatic development, could fill out a play. In 'The Real Woman' the whole plot turns on a bet made among fashionable idlers that a charming lady will capture the affections of an earnest young philanthropist. At best it is only a subject for comedy. Mr. Hichens tries to work out of it a drama of sentiment.

The cause of the mischief, beautiful Lady Arden, goes, with no idea of accepting the challenge, in pursuit of the philanthropist, Hugh Graham, to Poplar, and there finds him helping Diana Woodham—a girl who, we learn subsequently, is one of the victims of love—to nurse her dying sister. He accepts her ladyship's proffers of help, and quickly falls in love with her. Then the truth comes out that Lady Arden's interest, genuine though it is, has been more or less prompted by the bet which she has not discouraged; and at the same time it is discovered that Diana has been betrayed by the very man who has laughed at her saviour and offered to bet on his weakness. Graham is disillusioned, and the heroine, rather ashamed of her set's treatment of this earnest knight of Lady Poverty, falls back on the devotion of Mark Vernon, a far too forbearing suitor. We are to suppose that the "real woman" is Lady Arden. She, however, carefully as Miss Evelyn Millard tries to endow her with charm, is not alive at all. Nor is Vernon, pleasantly as Mr. Allan Aynesworth seeks to convey his fastidious refinement. Nor is Graham, notwithstanding the picturesque poses and resonant diction of Mr. Ainley. As for the seducer, Carruthers, he is but the villain of melodrama, and Mr. Waring can make him nothing more; while a duchess brightly represented by Miss Annie Hughes is but a gramophone giving out epigrams. The only real character is the ruined girl, Diana, and Miss Kate Cutler's acting in this part is the striking feature of the interpretation.

THE TUDOR FACSIMILE TEXTS.

Beaumont End, Amersham.

AMONG the last batch of volumes sent to subscribers and for review was 'Gentylines and Nobylite.' My attention has been drawn to the fact that the British Museum copy (C. 40, i. 16) is a "made-up" volume. The pasted-in frontispiece has obviously been supplied in facsimile, and has, I believe, always been so described. The following leaves, too, are comparatively modern (probably early nineteenth century), though printed in imitation Gothic lettering—A i, A vi, C ii, C iii. The 'General Catalogue' is silent as to imperfection, but in the three-volume 'Catalogue of B.M. Books printed in England before 1640' the inserted leaves are described as "in facsimile." Another copy is in the Pepys Collection at Cambridge, and I have taken steps to have it examined in this connexion. I will prepare a slip embodying these facts to be sent to subscribers for insertion in the facsimile copy.

Will you further allow me to state that I am rapidly nearing the completion of my first list of fifty volumes, and that I shall be very glad indeed to receive suggestions as to printed books and manuscripts it would be desirable to reproduce in facsimile, including general literature as well as old English drama, and especially "fragments"?
JOHN S. FARMER.

P.S.—Since the foregoing was in type Mr. Fleming, the photographer charged with the reproduction of these facsimiles, informs me that "the Magdalene copy is no doubt perfect, though stained a bit; the folios mentioned are all different to the B.M. copy, but the others are the same." When opportunity serves I will have these particular folios reproduced.

Dramatic Gossip.

MR. SIDNEY LEE'S 'Shakespeare and the Modern Stage' (published here two years ago) has just been running in a German translation, as a feuilleton, through the Neue Preussische Kreuz-Zeitung. The translator, Herr Jozza Savits, formerly manager of the Royal Theatre at Munich, strongly supports Mr. Lee's plea for scenic simplicity in the production of Shakespeare.

THE OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS has in preparation popular editions of Marlowe and Ben Jonson. The Marlowe is being edited by Mr. Brooke and Prof. Walter Raleigh, and the Jonson by Mr. Percy Simpson. As is already known, a library edition of Ben Jonson's works, edited by Prof. C. H. Herford and Mr. Simpson, has been in preparation at Oxford for some time.

THE death of Mr. G. R. Weir, at the age of fifty-six, at Belfast on Monday removes one of the oldest and ablest members of Mr. F. R. Benson's company, to which he had belonged since 1883. Mr. Weir established a reputation as an exponent of Shakespeare's comic characters. His Stephano, Sir Toby Belch, and Autolycus are all remembered with pleasure by playgoers.

Two new plays by Mr. James Duncan have been produced at the Abbey Theatre, Dublin, this week. The longer, 'A Gallant of Galway,' is a romantic drama of eighteenth-century life in Ireland. The principal parts were filled by Mr. Marriott Watson and Miss St. Clair Swanzy.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—O. A.—W. T. L.—W. M.—Received. W. H. S. J.—Forwarded
B. P.—Not suitable for us.
No notice can be taken of anonymous communications.
We do not undertake to give the value of books, china, pictures, &c.

INDEX TO ADVERTISERS.

	PAGE
ALLEN & SONS	301
AUTHORS' AGENTS	274
BAGSTER & SONS	302
BELL & SONS	300
BEMROSE & SONS	280
BISHOP'S VARALETES	303
CATALOGUES	274
CONSTABLE & CO.	277
DUCKWORTH & CO.	276
EDUCATIONAL	273
EXHIBITIONS	273
HARPER & BROS.	276
HEINEMANN	278
INSURANCE COMPANIES	303
LAURIE	280
LONGMANS & CO.	278
MACMILLAN & CO.	280
MAGAZINES, &c.	275
MISCELLANEOUS	273
MURRAY	278
NOTES AND QUERIES	302
PAUL & CO.	275
PRINTERS	274
PROVIDENT INSTITUTIONS	274
RELIGIOUS TRACT SOCIETY	279
SALES BY AUCTION	274
SANATOGEN	303
SHIPPING	303
SITUATIONS VACANT	273
SITUATIONS WANTED	273
SONNENSCHNEIN & CO.	275
TYPE-WRITERS, &c.	274
WARD, LOCK & CO.	304

MESSRS. BELL'S BOOKS.

ST. PAUL'S SCHOOL QUATER-CENTENARY
JUST PUBLISHED, demy 8vo, 8s. 6d. net.

LIFE OF DEAN COLET,
Founder of St. Paul's School.

By the Rev. J. H. LUPTON, M.A.
Late Surmaster of St. Paul's School, and formerly Fellow
of St. John's College, Cambridge.
With an Appendix of some of his English Writings, and a Facsimile Portrait taken from the Engraving in Holland's
'Heroölogia.'

NEW AND REVISED EDITION.

In view of the approaching celebration of the fourth centenary of St. Paul's School, special interest attaches to this new edition of Dr. Lupton's life of its founder.

JUST PUBLISHED, crown 8vo, 6s. net.

HISTORY OF THE LATIN AND
TEUTONIC NATIONS, 1494-1514.

By LEOPOLD VON RANKE.
A Revised Translation by G. R. DENNIS, B.A. (Lond.)
With an Introduction by EDWARD ARMSTRONG, M.A.
Fellow of Queen's College, Oxford.

A thoroughly revised translation of this famous work, which Lorentz called one of Ranke's "most original and instructive contributions to history," and which gives a general account of the history of Europe during a period of the highest interest and importance.

Fcap. 8vo, 5s. net.

CATULLI CARMINA.

Edited, with Copious Explanatory Notes, by CHARLES STUTTAFFORD.

"Intended for the class whose Latin has become rusty in consequence of the exigencies of a professional or business occupation. Well and wisely annotated for the purpose, and produced admirably."—Evening Standard.

THE

QUEEN'S TREASURES SERIES.

Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.

NEW VOLUME. JUST PUBLISHED.

JAN OF THE WINDMILL.

By MRS. EWING.

With 8 Coloured Illustrations by M. V. WHEELHOUSE
and special Title-Page, Binding, and End-Papers.

JUST PUBLISHED, demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

AN INTRODUCTION TO ECONOMICS.

By HENRY ROGERS SEAGER.

Professor of Political Economy in Columbia University.
Third Edition, Revised and Enlarged.

JUST PUBLISHED, demy 8vo, 8s. 6d. net.

ETHICS.

By JOHN DEWEY.

Professor of Philosophy in Columbia University,
and JAMES H. TUFTS,

Professor of Philosophy in the University of Chicago.

THE STANDARD AUTHORITY.
WEBSTER'S INTERNATIONAL DICTIONARY.

TWENTIETH-CENTURY EDITION.

Revised and Enlarged, with an Appendix of 25,000 Words,
Phrases, and Definitions.

2,348 pages. 5,000 Illustrations.

WRITE FOR DETAILED PROSPECTUS,
with Specimen Pages, hundreds of Opinions of Eminent Men, and prices in various styles of binding.

London: GEORGE BELL & SONS,
York House, Portugal Street, W.C.

COMPLETION OF The LIFE, LETTERS, and WORKS OF RUSKIN

Volumes 36 and 37 JUST OUT.

The Letters of Ruskin.

In addition to numerous unpublished letters to his father and mother, these volumes include letters of Ruskin to:—

Sir Henry Acland, Lord Avebury, Miss Beever, Dr. John Brown, Rawdon Brown, the Brownings, Burne-Jones, Carlyle, Froude, Mrs. Gaskell, Mary Gladstone (Mrs. Drew), Kate Greenaway, Holman Hunt, Mrs. La Touche, Lord Leighton, H.R.H. Prince Leopold, Dean Liddell, Sir Oliver Lodge, Cardinal Manning, Stacy Marks, Mary Russell Mitford, Wm. Morris, Lord and Lady Mount-Temple, F. W. H. Myers, Charles Eliot Norton, F. J. Palgrave, Coventry Patmore, George Richmond, Samuel Rogers, Dante Rossetti, Mrs. Arthur Severn, Sir John and Lady Simon, Spurgeon, Harriet Beecher Stowe, Tennyson, Thackeray, Lady Louisa Waterford, G. F. Watts, and many other Correspondents.

Vol.	xxxvi.	contains	720	pages,	25	Plates,	and	4	Facsimiles	of	MSS.
„	xxxvii.	„	756	„	12	„	„	11	„	„	„

The FINAL Volume, consisting of:—

A COMPLETE BIBLIOGRAPHY, A CATALOGUE OF RUSKIN'S DRAWINGS, and AN INDEX to the WHOLE WORK, will take many months to prepare, and as the Index is calculated to contain

Over 100,000 References, no definite date can yet be fixed for the publication of this Volume.

The Publishers believe that the Index now in preparation will be in completeness of analysis, in clearness of arrangement, and in the fulness of its references, without precedent among indices hitherto attached to the works of Great English Authors. Its inclusion will make this more than ever

THE ONE REFERENCE AND LIBRARY EDITION OF RUSKIN'S WORKS,

WITH ABOUT

1800 Illustrations, including all RUSKIN'S PUBLISHED DRAWINGS

AND MANY THAT HAVE

HITHERTO REMAINED UNPUBLISHED.

For full particulars of this Monumental Edition in 38 Volumes at 25s. net each, or at £42 the Set, or in Monthly Instalments, see Prospectus.

Payment can be arranged so as to place the work within the reach of all.

London: GEORGE ALLEN & SONS, 156, Charing Cross Road.

NOTES AND QUERIES.

GENERAL INDEXES.

THE FOLLOWING ARE STILL IN STOCK:—

	£	s.	d.
GENERAL INDEX, * FOURTH SERIES ..	3	3	0
GENERAL INDEX, * SIXTH SERIES ..	0	6	0
GENERAL INDEX, * SEVENTH SERIES ..	0	6	0
GENERAL INDEX, * EIGHTH SERIES ..	0	6	0
* For Copies by post an additional Threepence is charged.
GENERAL INDEX, † NINTH SERIES ..	0	10	6

With Introduction by JOSEPH KNIGHT, F.S.A.

† This Index is double the size of previous ones, as it contains, in addition to the usual Index of Subjects, the Names and Pseudonyms of Writers, with a list of their Contributions. The number of constant Contributors exceeds eleven hundred. The Publishers reserve the right of increasing the price of the volume at any time. The number printed is limited, and the type has been distributed.

JOHN C. FRANCIS & J. EDWARD FRANCIS,
Notes and Queries Office, Bream's Buildings, E.C.

AS AUTHORIZED TO BE USED BY BRITISH SUBJECTS.

NOW READY,

THE NATIONAL FLAG,

BEING

THE UNION JACK.

SUPPLEMENT TO

NOTES AND QUERIES

For JUNE 30, 1900,

Price 4d.; by post 4½d.

Containing an Account of the Flag,
Reprinted June, 1908, with Coloured Illustration according to Scale.

JOHN C. FRANCIS & J. EDWARD FRANCIS,
Notes and Queries Office, Bream's Buildings, E.C.

WORKS BY WILLIAM THYNNE LYNN.

ELEVENTH EDITION NOW READY, price Two Shillings net.

CELESTIAL MOTIONS:

A Handy Book of Astronomy.

Eleventh Edition. With 5 Plates.

By W. T. LYNN, B.A. F.R.A.S., Member of the British Astronomical Association, formerly of the Royal Observatory, Greenwich,
Author of 'Remarkable Comets,' 'Remarkable Eclipses,' 'Astronomy for the Young,' &c.
"Well known as one of our best introductions to astronomy."—Guardian.

NINTH EDITION NOW READY, fcap. 8vo, cloth, price Sixpence net.

REMARKABLE ECLIPSES:

A Sketch of the most interesting Circumstances connected with the Observation of Solar and Lunar Eclipses, both in Ancient and Modern Times.

By W. T. LYNN, B.A. F.R.A.S.

"The booklet deserves to continue in popularity. It presents a mass of information in small compass."—Dundee Advertiser.

THIRTEENTH EDITION, JUST OUT, price Sixpence, cloth.

REMARKABLE COMETS:

A Brief Survey of the most interesting Facts in the History of Cometary Astronomy.

By W. T. LYNN, B.A. F.R.A.S.

FIFTH EDITION, REVISED TO 1908, NOW READY.

Fcap. 8vo, cloth, price Sixpence net.

ASTRONOMY FOR THE YOUNG.

By W. T. LYNN, B.A. F.R.A.S.

"Nothing better of its kind has ever appeared."—English Mechanic.

SECOND EDITION NOW READY, price One Shilling.

BRIEF LESSONS ON THE PARABLES AND MIRACLES OF OUR LORD.

With an Appendix on the Names of the Apostles and 4 Maps.

By W. T. LYNN, B.A. F.R.A.S.,

Associate of King's College, London, Lay Reader in the Diocese of Southwark.

"That praiseworthy little book."—Guardian, August 22, 1906.

SECOND EDITION NOW READY, price One Shilling.

BIBLE CHRONOLOGY:

The Principal Events Recorded in the Holy Scriptures, arranged under their Probable Respective Dates, with a Description of the Places named, and a Supplement on English Versions.

By W. T. LYNN, B.A. F.R.A.S.,

Associate of King's College, London, Lay Reader in the Diocese of Southwark.

"This compendious and useful little work."—Guardian, March 14, 1906.

SECOND EDITION, fcap. 8vo, price Fourpence.

NEW TESTAMENT CHRONOLOGY:

The Principal Events Recorded in the New Testament, arranged under their Probable Respective Dates.

By W. T. LYNN, B.A. F.R.A.S.,

Associate of King's College, London, Lay Reader in the Diocese of Southwark.

London: SAMUEL BAGSTER & SONS, LIMITED, 15, Paternoster Row.

Shipping.

P. & O.

PLEASURE CRUISES FROM MARSEILLES.

(Rail and Steamship connexions from London.)

S.Y.
VECTIS

- No. 2.—March 20 to April 16.
CONSTANTINOPLE,
ASIA MINOR,
GREECE,
CRETE, CORSICA, &c.
- No. 3.—April 22 to May 20.
VENICE, DALMATIA,
CORFU, NAPLES,
SICILY, VILLEFRANCHE, &c.
Fares for Cruises 2, or 3, from 30 Guineas.
- No. 4.—May 21 to June 12.
NAPLES, SICILY,
ALGIERS, SPAIN, &c.
Fares from 20 Guineas.

BY

P. & O. CRUISING YACHT VECTIS,
6,000 tons, 6,000 h.p.

For Passage, Illustrated Handbooks, and all information,
apply Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company, Northumberland Avenue, W.C., or 122, Leadenhall
Street, E.C., London.

Insurance Companies.

ACCIDENTS OF ALL KINDS, SICKNESS,
EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY, BURGLARY, AND
FIDELITY GUARANTEE RISKS

INSURED AGAINST BY THE

RAILWAY PASSENGERS ASSURANCE CO.

Capital (fully subscribed), £1,000,000. Claims paid, £5,600,000.

64, CORNHILL, LONDON

A. VIAN, Secretary.

NATIONAL

PROVIDENT

INSTITUTION

FOR

MUTUAL LIFE ASSURANCE.

Established 1835.

ASSURANCE AND INVESTMENT.

Write for Leaflet on net cost of Endowment Assurances,
48, Gracechurch Street, London, E.C.

Applications for Agencies invited.

HIGHEST AWARDS.

CORK, 1883. LIVERPOOL, 1886. PARIS, 1886. ADELAIDE, 1887.
PARIS, 1889. CHICAGO, 1893. PARIS, 1900. ST. LOUIS, 1904.
FRANCO-BRITISH, 1903.

OLD BUSHMILLS.

Have you tried this—the Prize-Winning Whisky?

From all Wine Merchants.

Address of nearest Agent sent on application.

“OLD BUSHMILLS” DISTILLERY CO., LTD.,
20, Mark Lane, E.C.

HOW FAMOUS PEOPLE
RENEW THEIR ENERGIES.

REMARKABLE TESTIMONY.

Never was life so strenuous as now. Everyone acknowledges it—the famous and the non-famous. The famous feel it most, for the strain to obtain a foremost place and keep it is universally recognized. They, however, have a great advantage over the less notable members of the community, for their friendly intercourse with the prominent physicians enables them to hear at the earliest moment of the best means science has discovered to renew the energy, nerve force, and vitality they have consumed in their work.

In consequence, they are all taking Sanatogen, the ideal tonic food and revitalizing agent to whose merits nearly eight thousand physicians have attested in writing, while practically every medical man prescribes it.

The most eminent representatives of every profession have sent voluntary testimonials recording the wonderful results obtained from Sanatogen in renewing their energies when they have been over-worked or run down. From among the most recent, the following have been chosen to give some idea of the merits of the preparation.

Thus Lord RONALD SUTHERLAND GOWER, the sculptor and historian, writes:—

“Hammerfield, Penshurst, Kent.

“I feel it only due to the benefit conferred on my general health by Sanatogen to write to inform those interested in that wonderful medicine that in a couple of months' time it has cured me of all gouty trouble. Sanatogen has done me far more good than all the waters of Bath and Harrogate.”

Sir GILBERT PARKER, M.P., the popular novelist, says:—
“20, Carlton House Terrace, S.W.

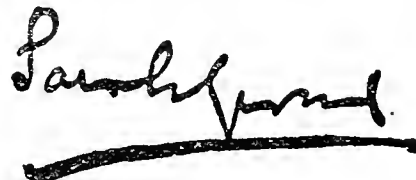

“I have used Sanatogen with extraordinary benefit. It is to my mind a true food tonic, feeding the nerves, increasing the energy, and giving fresh vigour to the over-worked body and mind.”

Madame SARAH GRAND, the gifted authoress of ‘The Heavenly Twins,’ writes:—

“Grove Hill, Tunbridge Wells.

“Sanatogen has done everything for me which it is said to be able to do for cases of nervous debility and exhaustion. I began to take it after nearly four years' enforced idleness from extreme debility, and felt the benefit almost immediately. And now, after taking it steadily three times a day for twelve weeks, I find myself able to enjoy both work and play again, and also able to do as much of both as I ever did.”

Sir JOHN HARE, the popular actor, says:—

“Upper Berkeley Street, W.

“I have found Sanatogen a most valuable tonic and stimulant during a period when I had to work very hard under conditions of great weakness and ill-health. I can heartily recommend it to those working under similarly distressing circumstances.”

Considering this evidence, can anyone suffering from depletion of the mental, nervous, or physical forces, afford to forego the advantages he cannot fail to derive from Sanatogen, which, by the way, is also largely used in royal circles, where the strain of life is no less felt than among humbler people? An instructive booklet on the preparation may be obtained, post free, on application to The Sanatogen Company, 12, Chenies Street, London, W.C., mentioning the Athenæum. Sanatogen can be obtained from all chemists, in tins from 1s. 9d. to 9s. 6d.

WHAT IS THE GOUTY HABIT?

THE UNSUSPECTED CAUSE OF MUCH INDISPOSITION.

The gouty habit, to describe it in a few words, means the tendency of the individual system to form an abnormal quantity of uric acid, which it is the duty of the kidneys and liver to remove as soon as it is made. The organs mentioned are incapable of eliminating any excess of the uric acid.

Deposits of this pain-causing waste product accumulate in various portions of the anatomy, and set up the swelling and inflammation of the joints, the stiffness and pain in the muscles, and the other well-known symptoms of the various uric acid complaints.

The person affected suffers from acidity or heartburn, and experiences gastric discomfort and other digestive disturbances after meals. There is also more or less mental and general depression. These symptoms usually are attended or followed by occasional pains in the muscles or joints, or dull aches and stiffness, with inflammation and swelling, especially during cold and damp weather, while more obviously gouty signs are sometimes in evidence in the shape of small nodules, which are most likely to appear under the skin, on the arms, the ankles, the outer rim of the ears, or the eyelids.

THE CAUSE OF GOUTY PAIN.

The deposits left by the uric acid as it circulates through the system are the immediate cause of all the pain, swelling, and inflammation of gout, rheumatic gout, and gouty rheumatism—of all the disfigurement attending gouty eczema, which is a very prevalent form of skin disease—of the persistent intense pain in the loins which is called lumbago—of sciatica, an acute burning pain extending from the hips down the thigh, and sometimes to the heel—of all the agony and prostrating illness attending stone and gravel—and of that numbness and tingling in the muscles of the arm which later develops into very severe pain and is known as neuritis.

Very often the gouty habit manifests itself as suppressed gout, of which the main symptoms are a feeling of general discomfort, lowness of spirits, poor appetite, nervous irritability, and ill-temper, dull muscular aches and pains all over the body, and a generally lowered state of the system.

In every case of uric acid origin, no matter what form it may take or what stage it may have reached, the only remedy that can give genuine relief is one that will eliminate the uric acid and uratic accumulations from all parts of the system, prevent their retention in the future, and effectually counteract the uric acid-forming tendency. The only remedy possessing these properties in the highest degree is Bishop's Varalettes.

When one of these Varalettes is dissolved and taken in any liquid it is absorbed into the system and penetrates with the blood to the innermost recesses of muscles, tissues, organs, and joints. The result is complete elimination of uric acid, the cause of all gouty ailments, and the consequent relief from all gouty suffering, in the only rational and feasible way.

Bishop's Varalettes may be taken in any beverage, and are quite tasteless. They dissolve instantly with brisk effervescence. There is nothing about them to suggest medicine except the benefit that results from their use.

TO THE GOUTY.

If you are now suffering from any form of gout, if you have any sign about you which suggests goutiness, or if you know for a fact that gout “runs in your family,” procure a supply of Bishop's Varalettes to-day, for your health and well-being depend on your taking this remedy. Bishop's Varalettes may be had of all chemists. 5s. (25 days' treatment), 2s., and 1s., or from the makers, Alfred Bishop (Limited), manufacturing chemists (established 1857), 48, Spelman Street, London, N.E.

A card sent to the above address will bring post free to any gouty subject a most valuable booklet on gouty ailments and their treatment, containing, among other information, an authoritative dietary for the gouty subject. Please ask for Booklet V.

WARD, LOCK & CO'S

ANNOUNCEMENTS

THE LONG ARM 6s. By E. Phillips Oppenheim

"There is no story-teller living who can be more surely relied upon than Mr. Oppenheim for conceiving a daring plot and then working it out with such ingenuity. 'The Long Arm' is a clever story, which no one will lay down till every line is read."—World.

A POACHED PEERAGE 6s. By Sir William Magnay

"Sir Wm. Magnay's work never fails in originality and lively interest. This latest story makes an excellent start, and is well packed with incident and character."—Dundee Advertiser.

A CRIME ON CANVAS 6s. By Fred M. White

"The unravelling of the many tangled skeins is a process that firmly holds the attention of the reader."—Scotsman.
"There is sufficient of mystery in this story to stock half a dozen ordinary romances."—Sheffield Independent.

A BID FOR LOYALTY 6s. By James Blyth

"Nothing Mr. Blyth has written hitherto can be compared with this story. The love story is as delightful as it well could be. It is a long time since we have read such a clever tale of adventure."—Bristol Times.

SIR MORECAMBE'S MARRIAGE 6s. By Florence Warden

"It seems impossible for this writer to produce anything that is dull, and as every succeeding story that flows from her pen excels in many ways its predecessor, her latest is always her best."—Yorkshire Herald.

PRINCE KARL 6s. By A. C. Gunter

"A book that will hold its own among the light literature of the present day."—Harrogate Advertiser.
"Amusing—almost every line of it."—Sportsman.

THE SIN OF ALISON DERING 6s. By L. G. Moberly

"The plot of this story is cleverly conceived and well carried out. Miss Moberly writes with great charm and skill, and the reader is not likely to put down the book until the tangle is finally cleared up. As a character-study, the figure of Alison Dering is drawn with considerable insight."—Financial Times.

HIS FATHER'S HONOUR 6s. By David Christie Murray

"There is no need whatever for the warmest of the admirers of this versatile writer to expect anything but pleasure from the book, which is in the deceased novelist's best vein."—Newcastle Journal.

PURPLE AND HOMESPUN 6s. By Austin Fryers

THE DUKE IN THE SUBURBS 6s. By Edgar Wallace

MONEY 6s. By Marie Connor Leighton

THE SOCIALIST. 6s. By Guy Thorne

Mrs. Beeton's Famous Cookery Books

MRS. BEETON'S HOUSEHOLD MANAGEMENT. 7s. 6d.

"There are practically no limits to the utility of a volume of this kind.... Truly Mrs. Beeton's is still unrivalled and indispensable."—Daily Express.

MRS. BEETON'S FAMILY COOKERY. 5s.

"A book invaluable for its cooking recipes."—Daily Graphic.

MRS. BEETON'S EVERY-DAY COOKERY. 3s. 6d.

"A book which no cook's library should be without. No husband will grudge his wife the price of a volume so invaluable to domestic comfort."—Daily Mirror.

MRS. BEETON'S ALL ABOUT COOKERY. 2s. 6d.

"A most popular book, popular because its merits have been thoroughly tested by experience, and has not been found second to any similar work published."—Teacher.

MRS. BEETON'S SHILLING COOKERY. 1s.

"A wonderful storehouse of domestic information."—Lady's Pictorial.

WARD, LOCK & CO., LTD., Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

THE ATHENÆUM

Journal of English and Foreign Literature, Science, the Fine Arts, Music and the Drama.

No. 4246.

SATURDAY, MARCH 13, 1909.

PRICE
THREEPENCE.
REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

Societies.

ROYAL HISTORICAL SOCIETY.

(Incorporated by Royal Charter.)
An ORDINARY MEETING of the SOCIETY will be held at 7, SOUTH SQUARE, GRAY'S INN, on THURSDAY, March 18, at 5 P.M., when Mr. H. W. V. TEMPERLEY will read a Paper on 'The Causes of the War of Jenkins' Ear' (Anglo-Spanish War of 1739).
H. E. MALDEN, Hon. Sec.

THE FOLK-LORE SOCIETY.—The NEXT MEETING will be held at 22, ALBEMARLE STREET, PICCADILLY, on WEDNESDAY, March 17, at 8 P.M., when a Paper, entitled 'Myth, Magic, and Ceremonial of the Andaman Islanders' will be read by Mr. A. R. BROWN.

F. A. MILNE, Secretary.
11, Old Square, Lincoln's Inn, W.C.,
March 8, 1909.

Lectures.

TURKISH CONSTITUTIONALISM.—

LECTURES on above, also on Classical Subjects, Mythology, History of Religions, and English Literature.—Miss SELBY, 30, Northumberland Place, W.

Exhibitions.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF ARTS.

THE WINTER EXHIBITION WILL CLOSE on SATURDAY, March 13.
Open from 9 A.M. to 6 P.M. Admission 1s. Catalogue, 6d.

ROYAL SOCIETY OF PAINTER-ETCHERS

AND ENGRAVERS, 5A, Pall Mall, East, S.W.—The 27th ANNUAL EXHIBITION NOW OPEN, 10-6. Admission 1s.
W. P. D. STEEBING, Secretary.

EXHIBITION OF ENGRAVINGS AFTER JOHN HOPPNER, R.A.

MESSRS. PAUL & DOMINIC COLNAGHI & CO. have the honour to announce that they have now on view a choice Collection of rare Mezzotints and Stipple Engravings, many in Colour, from some of the most important Works by John Hoppner, R.A.

Admission, including Catalogue, One Shilling.
13 and 14, Pall Mall East, S.W.

MODERN ENGRAVINGS AND ETCHINGS.

MESSRS. COLNAGHI have always on view a large Selection of the latest Publications in the finest Proof States, after Lawrence, Raeburn, Hoppner, Romney, &c.
13 and 14, Pall Mall East, S.W.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF ARTS.—

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, That the PRESIDENT and COUNCIL will proceed to ELECT on TUESDAY, March 23, ONE COUSINS' ANNUITY. Applicants for the Annuity, which is of the value of not more than 80l., must be deserving Artists, Painters in Oil and Water Colours, Sculptors, Architects, or Engravers, in need of aid through unavoidable failure of professional employment or other causes. Forms of Application can be obtained by letter, addressed to the Secretary, Royal Academy of Arts, Piccadilly, W. They must be filled in and returned on or before SATURDAY, March 20.

By order,

FRED. A. EATON, Secretary.

Provident Institutions.

BOOKSELLERS' PROVIDENT INSTITUTION.

The ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING of the BOOKSELLERS' PROVIDENT INSTITUTION, will be held, by the courtesy of the Stationers' Company, at STATIONERS' HALL, on TUESDAY, March 16, at 7 o'clock. The Lord Mayor, Sir FRANCIS TRUSCOTT, will speak, and an excellent Musical Programme has been arranged for the Conversation which will follow.

GEORGE LARNER, Secretary.
23, Paternoster Row, E.C.

Educational.

LIBRARY ASSOCIATION.—SUMMER

SCHOOL.—A SUMMER SCHOOL for PROVINCIAL and other STUDENTS will be held at the LONDON SCHOOL of ECONOMICS, JULY 19-24, 1909. Courses of Lectures will be given in all Sections of the Syllabus, and visits to Libraries and Printing and Binding Works will be arranged.—Applications for admission should be sent, not later than MAY 31, to ERNEST A. BAKER, M.A. D.Litt., Hon. Sec. Education Committee, 24, Whitcomb Street, W.C.

CHRIST'S COLLEGE, BLACKHEATH, S.E.

F. W. AVELING, M.A. B.Sc.
Preparation for Universities and Professions.
Stress on Modern Languages and Science.

THE DOWNS SCHOOL, SEAFORD, SUSSEX.

Head Mistress—Miss LUCY ROBINSON, M.A. (late Second Mistress, St. Felix School, Southwold). References: The Principal of Bedford College, London; The Master of Peterhouse, Cambridge.

EDUCATION.

Parents or Guardians desiring accurate information relative to the CHOICE of SCHOOLS for BOYS or GIRLS or TUTORs in England or Abroad are invited to call upon or send fully detailed particulars to MESSRS. GABBITAS, THRING & CO., who for more than thirty years have been closely in touch with the leading Educational Establishments.
Advice, free of charge, is given by Mr. THRING, Nephew of the late Head Master of Uppingham, 36, Sackville Street, London, W.

LEATHERHEAD COURT, SURREY.

A London School in the Country for 45 Girls (Residents).
Principal—Miss TULLIS.
The School aims at an intellectual training suited to the individual physical development on safe lines, and the cultivation of generous thoughts and pleasant manners.

THE LONDON HOSPITAL MEDICAL COLLEGE.

(UNIVERSITY OF LONDON.)

PRELIMINARY SCIENTIFIC EXAMINATION.

Special arrangements are made to suit the convenience of Students who have just passed the Matriculation Examination of the University of London and who are anxious to commence studying for the above Examination without loss of time.

Students Matriculating in January may thus enter at once without any break in their studies, so that they may be able to present themselves for the Preliminary Scientific Examination at the earliest possible date.

Zoology and Botany. By G. P. MUDGE, A.R.C.S. F.Z.S., and R. A. BUDDICOM, B.A. Oxon.

Chemistry and Physics. By HUGH CANDY, B.A., B.Sc. Lond., and G. W. Griffith, B.Sc. Lond.

Fee for the whole Course, Ten Guineas.

Turner Street, Mile End, E. MUNRO SCOTT, Warden.

Situations Vacant.

UNIVERSITY OF OXFORD.

READERSHIP IN LATIN.

An ELECTION will take place EARLY in EASTER TERM to a READERSHIP in LATIN. The Reader will be elected for a period of three years, and may or may not be re-elected. His Stipend will be 300l. per annum.—Applications, with evidence of qualifications, to be sent, before SATURDAY, April 17, to THE REGISTRAR, University Registry, Oxford, from whom further particulars may be obtained.

COUNTY OF LONDON.

ASSISTANT INSPECTOR.

The LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL invites applications for an appointment to the post of ASSISTANT INSPECTOR in the EDUCATION OFFICER'S DEPARTMENT. The Salary will be 250l. a year, rising by annual increments of 15l. to a maximum of 400l. a year. The Person appointed will be required to give his (or her) whole time to the duties of the Office, and to such other duties as may be entrusted to him (or her), including the inspection of Public Elementary Schools, Evening Schools, and other Educational Institutions. Women are eligible for this appointment. Preference will be given to Candidates specially qualified in Science. Canvassing, either directly or indirectly, will be held to be a disqualification for appointment.

Applications should be made on the Official Form, to be obtained, together with particulars of the appointment, from THE EDUCATION OFFICER, London County Council, Education Offices, Victoria Embankment, W.C. to whom they must be returned not later than 11 A.M. on MONDAY, March 22, 1909, accompanied by copies of three Testimonials of recent date.

Candidates applying through the post for the Form of Application should enclose a stamped and addressed envelope, endorsed "Assistant Inspector," and Candidates who desire the receipt of their applications to be acknowledged should enclose a stamped addressed post-card.

G. L. GOMME, Clerk of the London County Council.

Education Offices, Victoria Embankment, W.C.

February 27, 1909.

RUTLISH SCHOOL AND P.T. CENTRE,

MERTON, LONDON, S.W.

WANTED, by APRIL 28, a SCIENCE MASTER, Graduate in Honours, under 30; at least three years' experience. Chief Subjects, Chemistry and Physics. Preparation for London University Examinations, including Intermediate in Science. Salary 175l., non-resident (annual increment 7l. 10s.) to 250l. School has 250 Boys and a Staff of Twelve Masters. Nearest Station, Wimbledon (five minutes); twenty minutes from Waterloo.—Apply to Head Master, A. N. DISNEY, Esq. M.A. B.Sc.

INTERMEDIATE SCHOOL, ABERDARE,

SOUTH WALES.

An ASSISTANT MASTER is REQUIRED for the above School, well qualified to teach Mathematics and to assist in the work of the Commercial Department. Good discipline and experience essential. Commencing Salary, 150l. to 170l., according to qualifications.

Further particulars and Forms of Application, which should be returned by the 31st instant, may be had from THE HEAD MASTER.

KENT EDUCATION COMMITTEE.

DARTFORD HIGHER EDUCATION SUB-COMMITTEE.

DARTFORD COUNTY SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.

WANTED, in APRIL NEXT, an ASSISTANT MISTRESS for the above-named School. Subjects: Geography and Science (Elementary Physics and Chemistry). Candidates should hold Degree of a British University or its equivalent. Initial Salary, 100l. to 110l. per annum according to qualifications and experience, with increments in accordance with the Committee's Scale. Further particulars and Forms of Application may be obtained from THE SECRETARY, Dartford County School for Girls, Dartford, and must be forwarded not later than MARCH 24, to Miss A. M. BRETT, County School for Girls, Dartford. Canvassing will be considered a disqualification.

By Order of the Committee,

FRAS. W. CROOK, Secretary.

Caxton House, Westminster, March 9th, 1909.

COUNTY BOROUGH OF WEST HAM.

MUNICIPAL TECHNICAL INSTITUTE SCHOOL OF ART,

ROMFORD ROAD, STRATFORD, E.

WANTED, a LADY ASSISTANT, who must have had previous experience in Teaching. Salary 100l. per annum, rising by two increments to 120l.—For all further particulars apply to THE PRINCIPAL.

FRED. E. HILLEARY, Town Clerk.

Education Department, 95, The Grove, Stratford, E.,
March 9, 1909

Yearly Subscription, free by post, Inland, 15s. 3d.; Foreign, 18s. Entered at the New York Post Office as Second Class matter.

CITY OF LIVERPOOL.

FREE PUBLIC LIBRARIES.

COMPRISING A CENTRAL AND TEN BRANCH LIBRARIES.

The LIBRARY, MUSEUM, and ARTS COMMITTEE of the COUNCIL of the CITY of LIVERPOOL, are prepared to receive applications for the appointment of a CHIEF LIBRARIAN. The Salary will be 450l. per annum. The Official will be required to devote the whole of his time to the service of the Corporation. Particulars of duties may be had on application to the Town Clerk. Applications, stating age, qualifications, and previous engagements, accompanied by not more than four copies of recent Testimonials, endorsed "Chief Librarian," and addressed to the Town Clerk, Municipal Offices, Liverpool, must be delivered at the Town Clerk's Office, not later than 12 o'clock at noon, on FRIDAY, April 16, 1909. Canvassing members of the Council will be a disqualification.

EDWARD R. PICKMERE, Town Clerk.

Town Clerk's Office, Liverpool, March 5, 1909.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF PHYSICIANS OF EDINBURGH.

The COUNCIL of the COLLEGE invite applications for the post of SUB-LIBRARIAN. The Salary is 250 Guineas a year. The Person appointed will be required to give his whole time to the duties of the Office and to such other duties as may be entrusted to him. A knowledge of French and German is essential. Applications should be made to THE SECRETARY, Royal College of Physicians, Edinburgh, and must be in his hands not later than SATURDAY, March 27. A detailed statement of the duties of the office may be had on application at the College.

Situations Wanted.

POST of PRIVATE SECRETARY, non-resident, desired by YOUNG LADY, with nine years' experience of General Office Work in London Publishers' House. Shorthand-Typist. Book-keeping. Preparing for the Press, &c. Good references.—Apply Box 1573, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, E.C.

A FRENCH LADY, Docteur de l'Université de

Paris (Lettres), seeks a HOLIDAY ENGAGEMENT in an English Family for the EASTER VACATION.—Address R. Q., care of Prof. J. G. Frazer, Sc. Keynes, Cambridge.

TO AUTHORS AND PUBLISHERS.—A well-known CAMBRIDGE MAN, M.A., is open to ADVISE AUTHORS, Revise Copy or Proofs, &c. Highest references.—Address M., Box 1177, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, E.C.

TO PUBLISHERS.—ADVERTISER (37) desires

POST as ASSISTANT. Literary, Commercial, and Journalistic Experience. Author of 'When Hawkins Sailed the Sea' (Richards), &c.—Address, TINSLEY PRATT, 7, Lorne Road, Fallowfield, Manchester.

Miscellaneous.

TRANSLATION, RESEARCH, INDEXING,

ARTICLES and other Literary Work. Classics, French, German, Italian, Spanish, Portuguese. Varied experience. Moderate Terms.—Miss SELBY, 30, Northumberland Place, W.

TRANSLATIONS INTO ENGLISH from

French, Italian, Spanish, Portuguese, German, Dutch, Danish, Norwegian, and Swedish.—W. T. CURTIS, 10, Haringey Park, Crouch End, N.

GERMAN and FRENCH TRANSLATIONS—from or into these Languages—undertaken by an ENGLISH GENTLEMAN. Absolute correctness guaranteed. Seven years residence in Germany as University Lecturer. Two years in France.—Write to Box 1574, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, E.C.

ACCURATE RESEARCH and GENEALOGICAL WORK undertaken by R. M. GLENCOSS, M.A.

LL.B. Advice also supplied to Persons drawing up their own Pedigree. Excellent Testimonials.—3, Challoner Street, West Kensington.

TRAINING FOR PRIVATE SECRETARIAL

WORK AND INDEXING.

THE SECRETARIAL BUREAU,

52A, CONDUIT STREET, BOND STREET, LONDON, W.

Founded 1895.

Telephone: 2426 GERRARD.

MISS PETHERBRIDGE (Nat. Sci. Tripos).

EMPLOYED BY THE INDIA OFFICE as—Indexer of the East India Company's Records, the new edition of the Imperial Gazetteer of India; Dutch and Portuguese Translator.

The Drapers' Company's Records Catalogued and Arranged. The Library of the Rt. Hon. W. H. Long M.P., Catalogued and Arranged.

INDEXER OF—The Records of the County Borough of Cardiff; The Warrington Town Records; The Blue Books of the Royal Commissions on: London Traffic, The Supply of Food in Time of War, Motor Cars, Canals and Waterways, Coast Erosion, Shipping Kings; and of the Committees on International Exhibitions, National Guarantee for War Risks of Shipping, Oriental Studies; The Minutes of the Education Committee of the Somerset County Council.

MISS PETHERBRIDGE trains from Three to Six Pupils every year for Private Secretarial and Special Indexing Work. The training is one of Apprenticeship, Pupils starting as Junior Members of the Staff and working up through all the Branches. It is practical, on actual work, each Pupil being individually coached. The training consists of Indexing—which includes Research Work and Precise Writing—Shorthand, Type-Writing, Stenotypy, and Business Training.

THE TECHNIQUE OF INDEXING. By MARY PETHERBRIDGE.
2s. 9d. post free

PRIVATE SOCIAL TOURS FOR GENTLE-
WOMEN.—Historic Castles of Loire Valley, APRIL. Austria, including the Danube, Vienna, Budapest, and Salzburg, JUNE.
Holland and Switzerland, AUGUST. Inclusive Terms. References exchanged.—Miss BISHOP, 27, St. George's Road, Kilburn, London.

PUBLIC-HOUSE REFORM.—The People's Refreshment House Association, Ltd., founded by the Bishop of Chester, manages 68 Licensed Inns. Ask for List and Report.
APPLY FOR 17. SHARES. 5 per cent paid since 1899.
P.R.H.A., Broadway Chambers, Westminster.

PRIVATE ACCOUNT BOOK.—For Country or City Gentleman. Combines every requirement, from Cash Book to Balance Sheet and Income Tax. Satisfaction guaranteed or money returned. Particulars free.—McQUEEN & CO., Moat Road E., Leicester.

TO ART COLLECTORS.

TWO VERY FINE BAXTER-COLOUR PRINTS FOR SALE.
Issued 1851 or earlier. 'OUR LORD BLESSING THE BREAD' and Rubens's 'DESCENT FROM THE CROSS.' In perfect condition, with Original Mounts and Frames.—Offers, by letter only, to F. C. B., 6, Park Road, Harlesden, N.W.

Type-Writers, &c.

TYPE-WRITING undertaken by highly educated
Women (Classical Tripos; Cambridge Higher Local; Modern Languages). Research, Revision, Translation, Shorthand. Dictation
Room.—THE CAMBRIDGE TYPE-WRITING AGENCY, 10, Duke
Street, Adelphi, W.C.

AUTHORS' MSS., NOVELS, STORIES, PLAYS,
ESSAYS TYPE-WRITTEN with complete accuracy, 9d. per 1,000 words. Clear Carbon Copies guaranteed. References to well-known Writers.—M. STUART, Allendale, Kymberley Road, Harrow.

TYPE-WRITING, 9d. per 1,000 words. All kinds of MSS. accurately typed. Clear Carbon Copies, 3d. per 1,000.
References to well-known Authors. Oxford Higher Local. Tel. 1272,
Richmond P.O.—M. KING, 24, Forest Road, Kew Gardens, S.W.

AUTHORS' MSS., 9d. per 1,000 words. Sermons,
Plays, and all kinds of TYPE-WRITING carefully done at home (Remington). Good paper. Orders promptly executed. Duplicating from 3s. 6d. per 100.—M. L. L., 18, Edgeley Road, Clapham, S.W.

TYPE-WRITING 9d. per 1,000 words; Carbons
3d. French and German Type-writing 1s. per 1,000. Translations. Duplicating 3s. 100 Copies (quarto), 15s. per 1,000. Best work, accuracy, and promptitude.—G. WALKER, 14, Park Road, New Cross, S.E.

TYPE-WRITING OF EVERY DESCRIPTION
by EXPERT, 8d. per 1,000 words. Clear Carbon Copies, 3d. per 1,000 words. Accuracy and prompt return guaranteed. Reliable
References.—NORA DICKINSON, 1, Sackville Gardens, Ilford.

Catalogues.

CATALOGUE No. 50.—Drawings by Turner,
Prout, Ruskin, &c.—Turner's Liber Studiorum and other
Engravings—Proofs touched by Turner—Constable's English Landscape—Etchings by Whistler—Japanese Colour Prints—Illustrated
Books. Post free, Sixpence.—WM. WARD, 2, Church Terrace,
Richmond, Surrey.

GLAISHER'S REMAINDER BOOK
CATALOGUE
For MARCH (No. 363).

NOW READY, and will be forwarded on application.
It comprises a specially attractive Selection of Publishers' Remainders, including many Good Bargains.

WILLIAM GLAISHER, LTD.,
Booksellers, 265, HIGH HOLBORN, LONDON.

BOOKS.—ALL OUT-OF-PRINT and RARE
BOOKS on any subject SUPPLIED. The most expert Bookfinder extant. Please state wants and ask for CATALOGUE. I make a special feature of exchanging any Saleable Books for others selected from my various Lists. Special List of 2,000 Books I particularly want post free.—EDW. BAKER'S Great Bookshop, 14-16, John Bright Street, Birmingham.—Yellow Book, 13 vols. 2l. 10s.; Trigg's Art Garden
Design, Italy, 3l. guineas for 2ls.; E. Fitzgerald's Works, 7 vols. 3l. 3s.

CATALOGUE of FRENCH BOOKS, at greatly reduced prices. I. PHILOSOPHY. II. RELIGION. III. HIS-TORY. IV. POETRY, DRAMA, MUSIC. V. BEAUX-ARTS. VI.
GEOGRAPHY. VII. MILITARY. VIII. FICTION. IX. GENERAL
LITERATURE.

DULAU & CO. 37, Soho Square, London, W.

FIRST EDITIONS of MODERN AUTHORS, including Dickens, Thackeray, Lever, Ainsworth; Books illustrated by G. and R. Cruikshank, Phiz, Rowlandson, Leech, &c. The largest and choicest Collection offered for Sale in the World. CATA-LOGUES issued and sent post free on application. Books Bought.—
WALTER T. SPENCER, 27, New Oxford Street, London, W.C.

ANCIENT and MODERN COINS.—Collectors
and Antiquarians are invited to apply to SPINK & SON,
Limited, for Specimen Copy (gratis) of their NUMISMATIC
CIRCULAR. The finest Greek, Roman, and English Coins on View and for Sale at Moderate Prices.—SPINK & SON, Limited, Experts,
Valuers, and Cataloguers, 16, 17, and 18, Piccadilly, London, W.
Established upwards of a Century.

Printers.

IF YOU WRITE THE MEMORIALS OF YOUR FAMILY, we will PRINT and PUBLISH them for you, under Expert Supervision, at the very Lowest Rates. Searches made where MS. is incomplete.—GERRARDS, LTD. (The Westminster Press), 411A, Harrow Road, London, W.

ATHENÆUM PRESS.—JOHN EDWARD
FRANCIS, Printer of the Athenæum, Notes and Queries, &c., is prepared to SUBMIT ESTIMATES for all kinds of BOOK, NEWS,
and PERIODICAL PRINTING.—13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery
Lane, E.C.

Business for Disposal.

PHOTO AND GENERAL PUBLISHING
BUSINESS FOR SALE.—MAGAZINES, COPYRIGHTS,
HANDBOOKS, &c. Trade connexions at Home and Abroad.
Present Manager would probably co-operate with Purchaser.—Fullst particulars from G. H. C., care of Carter, Clay, & Lintott, 1, Queen Street, Chancery Lane, E.C.

Authors' Agents.

TO AUTHORS.—LITERARY AGENT has opportunity of INTRODUCING THEOLOGICAL WORKS to a high-class FIRM of PUBLISHERS. No fees.—Write A. B. C.,
Box 5105, Willings, 125, Strand, W.C.

THE AUTHOR'S AGENCY.—Established 1879.
The interests of Authors capably represented. Agreements for Publishing arranged. MSS. placed with Publishers.—Terms and Testimonials on application to Mr. A. M. BURGHESE, 24, Paternoster Row.

Sales by Auction.

STEVEN'S AUCTION ROOMS,
Established 1760.
FORTHCOMING SALES.

TUESDAY NEXT, March 16, at half-past 12 o'clock.

A most interesting COLLECTION OF CURIO-SITIES of every description, mostly from the South Sea Islands, including Carved and Painted Masks, Spears, War Clubs, Carvings,
&c., some choice Japanese Vases, Netsukis, Colour Prints, Carved Ivories, Bronzes, &c. Also Prints, Drawings, and the usual Miscellaneous Collection. On view day prior, 10 to 5.

THURSDAY NEXT at half-past 12 o'clock.

The entire stock of SCIENTIFIC and EXPERI-MENTAL APPARATUS of Messrs. HARVEY & PEAK, who are retiring from business. On view morning of Sale.

FRIDAY NEXT at half-past 12 o'clock

The COLLECTION OF MICROSCOPES and MICROSCOPIC APPARATUS of the late Dr. GRAY, of Cheltenham.
On view day prior, 1.30 to 5.30, and morning of Sale.

TUESDAY, March 23, at half-past 12 o'clock.

The COLLECTION OF BRITISH LEPIDO-
PTERA formed by the late J. PARDOE, Esq., including many rare and extinct Species and Varieties.

TUESDAY, March 30, at half-past 12 o'clock.

ETHNOGRAPHICAL CURIOS and WORKS OF ART.

Mr. J. C. STEVENS has received instructions to offer the above various Properties for Sale by Auction at his Rooms, 38, King Street, Covent Garden, W.C. Catalogues may be had when ready.

Miscellaneous Books.

MESSRS. HODGSON & CO. will SELL by
AUCTION, at their Rooms, 115, Chancery Lane, W.C., on THURSDAY, March 18, and Following Day, at 1 o'clock, MISCEL-LANEOUS BOOKS, including the LIBRARY of the late J. LEWIS ROJET, Esq. (removed from 5, Randolph Crescent, Maida Vale), and other Properties, comprising a Set of the valuable Burlington Fine-Arts Club Illustrated Catalogues, 14 vols. 1873-1905—Books on Painting and Engraving—Orme's Military and Naval Anecdotes and other Books with Coloured Plates—Books illustrated by Cruikshank and Kate Greenaway—a small Collection of Topographical Works and Books on London, some extra-illustrated—Shirley's History of County Monaghan—Huguenot Society's Publications and Transactions 1887-1908—Chesterfield's Letters, Best Edition, 5 vols.—The Abbotsford Waverley, 12 vols., morocco extra—Library Edition of Ruskin's Works, 35 vols.—Writings of Oscar Wilde, 14 vols., and a few
First Editions—a Selection from a Reviewer's Library—Autograph
Letters and Documents, &c.

To be viewed and Catalogues had.

MESSRS. CHRISTIE, MANSON & WOODS,
respectfully give notice that they will hold the following
SALES by AUCTION, at their Great Rooms, King Street, St. James's Square:—

On TUESDAY, March 16, at 2 o'clock, fine
WINES, from the CELLARS of the late E. B. FOSTER, Esq., of Anstey Hall, Trumpington, Cambridge, and the late MARTIN
RIDLEY SMITH, Esq., of Warren House, Hayes, Kent.

On WEDNESDAY, March 17, at 2 o'clock, the CELLARS of WINES of Col. E. R. BERRY, deceased, late of 2, Hyde Park Gate, S.W., FRANK HARDCASTLE, Esq., deceased, late of 87, Lancaster Gate, Hyde Park, W., and choice Wines from other Cellars.

On WEDNESDAY, March 17, about 3 o'clock, upwards of 15,000 choice CIGARS, principally of the 1904 crop.

On THURSDAY, March 18, at 1 o'clock,
OBJECTS of VERTU and GOLD and SILVER COINS, the Property of a LADY, and Objects of Vertu from various Sources.

On FRIDAY, March 19, at 1 o'clock, ORIENTAL PORCELAIN and OBJECTS of ART, the Property of a LADY, and Porcelain, Objects of Art, and Decorative Furniture from various Sources.

On SATURDAY, March 20, at 1 o'clock,
MODERN PICTURES and DRAWINGS.

The Library of the Right Rev. the LORD BISHOP OF COLCHESTER (deceased), and the Library of the late FALKLAND WARREN, Esq.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE
will SELL by AUCTION at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on TUESDAY, March 16, and Following Day, at 1 o'clock precisely, BOOKS and MANUSCRIPTS including the LIBRARY of the Right Rev. the LORD BISHOP OF COLCHESTER
(deceased); the LIBRARY of the late FALKLAND WARREN, Esq., and other Properties, comprising rare Americana—Oriental Manuscripts and Printed Books—Publications of the Kelmscott and Doves Presses—Grolier Club Publications—rare Works in English Poetry and Drama—a Collection of Tracts by Martin Luther, mostly First Editions, with fine Woodcut Borders by Holbein, Granach, Burgmaier, &c.—fine Works in Natural History, with Coloured Plates —Fine-Art Books—Collections of Military Costumes—Collection of Illustrations by George Cruikshank—Blake's Songs of Innocence and of Experience (1789), &c.

May be viewed. Catalogues may be had

Illuminated and other Manuscripts and Valuable Printed Books.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE
will SELL by AUCTION at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on THURSDAY, March 18, and Following Day, at 1 o'clock precisely, ILLUMINATED and other MANUSCRIPTS and VALUABLE PRINTED BOOKS, comprising fine Books of Hours, Manuscript and Printed—Bibles, Antiphonales and other Service Books—Illuminated Persian Manuscripts—Italian, French, Flemish and Spanish Miniatures—a fine Flemish Antiphonale of the Fourteenth Century—Dean Swift's Own Copy of his and Pope's Miscel-lanies, with numerous Annotations by him—Burns's Poems, with Autograph Notes—First Edition of Walton's Angler, and Shakespeare's Poems—an interesting Bunyan Bible—Fourth Folio Shakespeare—rare Early Printed English and Foreign Books, many with fine Woodcuts—First Editions of Mrs. Browning's Works, &c.

May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

*The magnificent Library of the Right Hon. LORD
AMHERST of Hackney, deceased (Second and Final Portion).*

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE
will SELL by AUCTION at their House, No. 13, Wellington
Street, Strand, W.C., on WEDNESDAY, March 24, and Three Following Days, at 1 o'clock precisely, the magnificent LIBRARY of choice and valuable Books and Manuscripts, the Property of the Right Hon. LORD AMHERST OF HACKNEY, deceased (Second Portion).

May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had, price
One Shilling each.

Books and Manuscripts.

MESSRS. PUTTICK & SIMPSON will SELL
by AUCTION at their Galleries, 47, Leicester Square, W.C., at the END OF MARCH, the LIBRARY of the late EDWARD CHAPLIN, Esq., of Hamburg, removed from that City, and other Properties, including a Collection of Works relating to the County of Notts—Books relating to the Fine Arts—and Standard Works in all Branches of Literature, further particulars of which will appear.
Catalogues in preparation.

Magazines, &c.

THE BUILDER (founded 1842), 4, Catherine
Street, London, W.C., MARCH 13, contains:—
SMOKE ABATEMENT AT SHEFFIELD AND ELSE-WHERE.

NOTES.

THE LATE GEORGE DEVEY, ARCHITECT (Architectural Association).

"IDEAS IN THINGS" } CARPENTERS' HALL

"HAMPTON COURT" } LECTURES.

NOTES FROM PARIS.

THE ARCHITECTS' BENEVOLENT SOCIETY: ANNUAL MEETING.

ILLUSTRATIONS:

LATE RENAISSANCE CHURCHES OF LONDON.—III

ST. GEORGE'S, HANOVER SQUARE;

PREMISES, BUDGE ROW, E.C.;

ALL SAINTS, TOOTING;

WINCHESTER COLLEGE, MEMORIAL GATEWAY, AND ARMOURY;

GOVERNMENT OFFICE, BLOEMFONTEIN, SOUTH AFRICA;

BATH STREET, BATH (proposed to be destroyed).

From Offices as above (4d., by post 4½d.), at Railway Bookstalls, Bookshops, and of all Newsagents.

K I P L I N G ' S C O U N T R Y .

By LEWIS LUSK.

Illustrations by W. MONK, R.E.,

Including Drawings of "Bateman's," Mr. Kipling's House, the Village of Burwash, and the picturesque scenery of Sussex: also an Original Etching of BODIAM CASTLE.

T H E A R T J O U R N A L .

MARCH. 1s. 6d. net.

VIRTUE & CO. 7, City Garden Row, City Road, London, N.
Or of all Booksellers and Bookstalls.

S O N G S O F A S U N L I T L A N D .

By Col. KENNETH MACKAY, C.B.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d. net (postage 4d.).

To be obtained through any Bookseller, or from

THE AUSTRALIAN BOOK COMPANY,
21, Warwick Lane, London, E.C.

NOW READY.

THE NEWSPAPER PRESS DIRECTORY
AND ADVERTISER'S GUIDE for 1909.

THE SIXTY-FOURTH ANNUAL ISSUE.

Price 2s. net; post free, 2s. 6d.; foreign 3s. 2d.

C. MITCHELL & CO., Advertising Agency, Mitchell House 1 and Snow Hill, Holborn Viaduct, London, E.C.

E B E N E Z E R P R O U T ' S W O R K S .

Bound, each net 5s.

HARMONY: its Theory and Practice. Twenty-fourth Impression.
Revised and largely Re-written.

ANALYTICAL KEY TO THE EXERCISES in the same. Net 3s.

COUNTERPOINT: Strict and Free. Ninth Impression.

DOUBLE COUNTERPOINT AND CANON. Fourth Impression.

FUGUE. Fifth Impression.

FUGAL ANALYSIS. Third Impression.

MUSICAL FORM. Seventh Impression.

APPLIED FORMS. Fifth Impression.

THE ORCHESTRA. 2 vols. Fourth Impression.

AUGENER LTD., 6, New Burlington Street, and 22, Newgate Street.

FROM CHATTO & WINDUS'S LIST.

PROF. HOLMES'S NEW BOOK.

NOTES ON THE SCIENCE OF PICTURE MAKING.

By C. J. HOLMES, M.A.,

Slade Professor of Fine Arts in the University of Oxford.

With a Photogravure Frontispiece. Demy 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 7s. 6d. net.

Many books have been written for the use of elementary students, but very few are of much service to the painter when his student days are over. It is to the student rather than to the mere beginner that Prof. Holmes's book is addressed. His object has been to discuss in clear and orderly fashion the thousand and one problems of style and technique with which an artist is nowadays confronted, and to indicate the lines on which personal taste and talent may be most successfully developed.

THE KING'S CLASSICS.

General Editor, Prof. I. GOLLANCZ, Litt.D.

The "KING'S CLASSICS" are printed on antique laid paper, 16mo (4½ by 6 in.), gilt tops, and each volume contains a Photogravure Frontispiece.

Quarter-bound, antique grey boards or red cloth, 1s. 6d. net. Quarter-vellum, grey cloth sides, 2s. 6d. net. Special three-quarter vellum, Oxford side-papers, gilt tops, silk marker, 5s. net.

NEW VOLUMES NOW READY.

56. THE CAVALIER TO HIS LADY.

An Anthology of Seventeenth-Century Love Songs. Selected and Edited by FRANK SIDGWICK. Coloured Frontispiece after BYAM SHAW, R.I.

61. THE BOOK OF THE DUKE OF TRUE LOVERS.

A Romance of the Court, now first Translated from the unique MS. in the Middle French by CHRISTINE DE PISAN, with Notes and Introduction by ALICE KEMP-WELCH.

62. OF THE TUMBLER OF OUR LADY, AND OTHER MIRACLES.

Now first Translated from the Middle French MSS. anonyms and by GAUTIER DE COINCI (preserved at Soissons), with Notes and Introduction by ALICE KEMP-WELCH.

63. THE CHATELAINE OF VERGI.

A Romance of the Court, Translated from the Middle French by ALICE KEMP-WELCH, with Introduction by L. BRANDIN, Ph.D., and with the original Text, édition Raynaud.

THE WORKS OF JANE AUSTEN.

In Ten Volumes, each illustrated with Ten Reproductions after Water-Colours by A. WALLIS MILLS. With Bibliographical and Biographical Notes by R. BRIMLEY JOHNSON. Small crown 8vo, coloured tops, cloth, with special Binding Design and Picture End-Papers, 3s. 6d. net per vol.

Also the Set of Ten Volumes, bound in whole white or green parchment, £3 net per set. Sold in sets only.

Vols. I. and II.	PRIDE AND PREJUDICE.
Vols. III. and IV.	SENSE AND SENSIBILITY.
Vol. V.	NORTHANGER ABBEY.
Vol. VI.	PERSUASION.
Vols. VII. and VIII.	EMMA.
Vols. IX. and X.	MANSFIELD PARK.

"The type is admirably clear, and the illustrations are truly Georgian."—Spectator.

"That such a handsome and desirable new edition of Jane Austen should be issued now is witness to the vitality of her charm and the enterprise of the publishers.... unusually well printed.... The series of coloured illustrations are admirably conceived and well produced."—Burlington Magazine.

NEW 3/6 NOVELS.

THE WATERS OF DESTRUCTION. By Alice Perrin.

RED RECORDS. By Alice Perrin.

JOHN CALDIGATE. By Anthony Trollope.

FOR LOVE AND HONOUR. By Frank Barrett.

THE SANYASI. By F. E. Penny.

CASTE AND CREED. By F. E. Penny.

TRACKED TO DOOM. By Dick Donovan.

GWENDOLINE'S HARVEST. By James Payn.

WHAT OUGHT SHE TO DO? By Florence Warden.

AN INDUSTRIOUS CHEVALIER. By S. Squire Sprigge.

IDOLATRY.

By ALICE PERRIN,

Author of 'The Stronger Claim,' 'The Waters of Destruction,' &c.

Third Impression. 6s.

"In book after book she has drawn vivid incisive sketches of not only Anglo-Indian, but native life..... 'Idolatry' is a real triumph."—Times.

JULIAN REVELSTONE.

By JUSTIN MCCARTHY,

Author of 'Dear Lady Disdain,' 'A History of Our Own Times,' &c.

Second Impression. 6s.

"Unflagging interest is maintained with never-failing skill."—Scotsman.
"There is a sweetness and healthfulness about the whole narrative."—Outlook.

A QUESTION OF MEANS.

By M. B. CROSS, Author of 'Love and Olivia.'

Second Impression. 6s.

"This is a quite admirable novel, which gathers strength and interest as it goes along, till it absolutely absorbs the reader, and leaves him at the end in a very grateful mood to the talented authoress."—Daily Telegraph.

THE ROGUE OF RYE.

By W. WILLMOTT DIXON. 6s.

"The tale is really exciting and full of the complications, dangers, escapes, fighting, and love, which go to make up an historical romance. This one is capital."—Daily Telegraph.

THE JUNE PRINCESS.

By CONSTANCE SMEDLEY, Author of 'An April Princess.' 6s.

"A decidedly original composition.....one will soon become enamoured of the freshness of the story, the wise and merry discussions, and the curious people who wander up and down the pages."—Daily Telegraph.

THE MERRY HEART.

By FRANK A. SWINNERTON. 6s.

"A study of clerk life, male and female, steady and flighty, drawn with a sure and dexterous hand."—Times.

A CASTLE OF DREAMS.

By NETTA SYRETT,

Author of 'The Child of Promise,' 'Anne Page,' &c. 6s.

A half-ruined mediæval castle in the wilds of Ireland is the scene of this modern romance, which presents a strange and alluring blend of reality and Celtic imagination.

"A well-worked conception, with many threads cleverly interwoven in its texture."—Times.

THE PAINTED MOUNTAIN.

By PETER LAURISTOUN. 6s.

THE ROAD OF NO RETURN.

By A. C. INCHBOLD,

Author of 'Under the Syrian Sun,' 'Lisbon and Cintra,' &c. 6s.

[Immediately.]

MACMILLAN'S NEW BOOKS.

Psyche's Task: a Discourse Concerning the Influence of Superstition on the Growth of Institutions. By J. G. FRAZER, D.C.L. LL.D. Litt.D. 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.

The book is "an attempt to sort out the seeds of good from the heap of evil which we call superstition, just as Psyche was given the task of sorting out the different kinds of seeds." The subjects dealt with are Government, Private Property, Marriage, and Respect for Human Life.

Social Life at Rome in the Age of Cicero.

By W. WARDE FOWLER, M.A., Author of 'The Roman Festivals of the Period of the Republic,' &c. With Map and Plans. 8vo, 10s. net.

The Ancient Greek Historians

(Harvard Lectures). By J. B. BURY, Litt.D. LL.D., Regius Professor of Modern History in the University of Cambridge. 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

The Characters of Theophrastus.

An English Translation from a Revised Text, with Introduction and Notes by R. C. JEBB, M.A., Fellow and Assistant-Tutor of Trinity College, Cambridge, and Public Orator of the University, 1870. A New Edition. Edited by J. E. SANDYS, Litt.D. 8vo, 7s. 6d. net. [Classical Library.]

The Acropolis of Athens.

By MARTIN L. D'OOGE, Professor of Greek in the University of Michigan. Fully illustrated. 8vo, 17s. net.

WRITING PAPER EDITION FOR MARGINAL NOTES.

The New Testament in the Original Greek.

The Text Revised by BROOKE FOSS WESTCOTT, D.D., and F. J. A. HORT, D.D. Demy 8vo, 5s. net.

Notes of a Botanist on the Amazon and Andes.

Being Records of Travel during the Years 1849-1864. By RICHARD SPRUCE, Ph.D. Edited and Condensed by ALFRED RUSSEL WALLACE, O.M. F.R.S. With Illustrations and Maps. 2 vols. 8vo, 21s. net.

Jimbo. A Fantasy.

By ALGERNON BLACKWOOD, Author of 'John Silence,' &c. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

Observer.—"The book is a remarkable achievement. All through the sense of mystery and vagueness and terror are conveyed with singular sureness where just a touch too much might have destroyed all."

NEW 6/- NOVELS.

SECOND IMPRESSION.

TONO-BUNGAY.

By H. G. WELLS.

SECOND IMPRESSION.

One Immortality.

By H. FIELDING HALL, Author of 'The Soul of a People,' &c.

The Religion of the Common Man.

By Sir HENRY WRIXON, K.C. Crown 8vo, 3s. net. Guardian.—"A notable contribution to the increasing number of books which are written not for the expert, but for the cultivated, thinking layman."

What is Pragmatism?

By Prof. J. B. PRATT, Ph.D. Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

MACMILLAN & CO., LTD., London.

Messrs. Longmans & Co.'s LIST.

Unemployment: a Problem of Industry.

By W. H. BEVERIDGE, formerly Sub-Warden of Toynbee Hall. 8vo, 7s. 6d. net. (Inland postage 4d.)

"It is a book which every one ought to have read who presumes to write or speak on the question of unemployment."—Westminster Gazette.

Sir George Mackenzie, King's Advocate, of Rosehaugh: His Life and Times, 1636(?)–1691.

By ANDREW LANG. 8vo, 15s. net. (Inland postage 5d.)

"Mr. Lang's brilliant pages are full of suggestive passages; his story is alive with old echoes of 'forgotten beliefs and impossible loyalties.'"—Daily Telegraph.

The Dawn of the Catholic Revival in England, 1781–1803.

By BERNARD WARD, F.R.Hist.S., President of St. Edmund's College, Ware. With Portraits and other Illustrations. 2 vols. 8vo, 25s. net. (Inland postage 6d.)

Germany in the Later Middle Ages, 1200–1500.

By WILLIAM STUBBS, D.D., formerly Bishop of Oxford. Edited by ARTHUR HASSALL, M.A. With 2 Maps. 8vo, 7s. 6d. net. (Inland postage 4d.)

Impressions of American Education in 1908.

By SARA A. BURSTALL, M.A., Head Mistress of the Manchester High School for Girls. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d. (Inland postage 4d.)

"It would be hard to equal this book for careful research and relevant, well-balanced statement."—Spectator.

Ecclesia Discens: the Church's Lesson from the Age.

By the Rev. JAMES H. F. PEILE, M.A., Author of 'The Reproach of the Gospel.' Crown 8vo, 5s. net. (Inland postage 4d.)

The Springs of Helicon: a Study in the Progress of English Poetry from Chaucer to Milton.

By J. W. MACKAIL, M.A. LL.D., Professor of Poetry in the University of Oxford. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d. net. (Inland postage 4d.) [On Monday next.]

Ireland under the Stuarts and during the Interregnum.

By RICHARD BAGWELL, M.A., Author of 'Ireland under the Tudors.' (In Three Volumes.) Vols. I. and II.: 1603–1660. With 2 Maps. 8vo, 28s. net. (Inland postage 6d.)

Old Irish Folk Music and Songs; a Collection of 842 Irish Airs and Songs hitherto Unpublished.

Edited, with Annotations, for the Royal Society of Antiquaries of Ireland by P. W. JOYCE, M.R.I.A., President of the Society. Royal 8vo, 10s. 6d. net. (Inland postage 5d.)

NEW NOVEL OF COUNTRY LIFE BY THE AUTHOR OF 'MISS BADSWORTH, M.F.H.'

Polly Winford.

By EYRE HUSSEY. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"A really capital novel with a distinct sporting flavour about it."—Field.

TWO NEW VOLUMES OF THE SILVER LIBRARY.

Price 3s. 6d. each.

Lysbeth: a Tale of the Dutch.

By H. R. HAGGARD. With 26 Illustrations.

Pearl-Maiden: a Tale of the Fall of Jerusalem.

By H. R. HAGGARD. With 16 Illustrations.

LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.
39, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON, E.C.

A SELECTION FROM MR. T. FISHER UNWIN'S LIST

MODERN CONSTITUTIONS.

A Collection of the Fundamental Laws of Seventy-Two of the most important Countries of the World. With Historical Introductions, Notes, and Bibliographies by WALTER FAIRLEIGH DODD, Ph.D. 21s. 6d. net.

THE RISE AND PROGRESS OF THE SOUTH AMERICAN REPUBLICS.

By GEORGE W. CRICFIELD. Illustrated. 2 vols royal 8vo, 25s. net.

THE WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT, 1906.

By V. R. ARONSON. Demy 8vo, 15s. net.

TOWARDS SOCIAL REFORM.

By Canon and Mrs. BARNETT. Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

SOURCE BOOK IN ANCIENT PHILOSOPHY.

By CHARLES M. BAKEWELL, Professor of Philosophy in Yale University. Large crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d. net.

THE PANAMA CANAL AND ITS MAKERS.

By VAUGHAN CORNISH, D.Sc. F.R.G.S. With a Map and 63 Illustrations. Large crown 8vo, 5s.

ELIZA BRIGHTWEN.

The Life and Thoughts of a Naturalist.

Edited by W. H. CHESSON. With 2 Portraits and an Introduction by EDMUND GOSSE. Large crown 8vo, 5s. net.

HISTORY OF CIVILISATION.

By CHARLES SEIGNOBOS. Vol. I. ANCIENT CIVILISATION. II. MEDIAEVAL CIVILISATION. III. CONTEMPORARY CIVILISATION. 5s. net each volume.

THAT ROCK GARDEN OF OURS.

By Prof. F. E. HULME, F.L.S. F.S.A. With 8 Coloured Plates and 42 other Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

MYSTERIOUS PSYCHIC FORCES.

An Account of the Author's Investigations in Psychical Research, together with those of other European Savants. By CAMILLE FLAMMARION. With 21 Illustrations. 8s. 6d. net.

PSYCHICAL RESEARCH AND THE RESURRECTION.

By JAMES H. HYSLOP, Ph.D. LL.D. Large crown 8vo, 5s. net.

PSYCHOLOGICAL TEXT-BOOKS.

By CHARLES HUBBARD JUDD, Ph.D., Professor of Psychology, and Director of the Psychological Laboratory at Yale University.

1. PSYCHOLOGY—GENERAL INTRODUCTION.

Large crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d. net.

2. LABORATORY MANUAL OF PSYCHOLOGY.

Large crown 8vo, cloth, 4s. net.

3. LABORATORY EQUIPMENTS FOR PSYCHOLOGICAL EXPERIMENTS.

Large crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d. net.

CHEAP EDITIONS.

THE BRAHMANS, THEISTS, AND MUSLIMS OF INDIA.

By JOHN CAMPBELL OMAN, D.Lit. Illustrated. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

THE ECONOMIC INTERPRETATION OF HISTORY.

By Prof. J. E. THOROLD ROGERS. Large crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.

Uniform with Lord Morley's 'Life of Richard Cobden.'

ARMY REFORM AND OTHER ADDRESSES.

By the Rt. Hon. R. B. HALDANE, M.P. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.

'M.A.B.' (Mainly About Books).

A SPECIMEN COPY of MARCH ISSUE, the "How to be Happy though Married" Number, will be sent post free to any Address on request.

T. FISHER UNWIN, 1, Adelphi Terrace, London

SATURDAY, MARCH 13, 1909.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE
PRE-TRACTARIAN OXFORD	309
GEORGE CANNING AND HIS FRIENDS	310
ADAMSON ON GREEK PHILOSOPHY	311
MISS REPPLIER'S ESSAYS	311
NEW NOVELS (Tono-Bungay; The Royal End; Araminta; Fraternity; The Pilgrims' March) ..	312-313
DANTE AND HIS PREDECESSORS	313
OUR LIBRARY TABLE (The Public Health Agitation; Modern Constitutions; Memorials of Old Essex; Oriental Crime; Russian Essays and Stories; Modern English Biography; Wycliffe and the Lollards; Letters from an American Farmer; The English Catalogue of Books)	314-316
COLERIDGE ON EDUCATION; VILLON AND JOB; DR. PARR AND DR. URI	316-317
LIST OF NEW BOOKS	317
LITERARY GOSSIP	319
SCIENCE—CONQUERING THE ARCTIC ICE; SOCIETIES; MEETINGS NEXT WEEK; GOSSIP	320-321
FINE ARTS—THE POPULARIZATION OF ART; THE WORK OF THE ART SCHOOLS OF LONDON; OTHER EXHIBITIONS; NATIONAL GALLERY OF BRITISH ART; THE HORSE GUARDS PARADE; THE ARCHEOLOGICAL BUDGET OF ROME FOR 1903; SALES; GOSSIP; EXHIBITIONS	322-325
MUSIC—GOSSIP; PERFORMANCES NEXT WEEK	326-328
DRAMA—THE HEAD OF THE FIRM; STRIFE; GOSSIP	327-328
INDEX TO ADVERTISERS	328

LITERATURE

Pre-Tractarian Oxford. By the Rev. W. Tuckwell. (Smith, Elder & Co.)

THAT cheery and anecdotic veteran, the Rev. W. Tuckwell, once known as "the Radical parson" par excellence, is of the same mind as Dr. Johnson, though of different opinions: it is not the Whig, but the Tractarian, dogs whom he will not allow to have the best of it. So he starts, in his eightieth year, to revive the memories of pre-Tractarian Oxford, and show what can be said on behalf of men whom it has for some time been the literary fashion to decry. And as he was born in Oxford, where his father was long remembered as a cultivated doctor, he is able to recall all but one of those about whom he writes from his own memory. His aim is to show that these six ante-Tractarians were linked in opinion more than is now generally remembered, and were much better fellows than the world, since Dean Church and Canon Liddon wrote—not to mention Newman's 'Apologia'—has believed.

The first of his Noetics is Eveleigh, Provost of Oriel from 1781 to 1814; but really he has nothing to do with the tale, and he died fifteen years before Mr. Tuckwell was born. Nevertheless a very pleasant chapter is written upon him, derived chiefly from that forgotten book the Life of Bishop Daniel Wilson (and repeating some of its mistakes). It tells of the institution of Honour Examinations—not strictly a "Class List," as Mr. Tuckwell calls that of 1802; and it attributes to the new régime then inaugurated, with pardonable exaggeration, "a memorable uprising, sustained by some of the greatest names in Oxford history, destined after a period of eclipse to permeate English thought."

Then we pass to men more distinctly connected; and, indeed, it was high time that some one who remembers them should show that they were not worthy of all the abuse they have received. There has been too common an impression that the Latitudinarians who were so bitter in their attacks on Newman and his friends were men who accumulated preferments, enjoyed elaborate dinners, and dwelt peaceably in their comfortable habitations, disturbed only by an occasional, and ferocious, onslaught upon their enemies in the gate. It is true that some of them were comfortable, and some of them used very violent language. But they were kindly and sincere at heart, and if they had not grasped an elementary theory of toleration, it was not for their opponents to throw stones at them on that account. Mr. Tuckwell, from the published materials of the long controversy, even now not wholly dead, though insufferably arid; from his own memories of Oxford gossip; and especially from that mine of information on persons with whom it is not directly concerned, Dean Burgon's 'Twelve Good Men,' is able to write a very agreeable, kindly, and interesting volume. His hand has not lost its cunning. He can collect and arrange information that is worth remembering, and tells a story in a delightful way. If there is nothing particularly new in what he tells us, we are glad to have it all put together in this pleasant apologia of the Oxford Latitudinarians. That these worthy men were grossly maligned is shown by the saying of somebody, whose name shall be forgotten, that they "had no more religion than a tomcat." They certainly had a religion, though whether theirs or that of their opponents was nearer to that of the Church of England may be left to-day outside our decision. Probably Mr. Herbert Paul was right when he said that for Keble "the Church of England was exactly the right size"; for Dr. Arnold it certainly was not. We may leave the matter, where any careful reader of Mr. Tuckwell's book will leave it, by saying that it was not unnatural that Pusey should declare Hampden to be akin to a Socinian when he said that Unitarians had "precisely the same religious zeal and love for our Lord Jesus Christ" as "orthodox" Christians; and that reprisals were not unnatural from men who, Arnold declared, found their "perfect prototype" in "the enemies and revilers of the holiest names which earth reverences....condemned in the most emphatic language by that authority which all Christians acknowledge as divine."

It was indeed a period of strong language. The extract from Samuel Wilberforce's diary which Mr. Tuckwell quotes (with a curious misprint) is paralleled by the saying which is still remembered and quoted in Oxford, where a newly elected Fellow was told of one of his colleagues that he was "a man who the moment you take your foot off his neck will arise and spit in your face." And it is to the same college that both of these records belong—a college which justly boasted of seeking originality and force in the men whom it elected to its society. Originality and power, it seems, must be paid for. Copleston was willing to give the price, and he founded the tradition, which is still regarded, we believe, at the sister University, as "so like Oxford," whereby a man may be chosen, as were Whately, Newman, Hurrell Froude, Tom Mozley, and Clough, "against candidates of stronger prima facie claims."

Mr. Tuckwell is right in emphasizing a close connexion between his heroes, with the possible exception of Baden Powell. A correspondence, apparently unknown to him and still in manuscript, shows the very near association, at the time of the crisis of the Hampden controversy in 1847, between Copleston, Whately, Hawkins, and Hampden himself; while the position of Blanco White in regard to Whately is well known, and that of Arnold's genius in its wide influence needs no new record. All turned at a crisis to the clear, determined mind of Copleston, Bishop of Llandaff. He was one of the first to congratulate Hampden on his appointment to the See of Hereford, when neither of them foresaw the trouble that was to follow. "It is indeed a most happy termination of my Oxford labours and anxieties," wrote Hampden, in a letter now before us, dated Ch. Ch., Nov. 22, 1847; and he added:—

"You will be happy to learn that I have received much kindness from the authorities here, especially on this occasion, so that I shall leave even Oxford not without regret, though there may be some still whom unhappily nothing can soften."

Copleston steadily refused to join the bishops who protested against the appointment: we have the letters that passed between them. No doubt he agreed with Hawkins, who wrote three or four vigorous letters (still in manuscript) to him on the subject, which may be summed up in the Provost's words of December 5th: "I have never thought him particularly well qualified to be a Bishop; but he does not deserve these outrageous attacks upon him." And when Whately published his vigorous pamphlet 'Statements and Reflections respecting the Church and the Universities,' he wrote to Copleston:—

"It was you that taught me to think and to write, to a far greater degree than probably you are yourself aware, and to a greater degree, certainly than—I will not say, any one else, but—all others together."

These passages—and we could quote many more, from unpublished material of which Mr. Tuckwell is evidently ignorant—fully justify the view he takes of those whom he has brought together. We need hardly say that Mr. Tuckwell has made his characters stand out clearly, and that he has enlivened his record by many a merry tale. Perhaps the most original, as it is the longest, chapter in his book, is the account of Baden Powell, for which his widow and his daughter have supplied valuable reminiscences. From among his own memories we may select this—of Hawkins :—

"I remember once in Congregation his declaiming on 'the very arduous duties of a College Head.' Thorold Rogers caused great merriment by saying that he had no very clear idea of what the Provost's duties were, but that he would cheerfully discharge them for half the Provost's salary. 'It was the right thing to say, but it needed a brigand to say it,' was Moral Philosophy Wilson's comment to some of us who sate around him."

We do not doubt that the book, with its kindly, cheerful partisanship, will be widely read and soon reach a second edition. We may note, therefore, that it was in 1847 (not 1837) that Hampden was nominated to the See of Hereford, and that Pusey could not have come to bid Hawkins "a lugubrious, probably, he feared, a final, farewell" on "his resignation of the Headship," for Hawkins remained Provost of Oriel till the day of his death, November 18th, 1882.

George Canning and his Friends. Edited by Capt. Josceline Bagot. 2 vols. (John Murray.)

CAPT. BAGOT modestly, but correctly describes these volumes as a contribution to the definitive life of Canning which has yet to be written. They illustrate, but they present no finished portrait. The letters published by him tell us little that is new, for example, about the birth and brief existence of The Anti-Jacobin, though they give a curious sequel, namely, Canning's peremptory suppression of a proposal to publish an edition of the poetry with plates by Gillray. No fresh light, again, is thrown upon those very important events, the bombardment of Copenhagen and capture of the Danish fleet in 1807; and thus the story of Canning's first Foreign Secretaryship remains incomplete in an essential particular. Still, the general reader will find much to interest him in these fascinating pages, while the historical student will rise from them with the feeling that, though many points remain to be elucidated, he has yet gained a much more complete idea than was hitherto possible of a brilliant, but vulnerable statesman.

The recipients of Canning's letters with whom these volumes are chiefly concerned are John Sneyd, a member of the well-known Staffordshire family and a fox-hunting parson with a turn for political caricature, and Sir Charles Bagot, who, having served as Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs, became Ambassador at St. Petersburg and the Hague, and, after the death of his chief, Governor-General of Canada. Both of them had the merit of eliciting their friend's innermost thoughts. But, though we learn much from the earlier chapters of Canning's views at the outset of his career, such as his conviction that a "garrison government" could not subsist long in Ireland, the interest is mainly social and literary. Those were the brave days of The Anti-Jacobin, and Capt. Bagot prints for the first time several pieces in that vein. Of them a 'Prospectus for the Royal Institution,' by Canning and Frere, makes excellent fun of Count Rumford's zeal for abstract science and practical inventions :

'Tis time at length that abstract science
With useful art should form alliance—
Should quit her academic leisure,
To dig, and spin, to gage and measure.
Turning the abstract law to practical,
Should teach mankind in strain didactical
The art of mending chairs and mats,
Of frying sausages and sprats :
How shining ploughshares turn the ground up,
How watches make a noise when wound up.

Their most elaborate jest, however, the 'Musæ Cateatonensis,' in which they were assisted by the Ellises, must frankly be described as having been too long in bottle. Hayward aroused expectations of this imaginary narrative, in the manner of Swift, of a visit paid by Dr. Legge, the butt of the set, and Lord Boringdon to a non-existent chapel in Cateaton Street, now Gresham Street, which the laboured humours of the production cannot be said to realize. There is a neat touch or two, such as "So I told my stories No. 13, No. 58, and No. 97 in pretty rapid succession." But after Legge had become Dean of Windsor, Pitt retailed a much better joke on him than any in the 'Musæ' :—

"Pitt knows a man who heard him—the Dean—preach on this text, 'Now, behold all these things I have told you before.'"

Lady Malmesbury, who admired Canning, wrote of him in 1801 that "he has contrived to make himself so unpopular by that most horrid of vices, quizzing, that he has more enemies than anybody living." Her husband, it will be remembered, recorded much the same opinion in his diary. The failing was most glaring, of course, during the days of the Addington Administration, when Canning's attacks on the "Doctor" passed all bounds, and sowed the seeds of hostilities which pursued him to the grave.

But we must pass on to the feeble Tory Ministries which succeeded that of Grenville and Fox. Bagot, not Sneyd, now becomes Canning's principal correspondent in these volumes; and, as might be expected, while the political interest increases, the wit declines. Still we get the famous dispatch to Bagot,

In matters of commerce the fault of the Dutch
Is offering too little and asking too much, the authentic version of which is given; and such strokes as "Pelly (from Pellis, a skin)," the said Pelly being chairman of the Hudson's Bay Company, and this sarcasm at the expense of a diplomatist who set an extravagant value on his own services :—

"Even if there were not this difficulty in the way of his acceptance of the Swedish mission, I should be loth, after what he says of his health, to press to Mr. P. to accept of it, as a Red Ribband (however broad) would be but a slight defence against the climate."

Canning's strength and weakness stand clearly revealed in his correspondence with Bagot. As Foreign Secretary he kept the threads of policy firmly in his hands, and knew exactly what he wanted and how to get it. His conception of "calling the New World into existence to redress the balance of the Old" had been matured long before he gave utterance to that telling phrase, and in the face of countless difficulties he laid the foundations of an independent Greece. To his subordinates he was considerate and open, though he descended on them with severity when they blundered, as Bagot himself was to discover. But Canning was not a good colleague in a Ministry. His editor, who has evidently bestowed much thought on his correspondence, does not scruple here and there to use the ugly word "intrigue." It is, we fear, the only word that fits some of Canning's transactions. The finger cannot be laid on any one point in the quarrel with Castlereagh at which he committed an unworthy action; but the whole business conveys the idea of a man playing for his own hand, though sincerely believing, no doubt, that the public good was involved in his winning the game. What did Bagot think? What were people saying? Was this phrase the one to use, or would that be better? Such were the outpourings of this sensitive and irritable great man. Still, it is important to remember that if Canning did not suffer fools gladly, he had to contend with an unconscionable amount of folly, and that both the Tory and Whig aristocracies persisted in regarding the actress's son as an adventurer who must be kept in his place like Croker or Tierney. Canning would be servant to no man, not even to Pitt.

When the Premiership fell to Canning at last, his health was frail and the political situation impossible. He wrote but little to Bagot during those harassing days, though he offered his friend the Governor-Generalship of India, and announced that he had recommended Bagot's brother for the Deanery of Canterbury, an unabashedly political appointment. But George Ellis and others wrote; and a most moving picture is presented of their extravagant hopes, their growing fears, and their bitter grief when all was over. "His enemies have succeeded in killing him at last," said a doctor at Chiswick House.

Want of space prohibits us from commenting on Bagot's other correspondents, beyond making the remark that the third Lord Lyttelton is perhaps the most pungent of them, Lord Strangford the most indiscreet. As for Capt. Bagot's editing, it is most ably done, though he might have curbed a tendency to repeat himself in the foot-notes. The dragoman at Constantinople was Pisani, not "Pisain" (vol. i. p. 299). George Lamb was candidate for Westminster, not his brother William (vol. ii. p. 91). "A Mr. Randolph" is an odd way of describing the famous American orator Randolph of Roanoke (vol. ii. p. 301). Capt. Bagot adopts the story that Fox and Canning died in the same room at Chiswick House; but the local tradition certainly is that Fox died in a room to the west of the portico, and Canning in a room to the east, overlooking a remnant of an older building, now known as the Grosvenor wing.

The Development of Greek Philosophy.
By Robert Adamson. Edited by W. R. Sorley and R. P. Hardie. (Blackwood & Sons.)

IN this volume we have reproduced the substance of various courses of lectures upon Greek philosophy delivered some eight or ten years ago by the late Prof. Adamson. Those already familiar with the name of the author will expect to find here the results of vigorous, acute, and independent thinking, as well as of wide erudition, and they will not be disappointed. It is safe to say that no work of equal importance, covering the same ground and dealing with the same aspect of the subject, has appeared, in this country at least, for many years past. The ground covered reaches from the beginnings of scientific thinking down to, and including, the speculations of the Stoics; while the point of view from which it is surveyed is that of the critic of philosophy in the stricter sense of the term. Indeed, the value of the book depends in great measure upon this limitation; since to have attempted within the compass of 300 pages to give a detailed account of all the thinkers here mentioned could have served no useful purpose. The proportions of Prof. Adamson's exposition may be sufficiently indicated by the statement that to pre-Platonic philosophy he assigns about 90 pages; to Plato, 60; to Aristotle, 100; and to the Stoics, 40. Undoubtedly the most important divisions of the book are those which deal with the greatest thinkers, Plato and Aristotle.

In regard to the interpretation of Plato, the author lays considerable stress on the evidence of Aristotle in so far as it implies a divergence between earlier and later Platonism, and he accepts the view which places such dialogues as the 'Sophist,' 'Philebus,' and 'Timæus' among his latest works. A separate and valuable chapter is devoted to Plato's 'Doctrine of the Soul,' in which it is argued—as against Jowett, Prof. Jackson, and Lutoslawski—that “so far as the dialogues exclusive of the 'Timæus' are concerned, there seems no reason for assigning to Plato the view that the ideas are in any way dependent on the soul.” It is to be hoped that Prof. Adamson's authority will help to discredit the perverse interpretations which seek to dissipate the objective idea. In the discussion here given of the 'Parmenides,' comparatively brief though it is, there is contained the germ and substance of all that can profitably be said on the matter; for whether the author was right or wrong in identifying Plato's critics and opponents with the Megarians mainly and Antisthenes, there can be little doubt that he was right in rejecting the theory that Plato's weapons are aimed against himself. Another controverted passage in which the author, like Zeller, finds a reference to the Megarian School is the well-known place in the 'Sophist' where “friends of the ideas” are mentioned; in fact, it is a somewhat noteworthy feature of the exposition that it attaches a much higher degree of importance than is usual with English scholars to the speculations of Euclides and Antisthenes and their influence on Plato.

As with Plato, so with Aristotle. Prof. Adamson, confining himself in the main to the leading conceptions in metaphysics, epistemology, and psychology, gives us a presentment which is peculiarly suggestive and informing. It is pointed out with much clearness and force how Aristotle, in spite of his attitude of critical superiority towards Platonism, does not really improve upon it in any material respect, and wholly fails to weld into a consistent unity his theory of being, of knowledge, or of the soul. Especially interesting, in this connexion, is the criticism here passed on the Aristotelian theory of reason, which is discussed at considerable length; and there is much to be said for the conclusion thus stated by the author: “To that question [regarding the relation which subsists between vous in man and the divine vous] I am convinced no answer can be extracted from Aristotle himself.”

The Epicurean School is passed over in silence, obviously because there is so little in its distinctive tenets that is of philosophical importance; whereas considerable space is given to the physics, ethics, and epistemology of Stoicism. Here, too, by means of discarding less important details, the author succeeds in giving an admirably lucid and satisfactory account of the salient features of the system, and at the same time finds room to investigate at sufficient length such of the more difficult problems of interpretation as are of primary importance for the understanding of the philosophical position.

The treatment of the earlier philosophy, to which we must now revert, is marked by the same characteristics. Thinkers like Anaximander, Parmenides, and Heraclitus present many difficulties to the historian, partly because of the insufficiency of the evidence, partly, too, because of the lack of method and consistency in their theorizing. The temptation of the expositor is to force the disjecta membra into an organized system, and to make of these pioneers of thinking expert doctrinaires. Prof. Adamson is saved by his robust common sense from falling into this temptation: he eschews the excess of expository vigour and rigour. As an example of this may be cited his treatment of the puzzling theories of Anaximander and of the Pythagoreans, where the conclusions stated, if not wholly satisfactory, are at least free from any suspicion of bias or narrowness of view. Amongst other important and controverted matters where students will be glad to learn the matured views of so competent a critic are those regarding the fundamental doctrine of Parmenides and the Protagorean doctrine of “man the measure.” It is argued—against Zeller and others who virtually identify Parmenides's being and non-being with full and empty space—that “the Eleatic doctrine is correctly described as metaphysical” (p. 36); while, as against Gomperz, the “man” of the Protagorean dictum is construed as “man in his concrete individuality.” Of other points of interest in the exposition of pre-Platonic thought, it must suffice here to emphasize once again the attention paid to the epistemology of Antisthenes, and to the atomic “idealism” of the Megaric school.

It may be added that, although references to the literature of the subject are comparatively rare, it is abundantly evident throughout that the author was well versed in the views of both modern and ancient authorities, and added the quality of erudition to his singular gifts of mental acumen and soundness of judgment. The full index of authorities and subject-indexes add to the value of the book.

A Happy Half-Century, and other Essays.

By Agnes Repplier. (Gay & Hancock.)

AMONG the most agreeable of essayists on the other side of the Atlantic Miss Repplier has long taken her place. She occupies a position which in some respects is analogous to that of Mr. Birrell in this country; yet one doubts if that statement does her full justice. She has at least the extreme readableness of Mr. Birrell, whom W. E. Henley once dubbed “the agreeable rattle.”

This volume of papers concerns various aspects of life and letters in the fifty years between 1775 and 1825. Miss Repplier characterizes this period as a happy half-century, on the ground that the fortunate people born within its sphere of influence made reputations very easily. It is difficult, on looking back over the names on the page of literature of that time, to deny this. It has been impossible to sustain the fame of ‘Evelina’; Hannah More's ‘Percy,’ a tragedy, “melted the heart of London,” and “twenty thousand copies of ‘Coelebs in search of a Wife’ were sold in England, and thirty thousand in America.” Even in those days did America bear a reputation for generous patronage. Mrs. Barbauld, Mrs. Opie, Mrs. Hemans, Mrs. Boscawen, Miss Porter, Elizabeth Ogilvy Benger, Miss Seward the Swan, Miss Joanna Baillie, “the female Shakespeare of her age,” according to Campbell—the list of faded names is lengthy and awe-inspiring. Of course Miss Edgeworth and Miss Austen are excepted. Yet if one faces the problem boldly, it must be confessed that in all likelihood contemporary nonentities are engaged at this moment in achieving equally misplaced admiration and popularity. Some witty satirist, like Miss Repplier, fifty years hence may look back with amiable cynicism at many of our immortal reputations of to-day. Nothing is more surprising in literary history than the misjudgments even of eminent critics. “When ‘Lalla Rookh’ was young,” Blackwood announced that “Moore was familiar, not only ‘with the grandest regions of the human soul’...but also with the remotest boundaries of the East.” All enlightened spirits, it declared, "hailed the beauty and magnificence of 'Lalla Rookh.'" Miss Repplier "chaffs" in the most delicate way, and with pretty humour, the affected epistles of our great-grandmothers with their longwinded and dreamy sententiousness. What a period of humbug it was! Cowper's very natural and charming letters were received with horror, as being without "imagination or eloquence." Miss Carter (by courtesy Mrs.), whose opistolary style was much admired, "would have scorned to take a walk by the sea. She 'chased the ebbing Neptune.'" Miss Carter's correspondence was issued in nine volumes, and Miss Repplier acutely observes of her:—

"When Miss Carter took a country walk, she did not stoop to observe the trivial things she saw. Apparently she never saw anything. What she described were the sentiments and emotions awakened in her by a featureless principle called Nature. Even the ocean—which is too big to be overlooked—started her on a train of moral reflections, in which she passed easily from the grandeur of the elements to the brevity of life, and the paltriness of earthly ambitions. 'How vast are the capacities of the soul, and how little and contemptible its aims and pursuits!' With this original remark, the editor of the letters (a nephew and a clergyman) was so delighted that he added a pious comment of his own: 'If such be the case, how strong and conclusive is the argument deduced from it, that the soul must be destined to another state more suitable to its views and powers. It is much to be lamented that Mrs. Carter did not pursue this line of thought any further.'"

The manners and tastes of the period are fair game for Miss Repplier, who undoubtedly has a congenial theme. She is appreciative, however, of outstanding genius. Apparently she is a fervent admirer of Byron, from whom she turns to pour satirical scorn on Dr. Grainger's poem 'The Sugar-Cane,' and Dyer's 'Fleece,' and the Rev. Richard Polwhele's 'English Orator.' Alas! the slopes of Parnassus have harboured many such, and still harbour. Some day we shall get another such amusing pillory of the literary lights and impostors of to-day.

NEW NOVELS.

Tono-Bungay. By H. G. Wells. (Macmillan & Co.)

OUT of the many products of a rich and generous literary life, only three books stand in Mr. Wells's name as real novels. 'Tono-Bungay' is the third. From certain indications it would almost be inferred that the writer designs to devote himself in the future to the novel. If he does so, we think at this stage of his career he will have chosen wisely. He has possibly exhausted his fund of scientific romance, and human life is inexhaustible. How full it may be, and how varied, is demonstrated in 'Tono-Bungay.' The author's aim, as he confesses, has been to set down life as one man has found it. Mr. Wells is aware that his method of narration, not to mention his art, is open to criticism, and he frankly tells us that he does not care if it is. He is going to allow himself liberty for disquisitions, room for divagations, and licence for asides. He is going to write down what he has seen and what occurs to him just as he likes. The result is that the book is a little amorphous and a little long. It is kept a unity by the personality of George Ponderevo, who relates the story of his life with the deliberation of the older style of fiction.

George begins his autobiography in the housekeeper's room at Bladesover, and describes his retreat thence in disgrace to his cousin the baker at Chatham, a godly household, and subsequently to his uncle the chemist, who was afterwards destined to invent the great patent medicine, "Tono-Bungay." All this is exceedingly interesting, as is George's account of his courtship of Marion, a neutral style of good woman in whom Mr. Wells always manages to infuse life and being. The rise and fall of Tono-Bungay form a fascinating narrative, with obstinate incursions by the narrator into other matters. George (or is it Mr. Wells?) wants to pass judgment on many things, including the fabric of society, and his sense of satire and irony makes him a good commentator. We are not wholly convinced of the episode of Beatrice Normandy, a girl of high birth, whose playmate he had been in his boyhood; and we were somewhat discomfited by the adventurous expedition to Africa in search of "Quap." But though we do not accept the Beatrice episode as quite genuine, we must confess Mr. Wells handles it emotionally and with resolute masterfulness. The whole novel is pregnant with Mr. Wells's ideas and criticisms. If it is George Ponderevo's life here, it is much of Mr. Wells's mind that is exhibited, provocative of thought, challenging, facile and fertile of ideas, and penetratingly imaginative. The persons of the narrative are warm human persons, whether seen in slight sketches such as those of the housekeeper, or Nicodemus Frapp and his family, or set forth in deeper tones and colours, like Edward Ponderevo with his small brain and practical aspiring soul, his wife, an admirable figure, and Marion, as has been already remarked. Mr. Wells's style of narrative gets more abrupt and parenthetical, but there is no denying that if his mannerisms have grown, so also has his manner, and that has resulted in a very fine novel.

The Royal End. By Henry Harland. (Hutchinson & Co.)

"'THERE!' she exclaimed, 'I'm tired.' 'And so am I,' said the transcriber, laying down the pen." This close to a chapter towards the end of Mr. Harland's posthumous novel has a pathetic ring. The book is offered to us as the last the author wrote, and it was evidently composed during his years of ill-health. But for all that it is characteristic of him, gay, irresponsible, volatile, witty, and audacious. The plot is of no consideration, for plots never were to Mr. Harland. Give him any trivial incident, and he could embroider it with talk and fancy. He had an insatiable appetite for the delicacies of romance, and he liked to depict life, as he tried always to see it, as a fairy tale. In this fairy tale there are a Prince, an Englishman of good lineage, a beautiful American heiress, and a useful "property" dog, besides other auxiliaries. If the fairy tale lacks at times the spontaneity of its predecessors, and is a little less bright and less neat of wit, that is attributable doubtless to the conditions under which it was written. Nevertheless it is an agreeable and entertaining romance, the slightness of which will not concern the admirers of the author's work.

Araminta. By J. C. Snaith. (Smith, Elder & Co.)

WE suppose that the author of 'Broke of Covenden' would be the first to admit that his latest story was not intended altogether seriously. It is more or less of a merry extravaganza. Yet there are things in it which relate it to the remarkably clever novel which we have mentioned; as, for example, the studied portraits of two peers—George, Duke of Brancaster, and the Earl of Cheriton. Mr. Snaith, like Mr. Meredith, is exceedingly happy in his renderings of the aristocrat. On the other hand, Caroline, Countess of Crewkerne, loses a little reality in the necessary atmosphere of the extravaganza. However, the extravaganza does depend not on these people, but on Araminta herself, who is six feet high, as beautiful as her famous ancestress the Duchess of Dorset whom Gainsborough painted, and has the brains of a goose. Mr. Snaith has pushed the ingénue beyond the borders of our faith, but he has made the results amusing. Indeed, there is only one objection we have to his story, and that is in the volte-face which he makes Cheriton take. Probably the old gentleman was making a pretence all along. The conclusion will be most agreeable to tender-hearted readers, but we do not credit it. However, this is an extravaganza, and a most entertaining one.

Fraternity. By John Galsworthy. (Heinemann.)

MR. GALSWORTHY is undoubtedly very much in earnest—as much so, although after a somewhat different fashion, as Mr. Richard Whiteing. His methods are essentially such as George Eliot might have described as "gründlich"; and his devotion to minute detail strikes the reader as almost superfluously meticulous. In 'Fraternity' he appears to hesitate between narrative and a treatise on sociology, taking up the alternate threads deftly and carefully enough, but with no presentment of a convincing or harmonious whole. As a novel this elaborate study of upper middle-class life and the life of mean streets can hardly be considered a success; while, on the sociological side, it throws no illumination upon the problems of philanthropy or caste.

The most prominent figure is that of an aged man of science and philosopher who has outlived human emotions, and whose intellect, clouded by age, has one strong objective only—the completion of a monumental work on universal brotherhood. Round this clever but painful portrait circle the other characters: the estranged married couple, the waif with a past who comes to complete their disunion, the distressed seamstress and her brutal husband, and the rest. The most interesting and sympathetic figure in the book is the superannuated butler, with his kindliness of heart and his undying self-respect.

The Pilgrims' March. By H. H. Bashford. (Melrose.)

It is a pleasure to turn to Mr. Bashford's novel after a long course of the conventional fiction of to-day. His tale is by no means without flaw, but it is at least individual, shows more thought, and has a new point of view. Moreover, it is emotionally interesting. It seems to have derived in its beginnings from a first-hand knowledge of studio life, which it has been Mr. Bashford's design to throw into contrast with an extreme modern Puritanism. There is no doubt on which side the author's sympathies lie, yet his picture of the Wing household, devoted to good works, and overcome by the necessity of faith, is singularly sympathetic. Mr. Wing, his son Peter, Betty his handsome daughter, all of whom have found salvation, are human, intelligible, and friendly figures—so much so that when Betty in her crisis exclaims that she and hers in their pursuit of salvation have never really known human affection, we cannot quite follow her. It is true that their boundaries were narrow, but they themselves were genuine and kindly. On the other hand Mr. Bashford has idealized his hero to a point at which we demur. It would be unfair and untrue to suggest that Judy, because she was a model and a living statue, was necessarily unchaste; but it is a big presumption that she was so "white-souled" as her innocent coterie of artist friends imagined her. And a young man who drew from the model, even if he had found salvation, would hardly have remained ignorant of the main issues of sexual life, as apparently Robin was. Yet notwithstanding its defects the novel is very engaging. It is alive, and it has feeling.

DANTE AND HIS PREDECESSORS.

The Paradise. By Dante Alighieri. Translated by F. I. Fraser. (Bath, S. W. Simms.)—Miss Fraser introduces her translation of the 'Paradise' in these words:—

"It is possible that this rough, but conscientious, versed [sic] rendering, made for her own help as she read the Paradiso, by one familiar from childhood [sic] with Italian and Italian idioms, may be of help also to other English students of the Divine Comedy."

That is the excuse which one has seen for the publication of a great many similar exercises; and in most cases it is based on a misunderstanding. To translate, on paper, conscientiously, is no doubt an admirable discipline for the student; and a few verse translations have been real additions to literature. But they have owed in this respect more to the translator's mastery of his own language than to any specially intimate knowledge of that from which he translated. Indeed, it may almost be said that those which are best to read are the least likely to be of service to students of the original text, whom the baldest prose version, if accurate, is far more likely to help to the understanding of what he wants to make out. Cary, though Miss Fraser calls one of his renderings ludicrous—it is perfectly right, but that is a detail—is always pleasant to read; but we should rather send the student to, say, Prof. Norton or Mr. Tozer. We do not mean to imply that their versions are bald, but they are honest prose. But Miss Fraser's rendering, though better than some we know of, is neither prose nor poetry.

As to familiarity with modern Italian, Miss Fraser herself presently points out that it "does little more than show the difficulty of studying Dante"—which is perhaps why most of his modern Italian commentators help us so little. Her own notes do not advance matters much; several English commentaries are safer guides than Costa and Scartazzini. In Canto ii. 107 "soggetto" certainly does not mean "water." It is merely what "lay beneath the snow." How can water be called the "soggetto" in any sense of snow? Besides, the water would have dried up or run away. The difficult argument of iv. 70 Miss Fraser misapprehends. There is no "ought not" about it; the point is—this is a matter not of faith, but of argument, and as you can apprehend it, I will prove it. Of another passage she says: "This is perhaps the safest rendering of this bitter example of the cloudier expression of a theory in itself cloudy." This suggests that she has not tried to understand it; but it is hardly the spirit in which to expound a work of the highest genius. A few lines before, we wonder what idea the words "potentiated complexion" convey to her mind. To interpret xv. 142 as referring to any "rule of the Saracens in Southern Italy" is to fly in the face of chronology. What "rule in Southern Italy" had the Saracens under the Angevin Kings of Naples? The allusion is, of course, to the Holy Land; and "vostro" applies to Christians generally. We had marked sundry other blunders; but these will serve as samples. The translation does not, on the whole, run badly, though too many lines end with prepositions, auxiliary verbs, relatives, and the like. There is something comical in Miss Fraser's way of omitting, or leaving in the original, as if they were improper, various passages relating to the Virgin. She is probably not aware that the most beautiful of all was beautifully rendered by Chaucer, though, if we mistake not, the despised Cary could have taught her.

Dante Alighieri: Vita Nova. Traduite par Henry Cochin. (Paris, Champion.)—France has done less for the study of Dante than any other of the great civilized nations of the world, though he was put into a not over-well-fitting French garb as early as the reign of Henry IV., some two hundred years before any similar attempt was made in England. Seventy years or more ago, Faurtel and Ozanam, it is true, studied him lovingly and learnedly, one from the historical and linguistic, the other from the theological and ethical points of view. In the subsequent years of the last century a few translations of the whole or parts of the 'Commedia,' and two, it would seem, of the 'Vita Nuova,' none of them very notable, appeared. It would not be difficult, we think, to show why Dante has appealed so little to French sentiment; but this is not the place to do it, nor to say why, in spite of an occasional work like the present, he is never likely to be in so great esteem with French readers as with English, American, and German—to say nothing of M. Cochin, who, however, though he speaks handsomely enough of some English and other scholars, has derived his inspiration from the Italian school—not always the best model. The result is a tendency to prolixity, and a way of debating at length points which a slight application of literary common sense would at once decide. At the same time he does not always set himself to tackle the real puzzles. Thus, in the famous crux at the very beginning, "i quali non sapeano che si chiamare," he first mistranslates the words ("qui ne savaient pas comment l'appeler"), and next gives two pages to telling what other people have made of it, what he himself had thought of saying (which seems very near the right thing), and then says how he was deterred by the opinions of Messrs. Novati and Flamini, good men, but not infallible. The meaning wanted is clearly "who did not know the true reason for calling her so"; the words, to our thinking, can only mean "who only knew so to call her." Surely here, if ever, a little emendation is permissible. A discussion as to whether the river by which Dante went on one occasion was the same as that along which he had ridden on a former occasion seems to belong to the same category as the famous question about Juliet's nurse's husband. M. Cochin's French wit enables him to see how exquisitely natural a touch we have in the scene "auquel se sont fort complu les commentateurs" in chap. xiv., where Beatrice and the other ladies make fun of the lovelorn young poet. But here he cannot abstain from a long note, and appeals to the "courtly poets" for support. We cannot imagine what he means when he says elsewhere that Dante "never considered that the Italian vernacular of his time was derived from the ancient Latin." He calls it vulgare Latinum. The book is nicely got up, and forms a real addition to Dante literature, and one which was needed. By the way, the reading viso for viso in Canz. xi. l. 74 was in the Oxford edition fourteen years ago.

Italian Poets, chiefly before Dante. Translated by D. G. Rossetti. (Stratford-on-Avon, Shakespeare Head Press.)—A reprint of Rossetti's 'Early Italian Poets' with the Italian text would, if done intelligently, and with attention to the results of recent investigation and criticism, be of some advantage to students of early Italian literature, including Dante, who cannot always be understood without some knowledge of the poetic literature of the two or three generations before his own. Unluckily this anonymous edition has been prepared, as it would seem, by some one totally unacquainted with anything that has been done since the middle of the last century. Rossetti's Introduction has been reproduced verbatim, with all the absurd errors in dates and other details in which he followed Valeriani, Trucchi, and Nannucci—excellent men, but wholly prescientific in these matters. In a 'Publisher's Note' giving the works from which the Italian texts are taken, the latest is Trucchi's selection, published in 1846: a book for which students are grateful, but which they know to be wholly uncritical. Of D'Ancona, Monaci, Bartoli, Carducci, the editor does not appear to have heard.

OUR LIBRARY TABLE.

MISS B. L. HUTCHINS, who probably did not know her hero, has contrived to make a readable and useful book out of Edwin Chadwick. Bentham, more than any other man, stamped his ideas upon a century of legislation. Those of his disciples who were the most closely associated with the most personal among Bentham's ideas, Sir John Bowring and Edwin Chadwick, also influenced our statesmen and Parliaments, but unfortunately they were "bores" of the Social Science order, abhorred of Disraeli and of society. Men who knew them are unable to escape from the pernicious habit of disregard forced on the young mind by fashion. It is left for the next generation to discover the deities who in their own time were stoned. To no men more than to two of those commemorated in The Public Health Agitation, 1833-48 (Fifield), Chadwick and Sir John Simon, is due the present fabric of Public Health Acts in this and other civilized countries. The new point in the volume of Miss Hutchins is her discovery and proof that the historic inventors of our factory legislation wished to spoil their own code by omitting all provision for inspection. It is rumoured at the present moment that the Board of Trade in taking from the Home Office all its Bills desires to attain its end by methods of conciliation, without a clear view as to how to enforce by penalty. Miss Hutchins shows that "it was the principle of inspectability, transmitted from Bentham through Chadwick, which first made the Factory Act effective." But then Miss Hutchins is able to write: "Of Chadwick's personality it is not easy to form a definite idea." With touching frankness and modesty she adds: "It does not appear that he was either a great speaker or a great writer." Chadwick was great in energy; and in energy alone. But he literally bored Cabinets and Parliaments into terrified and mute acceptance of his decrees. Lord Shaftesbury sat by and let inspection be forced on him by Chadwick's order: "Lord Ashley, in replying, said he would concur with the proposal for inspectors." Miss Hutchins by her research tempts us into expression of a desire that she would turn her mind to the delightful by-ways of historical discovery. In referring to Bentham's maxim that maintenance by others should not be made pleasanter than self-maintenance, she quotes 'History of the War between Jeremy Bentham and George III.' There never was a counter-stroke based on a sounder foundation than "the attack... aimed at Mr. Chadwick, who was loudly charged with being a doctrinaire and a centraliser." The impression left on an audience addressed by Chadwick resembled that of an unregenerate Jewish monarch when listening to a minor prophet. Each lecture was a prolonged imprecation.

WE have received two volumes by Mr. Walter F. Dodd entitled Modern Constitutions, published by the University of Chicago, and in London by Mr. Fisher Unwin. The book contains the Constitutions of some score among the leading Powers of the world. Certain of the foundation or ground laws most frequently quoted as containing unusual clauses, or unique examples of new principles, are wanting in the present work. Students of the British Empire will complain of the omission of one Dominion Constitution, and of the words made use of in reference to the Commonwealth of Australia: "New Zealand still remains aloof from the Federation." If the map is consulted and the distance measured, reasons will not be wanting why New Zealand should remain connected with its archipelago in the Pacific, and not be brought within a common Dominion Constitution with the continent of Australia and its Tasmanian island or dependencies. Among omitted Constitutions of special interest we note that of at least one Australian State, the former Colony of South Australia, possessing as it does one feature peculiar to itself. South Australia, moreover, led the way in at least three other Constitutional experiments, now widely followed not only in Australia, but also throughout the world. Recent references to one of these (adult suffrage with female eligibility, in which the Commonwealth has followed the example of South Australia) will make some turn to the Commonwealth Constitution. It is with difficulty that we discover, in provisions seemingly intended to mislead, the removal of the disabilities of sex and marriage. In the earlier parts of the Commonwealth Constitution the Senate is first provided; and it is laid down that the laws in force in each State for elections "for the more numerous House of Parliament" shall apply to elections of Senators for the State. As regards eligibility, the qualifications "of a Senator shall be those of a member of the House of Representatives." When we come to Part III., we find that a member of the House of Representatives must be an elector entitled to vote at the election for that House or "a person qualified to become such elector." In Part IV. it is stated that no adult person who has or acquires a right to vote at elections for the more numerous House of the Parliament of a State shall be prevented from voting at Commonwealth elections. That all this means adult suffrage and complete eligibility is finally conceded in the seventh part, where, as a temporary provision, it is enacted that until the qualification of electors becomes uniform throughout the Commonwealth, only half the electors "shall be counted" in the States in which adult suffrage prevails. The book of Mr. Dodd is a little wooden, and as a result those interested in Swiss institutions, now much in the mind of Constitution-makers, will fail to understand, from the terms of the Constitution as printed in the second volume, the actual working of these remarkable federal institutions.

Memorials of Old Essex. Edited by A. Clifton Kelway. (Bemrose & Sons.)—The latest of the series of "County Memorials" is certainly one of the best that have been issued. The editor contents himself with giving a very brief sketch of historic Essex, but it is full of well-digested information. The Roman occupation has left its stamp in many a part of Essex in a way which can scarcely be overlooked by even the casual observer who has once mastered the characteristic appearance of Roman brickwork. It is here stated by Mr. Guy Maynard, who writes on Essex of this period, that no fewer than thirty-five churches have Roman tiles in their walls, showing that the ruins of such buildings must have been adjacent when these churches were built. Considerable observation of the churches of this county convinces us, however, that this estimate is too small; Roman tiles can be detected in at least sixty churches. The discovery of actual Roman remains has been chronicled in above one hundred and fifty parishes of the county. These traces of an occupation which extended over some four centuries are far more agricultural and commercial than official or military. Camulodunum (Colchester) was a wealthy and populous Roman town of the first class, as is proved by the enormous quantity of Roman remains found therein, and also by the size and extent of its walls, which enclosed over a hundred acres, and were a mile and three-quarters in circuit. Essex is a stoneless county so far as building material is concerned, so that the erection of these substantial walls was, as Mr. Maynard explains in detail, a remarkable achievement. The sea cliffs were quarried for the concretionary nodules of hard carbonate of lime, called "septaria," which are found in the London clay. These were transported to the town, and cut into rectangular blocks. Enormous quantities of thin bricks or building tiles had to be made, each, it is said, taking in the various processes of moulding, burning, and drying five years to perfect. Ruined buildings were demolished to provide rubble for the interior of the wall; and lime, pebbles, brick dust, broken tiles, sand, and grit had to be furnished in vast quantities, and mixed together in careful proportions to produce the time-defying Roman mortar. The foundations—a dense mass of flints, septaria, and mortar, three feet thick and eleven feet wide—were carefully laid on the gravelly soil of the site. Above this the wall was built eight to ten feet thick and over twenty feet high.

The most important of the few memorial inscriptions discovered at Colchester occurs on a finely sculptured stone which bears the effigy of a Roman centurion, in richly-decorated armour, within a shallow niche. The words beneath the figure state that it is a memorial to Marcus Favonius, a centurion of the Twentieth Legion, erected by Verecundus and Novitius, his freedmen.

The questions of the Roman roads, the various villa residences, and the burial sites are discussed in this essay with considerable knowledge. We are inclined to think that this is on the whole the best article in the volume.

The great interest now taken in ecclesiastical development in every part of England is well illustrated by the articles on the ancient churches of Essex, as well as the monastic houses and monumental brasses. Dr. Cox writes on 'The Forest Records of Essex,' Mr. Kingston on 'Essex and the Civil War,' and Mr. Fell Smith on 'Historic Houses.' The last of these articles deals chiefly with Audley End, New Hall, and Layer Marney; but the subject in such a county as Essex, abounding in picturesque old mansions, is far too large to be crowded into some twenty pages. 'Deneholes' are dealt with in a fairly comprehensive manner by Mr. Reader. Fresh interest has recently been aroused in connexion with these remarkably excavations in chalk districts, by further discoveries of their presence in widely different localities, particularly in the neighbourhood of Gravesend. Deneholes have been long known in Essex, owing to the systematic excavation of a large group which were found in Hangman's Wood, Grays, in 1884-7. These holes or pits are subject to considerable variation both in size and arrangement, but they all have a vertical shaft leading from the surface, the base of which opens out into a chamber or cluster of chambers. Mr. Reader concludes that the explanation of deneholes as mere mines for chalk is the most reasonable and consistent with the ascertained facts; but we may call attention to an article by Mr. Philip in The Reliquary of July, 1908. It is therein argued that they were "silos" or underground granaries, a system of storage still in use in certain parts of the Continent, and finding its modern parallel in the potato- or turnip-pits of the present time.

There are one or two other articles in the volume which are not of so much merit, such as the 'Dunmow Flitch,' a subject which has become thoroughly hackneyed by frequent treatment, and not a little vulgarized by its modern revival. Another paper which might well have been omitted for something more substantial and original is a sketchy account of Essex worthies. Brief records are, perhaps, inevitable in a book of this size, but they strike us as particularly unsatisfactory when they involve a partial selection of a well-known and wide-reaching field.

Oriental Crime. By H. L. Adam. (Werner Laurie.)—Having written a 'Story of Crime' in the West, Mr. Adam has performed a similar task with respect to Eastern crime. But here he is seriously hampered by the lack of personal observation. Apparently, he has not been in India; and when the Librarian of the India Office informed him that to deal adequately with the subject he would have to "learn seven or eight languages, one alone of which would take some years to acquire proficiency in," he decided to do the work at second hand.

"So widespread was the ground, so intricate and vast the subject-matter, that I was at first puzzled somewhat as to how to adequately embrace the task. I saw at a glance that a period of considerable activity was dawning for me, that in very truth I should have to 'take off my coat' with a vengeance."

The result is a rather chaotic book, and the language used is not merely ungrammatical and occasionally unintelligible, but also appears to be composed with little comprehension of the precise meaning of words. Adjectives are piled up; to give us a foretaste of the horrors to come, the deadly cunning and the unparalleled bloodthirstiness, even the "bloodthirsty exclamations and oaths," of the Indian criminal, are again and again insisted upon, with every variety of journalistic emphasis; and then we are treated to the tale of some ordinary Indian felony, extending in one instance to one-tenth of the whole length of the book. Sometimes our sympathy is meant to be excited by such an appeal as: "I have lost husband and son, and left [sic] helpless with many little children." At others we are prepared for the tragedy by this sort of exordium:—

"The eastern horizon was slowly emerging from the gloom of night, and a ghostly suggestion of light was ascending imperceptibly into the heavens. The atmosphere was stifling, and the faint breeze that played about.....The village of T—, in the Bombay Presidency, still lay securely in the arms of Morpheus."

One story, we confess, amused us. It tells how a burglar made a hole in the wall of a house, and began to wriggle through, legs first, when he was caught by the inmates; upon which a tug of war ensued, the householders pulling at the legs, and the burglar's accomplices hauling at the shoulders. At last the strain from without slackened, and we presume, though it is not noted, the victorious tuggers fell on their backs. But when they examined the rope—we mean the burglar—"they found he was a headless prisoner, he having been decapitated! But what was stranger still, they could not find his head anywhere." It would have been curious if the head had been found, as its identification would have inculpated the accomplices.

Mr. Adam's account of prison life and discipline in the Andaman Islands evidently comes from a well-informed source. But here and elsewhere his careless style of writing makes us distrust him.

Russian Essays and Stories, by Maurice Baring (Methuen & Co.), is one of the most picturesque and fresh books on Russia which we have seen for a long time. All those familiar with the country will recognize the fidelity of his pictures. Such a book comes as a surprise amongst the conventional works which appear on Russia. Some of his stories are obviously based upon facts as brought under his immediate observation or drawn from the columns of the daily press—as, for example, the story of the Governor's niece, which we remember to have read some time ago in the Novoe Vremya, and the account of the poor child murdered from a supposition that he embodied Antichrist. Gloomy stories of this description are frequent in the annals of Russian sects.

Throughout Mr. Baring takes the view of a man of cosmopolitan mind, who knows what human nature is and does not expect too high a standard of action. Thus the article 'Anti-Semitism' seems to us especially fair. The rapid formation of sects and secret societies is brought before us. In the latter the little boys begin to shoot and stab, and we have a complete genesis of the Pogrom. A clever imitation of Sir Conan Doyle is given in the chapter 'Sherlock Holmes in Russia.' The sketches are loosely put together, and are rather clever little cameos of Russian life than tales with a tendency. A strange digression is the dialogue between Mr. Baring and Dimitri Nikolaievitch, where the value of Byron as a poet is discussed, and the reasons given why he is popular among Russians and other foreigners. Mr. Baring ridicules the attempt made by certain critics in England to turn Byron out of his position. Many of his best lyrics have been excellently translated into Russian, and this Mr. Baring does not fail to tell us.

Mr. Baring has rightly given us some sketches of peasants and peasant life. The peasants show us the country, and nothing can be conceived more realistic than the pictures of the passengers in the third-class carriages. How compliant we have seen the guards to the old women bringing such unconscionable heaps of luggage, beds, samovars, &c.! A comic paper is 'The Dream in the Duma,' where an English parody is given of what goes on in Russia, winding up with a bomb thrown at Lord Kitchener. We do not doubt that these clever sketches will find many readers.

Modern English Biography.—Vol. IV. (Supplement, Vol. I). A—C. By Frederic Boase. (Truro, Netherton & Worth).—Mr. Boase in his three preceding volumes set himself a high standard of accuracy, conciseness, and comprehensiveness, and it is satisfactory to find that in the present volume he fully maintains it in all three respects. In the last, indeed, he surpasses the level of his previous performances. The first volume included A to H. This fourth gets no further than C. Yet therein aeronauts, anarchists, and archers; barmaids, bellringers, and burglars; cricketers and clowns; dancers, dentists, divers, and dipsomaniacs; fat-men, Fenians, and forgers; giants, jockeys, lion-tamers, murderers, parachutists, poisoners, and professional swimmers, all find representation. Indeed, so wide is his scope that he includes Frenchmen, Germans, Uruguayans, and other foreigners whose connexion with England consists in more or less temporary domicile. Such might have been omitted with advantage, the space gained being devoted to complete bibliographies, which are now sadly insufficient, and to notices of marriage, which to the genealogist and the journalist are by no means unimportant. Under A we have noticed the recital of only one marriage, viz., that of Francis Abbott. Under B such recitals occur in a small minority of cases. One of these is that of the marriage of Madame Blavatsky, a Russian by birth and marriage, an American by naturalization.

We find the ordinary, and almost inevitable, defects in the book: misplaced commas, as in the lives of the late Dukes of Clarence and Edinburgh, and spellings such as "Battenburg" for Battenberg. Interesting points might be added, e.g., the late Marquess of Bute's connexion with the Psychical Research Society (and in particular the part he played in the investigation of the alleged haunting of Ballechin House), and J. D. Chambers's Mastership of the Association for the Promotion of the Unity of Christendom.

Enough, however, of carping criticism. None of the many biographies we have looked at has shown any considerable inaccuracy, except that of the famous ornithologist E. T. Booth. The mistakes in this instance would never have occurred if Mr. Boase had cared to make exhaustive bibliographies. He has not mentioned Booth's 'Descriptive Catalogue,' 1878, the third edition of which, edited by Mr. A. F. Griffith, in 1901, would have saved him from error. The biography of F. H. Addams would have been more complete if Mr. Boase had consulted the Winchester authorities, to whom, it is plain, he had access.

In making these criticisms we look forward to a second edition of a monumental work. We regret that the present issue is limited to 125 copies. A copy ought to be in every public library in the country and in over 125 private libraries.

Wycliffe and the Lollards. By J. C. Carrick. (Edinburgh, T. & T. Clark.)—Messrs. Clark's series of the "World's Epoch-makers," in which this work appears, contains volumes of very unequal merit. We recollect with pleasure those on Luther and Cranmer, while the Hegel and the Pascal were at least respectable. The same cannot be said of Mr. Carrick's effort. The style is overloaded and rhetorical; the writing is intolerably diffuse; the arrangement of the book is by no means satisfactory. The first few chapters are almost totally irrelevant, and the author seems mainly occupied in the endeavour to display his acquaintance with a wide field of Church history, and to find tangents at which he can fly off. That acquaintance is not very deep or critical, as may be judged from his referring to the Pope Joan legend as though he believed it, and from other statements which are surprising. He speaks of "the Brompton Oratory" as the home of Newman. We fancy it was at another place beginning with "B" that Newman lived as an Oratorian. Even St. Francis is called St. Francis of "Assisium," a word which, if not positively inaccurate, will certainly be unintelligible to English ears. He tells us that "in the Dark Ages, i.e., 350–750 A.D., the practice of preaching from Scripture gradually decayed, and instead the 'Ethics' of Aristotle or some other philosopher's moral treatises were treated." Such a statement of the method by which the barbarians were converted (nearly all were converted during this period), such indifference to what St. Gregory and St. Augustine wrote, such a strange misconception of the lives described in Bede or Gregory of Tours, would have seemed incredible if it were not here set down in black and white. But this is not all. The author in one passage speaks as follows:

"Athanasius could write his treatise 'Contra Mundum.'"

Letters from an American Farmer. By J. H. St. John Crèvecoeur. With Preface by W. P. Trent, and Introduction by Ludwig Lewisohn. (Chatto & Windus.)—In one of Lamb's letters (November 10th, 1805) the voice of Mary strikes in, saying, "Oh, tell Hazlitt not to forget to send the 'American Farmer.' I daresay it isn't so good as he fancies; but a book's a book." It was becoming a forgotten book even at that date; and twenty-four years later, when Hazlitt praised it in The Edinburgh Review (in an article presently translated by Philaret Chasles), the dust of neglect had gathered so thickly upon it that he apologized, not without bitterness, for venturing to direct a momentary glance towards "the illustrious obscure." Yet it had had a distinguished reception in 1782, and almost a European vogue in the years immediately following; nor was it without a ponderable influence, both literary and historical. It would be interesting to trace the causes of its early and almost mortal obscurity. Even now, invidious fate seems reluctant to let the author come clearly into the light. For in this, the first reprint of the English text since 1793, his editors (Americans both) confess that they have had to gather their information regarding him from such desultory sources as a foot-note in Bigelow's edition of Franklin and the articles in a couple of biographical dictionaries. Why the monograph on Crèvecoeur published by his great-grandson in 1883 should have been "inaccessible," in a country which is presumably not without booksellers who are competent to conduct a mild quest, we cannot imagine. We have a copy on our table now, and observe that it consecrates a good many pages to Crèvecoeur's efforts to establish a frequent service of packet-boats between the United States and France. It seems hard that he should profit so little, at this time of day, from the great success of these labours. In consequence, Mr. Lewisohn's biographical and critical Introduction, which is pleasantly done, is needlessly incomplete, and to some extent inaccurate, besides having a cluster of misprints at p. xi.

As to the book itself, its merits may almost be assumed in the teeth of its neglect. For though in matters of indifference the judgment of the world is sure, yet in any matter of literature we prefer the judgment of a first-rate critic, were he as "isolated" as Athanasius. Hazlitt's lifelong praise of Crèvecoeur's book is a valid countervail to three generations of neglect; and is likely now, we believe, to receive the vindication of a wide concurrence. The 'American Farmer' will not again disappear, but will make its way continuously among discerning readers till it has its unquestioned place assigned it as one of the assets—not among the greatest, but with individual and undoubted value—of English literature. So placed, it will have the distinction of having been written by a Frenchman who acquired our language and was only an English-speaker during a phase of his life. Yet the English in which it is written makes no small part of the charm of the book. It is simple, lucid, flexible, and direct; nowhere violently idiomatic, only occasionally rhetorical, as the theme may prompt, but never indifferent to the claims of natural cadence.

The matter of the book is of wide range. Purporting to be letters written to a former visitor (a learned Englishman from Cambridge, who had invited a correspondence), it affords a moral portrait of the writer and an interpretation of eighteenth-century America. A farmer to the full extent of the term, he is none the less a man of poetic perceptiveness and sensibility, and so both an observer and lover of nature. His observation is untiring and well rendered. Nothing could be more lightly, more flutteringly touched than his account of the misdeeds of a burglarious wren; nothing, within its limits, more deliberately epic and complete than the battle between two snakes, which Hazlitt compared to a Homeric combat. But it is in the social domain that his faculty of observation most abounds. He is a sociologist unawares, by sympathy with what he sees. Thus his description of life on the island of Nantucket might rank as a classic example of regional survey. That is one type. The farmer on the mainland is another, whom chiefly he glorifies, and whose lot he describes in pages that have a savour of the earth. But indeed he has a sense of the whole land, and what is going on there—like Walt Whitman, who "heard America singing." America, if she were grateful, would sing of Crèvecoeur also; for no man believed better things of her, or promised her a more splendid fortune.

The English Catalogue of Books for 1908, just published by Messrs. Sampson Low, is a model book of reference, containing in one alphabet, under both author and title, the size, price, month of publication, and publisher of last year's books. The Appendix contains a list of learned societies, printing clubs, &c., and further, a directory of publishers, including some American and Canadian firms. The volume is essential to all who are seriously concerned with books, and we shall use it with complete confidence in its accuracy, as we did its predecessors.

COLERIDGE ON EDUCATION.

A BRISTOL correspondent sends us the following long-lost report of one of Coleridge's Lectures, which was delivered at the White Lion Inn, Bristol, on November 18th, 1813, and which he has unearthed from the columns of The Bristol Gazette. It is an exact copy, reproducing the punctuation and spelling of the original.

NEW SYSTEM OF EDUCATION—7TH LECTURE.

Mr. Coleridge commenced this lecture by stating, that he had from earliest life been accustomed to speak what was uppermost; and he could truly say that the extreme kindness he had experienced during a course of Lectures, not altogether calculated to amuse, had awakened in his mind the most lively gratitude; not that there was any necessity of rendering his feelings intense; for he should never forget that at a time when his heart was above his head, when in the bitterness of party spirit his friends deserted him, he found in Bristol (some of whom were in that room) fathers, protectors, benefactors, and happy should he be, if in the smallest degree, he could repay that kindness by elucidating the most important subject of that night's Lecture—The application of the New System of Education to those classes of Society who attended around him.

He should carefully preclude all controversy, God forbid he should harbour any thought, or divulge any opinion associated with dissension—controversy could not produce love, but still in the progressiveness of our nature, there was an awful duty imperative on every being capable of influencing another, to prove if a new doctrine or a new discovery be founded in fact, or in reason. In his address he hoped nothing would be found to awaken party feeling; if any should occur, it would be forced from him by a sense of duty imposed by the precepts of morality, not by a regard to names and circumstances. He hoped his audience in following him in consequences, would so far falsify their feelings as to forget mistakes on one side and the other, and look at the subject only as men and christians.

To invent was different from to discover—a watch-maker invented a time-piece; but a profound thinker only could discover. Sir Isaac Newton, when he thought upon the apple falling from the tree, discovered but did not invent the law of gravitation; others following this grand idea, carried elementary principles into particles, and elucidated chemistry. Sir Isaac Newton having once found that a body fell to the centre, knew that all other appearances of nature would receive a consequence, agreeably to the law of cause and effect; for it was a criterion of science, that when causes were determined, effects could be stated with the accuracy of prophecy.

Of the New System he should first notice the establishment of Monitors, or boys teaching boys, under the eye of a Superintendent or School-master; the latter was necessary not so much to teach, as to observe that there was not a deviation from proper methods; in the simplicity of this one principle, there was a world of richness. This was available by Seminaries adapted to the higher and middle classes, who could not take advantage of public charities; not that he meant to say that any plan would render superfluous (heaven forbid that discovery should reach thus far) the wisest and best of men, who undertook the instruction of youth; but by it labour would be lessened and improvement forwarded.

In bringing a number of children together, and comparing their understandings, a minimum of acquirement might be attained—this was of great consequence; by it many of the evils of the old method would be avoided. The Lecturer himself recollected that he was placed in the Dunce's row; because he found it easier to be beat than to say his Greek task; with his companions he had nothing to do but to dream; and if it had not been for an accident, he might have continued there; he happened to be musing over the Eclogues of Virgil, which he had been taught to read before he went to school, and was observed by a Clergyman, afterwards an ornament to the bench of Bishops, who asked what he could be doing with Virgil, as he was in the Dunce's row? thus his deliverance was effected.

This reminded him of a friend who said, there might be idiots, but there were no dunces in his school; depend upon it, the master is the dunce, not the boy, for in a state of progression, the art is to begin low enough: if a boy cannot learn three lines, give him two, if not two, one, if not one, half: the level of capacity must be found. He here observed, that he ought, perhaps, before to have noticed the word Education; it was to educate, to call forth; as the blossom is educed from the bud, the vital excellencies are within; the acorn is but educed, or brought forth from the bud. In proportion to the situation in which the individual is likely to be placed, all that is good and proper should be educed; for it was not merely a degradation of the word Education, but an affront of human nature, to include within its meaning, the bare attainment of reading and writing, or of Latin and Greek; as in former Lectures he had placed moral above intellectual acquirements, so in Education its object and its end would only be pernicious, if it did not make men worthy and estimable beings.

One beauty of the system is, that its means call forth the moral energies of action; not merely as relates to acquirement of knowledge, but to fill those scenes which Providence may afterwards place them in. It was a great error to cram the young mind with so much knowledge as made the child talk much and fluently: what was more ridiculous than to hear a child questioned, what it thought of the last poem of Walter Scott? A child should be child-like, and possess no other idea than what was loving and admiring. A youth might devour with avidity without comprehending the excellencies of Young and Gray; the Lecturer himself recollected the innocent and delightful intoxication with which he read them; the feeling was as necessary to a future Poet, as the bud to the flower, or the flower to the seed.

One good effect of children teaching each other was, that it gave the Superintendent a power of precluding everything of a procrastinating nature—the habit of procrastination was early acquired—the Lecturer could trace it in himself, when three hours were allowed at school to learn what he could attain in 15 minutes; the present moment was neglected, because the future was considered as sufficient. It was a great secret in education, that there should not be a single moment allowed a child in which it should not learn something—the moment it had done learning it should play; the doing nothing was the great error; the time that children are rendered passive, is the time when they are led into evil.

A friend of the Lecturer (Mr. Thelwal) at one time was called a traitor, but though he did not deserve that appellation, he was doubtlessly a mistaken man; it was at a period when men of all ranks, tailors and mechanics of various descriptions, thought they had a call for preaching politics, as Saints had a call for preaching the Gospel—it was Thelwal's continual theme that he kept his mind free from prejudice; the Lecturer had a garden, it was over-run with weeds, it had received no culture; he took Thelwal to it, and told him it resembled his mind, it was free from prejudice, but all that was rank and wild grew in it: It need not be said, that leaving a child to do nothing, was the surest way of exposing him to the ridiculous and foolish notion of equality; whilst constant employment was the best way of impressing upon his mind the order, extent, and nature of gradations in society. Never, however, imagine that a child is idle who is gazing on the stream, or laying upon the earth; the basis of all moral character may then be forming; all the healthy processes of nature may then be ripening; but let the standard of action be, the not leaving that for tomorrow which may be done to-day.

In the system of appointing children to instruct children, it must not be supposed that instruction is to come from them, it must originate with and come from the Master. Another point is a minimum of punishment; let the Master be as humane as he will, temper will sometimes predominate, therefore certain punishments should be apportioned to certain faults. It were to be wished that some mode could be adopted of preserving the female parental intercession—a mother in giving her instructions to the Tutor, reminds him “tis but a child”; this ought to have effect; great schools however know nothing of this; boys who escape punishment are congratulated on their luck, or if they bear it with proper fortitude and with a little impudence too, they are sure of applause; they live in compact, and dare not betray one another; let boys therefore Judge boys; their Judgment will be honourable; children are much less removed from men and women, than generally imagined; they have less power to express their meaning than men, but their opinion of Justice is nearly the same; this we may prove by referring to our own experience. Corporal punishment was not less disgraceful if administered as some advertising Coxcomb pretended, with lillies and roses; the substitute was worse than the original: it were ridiculous to suppose that boys conceived any great shame attached to it, when they knew that there perhaps is not a Judge or a bishop on the bench, who has not undergone the same. The Lecturer held that though it did no good, it never did harm, but was still preferable to the substitute of selfish rewards, which only fed self-love, and excited envy and bad passion. Nothing should be more impressed on parents and tutors than to make children forget themselves; and books which only told how Master Billy and Miss Ann spoke and acted, were not only ridiculous but extremely hurtful; much better give them Jack the Giant-killer, or the Seven Champions, or anything which, being beyond their own sphere of action, should not feed their self-pride. By the cultivation of our highest faculties we are alone superior to everything around us; and by the power of imagination (of which there was both intellectual and moral) in our present imperfect state, are we enabled to anticipate the glories and honours of a future existence; without these we are inferior to the beast that perishes.

In the division of the System already made, Dunces were precluded: from the giving to each child a minimum; to this might be added another advantage, the pleasure of getting forward himself in hopes of being appointed to help others.—2ndly. The prevention of procrastination, so dreadful in its consequences through life.—3rdly. Emulation without envy.—Lastly. It enabled a child to learn in one year what usually took three; but above all, it gave an opportunity to boys whilst teaching the lower forms or classes, to divulge all moral and religious ideas whilst in the act of instruction. The worthy propagator of the system (Dr. Bell) on his return from India, held a conversation with the Lecturer on this subject; when he was so struck with its importance that he compared it to gun-powder, which if the friends of one plan did not use, the other would. Of the little quarrel which had arisen, of who first discovered, or who impelled, he should leave to posterity; in all essentials the wise and good agreed; but there was one method in the New System, which he pledged himself would be discarded by all parties in less than ten years—it was the substitution of positive infamy for negative shame; the latter was consistent with nature; the child at the breast felt it when he hid his face in the neck of his mother: whoever saw anything excellent in a child than [sic] was a stranger to fear; the feeling was agreeable to innocency; with it was combined a sense of what we are with the hope of what we shall be; the former was a degradation to the species, it lowered the human mind; it made it callous; to load a boy with fetters, to hang dying speeches about his neck, to expose him to the sneers and insults of his peers, because forsooth he reads his lessons in a singing tone, was a pitiful mockery of human nature: it must be the work of superior grace, if a boy who has suffered such humiliation, ever afterwards shuddered at a slaveship, or any other act of barbarity—Children never should be made the instruments of punishment farther than the taking of one another's place; never should be taught to look with revenge and hatred on each other; from the goodness of heart of those who tolerated the system, he was convinced that they need only be reminded of its ill effects, to explode it. Five minutes confinement from play would have more effect on boys than whipping; he was not an advocate for that, for he thought it did no good; but if it were necessary to bring up boys as Britons, who had and might have again to oppose the world, let them be brought up to despise pain, but above all to hate dishonour; to hold him who regards only the feeling of the moment, as a wretch and a coward.

Of the difference of education between the higher and middle classes, he should speak with the deepest feeling; the ladder of privileged society in this country was not constituted of disproportionate steps, it was consistent with all order and true freedom. In the first part of education there could be no difference; all moral and religious truths were essential to all; the middle classes were not only to be useful, but the higher the same; but to render the latter so, all that was necessary was a different degree of acquirement, a gradation of acquisition of language and knowledge; proportionate to the sphere in which they were to move.

Returning to general education of children, Mr. C. observed, there was scarce any being who looked upon the beautiful face of an infant, that did not feel a strong sensation—it was not pity, it was not the attraction of mere loveliness; it was a sense of melancholy; for himself, he always when viewing an infant, found a tear a candidate for his eye. What could be the cause of this? It was not that its innocence, its perfectness, like a flower, all perfume and all loveliness, was like a flower to pass away:—or he beheld a being, from the absence or evil of his education, capable of blasting and withering like mildew. To this might be added the thought, doubtlessly felt by everyone—if he could begin his career again, if he could recover that innocency once possessed, and connect it with virtue. With these thoughts who could avoid feeling an enthusiasm for the education of mankind.—Suppose it possible that there was a country, where [a] great part of its population had one arm rendered useless; who would not be desirous of relieving their distress; but what was a right arm withered, in comparison of having all the faculties shut out from the good and wise of past ages.

The Lecturer concluded with recommending an observance of the laws of nature in the Education of Children; the ideas of a child were cheerful and playful; they should not be palsied by obliging it to utter sentences which the head could not comprehend nor the heart echo; our nature was in every sense a progress; both body and mind.

VILLON AND JOB.

FRANÇOIS VILLON, poet, housebreaker, debauchee, and erstwhile student in theology at the Sorbonne, is a writer with whose works our Scriptural commentators do not habitually concern themselves; yet in one of his huitains (“Le Grand Testament,” xxviii) friend François supplies an elucidation of a passage in the Book of Job, and, unless I am mistaken, convicts both Authorized and Revised Versions of error.

“My days are swifter than a weaver's shuttle, and are spent without hope” (Job vii. 6, A.V. and R.V.). The Septuagint has ὁ δὲ βίος μου ἐστὶν ἐλαφρότερος λαλιᾶς, ἀπόλωλεν δὲ ἐν κενῇ ἐλπίδι. The reading λαλιᾶς, “talk,” was altered by the first corrector of the Codex Sinaiticus to δρομέως, “a runner,” or, as the A.V. has it, “a post.” The alteration was presumably on the analogy of Job ix. 25, and was subsequently cancelled.

Now turn to the passage in the Vulgate:

“Dies mei velocius transierunt, quam a textente tela succiditur, et consumpti sunt absque ulla spe.” Tela means the warp or web, never the shuttle. The warp is the threads, which are extended lengthwise in the loom and crossed by the woof.

There is no question as to the reading in the Hebrew. The word there is ‘āregħ, which means either “loom” or “a thing woven.” This word occurs as a noun only here and in Judges xvi. 14, where the A.V. renders “beam.” The translators seemingly failed to see how the days could be said to pass more swiftly than threads, and therefore assumed that the metaphor was from the weaver's shuttle—a pretty enough picture, and vivid. But Job was an exquisite poet, and he had before his mind a still more vivid picture, and more subtly suggestive of days swiftly spent. And François Villon, of the wasted youth, knew what was in the earlier poet's mind. He writes as follows:—

Mes jours s'en sont allez errant,
Comme, dit Job, d'une touaille
Sont les filets, quant tisserant
Tient en son poing ardente paille:
Lors, s'il y a nul bout qui saille,
Soudainement il le ravit.
Si ne craings rien qui plus m'assaille,
Car à la mort tout assouvyst.

My days are spent; with Job I cry,
Like unto threads of cloth they go,
Whenas the weaver standing by Holds in his hand the blazing tow;
Then, if an end protrudeth, lo,
Caught by the flame it vanisheth!
I reck not of impending woe,
For all will have surcease at death.

Is not that just the idea that Job intended? And here also a knowledge of the weaver's craft comes in. I am informed that this process of burning off the protruding ends is still in vogue. In some cases flames are used, in others red-hot steel rollers.

Villon, though he never took his degree and would seem to have passed nearly all his time in riot, plunder, and debauchery, yet seems to have assimilated sundry scraps from such lectures as he attended, and indeed there is proof from other passages that he was something of a scholar, though not of the Dryasdust order.

GEORGE HEYER.

DR. PARR AND DR. URI.

Budapest, February 25, 1909.

ON p. 62 of the catalogue of the library bequeathed by Dr. Parr, curate of Hatton and Prebendary of St. Paul's (“Bibliotheca Parriana,” London, 1827), a copy of Kennicott's “Dissertatio generalis in Vetus Testamentum” is mentioned as bound together with “Codices Manuscripti Hebraici et Chaldaici..... with an Autograph of the learned and judicious Preface intended for publication by the profound Orientalist, the Editor, Dr. Uri, and insolently rejected and quibbled by Dr. Randolph, the Canon of Christ Church.”

I suppose that this volume of the Bibliotheca Parriana must have been acquired by some public or private library in England.

It would naturally be of great importance to us here in Hungary to know what has become of this volume, containing an unpublished autograph paper by our learned fellow-countryman Dr. John Uri, who acquired in your land a well-deserved reputation as an Oriental scholar.

We shall be grateful to any one who is in a position to give us the required information as to the whereabouts of the above-mentioned volume.

May I ask you kindly to assist me in my search by giving publicity to these lines in The Athenæum? IGNAZ GOLDZIEHER,

Professor in the University of Budapest.

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

ENGLISH.

Theology.

- Burney (C. F.), Israel's Hope of Immortality, 2/6 net. Four lectures.
- Hartmann (Franz), The Life of Jehoshua, the Prophet of Nazareth, 7/6. Described as an occult study and a key to the Bible.
- Heaton (Rev. W. J.), Should not the Revised Version of the Scriptures be Further Revised? 6d. net. A popular tract.
- Leavitt (J. McDowell), Bible League Essays in Bible Defence and Exposition.
- Moore (J. H.), Sayings of Buddha, the Iti-vuttaka, 1 dol. 50 net. A Pali work of the Buddhist canon, for the first time translated, with introduction and notes.
- Mott (J. R.), The Future Leadership of the Church, 3/6. Founded on lectures given before senior members of colleges at Oxford and Cambridge.
- Official Year-Book of the Church of England, 1909, 3/.
- Scott (R.), The Pauline Epistles, 6/ net. A critical study.
- Vaughan (Canon), Dangers of the Day, 1 dol. With an introduction by Canon Moyes.
- Ward (B.), The Dawn of the Catholic Revival in England, 1781-1803, 2 vols., 25/ net.
- Westcott (B. F.) and Hort (F. J. A.), The New Testament in the original Greek, 5/ net. An excellent "Writing Paper Edition," with room for marginal notes.
- Worcester (Rev. E.), The Living Word, 6/ net. The author is influenced largely by Fechner's writings.
- World's Great Sermons, edited by Grenville Kleiser: I. Basil-Calvin, II. Hooker-South, III. Massillon-Mason, IV. L. Beecher-Bushnell, V. Guthrie-Mozley, VI. H. W. Beecher-Punshon, VII. Hale-Farrar, VIII. Talmage-Knox Little, IX. Cuyler-Van Dyke, X. Gore-Jowett, with general index.

Law.

- Evans and King's Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, 5/ net.
- Johnston (G. A.), Small Holdings and Allotments: the Law relating thereto under the Small Holdings and Allotments Act, 1908, 16/ net. With an introduction, a commentary, and rules, regulations, orders, and forms. Second Edition, revised.
- Maine (Sir H. S.), Popular Government, 2/6 net. Four essays. Popular Edition.
- Stanton (J. W.), A Practical Guide to the Law of Agricultural Holdings, 5/ net. Includes the text of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1908, with notes thereon, and a form of farm-tenancy agreement.

Fine Art and Archaeology.

- Ashdown (C. H.), British and Foreign Arms and Armour, 10/6 net. Illustrated with 450 engravings in the text and 42 plates from actual examples, missals, illuminated manuscripts, brasses, effigies, &c., and from original research in the British Museum, the Tower of London, Wallace Collection, Rotunda at Woolwich, private collections, &c.
- Bonnor (M. L.), Botticelli, 2/6 net. With 33 illustrations. Essex Archaeological Society Transactions, Vol. XI., Part I., 6/.
- Fletcher (C. R. L.), Historical Portraits, Richard II. to Henry Vriothlesley, 1400-1600, 8/6 net. With 103 portraits chosen by Emery Walker, and introduction on the history of Portraiture in England.
- Fox-Davies (A. C.), A Complete Guide to Heraldry, 10/6 net. Illustrated by 9 plates in colour and nearly 800 other designs, mainly from drawings by Graham Johnston.
- Frothingham (A. L.), The Monuments of Christian Rome from Constantine to the Renaissance, 10/6. The author lived for many years in Rome, and has first-hand acquaintance with its monuments.
- Gomme (B.), Index of Archaeological Papers published in 1907. The seventeenth issue of the series, and completing the Index for 1891-1907.
- Report of the Committee on Ancient Earthworks and Fortified Enclosures. Prepared for presentation to the Congress of Archaeological Societies, July 8, 1908.
- Reader (F. W.), Report of the Red Hills Exploration Committee, 1906-7. With introductory note by Horace Wilmer.
- Sparrow (W. S.), Hints on House Furnishing, 7/6 net. Consists of 3 parts with 83 illustrations.

Poetry and Drama.

- Bryan (J. I.), The Feeling for Nature in English Pastoral Poetry.
- Colomb (Col.), Mr. Nicholas Wake-spear on the Baconian Heresy.
- Everyman, with other Interludes, including eight Miracle Plays, 1/ net. In Everyman's Library.
- Green-Room Book; or, Who's Who on the Stage, 6/ net. Edited by John Parker.
- Lapsus Cerebelli, by H. J. F., 2/ net. Verses in English and French.
- Leavitt (J. McDowell), Our Flag, Our Rose, and Our Country, with other Poems.
- Morgan (T. W.), Sacred Poems, 1/ net.
- Poe (E. A.), Complete Poetical Works, 2/ and 3/6. With three essays on poetry, edited from the original editions, with memoir, textual notes, and bibliography, by R. Brimley Johnson. Oxford Edition.

Music.

- Joyce (P. W.), Old Irish Folk Music and Songs, 10/6 net. A collection of 842 Irish airs and songs hitherto unpublished, edited, with annotations, for the Royal Society of Antiquaries of Ireland.
- Sharp (C. J.), Folk Songs from Somerset, 5/ net. Gathered and edited with pianoforte accompaniment. Fifth Series.
- Taylor (D. C.), The Psychology of Singing, 6/6 net. A method of voice culture based on an analysis of systems ancient and modern.

Bibliography.

- Book-Prices Current, Part I, Vol. XXIII.

Philosophy.

- Bakewell (C. M.), Source Book in Ancient Philosophy, 7/6 net.

- Dewey (J.) and Tufts (J. H.), Ethics, 8/6 net.
- Judd (C. H.), Psychology, General Introduction, 7/6 net; Laboratory Manual of Psychology, 4/ net; Laboratory Equipment for Psychology Experiments, 7/6 net. A series of textbooks designed to introduce the student to the methods and principles of scientific psychology.

Political Economy.

- Social Ideals, 6d. net. Papers on social subjects by Will Crooks, J. Ramsay MacDonald, and others.

History and Biography.

- Boni (Giacomo), Trajan's Column, 1/ net. From the Proceedings of the British Academy.
- Deans (R. S.), The Trials of Five Queens: Katherine of Aragon, Anne Boleyn, Mary Queen of Scots, Marie Antoinette, and Caroline of Brunswick, 10/6 net.
- Dowden (E.), Milton in the Eighteenth Century (1701-50), 1/ net. From the Proceedings of the British Academy.
- Higginson (Rev. F.), New-England's Plantation, with the Sea Journal and other Writings. Reprint of a tract published in London in 1630.
- Ladies' Court Book; or, Who's Who in Society, 1909, 10/6 net.
- Lawton (F.), The Third French Republic, 12/6 net. With 32 illustrations.
- Levering (J. H.), Historic Indiana, 12/6 net. Chapters in the story of the Hoosier State from the romantic period of foreign exploration and dominion, through pioneer days, stirring war times, and periods of peaceful progress, to the present time, illustrated.
- Meakin (A. M. B.), Galicia, the Switzerland of Spain, 12/6 net. With 105 illustrations and a map.
- Renouf (V. A.), Outlines of General History for Eastern Students, 5/.
- Robinson (J. H.) and Beard (C. A.), Readings in Modern European History, Vol. I., 6/. A collection of extracts chosen with the purpose of illustrating some of the chief phases of the development of Europe during the last two hundred years.
- Shrewsbury School Register, 1734-1908. Edited by the Rev. J. E. Auden.
- Wedgwood (Julia), Nineteenth Century Teachers, and other Essays, 10/6 net. The essays were published at different times, the longer ones mostly in The Contemporary Review, the shorter in The Spectator.
- Williams (W. P.), Deffynnïad Fydd Eglwys Loegr, 5/ net.
- Windt (H. de), My Restless Life, 7/6 net. An amusing book of reminiscences.

Geography and Travel.

- Holmes (D. T.), Literary Tours in the Highlands and Islands of Scotland.

Education.

- Plaisted (L. L.), The Early Education of Children, 4/6 net. With a chapter on the medical responsibilities of the school teacher, by A. L. Ormerod. Contains 32 illustrations and plates.

Folk-lore.

- Wollaston (Sir A. N.), Tales within Tales, 2/6 net. Adapted from the fables of Pilpai.

Philology.

- Green (Col. A. O.), A Practical Arabic Grammar, Part II., 9/ net. New edition, enlarged and revised.
- Irish Texts Society: The Story of the Crop-eared Dog The Story of Eagle-boy, 10/6. Two Irish Arthurian romances, edited and translated by R. A. Stewart Macalister.
- Keith (A. B.), Catalogue of Sanskrit Manuscripts in the Bodleian Library, 15/ net. Appendix to Vol. I. (The Aufrecht's Catalogue).
- Menander, Lately Discovered Fragments, 5/ net. Edited, with English version, revised text, and critical and explanatory notes, by Unus Mutorum.
- Monteverde (R. D.), A Pocket Glossary of English-Spanish and Spanish-English Technical Terms suitable for Engineering, Manufacturing and Mining Industries, 2/6 net.
- Rennie (W.), The Acharnians of Aristophanes, 6/ net. With introduction, critical notes, and commentary.
- Society for the Preservation of the Irish Language, Report for 1908.
- Strachan (J.), An Introduction to Early Welsh, 7/6 net. In the Celtic Series of the University of Manchester.

School Books.

- Naylor (H. D.), Latin and English Idiom, 2/. An object lesson from Livy's preface.
- Shakespeare, The Tempest, 2/. Edited by A. R. Weekes. One of the University Tutorial Series.
- Taciti Cn. Julii Agricola Vita, 3/6 net. Edited by Immóne S. Allen. A text with the words accented.
- Tales by Erckmann-Chatrian, 1/. Second Series, edited by O. H. Prior, with illustrations by G. Lindsay.
- Tucker (T. G.) and Murdoch (W.), A New Primer of English Literature, 2/6 net.
- Unwin (Rev. P. W.), Practical Solid Geometry, 4/6. The volume forms an elementary course, complete in itself, and will be found to cover Stage I. of the Board of Education Examination.

Science.

- Boycott (G. W. M.), Compressed-Air Work and Diving, 10/6 net. A handbook for engineers. Illustrated.
- Calman (W. T.), A Treatise on Zoology: Part VII., Appendiculate, Third Fascicle, Crustacea, 15/ net. Edited by Sir E. Ray Lankester.
- Castle (F.), Five-Figure Logarithmic and other Tables, 1/.
- Cohnheim (Paul), Diseases of the Digestive Canal, 10/ net. Edited and translated by D. Fulton.
- Fowler (J. S.), Infant Feeding, 5/ net. A practical guide to the artificial feeding of infants. One of the Oxford Medical Publications.
- Gibson (C. R.), How Telegraphs and Telephones Work, 1/6 net. Explanations in non-technical language, with 5 illustrations and 10 diagrams.
- Gresswell (G. and A.), Health, Morals, and Longevity, 5/ net.
- Hopf (Ludwig), The Human Species considered from the Standpoints of Comparative Anatomy, Physiology, Pathology, and Bacteriology, 10/6 net. With 216 illustrations and 7 plates. Authorized English Edition.
- Knott (J.), The Mistletoe. Reprinted from The New York Medical Journal.
- Lang (A.), The Origin of Terms of Human Relationship, 1/ net. From the Proceedings of the British Academy.

- Mathieu (C.), Para Rubber Cultivation, 14/8 net.
- McKay (W. J. S.), Operations upon the Uterus, Perineum, and Round Ligaments, 21/ net.
- Medical Register, 1909, 10/6.
- Pharmaceutical Pocket Book, 1909, 3/6 net. Edited by John Humphrey.
- Shoemaker (W. T.), Retinitis Pigmentosa, 8/6 net.
- Steiner (Rudolf), The Way of Initiation; or, How to attain Knowledge of the Higher Worlds, 3/6 net.
- Wright (Sir A. E.), Studies on Immunisation, and their Application to the Diagnosis and Treatment of Bacterial Infections, 16/ net. Contains a series of studies on the protective elements of the blood, on vaccine-therapy, and on therapeutic immunization generally.

Juvenile Books.

- Ewing (J. H.), Jan of the Windmill, 2/6 net. New Edition, illustrated by M. V. Wheelhouse. In the Queen's Treasures Series.
- True Annals of Fairyland in the Reign of King Oberon, 1/ net. Illustrated by C. Robinson. In Everyman's Library.

Fiction.

- Barlow (J. W.), The Immortals' Great Quest, 3/6 net. A new edition of a philosophical romance which was published pseudonymously in Dublin some years ago, but almost immediately withdrawn from circulation.
- Boyd (M. S.), The First Stone, 6/. Deals with a faithless Scottish cleric, and has a frontispiece by A. S. Boyd.
- Claretie (Jules), Agnès, 3/6. A romance of the siege of Paris, translated by Ada Solly-Flood.
- Cullum (R.), The Compact, 6/ net. The story of an unrecorded conspiracy in South Africa.
- Dawson (A. J.), The Message, 1/ net. Fourth and cheaper Edition. For notice of first edition see Athen., April 27, 1907, p. 501.
- Eliot (George), Scenes of Clerical Life, 1/ net. New Edition, with an introduction by Annie Matheson. In the World's Classics.
- Farjeon (B. L.), Miriam Rozella, 1/ net. New Edition.
- Fox-Davies (A. C.), The Troubles of Col. Marwood, 6/. The story of a dangerous double.
- Fryers (A.), Purple and Homespun, 6/. A story of political intrigue.
- Gerard (Dorothea), Pomp and Circumstance, 6/. The novel exemplifies the disaster that follows in the train of a marriage wherein there is no communion of mind or purpose.
- Gillman (G.), Only April, 6/. An idyll of love overcoming difficulties.
- Graham (R. B. Cunninghame), Faith, 6/. A series of short stories.
- Jeans (A.), The Stronger Wings, 6/. A tale of Metternich and a prince.
- Kennedy (B.), The Vicissitudes of Flynn, 6/. Depicts the transition of a penniless artist in the New Cut to sufficiency in a country home.
- Lauristoun (P.), The Painted Mountain, 6/. The main interest of the book is in the mental and moral conflict in the souls of a small number of Englishmen, whose material fortunes are closely bound up with the success of one of the contesting parties.
- Leys (J. K.), Underground, 6/. Well described by its title, the book deals with stirring events.
- Macaulay (R.), The Secret River, 2/6 net. Traces the humanizing of a man by his wife's desertion.
- Mauzens (F.), The Living Strong-Box, 6/. The accidental swallowing of a diamond provides farcical situations, illustrated by P. d'Espagnat.
- Noble (Frances), Not for this World Only, and The Trial of Mabel Dering, 2/6 net. Two religious stories.
- Phillipotts (Eden), The Three Brothers, 6/. Draws its characters and scenery from Dartmoor.
- Reynolds (Mrs. Baillie), A False Position, 6/. The false position is that of a young girl who, strong in the belief that she, having loved in vain, has left life's illusions behind her, consents to go through the form of marriage with a man who requires a housekeeper. New Edition.
- Syrett (Netta), A Castle of Dreams, 6/. Laid in Ireland, the story reveals the unfolding, under the influence of friendship and love, of an unsophisticated nature.
- Terry (E. S.), God's Good Woman, 6/. A well-meant, simply told tale.
- Wales (H.), Cynthia in the Wilderness, 1/ net. Popular Edition.
- Yorke (Curtis), Irresponsible Kitty, 6d. New Edition.
- Zangwill (E. A.), Teresa, 6/. The story is laid partly in England, partly in New York.

General Literature.

- Arnold-Forster (Right Hon. H. O.), Military Needs and Military Policy, 3/6 net. The purpose of the book is to explain in clear and simple language what are the true military needs of this country; has an introduction by Earl Roberts.
- Erskine (Mrs.), The Over-Production of Women and the Remedy, 2/6 net.
- Handy Newspaper List, 1909, 6d.
- Key (E.), The Century of the Child, 6/ net. 'The Century of the Child' has gone through more than twenty German editions, and has been published in several European countries.
- Levitt (D.), The Woman and the Car, 2/6 net. A chatty little handbook for women motorists. Edited with introductory articles by C. Byng-Hall, illustrated by photographs.
- Municipal Year-Book 1909, 7/6 net.
- Philip (A. J.), A Dickens Dictionary, 8/6 net. Contains the characters and scenes of the novels and miscellaneous works alphabetically arranged.
- St. Germain (Comte C. de), Horoscopes and How to Cast them, 6/ net. A book of practical Astrology. Illustrated.

Pamphlets.

- Brotherston (R. P.), Stocks, 1d.
- Handbook for Drivers of the Mounted Services, by an Adjutant, 4d.
- Pillans (T. D.), Plain Truths about Woman Suffrage, 1d.
- Why I should join the Territorial Force of my County, by V. D., 1d.

FOREIGN.

Fine Art and Archæology.

Hirth's Formenschatz, Parts 1-3, 3m.
Münchener archäologische Studien, 25m. A series of illustrated essays dedicated to the memory of Adolf Furtwängler.

Poetry.

Plessis (F.), La Poésie latine: de Livius Andronicus à Rutilius Namatianus, 12fr.

Music.

Landowska (Wanda), Musique ancienne: Style, Interprétation, Instruments, Artistes, 3fr. 50.

Political Economy.

Marshall (A.), Principes d'Économie Politique, Vol. II., 12fr. Translated by Sauvaire-Jourdan and S. Bouysy. Part of the Bibliothèque internationale d'Économie politique.

History and Biography.

Aulard (F. A.), Recueil des Actes du Comité de Salut public: Vol. XVIII. 7 novembre—20 décembre. 1794. The account of these six weeks runs to nearly 900 pages.
Bord (Gustave), La Fin de deux Légendes: L'Affaire Léonard; Le Baron de Batz, 6fr.
Cabanès (Dr.), Les Indiscrétions de l'Histoire, Series 6, 3fr. 50.

Charavay (É.), Correspondance générale de Carnot: Vol. IV. novembre, 1793—mars, 1795. Another massive volume of nearly 900 pages.

Chevillon (A.), La Pensée de Ruskin, 3fr. 50.

Courson (Vicomte A. de), Le dernier Effort de la Vendée, 1832, 5fr.

Dimnet (E.), Figures de Moines, 3fr. 50.

Mélie (J.), La Vie amoureuse de Stendhal, 3fr. 50.

Revue historique, mars—avril, 6fr.

Science.

Castelot (F. Jollivet), La Synthèse de l'Or, l'Unité et la Transmutation de la Matière, 1fr. By the founder and President of the Société Alchimique de France.

Henry (Charles), Psycho-Biologie et Énergétique: Essai sur un Principe de Méthodes intuitives de Calcul, 6fr.—Psycho-Physique et Énergétique. Reprinted from the Bulletin of the Institut général psychologique.

Fiction.

Barrère (M.), La Cité du Sommeil, 3fr. 50.

Lapaire (H.), Les Accapareurs, 3fr. 50.

General Literature.

Parodi (D.), Traditionalisme et Démocratie, 3fr. 50. Revue germanique, mars—avril, 4fr.

* * All Books received at the Office up to Wednesday Morning will be included in this List unless previously noted. Publishers are requested to state prices when sending Books.

Literary Gossip.

THE novel to succeed 'Daphne' from the pen of Mrs. Humphry Ward will have a Canadian background. It will be published by Messrs. Smith & Elder serially in The Cornhill Magazine in the autumn and subsequently in book form.

MESSRS. SMITH & ELDER also promise a new edition of Mrs. Ward's 'Miss Bretherton,' with a preface by the author.

SIR OLIVER LODGE's new book 'The Ether of Space' will be one of the next three issues of "Harper's Library of Living Thought." The other volumes will be 'The Origin of the New Testament,' by Prof. William Wrede, and 'Christianity and Islam,' by Prof. C. H. Becker.

SIR JAMES H. RAMSAY has just completed his account of the reign of Edward II. The reigns, therefore, of Edward III. and Richard II. are all that remains to be done to fill up the gap in his 'History.' When these reigns are completed the work will extend from the beginning of time to 1485; and the MS. is in a state of forwardness.

MESSRS. A. & C. BLACK's spring list includes 'Essex,' painted by Mr. Burleigh Bruhl, and described by Mr. A. R. Hope Moncrieff; 'Hampshire,' painted by Mr. Wilfrid Ball, and described by the Rev. T. Varley; and 'St. Petersburg,' painted by F. de Haenen, and described by Mr. J. Dobson, who resides in the city, and gives his impressions at first hand.

DR. PAGET TOYNBEE, whose work on 'Dante in English Literature from Chaucer to Cary' will be published in two volumes by Messrs. Methuen at the end of April, has been elected a Corresponding Member of the Reale Istituto Lombardo di Scienze e Lettere at Milan.

THE April issue of Chambers's Journal will contain a paper by Mr. Henry W. Lucy on 'Tenniel and Du Maurier.' Capt. P. L. Oliphant contributes the first of a series of 'Impressions of Algeria.' An Oxonian points out certain contrasts between 'Oxford and Edinburgh'; and Dr. George Milligan supplies, from translations of papyri, 'A Budget of Letters from Egypt.'

MR. MAURICE HEWLETT will respond for Literature at the anniversary dinner of the Royal Literary Fund, at which Mr. Andrew Lang will preside on Thursday, May 13th.

MR. W. GRANT KEITH writes:—

"Mr. W. A. B. Coolidge suggests last week that the island of Bureho, mentioned in Leland's 'Itinerary,' is either the island of Brechou or that of Burons. But surely the island in question is that of Burhou. Burhou lies to the north-west of Alderney, and might fairly be described as 'Insula rastorum,' if 'rastorum' is taken to mean 'of the race' (Race of Alderney)."

This identification is probably correct, since the word "rast" appears on the chart, and is applied to the Race of Alderney, with the gloss "angustum fretum."

MESSRS. GEORGE ALLEN & SONS will publish next month 'Wax,' a novel by Mr. G. S. Layard, in which the heroine is left alone at Madame Tussaud's, cut off from the rest of the world by a London fog. The author is best known as a biographer, but is not new to fiction.

THE sixth volume of Sir James Balfour Paul's 'Scots Peerage' will be published by Mr. David Douglas before the end of this month. Two of the most important articles in it are those on the Dukes of Montrose and the Lords Oliphant.

MESSRS. DENT & Co. have in preparation an important work on 'The Life and Times of John Hus,' by Count Lützow, a leading authority on Bohemian history and literature.

PROF. CHARLES ROESSLER, a French scholar well known for his studies in archæology, is publishing by subscription, in English, 'Jeanne d'Arc: Documentary Evidences of the Heroine and Christian Healer.' He has investigated the original documents of Jeanne's time, also the folklore of her native village, and promises some new illustrations throwing light on her story. His address is 30, Rue Le Marois, Auteuil, Paris, XVI^e, whither subscribers are requested to send their names.

AMONG the guests expected at the Readers' Dinner, at which, as we have already announced, the Lord Mayor will preside on the 20th inst., are Mr. Sheriff Baddeley, Mr. E. W. Cox (Master of the Stationers' Company), Mr. A. J. Dawson, Mr. W. H. Helm, Mr. W. F. Kirby, Col. Francis Lucas, Mr. Laurie Magnus, Mr. Phillips Oppenheim, Mr. T. Secombe, Dr. J. Todhunter, and Mr. J. S. Wood.

A SECOND Conference of the Fabian Education Group will be held, on similar lines to that of last year, at Easter, from April 8th to 17th, at Llanbedr, near Barmouth.

THE first edition of Walton's 'Compleat Angler,' 1653, which recently realized 3,900 dollars at the Heckscher Sale in New York, is the copy which was catalogued by Messrs. Pickering & Chatto in one of their catalogues a few years ago at 375l. The copy of the second issue of the same work, an unusually fine one, fetched 780 dollars.

Le Temps of Sunday last says that Anatole France will set out at the end of April for the Argentine. He is going to Buenos Ayres, where he will give five lectures on Rabelais. He does not, he says in an interview, pretend to be a professor, proclaiming new dogma or research:—

"Mais ce qui m'attache, c'est d'essayer de surprendre les idées de Rabelais, de découvrir ses croyances et de révéler l'homme sous l'auteur."

As the study of Italian is much neglected in this country, we welcome the efforts of the newly founded Anglo-Italian Literary Society to revive interest in the subject. It does not confine itself to Dante, or wish to compete with existing societies. A meeting is being held in the Society's rooms, 11, Chandos Street, Cavendish Square, every Tuesday afternoon till Easter. On the 16th and 23rd inst. D'Annunzio is to be discussed, and on March 30th and April 6th Giovanni Verga. Sir Charles Holroyd is the President of the Society, Signor F. Canali is the Secretary, and there is a Council of ladies and gentlemen interested in Italian literature generally.

THE UNIVERSITY OF LEIPSIK intends to hold an exhibition in connexion with the 500th anniversary of its foundation. It will include all the art treasures of the University—seals, medals, tapestries, and pictures; and by means of sketches and plans, models and pictures, an idea will be given of the gradual development of the University. Goethe's connexion with Leipzig is to be made a prominent feature.

THE Frankfurter Zeitung states that Prof. Wilamowitz has decided to devote the sum presented to him at the celebration we recorded on January 2nd last by his friends and pupils to publishing an edition of the Fathers Basilus and Gregory of Nyssa. The examination of the MSS. has been entrusted to Dr. Giorgio Pasquale of Rome.

NEXT week we shall include reviews of theological books.

SCIENCE

Conquering the Arctic Ice. By Ejnar Mikkelsen. With Numerous Illustrations and Maps. (Heinemann.)

THE plan of Capt. Mikkelsen for exploring the Beaufort Sea was by some considered too bold for the size of his party; but it was supported by the Geographical Societies on both sides of the Atlantic. The problem he attacked is one which has long called for solution. A map of the Arctic regions indicates, between the meridians of 130° and 180° W. long., an area which, owing to the massive character of the ice, has never been penetrated beyond the comparatively low latitude of $73^{\circ} 30'$. Except the region round the South Pole, this is the largest area on the earth's surface as yet unexplored. The southern part of it is that which was named by Franklin the Beaufort Sea. On the eastern side of this sea the ice is so heavy that, although the portal from the Greenland quarter is the broadest for the accomplishment of the North-West Passage, it has long been considered hopeless for that purpose. Even in summer the pack moves such a short distance off the shore of the continent that the whalers have to creep along the coast in order to reach their fishing-ground near Banks Land. Though the sea is apparently of large extent, the movement of the tide, according to former measurements, is at several points extremely slight. These indications all point to the sea being bounded by land on the north as well as on the south and (but for two channels) on the east; and to the west, so far as ships have penetrated, it is remarkably shallow. As long ago as August, 1873, Admiral Sherard (not "Serah") Osborn, in a lecture to the Geographical Society, pleaded strongly for the exploration of this sea; but for thirty years no steps were taken with that definite object in view. At length, in 1905, Capt. Mikkelsen a Dane, and Mr. Leffingwell, an American, obtained support, both in England and America, for a venture on a small scale; and thus was formed the "Anglo-American Polar Expedition," whose fortunes are recorded in this volume.

The original plan was to descend the Mackenzie to the Beaufort Sea, leaving the stores to come round by whaler, and, after establishing a winter camp near Cape Bathurst, push on in the spring along the shore of Banks Land to its north-western promontory in lat. $74^{\circ} 20'$, whence two men were to proceed by sledge over the pack to the north-west, and afterwards turn south to the continent. This scheme, which involved serious risks to so small a party, was never carried out. No whaler was available, as the fleet wintered in 1905-6 at Herschel Island; and it became necessary to buy a small schooner of about 56 tons, built in Japan for the seal-fishery, in order to reach the Arctic in the latter year. Capt. Mikkelsen describes feelingly the shifts to which he was reduced by the insufficiency of his resources. To pay the wages of the crew, it was arranged to sell the ship to them on her return; and since she proved leaky from the first, and eventually had to be abandoned at the winter quarters, this speculative device for eking out the funds of an Arctic expedition was destined to failure. All initial difficulties, however, were overcome; and the little band of eight men sailed from Victoria B.C., in May, 1906. But it was an unfavourable year for progress in Northern waters. The ship was delayed by ice east of Cape Lisburne, and again at Point Barrow; and she had to be towed for two days by a whaler in order to reach Flaxman Island by September 8th. Here Capt. Mikkelsen decided to winter—chiefly owing to the lateness of the season, but partly because land had once been reported as seen by a whaler near this point.

In March, 1907, with two companions, he began his advance over the pack from the Midway Islands in lat. $70^{\circ} 30'$, and succeeded in making about a hundred miles to the north. The obstacles to progress were the same which hindered Markham, Nansen, and Peary in far higher latitudes—high pressure-ridges, hills and dales of old ice with splintered pieces projecting at innumerable angles, and occasional patches or channels of young ice-level, but liable at any moment to develop into open "lanes," sometimes a mile, but more frequently only a few yards, in width. To save carrying kayaks, Capt. Mikkelsen had invented a raft for crossing the wider lanes; and we quote the particulars of his patent when first employed, and his complacency at its survival:—

"The height of the raft was 8 inches; it was $3\frac{1}{4}$ feet wide and 9 feet long, so the end of the long sledge stuck out fore and aft.... I crawled out very carefully and straddled over the sledge as near as possible to the middle. I told Mr. Leffingwell to push off. When our load was clear of the ice I had to act as movable weight according to Mr. Leffingwell's instructions, but at last the raft was sufficiently well balanced to make the experiment comparatively safe. Then I started, hauling in the line very carefully. The risk was great, as we had only about an inch freeboard aft, and I dared not look round for fear of shifting my position, which would mean that the raft would fill with water, and the heavy sledge, full of provisions, would sink like a stone and leave us absolutely destitute far from home.... I crossed safely, but dared not crawl along the sledge, and Storkessen, who was a strong man, pulled the sledge, with me on top of it, on to the ice. Our raft had proved a success....but we cannot use it when there is thin ice or when there is any motion in the water; in the first case the sharp ice would cut the canvas, and in the second the raft would swamp and sink."

On his return southwards Capt. Mikkelsen proved by soundings that about forty miles from land the water suddenly deepened to beyond the length of his line (620 metres), and therefore that at this point the Continental Shelf is narrow. He found also that the prevailing drift of the ice, which was constantly in motion, was to W.N.W. even with a moderate westerly wind, and that it required a very strong wind to hold this drift in check. At the time he seems to have supposed that the persistence of the drift necessarily involved the existence of land a little N.E. of his furthest point; for in a map published in Harper's Magazine soon after his return he actually marked and named this hypothetical land. In Arctic exploration land that is "seen" has often turned out to be "dreamland"; and it was certainly a novelty to chart land which had not been seen, but was merely presumed to exist. In this book, however—especially in the Appendix summing up his work—Capt. Mikkelsen inclines to the opinion that, owing to the unexpected depth of the sea, land cannot exist to the north of Alaska, "at least within such distance of the coast as could be reached with dogs and sledges over the pack." This is probably the safer view; but the qualifying words are most important. Beyond Grant Land—fifteen degrees further north, but not far to the east—Peary found a steady drift of the ice in the opposite direction, viz., towards the east; and although the system of the Polar currents is still imperfectly known, it is natural to infer that between these opposite currents there must be at least a number of islands, if not an extensive tract of land. The only means of discovering this land over the ice-packed Beaufort Sea would be either to begin a sledge-trip in a much higher latitude, near the Parry Islands, or to push a drifting ship into the pack beyond Behring Strait, and send out sledge-parties from her, keeping in touch with her, if that were possible, by wireless telegraphy. Capt. Amundsen, the hero of the North-West Passage, has already formed plans for such a drift in the Fram. If he can command ample time and funds, he ought to make many interesting discoveries; but the danger to even the strongest ship from the sort of ice to be encountered is considerable. Also, if land should obstruct the drift, this peril would be increased; and retreat from such a quarter, if the ship should be lost, would be peculiarly difficult.

The reconnaissance of Capt. Mikkelsen is of great value, even though its results are mainly negative. He had fondly hoped to make another attempt over the pack last spring; but his crew returned home on a whaler, which for some reason failed to discharge his incoming stores at Point Barrow. His companion Mr. Leffingwell was remaining to survey some little-known parts of the coast; and the captain found himself, with winter at hand, either condemned to inaction, or obliged to take what he casually calls a "walk of three thousand miles" along the ice-foot of Behring Strait, and over a pass in the Alaska Range, before he could sail for home. He chose the latter alternative; and the last three chapters, describing this winter walk, in which he was a month without the sun, are full of stirring incident. His pictures of the "outposts of civilization" through which he passed—missions, Eskimo schools, and mining settlements—are drawn with a skilful and sympathetic hand. Indeed, few books in the now imposing mass of Arctic literature contain more varied matter; none certainly are written with more modesty, or with a greater gift of relating adventure in simple, yet graphic fashion.

There are nearly 200 admirable photographs, of which over 40 represent incidents of the sledge-journey; and the latter, especially one on p. 193, illustrate even better than Capt. Mikkelsen's unvarnished tale the immense difficulties which beset him in his Northern advance. There is also a fair map, on which the author's routes are clearly marked; but as it does not include the eastern side of Beaufort Sea, or record the tracks and soundings of the Franklin relief ships, it does not sufficiently illustrate the object for which the expedition was undertaken.

SOCIETIES.

GEOLOGICAL.—Feb. 24.—Prof. W. J. Sollas, President, in the chair.—Mr. T. C. F. Hall was elected a Fellow.—The following communications were read: 'Palæolithic Implements, &c., from Hackpen Hill, Winterbourne Bassett, and Knowle-Farm Pit, Wiltshire,' by the Rev. H. G. Ommanney Kendall; 'On the Karroo System in Northern Rhodesia, and its Relation to the General Geology,' by Mr. A. J. C. Molyneux;—and 'Plant-containing Nodules from Japan, considered structurally in their Relation to the "Coal-Balls" and "Roof-Nodules" of the European Carboniferous,' by Miss Marie C. Stopes.

ENTOMOLOGICAL.—March 3.—Dr. F. A. Dixey, President, in the chair.—Mr. F. H. Lyon was elected a Fellow.—Mr. L. B. Prout and Mr. A. W. Bacot brought for exhibition very extensive series of Acidulia virgularia, Hb., bred in ten successive generations from various crossings of London and Hyères races, the experiment being undertaken with a view to the further study of Mendelism. The results showed non-Mendelian inheritance, there being no segregation into pure and hybrid forms in definite proportions, thus supporting Mr. Bacot's view that apparent Mendelian phenomena are manifestations of selective purity rather than of gametic purity.—Mr. R. Adkin exhibited an apparent hybrid A. filipendulæ with A. achilleæ, taken wild in the neighbourhood of Oban, N.B.—Mr. H. M. Edelsten showed a living pupa of Pieris papæ closely assimilating the colour of a leaf of Clivia to which it was attached.—Mr. Hamilton H. Druce communicated a paper 'On some New and Little-Known Hesperidæ from Tropical West Africa.'—Mr. G. A. K. Marshall read a paper entitled 'Birds as a Factor in the Production of Mimetic Resemblances among Butterflies.' He explained that one of the chief criticisms directed against the theories of mimicry was to the effect that, on the whole, birds did not destroy butterflies to any appreciable extent, and contended that negative evidence on this subject, which appeared to have been very generally accepted, was of little scientific value, because in no case had it been shown that the observer had any adequate knowledge of the actual food-habits of birds, or that any careful or exhaustive inquiry had been made. A discussion followed, in which Dr. T. A. Chapman, Mr. J. W. Tutt, Mr. A. E. Tonge, Commander Walker, the President, and many other Fellows took part.

MICROSCOPICAL.—Sir E. Ray Lankester, President, in the chair.—A paper 'On the "Red Snow" Plant (Sphaerella nivalis),' by Dr. G. S. West, was read by Dr. Hebb, and is printed in the Journal of the Society for February. The President said that he had seen this alga in alpine regions, particularly in a small lake near Grindelwald, which in the autumn was found to be full of it, but he had never seen it on the snow.—A paper by Mr. A. A. C. E. Morlin, 'On a German-Silver Portable-Microscope made by Powell in 1850,' was taken as read.—Mr. E. M. Nelson's paper, 'On the Measurement of Very Minute Microscopic Objects,' was read by Mr. J. W. Gordon. Mr. Gordon also read a letter from Dr. M. D. Ewell in reply to the criticisms made upon portions of his paper, 'On the Present Status of Micrometry,' read at the November meeting.—Mr. F. Enock gave a lecture 'On the Transformation of Certain Insects,' which he illustrated by a number of excellent lantern-slides, the species dealt with being those which were common in suburban gardens, and were useful in the destruction of noxious insects.—A paper 'On the Fresh-water Crustacea of Algeria,' by Mr. Gurney, was communicated by Mr. D. J. Scourfield, who gave a brief résumé of its contents.—The following were elected Ordinary Fellows: A. Ashe, C. E. Heath, Massey D. E. G. Lyon, Walter Scott, and Wilber F. Willis.

PHILOLOGICAL.—March 5.—Mr. H. A. Nesbitt, Treasurer, in the chair.—Miss Nowell was elected a Member.—A paper was read by Mr. Leonard C. Wharton called 'Notes on the Lithuanian Lord's Prayer and Chylinski's Bible.' Much has been made, in the controversy among bibliographers as to the existence or otherwise of the Lithuanian Bible of 1662 and as to its date, of a citation from it of a particular version of the Lord's Prayer. Taking two texts of Lithuanian versions of the Lord's Prayer prior to the first appearance of the quotation and five subsequent to it, Mr. Wharton endeavoured to show by detailed comparison (facilitated by a table) that, though the dialect is roughly the same as that of the Bible, yet the version itself can be traced to a date more than a hundred years earlier than that of the printing of the Bible proofs in 1662. Further use was made of the appearance of a doxology in five of the versions subsequent to the Bible by comparison of text, with the object of throwing light on the quotation from the Bible.

Mr. Wharton's conclusion in the principal matter was that, the doxology apart, the main portion of the Lord's Prayer published by Dr. Wilkins in 1668 comes, directly or indirectly, from that in Maz'wyd's Lithuanian translation of Luther's 'Kleiner Catechismus' (1547). Further, the adoption of variants from Willent's version of 1579 indicates that the copyist knew the latter as well. It is certainly not proved, though barely possible, that Chylinski, the self-styled translator of the Bible of 1662, had a hand in the copying or the revision of the 1668 version; certain it is that his prospectus of 1659 gave the clue for this investigation. Finally, the question of the doxology is obscure, but it would appear to have nothing to do with the Bible.

The paper was followed by a discussion, which showed that the form "danguje" is not older than "dangusu," and that the Catechism belongs to the oldest group of the literary monuments of the Lithuanian language.

Mr. J. S. Westlake read a paper on the -ar and -an plurals in Old Frisian, with reference to old English; and another entitled 'Does Indo-Germanic ei always become Indo-Germanic i?' He founded the letter on Silua Bâcensis (beechen wood), the emended form of Cæsar's Silua Lacensis, and said that this ē must have come from ei, and later became i. This explains the Germanic Rîn, which was equal to the fourth-century Kilotic Reinos, whose later form was Rhên-, and that became in Germanic Rîn.

INSTITUTION OF CIVIL ENGINEERS.—March 2.—Mr J. C. Inglis, President, in the chair.—The paper read was 'Some Recent Grain-Handling and Storing Appliances at the Millwall Docks,' by Mr. Magnus Mowat.—It was reported that sixteen candidates had been admitted as Students.—The monthly ballot resulted in the election of two Members and six Associate Members.

PHYSICAL.—Feb. 26.—Dr. C. Chree, President, in the chair.—A paper entitled 'A Laboratory Machine for applying Bending and Twisting Moments Simultaneously' was read by Prof. Coker.—A paper 'On the Self-Demagnetizing Factor of Bar-Magnets,' by Prof. S. P. Thompson and Mr. E. W. Moss, was read by Prof. Thompson.—Prof. Thompson also gave an exhibition of the optical properties of combinations of mica and selenite films (after Reusch and others) in convergent polarized light.

MEETINGS NEXT WEEK.

MON. Bibliographical, 5.—'The Bibliography of Petronius Arbiter,' Mr. S. Gaselee.
— Institute of British Architects, 8.—'American Architecture,' Mr. F. S. Swales.
TUES. Royal Institution, 2.—'The Evolution of the Brain as an Organ of Mind,' Lecture IV., Prof. F. W. Mott.
— Colonial Institute, 4.30.—'Some Impressions of Colonial Life,' Mrs. Douglas Cator.
— Statistical, 5.
— Institution of Civil Engineers, 8.
— Zoological, 8.30.—'Grouse-Disease Committee Reports: (a) The Ectoparasites of the Grouse; (b) The Thread-Worms (Nematoda) of the Red Grouse (Tetrao scoticus); (c) The Tape-Worms (Cestoda) of the Grouse. Appendix: Parasites of Birds allied to the Grouse,' Dr. A. E. Shipley; 'On a Fossil Bird from the Lower Pliocene,' Mr. W. P. Pycraft; 'On a Collection of Mammals from Western Java, presented to the National Museum by Mr. W. E. Balston,' Messrs. Oldfield Thomas and R. C. Wroughton.

WED. British Academy, 5.—'The Building of the Nave of Westminster,' the Rev. R. B. Rackham.
— Meteorological, 7.30.—'Wind Waves in Water, Sand, and Snow,' Dr. V. Cornish.
— Entomological, 8.
— Folk-lore, 8.—'Myth, Magic, and Ceremonial of the Andaman Islanders,' Mr. A. R. Brown.
— Microscopical, 8.—'The Optical Examination of a Crystal Section in a Rock-Slice,' Dr. J. W. Evans.
— Society of Arts, 8.—'The Musical Aspect of Drums,' Mr. G. G. Cleather.
THURS. Royal Institution, 3.—'Recent Advances in Agricultural Science,' Lecture II., Mr. A. D. Hall.
— Royal, 4.30.
— Institution of Mechanical Engineers, 8.—'Experiments upon the Forces acting on Twist-Drills when operating on Cast Iron and Steel,' Messrs. D. Smith and R. Poliakoff.
— Linnean, 8.—'The Dry-Rot of Potatoes,' Miss S. Longman; 'The Structure and Affinities of Davidia involucreata, Baill.,' Mr. A. Horne.
— Chemical, 8.30.—'Iodine-Dioxide,' Mr. M. M. P. Muir; 'The Constituents of the Rhizome of Apocynum androsaemifolium, Mr. C. W. Moore; and other Papers.
— Society of Antiquaries, 8.30.
FRI. Institution of Civil Engineers, 8.—Students' Meeting.
Royal Institution, 9.—'Experiments at High Temperatures and Pressures,' Mr. Richard Threlfall.
SAT. Royal Institution, 3.—'Properties of Matter,' Lecture IV., Prof. Sir J. J. Thomson.

Science Gossip.

THE so-called Daylight Saving Bill is again under consideration, and there, if the Select Committee have abundant leisure, it may as well remain. The promoters steadily look at one side of the question, and neglect the obvious objections to an utterly impracticable scheme. The supposed advantages could be attained in a much simpler manner by altering the hours at which offices and shops open and close at certain seasons of the year. This would relate only to a third part of the year, for March and April, September and October. From November to February all who have to work systematically must exhaust the daylight, whilst from May to August all would have sufficient daylight before and after their work.

A SHORT Act of Parliament would enable banks and public offices to alter their hours in the spring and autumn, and other houses of business might follow if they found it desirable; if employees were consulted, it is not likely they would be unanimous in favour of the change. But to tamper with our time and the regulation of it would be deplorable. The confusion that would result from making an hour not always an hour would be intolerable. No object of any kind can be satisfactorily attained by a deceitful method; no Act of Parliament can make 8 o'clock in the morning 3 hours before noon, or 5 in the evening 4 hours after noon. The attempt would certainly fail, and even a trial would be injurious.

THE mean temperature for February at Greenwich was 37°·0, or 2°·5 below the average for that month, as compared with the sixty preceding years. The lowest reading in the shade was 19°, which was registered on the morning of the 23rd. Frost occurred on every night except those of the 4th and 5th. The rainfall was less than half the normal, whilst the hours of bright sunshine were 91, which is 34 more than usual.

FIVE more small planets are announced as having been photographically discovered by Herr Kopff at the Astrophysical Institute, Königstuhl, Heidelberg: one each on the 19th and 20th ult., two on the 21st, and one on the 25th.

IN her examination of plates taken by M. Blazko at the Moscow Observatory, Madame Ceraski has detected variability in a star in the constellation Cepheus, which is numbered +78°·831 in the Bonn 'Durchmusterung.' The changes appear to be between 9½ and 11½ magnitudes, and the period probably long. In a general list the star will be reckoned var. 4, 1909, Cephei. Mr. Sperra, of Cleveland, Ohio, has also found that the star B.D. +38°·2798, which is usually of about 8½ magnitude, is subject to small variations, reducing it sometimes to about half a magnitude below that. It is in the constellation Hercules, and will be reckoned as var. 5, 1909, Herculis.

OBSERVATIONS are now being made to determine telegraphically the difference of longitude between Greenwich and Malta. Mr. Eddington is at Malta, whilst Mr. Harold Christie (son of the Astronomer Royal) is observing at Greenwich, and they will probably change places at the end of the month. One of the Greenwich portable transits, used in previous longitude determinations, has been taken to Malta.

THE first number of Vol. XXXVIII. of the Memorie della Società degli Spettroscopisti Italiani has been received. The principal contents are the results of a series of photometric observations, chiefly of variable stars, obtained by Prof. Bemporad at Catania, and a continuation of spectroscopic images of the sun's limb taken by Tacchini and Prof. Millosevich at Rome during the last three months of 1883.

FINE ARTS

THE POPULARIZATION OF ART.

The National Gallery. Edited by P. G. Konody, M. W. Brockwell, and F. W. Lippmann. Parts I.-VI. (T. C. & E. C. Jack.)—The first six parts of this new publication on the National Gallery have followed one another with commendable rapidity, and it is now possible to form some idea how far it bears out the promise of the publishers' prospectus. There have been so many failures in the attempt to reproduce in facsimile pictures by the Old Masters that one looks askance at new efforts. The success of Messrs. Jack's 'National Gallery' is consequently something of the nature of a surprise. It is, of course, almost impossible to compare each colour and shade in these reproductions with the originals, but the general effect of every plate is one of remarkable fidelity. Each part consists of six plates, with text, in large type, in the form of a condensed history of the different schools, with references to the chief pictures of the respective artists, and especially to those in the National Gallery. There is a swing in the text which proclaims that it is mainly intended for popular reading; but in the matter of dates and facts the latest researches have evidently been utilized. There are some "flowers of speech," as on p. 16, where we are told that Masaccio "is the strong root of the tree that bore the bloom of quattrocentist painting." It is not correct to state (p. 62) that Mr. Pierpont Morgan gave 100,000*l.* for the Raphael 'Madonna di Sant' Antonio': by deducting one-fifth from that amount a much more correct guess will be made. Nor do we think it is correct to say (p. 130) that Charles I.'s collection was "sold by Cromwell."

In the "provisional" list (published in the first part) of plates to be reproduced the publishers claim that the work will consist of 100 of the "finest paintings" in the National Gallery. But some of these cannot be described as the "finest," since in certain cases their interest is purely artistic and historical. Nor can they be described as the most popular; but we think that the student will agree that the 100 selected are of the highest importance. Each plate has a fly-leaf with the title of the picture, a short description, and the size according to the English and the decimal system. It would have been an advantage if these fly-leaves had contained a few more particulars—the provenance of each work, for instance (so far as it is known). But this would perhaps be unreasonable to expect in a popular work.

The Art Treasures of London: Painting. Compiled by Hugh Stokes. (Fairbairns & Co.)—On the announcement of this book it was hoped that a long-felt want would at last be supplied; these hopes have, however, not been realized. In a certain sense some of the errors which are scattered through the book cannot be fairly laid to the charge of Mr. Stokes, who has unwisely allowed himself to be misled by the inaccuracies and misprints which are still to be met with in certain official publications, and have from time to time been pointed out in these columns. The discerning critic, possessing a highly developed sense of clerical accuracy as well as "the living eye" for the points of a picture, does not usually fall so precipitately into the many pitfalls that await the unwary. In the present day the layman too often puts his faith in untrustworthy books of reference, unscientific textbooks, antiquated quotations, and unscholarly reprints. It is all the more regrettable, therefore, that this chronological guide to the schools of painting as represented in the public galleries of London should be published with an air of authority that will mislead many. By arranging the pictures in the chronological order of the schools to which they belong Mr. Stokes has given us the "form at a glance" (if we may use such an expression) of the art treasures in our large public collections; but the title chosen for the book is misleading, as no mention is made—if we are to trust the Index—of a single private collection. Are we justified in assuming from the title that the other works of art in the British Museum, the Wallace Collection, the National Gallery of British Art, and at South Kensington will yet be chronologically arranged? As pictures at Oxford, Cambridge, Hampton Court, and Dulwich are included, Bethnal Green Museum, and even Windsor Castle, might have been dealt with.

In the general remarks on the National Gallery it is stated that the Rokeby 'Venus' by Velasquez was bought for 40,000*l.*, and the natural inference is that that sum was paid by the Gallery, to which it was, in fact, presented by the National Art-Collections Fund, after having been purchased for 45,000*l.*

In accepting unreservedly as an authentic work by Cimabue the 'Madonna' in the National Gallery (No. 565), and repeating the timeworn myth that Cimabue was "the first painter to break through the tradition of Byzantine art," the author conveys a wrong impression. The dates of his great contemporary Duccio are incorrectly given as 1260-1339, instead of 1255-1319. It is unreasonable to place the birth of Titian as late as 1498, which would intimate that he was working on the exterior frescoes of the Fondaco de' Tedeschi at the age of nine, and painted the 'Ariosto' in the National Gallery (No. 1944)—if it is really by him—when less than ten years of age! Perhaps Mr. Stokes has been misled by the misprint in an official publication to which we drew attention long ago (Athenæum, No. 4129). To the same source may be traced the wrong dates given in connexion with Botticelli, Richard Wilson, and Hoppner, who were born in 1444, 1814, and 1768 respectively. Sir M. Archer Shee and Alfred Stevens were born in 1769 and 1818, and not in the years given by Mr. Stokes.

In at least two instances the titles of pictures are incorrect: one of Piero di Cosimo's pictures at Trafalgar Square is the 'Death of Procris,' not 'The Death of Proteus'; and the portrait by F. Francia which Mr. Salting has lent to the Gallery represents 'Bartolommeo Bianchini,' not "Bianchi." Perugino's 'Virgin and Child and St. John' is wrongly numbered on the page of illustrations on which it is placed; and Crome's 'Windmill' has the wrong title in the list of illustrations facing p. 112. Marco Barbarigo was for a short time Venetian consul (not "counsel") in London. What authority has Mr. Stokes for the suggestion that the 'Man's Portrait' by Jan van Eyck (No. 222) is "that of the painter"? There is not a shred of evidence to support this conjecture.

Hopeless confusion has been made between Gregorio Schiavone and Andrea Schiavone, eight pictures which are ascribed in the Hampton Court Catalogue to the latter, who is also known as Meldolla, being included on p. 19 among the works of the former. Benjamin West's 'Christ blessing Little Children' is at the Foundling, and not at Burlington House; and the 'Portrait of the Artist' credited to West on p. 111 should apparently have been assigned to Westall on p. 117.

Notable omissions are the 'Mrs. Siddons' by Sir T. Lawrence and the 'Portrait of Lady Clarges' by Downman, both of which are in the National Gallery; Hogarth's 'Capt. Coram' at the Foundling; R. Wilson's 'Portrait of Himself' in the Diploma Gallery; and Watts's fresco of 'The School of Legislation' in Lincoln's Inn Hall. Dates, approximate at least, might have been assigned to the pictures by Gainsborough (p. 109) and other prolific artists.

It is easy "to collate a score of catalogues," and to consult Morelli, Kugler, and Crowe and Cavalcaselle; but a certain amount of discrimination is necessary. It is profitable also to quote, with full acknowledgment, of course, the latest deductions and oracular utterances of Mr. Berenson; but even here Mr. Stokes has not been pre-eminently successful. He has thus failed to note that the 'Cavaliere,' which passed, with other pictures in the Cohen Bequest, to the National Gallery as a work by Moroni, has been lately attributed by Mr. Berenson to Sofonisba Anguissola. It is obvious also that that well-known critic did not describe the 'Portrait of Andrea Odoni' at Hampton Court as "one of the first achievements" of Lorenzo Lotto, but as one of his finest, and Lotto was forty-seven years of age when he painted it. The reader might have been warned against accepting as absolutely authentic some pictures that pass under the names of Fra Bartolommeo, Botticelli, Titian, Albrecht Dürer, Vigée Le Brun, Richard Wilson, Gainsborough, and J. S. Cotman.

There are several misprints, some of which are duplicated in the Index, as Mantavano (p. 17), Marco Zoppa (p. 19), Zurburan (p. 77), S. Rock (p. 18), St. Zenobia (p. 10), Copplethwaite (p. 111), and Piero della Francesco (p. 4).

Much of the information given is exceedingly useful. Few, for instance, know that there is a picture at South Kensington by Georges Michel, whose 'Woodland Scene' has lately been acquired by the National Gallery. Very few people would be able at a moment's notice to say where they could find paintings by Gustave Courbet, Cambiaso, F. H. Drouais, Van Stry, W. R. Bigg, Joseph Barber, James Baynes, Joseph Highmore, and others. Mr. Stokes's book will prove of great assistance for handy reference, although the parentheses denoting the room in which a particular picture is to be found are often left empty.

The Wallace Collection and the Tate Gallery. By Estelle Ross. (Wells Gardner & Co.)—It is incontestable that London children are seldom taken to public galleries, and that when they are, at irregular intervals, given what is intended as a great "treat," they are too often bored. In most cases this boredom is due to the incapacity of their instructors, who have not the gift of imparting to their charges something of the romance, folk-lore, and historical reminiscence that would awaken their curiosity and sustain their interest. Thus there is room for a series of simply worded and entertaining books on the public galleries of London; but any attempts in the direction of straightforward art-criticism for juveniles, to prove successful, must be based on a just appreciation of the facts, a sound historic outlook, and a well-developed æsthetic sense; the volumes should, in fact, be written by a responsible critic.

The introduction of anecdotes into the narrative, to hold the attention of the young folk for whom this book is obviously intended, is commendable, but the facts upon which they are based are frequently inaccurate. Thus we are incorrectly told that 'The Tragic Muse' by Sir Joshua Reynolds "is in the National Gallery" (p. 12). The picture of 'Mrs. Siddons as the Tragic Muse,' which is here referred to, is in the collection of the Duke of Westminster. Miss Estelle Ross probably has in mind the inferior studio replica in the Dulwich College Gallery.

Again, we read that the 'Lady Cockburn and her Children' by Reynolds "used to be in the National Gallery." Miss Ross evidently does not know that it was bequeathed by Mr. Alfred Beit some two years ago to the national collection, in which it now hangs.

It would appear from the remark that "W. P. Frith painted, as a rule, scenes of the day, and his pictures have a special interest as illustrating the period in which he lived" (p. 157), that the author is under the impression that Mr. Frith is dead. He is, on the contrary, not only alive, but still pays an occasional visit to the National Gallery, in spite of his ninety years.

In the chapter on Watts we read that "the Celts, who have a fixed idea that English people are unimaginative, have thought well to call him a Welshman" (p. 165). The author is apparently unaware that Watts's parents were of Welsh origin.

It is possible that Titian "entered the studio of Gentile Bellini" (p. 51), but it would be safer in this connexion to mention his brother Giovanni also rather than to pass him over. However, much labour has evidently been expended on this book, which will no doubt meet with the success it deserves.

The National Gallery. By Alice Corkran. (Same publishers.)—This book is laudable in its endeavour, but ineffectual in its criticisms, and too often misleading in its facts and details. We are told in the Introductory Note that in the compilation of "this guide to our National Gallery for young folk" many writers have been consulted, including Crowe and Cavalcaschi [sic], as well as "many other authorities read in handbooks and articles which I cannot enumerate." We are informed that all that is best in "the work of all the greatest masters the world has known" has "come down into the art of our time"; and we are asked to believe that in bygone days "every church contained numerous altars above which was raised a masterpiece," although "the art of the North was essentially a Protestant art, caring little for legends of the saints and the Madonna" (p. 3). A few lines further on we read that "afterwards, towards the end of the seventeenth century, came the English School." Such a perfunctory summary of the development of art might have satisfied the "young folk" of Early Victorian times, but in these days of scientific criticism we must be allowed to dissent from the erroneous views adopted by Miss Corkran.

The English is frequently odd. Thus the St. John seen in Margaritone's picture is described as being "apparently in a hipbath of seething oil" (p. 11); while in the remarks on the French School it is stated to be "a great miss in the National Gallery to have no picture" by Watteau.

The author is in error in saying that Raphael was born on a Good Friday (p. 63), and that he "was not twenty when he painted the Ansidei Madonna." Our knowledge of the art of Spain is far from complete, but it is ridiculous to dub it "an art that flourished for a century." Miss Corkran is apparently under the impression that Albrecht Dürer never left "his beloved country" for Venice (p. 157). It is inexact to state that "before he heard Savonarola, Botticelli painted nothing but heathen gods and goddesses"; nor did Leonardo die in the arms of King Francis I. (p. 43). Lawrence's 'Portrait of Romilly,' the "great lawyer who reformed the cruel laws" (p. 188), is not now exhibited at Trafalgar Square. We are told that "Fra Lippi's patron was Cosmo de' Medici, whose portrait is here painted by Angelo Bronzino" (p. 16). Cosmo de' Medici died in 1464, and Bronzino was not born till about 1502. The fact is that the portrait in the National Gallery (No. 704) represents Cosimo I., Duke of Tuscany (1519-74), and is probably only a school picture, a more authentic portrait being in the Borghese Gallery.

Rosa Bonheur's 'Horse Fair,' which, as the author admits, is now in the Tate Gallery, is ineffectually dragged in to chronicle the fact that "when I was a little girl in Paris, I remember going to see Rosa Bonheur with my father and mother," but the artist "had fallen asleep under the table" (p. 175).

Misprints are numerous; thus we have "Ansedei" for Ansidei, "St. Emilius" for St. Emidius, the city of "Ascali" for Ascoli, and "Palmeira" for Palmieri; and the executioners in Pollaiuolo's 'St. Sebastian' are said to be "changing their cross-bows," instead of charging them.

THE WORK OF THE ART SCHOOLS OF LONDON.

THE exhibition at the Whitechapel Art Gallery of the work of students of the London Art Schools cannot claim to be fully representative, and moreover limitations as to space have led to the scattering of the works of different schools, so that in the absence of a catalogue it is difficult to judge of their relative merits. The half-formal nature of the show, however, offers a fairer impression of the work done than is to be obtained, for example, by examination of the work sent up to South Kensington, in which the bent of the student and the aim of the teacher are conceivably coloured by what they believe to be the taste of the examiners. Nothing in this exhibition has been introduced or eliminated by such considerations, so we are the more struck by its revelation of the almost complete lack amongst us of some of the essential elements of artistic education.

Students are encouraged, it is true, to devise on familiar lines patterns for wall-papers and textiles, but, as a rule, their work in the life room is a thing apart—purely imitative, and uninformed by any purpose of design. They are taught to copy more or less faithfully a model paid to keep still, and in the golden age of art the opportunity of such study would have seemed most precious—because it alone was difficult of access, while other instruction came to a man inevitably in his daily work of assisting his master. To-day such individual research is to some extent within the reach of every beginner, but he is so rarely offered any assistance in utilizing his opportunities that the result is not to stimulate his inventive powers, but to weaken them till he is incapable of doing anything without a model in front of him.

At its best such a system produces a type of painter unsuited to our day; for while we do not anticipate that the present "bad times" in artistic circles indicate the future abolition of the painter, we do regard them as pointing to the necessity of a change in our ideal of the painter's education. The elaborately intimate picture of a scene entirely realized before the artist for his portrayal must always be a luxury for the rich buyer, costly to produce, and marketable only in an extreme degree of excellence. On the other hand, there is a real need among us of a school of lively and inventive decorative painters, capable of using colour in exhilarating fashion. Such men need not so much to produce impeccable studies as to be able, in artist's jargon, to "handle the figure," which is a very different thing. They need not be forced to register every tiny muscular detail of a figure, but should be encouraged to group its main directional lines with a keen eye to their significance. Occasionally, as at the Slade School, some such instruction in absolute drawing from life seems to be given; but even here, if we may judge from the three large sketch compositions contributed to the show, there are signs of only a minimum of constructive teaching in the principles of figure-design and pictorial structure to a prodigious amount of unrelated life-drawing.

Doubtless, it is the desire to be original which shackles a student's inventiveness, bidding him postpone any attempt to cast together groups of figures till he has formed an individual view of the structure of the body not based on another's ideal. Such scruples are a modern invention, and we may confidently assert that every one of the masters we revere began by exercising his inventiveness on some one else's material, recombining figures which another had first observed. The modern student's indolence of invention should be combated. It would be done most effectively, of course, in the old fashion, by example—by setting him to work by the side of an active painter and serve as his assistant. The work of the Bolt Court School of Lithography, if slightly vulgar, shows more signs of vitality than the others, doubtless because there was going on alongside of the life class the reproduction of designs of a freer and less imitative character. We should be less afraid, too, of setting students to copying. The task of freely translating fine designs into the student's natural terms of expression stimulates invention, and such work as the "Historic" studies after Veronese, Tiepolo, and Michelangelo, which are shown by a student of the St. Martin's School, is a step in the right direction, as is also a "Mural Design" emanating from Hammersmith, which, without being remarkable in result, is at least based on a Della Robbia group of great suitability to the purpose.

For the practical purpose of training the painter of the future, our present policy of isolating the individual student from every influence but that of the model is disastrous. A school would be only the more useful if it reared a generation of artists with a single ideal and speaking a common idiom, and to send out a team of painters capable of working together, the beginners squaring up and forwarding the designs which the more advanced students originate and complete, is the policy which means ultimate success. By their not quite mechanical work the former would get insight into their business, while it is by such a system only that we can win back to the productive power of a former day, more than ever necessary now, when time is so important an element in any task of decoration. By realizing, moreover, their possible place in such a scheme of activity, the unfortunate students of "still-life painting" might endow their work with new life, and redeem it from the kind of ineffective colour - photography into which it has degenerated.

OTHER EXHIBITIONS.

OF the two societies of women painters, it is undoubtedly the Women's International Art Club, now showing at the Grafton Galleries, which this year has the higher average of merit. Works of exceptional quality are not on that account more numerous, but we are reminded that from the general spread of the principles of impressionism some idea of unity of colour has been gained. The works of the late Anna Birch (102 and 105) are examples of a reasonable proficiency in this respect not allied with any great freshness of observation. In Mrs. Austen Brown's flower pieces (2 and 7) the same qualities are shown in combination with a daintier, but not less structural use of paint; and Miss Halhed's In an Old Mirror (18) also has superficial charm, but perfunctory characterization. Miss Emily Lang's On the East Coast (30) and Miss Alice Fanner's Snow in Spring (80) have each a flutter of pleasant colour.

Satisfactory examples of more sustained effort are rare, but Miss Mary Creighton's Gaslight at Twilight (58) has an intimate charm recalling the best figure pictures, say, of Mr. Muirhead at the New English Art Club. Miss Rowley Leggett's Cuckmere River (65) is much the best large picture she has done—sincere and thorough, if a trifle heavy handed; and Miss Clare Atwood's Iron Gates (120) has similar qualities. Of the water-colours we must mention the four brilliant drawings of Versailles by Madame Andry-Arlen.

At Mr. McLean's Galleries an exhibition of water-colours by Miss Emily Paterson is distinctly disappointing: they are fretful and unquiet without being vivacious or sparkling. In the gallery beyond is a collection of pictures of the British, Dutch, and French Schools, of which the finest is a small Interior: Old Woman and Child (25), by Decamps, in which the figures are feebly characterized, but which catches something of the uncanny silence of an unbearably hot day, when torpor seizes you even in the shadowed room, and without not a creature stirs. Nothing else in the room has so strong a flavour as this little picture, though a couple of still-life pieces, by Alexander Fraser (24) and Philip Rousseau (26) respectively, have modest merits which make them preferable to other canvases alongside to which are attached greater names. A large Lioness and Stork (13), by J. Ward, shows a strong structural use of paint allied to weak drawing; while Sir John Millais's Clarissa (14) alongside has nicety of form, but specious technique. A small example by James Stark (23) contrasts similarly with the Promenade at Famars (32) by H. Harpignies—the one is technically impeccable, but has hardly a breath of nature about it; the other is the sort of sketch any amateur might have done on some radiant afternoon when the delicacy of the day possessed him.

NATIONAL GALLERY OF BRITISH ART.

THE opening of a roomful of new acquisitions reminds us of the steadily improved aspect this institution is assuming under its new Director. The large Second Gallery, carefully hung with selected works, presents now an imposing appearance; and the putting in place of Alfred Stevens's great spandrel Isaiah gives the Gallery a dignified example of monumental design in the grand style to which no collection of modern work can boast any superior.

The works formally added to the collection last week are less important: a small collection of etchings by living artists and by Wilkie, the smaller of whose plates are masterly; drawings by Mr. Strang, Mr. Muirhead Bone, and Alfred Stevens; and an extraordinarily brilliant lot of water-colours by Müller, whose Terrace at Chambord is a superb sketch of unusual delicacy and constructive power. The late Mr. Brabazon is not represented, perhaps, at his best, though the View of the Grand Canal has the essence of his colour, but lacks the flower-like superficial perfection which, especially in the use of body colour, is his hall-mark of greatness. The Pink Palace shows something of this, but the design is a little obvious. There are also further examples of the drawings of J. F. Lewis.

Almost all the drawings in the next room have been given, and a portrait of Pettie by himself and an excellent example of the work of James Charles are due to similar acts of generosity. We shall know in a better world by what means owners are induced, for the good of their country, to separate themselves from their most cherished possessions in so entirely satisfactory a manner.

THE HORSE GUARDS PARADE.

THE suggestion for improving the Horse Guards Parade just published by Mr. J. W. Speaight is a project which, from many points of view, finds warm support. No artist can look at the plan proposed without feeling that it is a suitable—indeed, some might almost say the only—way of laying out that portion of St. James's Park. The vista from the Duke of York's Column to the Foreign Office tower rightly dictates the scale of the design, the other details of which have the inevitable look of a happily inspired plan. There are those who still hope the Government will see its way to endowing London with so handsome a feature, the spaciousness of which could not but prove a valuable asset, even from a pecuniary point of view.

The brochure in which Mr. Speaight sets forth his project shows him as so capable an advocate that we need not elaborate here the advantages of laying out this part of the Park in the manner proposed. The charming Canal Walk would be a unique possession for Londoners. The manner suggested, however, for adorning the new "Place" with statuary (all the military statues being gathered from the highways of the metropolis into a kind of National Valhalla) is open to some artistic objection, fine as it may sound as an expression of national sentiment. It is difficult to foresee exactly the effect that would be produced were all these monuments, designed at different times and for various surroundings, dumped down cheek by jowl as units in the same architectural scheme. That scheme should be so handsome, moreover, that we could wish it finer decorative adjuncts than some of these statues, the demerits of which at present are not unkindly veiled behind a screen of hurrying motor-cars. This is, of course, a purely artistic consideration, and the scheme appeals so strongly to the imagination that perhaps for once even the claims of Art should be subsidiary to those of a grandiose historic symbolism.

THE ARCHÆOLOGICAL BUDGET OF ROME FOR 1908.

I MUST interrupt the thread of the account begun in The Athenæum of January 30th to speak of the extraordinary discovery made on the Janiculum on Saturday, February 6th, which forms the topic of the day in archæological circles. When Mr. George Wurts, the present owner of the Villa Sciarra, was laying the foundations of a new gardener's house near the lower gate, opening on the "Viale Glorioso"—and this happened in the summer of 1906—many marbles, inscribed with Greek and Latin dedications, were discovered. Among these were a votive altar to the Syrian god Addoas; another to Jupiter Maleciabrades, the local god of the Syrian town of Jabruda; a third to Jupiter Keraunios, or Fulgurator, and to the Nymphs Furrinæ; and lastly a Greek metric inscription concerning certain works accomplished by a devotee named Gaionas (the Aramaic for "the magnificent"). This enterprising representative of Eastern superstitions in Rome was already known to us from other records which have been published both in the 'Corpus Inscr. Latin.' and in Kaibel's 'Inscr. Græcæ.'

The texts discovered by Mr. Wurts in 1906 proved: First, that the lower section of the old Villa Sciarra, where the gardener's cottage has just been erected, marks the site of the sacred grove of Furrina, where Caius Gracchus was put to death by his own attendant in B.C. 121, while the bodies of his 3,000 partisans were thrown into the Tiber, which runs just at the foot of the slope. Secondly, that the existence in the same grove of several springs, held in religious respect, brought about in imperial times the evolution of the old local goddess Furrina into a group of aquatic Nymphs of the same name.* Lastly, that at the time of the Antonines a section of the sacred grove, and one, at least, of the springs, became the property of the Syrian colony (or of one of the Syrian colonies) in Rome, which was given leave to build a national chapel, and to set up a fountain for the use of its attendants.

Starting from these facts, Prof. Paul Gauckler—whose archæological work as Curator of Antiquities in Tunisia stands in no need of my praises—took up the subject with the view to a thorough search of the ground; and, overcoming various difficulties, in high and low quarters, he has, with the assistance of Messrs. George Nicole and Gaston Darien, the sanction of the owner of the ground, the Marchese Medici del Vascello, and the permission of the Ministry of Public Instruction, carried out his plan with perfect success.

* Cicero ('Nat. Deor.' iii. 18) calls the scene of Gracchus's murder the grove of the Furies, but those Attic deities do not appear to have been naturalized at Rome; and we may infer from Varro that Furrina was some indigenous goddess.

In the first place, the spring made into a canal by Gaionas for the benefit of his fellow-worshippers has been again brought into play. It gives an output of 140 cubic metres per day, and, being of excellent quality, represents to the owner of the land an additional capital of a hundred thousand francs. The basin of Carystian marble (cipollino oscuro) into which the water once fell, discovered accidentally in 1902, was sold to the antiquary Simonetti for 2,700 francs, and still belongs to his collection.

In the second place, it has been made clear that the original sanctuary, built by Gaionas towards the end of the second century, must have come to grief—or been abandoned—150 years later, on account of its unfavourable position at the bottom of a ravine, and another built at a higher level, with the negligence and poverty of materials characteristic of the Maxentian era. The walls of this later sanctuary have no foundations at all, and are built with chips of tufa and bad cement; but the plan of the structure itself is remarkable. It comprises a central assembly-room of considerable dimensions, facing the east, with a triangular altar in the middle, and a square one in the apse, over which a mutilated marble statue was lying, probably of a Jupiter Serapis or of a Romanized Baal. The assembly-room is surrounded by five or six chapels, in the plan of which, as well as in other structural details, the triangular shape prevails. In one of these recesses, at the eastern end of the group, another triangular altar of large dimensions was discovered on February 6th, with a rim or raised border, as if to prevent a liquid substance, spread over it, from dripping on the pavement.

It seems in the third place that towards the middle of the fourth century the worshippers in this Syrian chapel must have joined forces with the worshippers of Mithras, who were then engaged in a war à outrance against the overpowering Christian influence; and that they must have had to face the same decree of suppression issued by Gracchus, Prefect of the city, in 377, which put an end to the practice of foreign superstition in Rome.

To such an incident in the history of the Syrian Transtiberine congregation Prof. Gauckler attributes the fact that the beautiful statues of gods discovered in the present day within the precincts of the sanctuary had been studiously concealed two feet below the floor. One, absolutely perfect, represents a young Bacchus with the usual attributes, and with the head and hands heavily gilded. Perhaps the figure was dressed in rich Eastern clothing, like some of our popular saints in Italian villages. The other is an exquisite image of a young Isis, which I believe to be an original Egyptian work worthy of having come out of one of the studios of the Saitic school; while others consider it an imitative work of the time of Hadrian. The statue (which is cut in black basalt) must have been knocked off its altar or pedestal by a heavy blow on the forehead, which disfigured the nose and the lips, and broke the body into five or six pieces, which, however, were piously collected by some one and buried in the apse of one of the smaller chapels. I believe not one is missing.

The finds described in the preceding paragraphs, interesting as they are from the archæological point of view, have been almost cast into oblivion by those which have revealed to us some of the secrets of the place.

In the "sancta sanctorum" of the main chapel, within the high altar and right under the feet of the Jupiter-Baal, a hiding-place has been detected, about one foot square, lined with plaster, in which part of a human skull of an adult was concealed. There were no traces of jaws or teeth or incinerated bones, nor of goblets, medals, jewellery, and other such funeral κειμήλια. The section of the skull appears to have been neatly cut, to fit the size of the hole which was to guard the secret of its origin and existence for nearly sixteen centuries. As we cannot for obvious reasons consider this relic as an os resectum, as a remnant of the incineration of the body, Prof. Gauckler has advanced the conjecture, and hinted at the possibility, that we may have in this piece of skull the evidence of a human sacrifice "of consecration," so frequent in the rites of Semitic religions. The place of honour given to it in the Transtiberine sanctuary shows how valuable it was in the eyes of the initiated at whose expense the sanctuary had been rebuilt. This would be, then, the first evidence of a human holocaust ever found in Rome. The victim, immolated according to the ancient rites, identified it with the god by virtue of the sacrifice—would chain him, as it were, to the relics, thus ensuring his actual presence wherever its relics were preserved. We must remember, apropos of this theory, that when the Mithræum of Alexandria was suppressed by the Emperor Constantius in 361, a party of Christian invaders discovered in a secret passage human bones, which were shown to the populace as a proof that human sacrifices had been perpetrated in that den of iniquities.

Another secret has been found buried in the core of the triangular altar at the eastern end of the building. It seems that on the consecration day a symbolic image of the presiding god, or of one of the presiding gods, was buried in a hiding-place identical in shape with the one described above, and sealed with a "tegula bipedalis" lined with cement around the rim. Lying at the bottom of the cache, with feet turned towards the west, viz., towards the high altar, was a bronze (?) figure of a Mithras Leontokephalos (?), wound, as usual, in the coils of a snake, whose head bends forward above that of the god. The interrogation marks in such matter-of-fact questions are easily explained. On the day of the consecration, before the hiding-place was sealed in which the snake and its symbolic victim were to lie for ever, mystic food was provided for the reptile, and five ordinary chicken's eggs were deposited, one at each coil. I do not know how these eggs came to be broken: the fact is that their yolk, mixed with dust and lime, has stained and encrusted the figure so that it is impossible to make out its features, and the material in which it is cast or moulded or chiselled, unless it is lifted from its couch and examined in the proper light. This has not been done yet, because there is the probability that the altar and its contents can be removed bodily to the Museo Nazionale, where the proper investigation can be made in more favourable circumstances than in the open air.

This interesting set of discoveries will give rise to fresh research in connexion with the practice of foreign superstitions in Rome, and with the right of the foreign colonies to worship in their own fashion their national gods (θεοὶ πατρώοι), under the responsibility of their consuls or πρόξενοι, who acted as high priests, being invested at the same time with commercial and religious functions. I have already found the following point of comparison in the "memoirs" of Flaminio Vacca, the genial archæological chronicler of the time of Sixtus V. He describes how a secret place of worship, the door of which had been walled up, was found in the vineyard of Orazio Muti opposite the church of San Vitale, just at the point where the Via Venezia now branches off from the Via Nazionale; and that, the wall having been demolished, the explorers saw a human figure with the head of a lion, round whose body a serpent was wound in coils, with the head above that of the monster-god. There were many clay lamps around the plinth of the statue, with the "becco" or point turned towards it. I can vouch for the accuracy of Vacca's statement, because the cave was entered again in 1869, when Mgr. de Merode, Secretary for War to Pope Pius IX., was tracing the present Via Nazionale along the northern slope of the Viminal. It was undoubtedly a Mithræum in which the god was worshipped—as on the Janiculum—as Leontokephalos. The door must have been walled up by the devotees at the time of the last persecution of Gracchus (A.D. 377).

These, then, are the discoveries which have absorbed the interest of professional people for the last three weeks. They appear even more remarkable if we consider them, not as a gift of chance, but as the outcome of a plan most carefully studied, and carried into execution inch by inch by one who knew what lay concealed underground. I say this because a gentle breeze of chauvinism is already blowing in the direction of the Janiculum; but let there be no misunderstanding on this point. Those whose sense of justice and fair play is not impaired by prejudice or "xenophobia" know to whom honour is due for this new and exciting chapter in the history of Roman excavations.

RODOLFO LANCIANI.

. We may remind our readers that we published on April 6th, 1907, an article on 'The Grave of Furrina,' by Mr. St. Clair Baddeley, with a reproduction of an inscription found in the Villa Sciarra.

SALES.

MESSRS. CHRISTIE sold on the 2nd inst. the following engravings: After Morland. The Return from Market, and Feeding the Pigs, by J. R. Smith, a pair, 105/.; St. James's Park, by F. D. Soiron, 52/. Arundel Society Publications, a series of 75 plates, 52/.

Messrs. Christie also sold on the 6th inst. the following. Drawing: Dumbarton, by Turner, 50/. Pictures: F. D. Hardy, The Wedding Breakfast, 115/. Albert Moore, Hydrangeas, 105/.

Fine-Art Gossip.

THE exhibition of the Royal Hibernian Academy is one of the most successful of recent years. Besides the important English works on loan, including paintings by Messrs. Sargent, Charles Shannon, Clausen, Tonks, and J. J. Shannon, Irish artists are particularly well represented. Mr. Dermot O'Brien shows some very characteristic work, both in landscape and portraits; Mr. William Orpen, Miss Sarah Purser, Miss Harrison, and Mr. W. J. Leech sustain the best traditions of Irish portraiture; while Messrs. Hone, Vincent Duffy, and Festus Kelly, and many others show brilliant landscape work.

THERE is a small but choice exhibition of sculpture, the most notable work being that of Mr. Oliver Sheppard; and a novel feature has been introduced in the shape of a number of heraldic exhibits, consisting of achievements, book-plates, &c., by Capt. Nevile Wilkinson, Major Sheppard, and Mr. J. R. Blake.

THE annual exhibition of the Royal Amateur Art Society will be held at 16, Grosvenor Place, S.W., on the 22nd, 23rd, and 24th inst.

AT 66, Russell Square an exhibition of photographs by members of societies affiliated with the Royal Photographic Society of Great Britain was opened on Wednesday last, and will be on view till April 10th.

THE CONNOISSEUR PUBLISHING COMPANY will shortly issue a book on Francis Wheatley, R.A., by Mr. W. Roberts. The work will contain numerous coloured and other illustrations, a life of the artist, and a full descriptive catalogue of the engravings after Wheatley.

A MOVEMENT for the erection of a monument to Caran d'Ache has been taken up with enthusiasm in Paris, and a large sum has already been promised. M. Édouard Detaille has accepted the presidency of the Committee.

M. ALFRED NORMAND, the famous architect, who died last week, was the doyen of the French Académie des Beaux-Arts. He was born in Paris in 1822, and carried off the Prix de Rome in 1846. His most famous work was the Hôtel Pompién in the Avenue Montaigne, in 1865. This was one of the curiosities of the period, but is no longer in existence. Another of his works was the reconstruction of the Vendôme Column, which the Communists had knocked down. He also restored the mutilated Arc de Triomphe. M. Normand was President of the Institute of France in 1900, and was the founder and president of the Society for the Preservation of Ancient Monuments in France.

THE death is also announced of M. Alexandre Charpentier, the sculptor, and a prominent member of the Société Nationale des Beaux-Arts. Among his best-known works is the bas-relief en grès, 'Les Boulangers,' in the Square Scipion; another is the Charlet statue in the Place Denfert-Rochereau. A large number of his works, chiefly plaquettes in bronze, are in the Luxembourg. His exhibit at last year's Salon was a portrait of Albert Sartieux.

THIS year's exhibition—the fourth—at Bagatelle, in the Bois de Boulogne, is to consist of portraits of women (painting, sculpture, engravings, and drawings) who lived under the three Republics.

ONE of the oldest contributors to the Gazette des Beaux-Arts and L'Illustration, M. Alfred de Lostalot de Bachoué, died a few days ago in his seventy-first year. He was sub-editor of both these publications, to which he contributed a number of papers on art and the drama. He was the author of several books on art, notably 'Les Arts au Bois,' 'La Peinture française,' and 'Procédés de Gravure,' in addition to which he published several works on the drama.

AN exhibition of the works of the painter Hans Thoma will be held at Berlin next October to celebrate the veteran artist's seventieth birthday.

MUCH has been heard lately of the discovery of a ceiling fresco by G. B. Tiepolo in the Palazzo Grassi at Venice. L. Brosch, writing in the Cicerone (Heft 3, p. 101), decisively proves that it is the work of Fabio Canale, a mediocre pupil of that master, and shows that Tiepolo—who in 1762 settled at Madrid with his sons, and died there eight years later—could scarcely have decorated the Palazzo Grassi, which was still in an unfinished condition in 1766.

SOME new facts have recently come to light relating to two fourteenth-century masters—the Pisan sculptor Giovanni di Balduccio Alboneto, and the Lombard architect and sculptor Matteo da Campione. Balduccio, the author of the beautiful tomb of St. Peter of Verona in S. Eustorgio at Milan, was still living in that city, it seems, in the autumn of 1349. His non-acceptance of a post offered to him at Pisa was therefore due not to his death in the summer of 1349, as hitherto erroneously supposed, but to the fact that he was actively employed at Milan, and doubtless unwilling to exchange a lucrative position there even for the honourable post of Capo-maestro of the Opera del Duomo, which had been pressed upon him by the Pisan authorities. Matteo da Campione, whose name is intimately bound up with the Cathedral at Monza and many sculptures at Milan and elsewhere, was, it now appears, a direct pupil of Balduccio, and was still in the workshop of that master in the autumn of 1349, being apparently very young at that date. His connexion with the works at Monza must therefore fall somewhat later than 1450, the date given by Frisi.

MR. WILLIAM RUTLEY, the auctioneer, and one of the founders of the firm of Messrs. Knight, Frank & Rutley, died on Saturday last. A man of culture and fine taste, Mr. Rutley found a congenial sphere for his talents in the valuations of works of art, and the cataloguing of various objects, from Greek coins to old lace and jewels, and from pictures and china to antique furniture.

AT the meeting of the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland on Monday an account was given of the excavation of two caves with remains of Iron Age occupation, on the estate of Archerfield, Dirleton. The relics found included a quernstone, whetstone, iron knife (5 in. long), iron spearhead, iron nails, a pick made of an antler, a spindlewhorl of deer-horn, a bone button, two bracelets of coloured glass, and fragments of pottery, with pieces of Samian ware.

EXHIBITIONS.

- SAT. (March 13).—Mr. G. Belcher's Drawings, 'London Types and Characters,' Private View, Leicester Galleries.
— Mr. T. Hodgson Liddell's Pictures of China, Private View, Fine-Art Society's Gallery.
— Mr. Sutton Palmer's Water-Colours, 'Rivers and Streams,' Leicester Galleries.
— The late R. Spencer Stanhope's Pre-Raphaelite Pictures and Drawings, Carfax Gallery.
— Mr. H. S. Teed's Landscapes in Oil and Water Colours, Mr. W. B. Paterson's Gallery.
— Water-Colour, Pastel, and Drawing Salon, Goupil Gallery.
— Miss Evelyn J. Whyte's Water-Colours, 'Mountains, Lakes, and Lowlands,' Private View, Fine-Art Society's Gallery.
TUES. Mr. Alexander Williams's Water-Colours and Oil Paintings of 'Ould Donegal,' Private View, Modern Gallery.
WED. Eighteenth-Century Japanese Colour Prints, Private View, 25, Bedford Street, Strand.
— Sir Charles Holroyd's Original Etchings, Private View, 25, Bedford Street, Strand.
SAT. (March 20).—Royal Amateur Art Society, Annual Exhibition, Press View, 16, Grosvenor Place, S.W.

MUSIC

Musical Gossip.

THE first of the series of six Symphony Concerts with the New Symphony Orchestra, under the conductorship of Mr. Landon Ronald, took place at Queen's Hall on Wednesday afternoon. A brilliant rendering of Weber's 'Oberon' Overture proved that the orchestra was in fine form. The conductor not only thoroughly understands his business, but also is in earnest, his beat being clear and inspiring. A first performance was given of Mr. William Wallace's 'François Villon,' for which the composer has sought inspiration in the poems of the fifteenth-century French poet. This symphonic work is a reasonable piece of programme-music. The fantastic opening, and, later on, sudden changes of mood, are accounted for by titles of various poems, or lines therefrom, which Mr. Wallace had in his mind when composing, and which he supplied to Mr. Kalisch, the analyst. Some modern musicians acknowledge that they write to a programme, yet will not reveal it, or reveal it only partially. Hence their tone-poems are often difficult to grasp. Again, the present composer avoids all extravagance, all vagueness; much, indeed, can be enjoyed as abstract music. There may not be very strong individuality in the work, but the themes are expressive, one being specially broad and emotional; moreover, the workmanship and scoring are excellent. A dance-measure near the end, played by a piccolo, flute, bassoon, and bass clarinet, to the rhythm of a tambour de Provence, proved exceedingly quaint. The composer conducted, and was well received. Miss Irene Scharrer's performance of Saint-Saëns's Pianoforte Concerto in G minor was very good. The concert, which was of reasonable length, ended with Tchaikovsky's Fifth Symphony in E minor, of which Mr. Landon Ronald gave a highly impressive rendering.

MR. EMIL SAUER's only pianoforte recital this season took place on Tuesday afternoon at the Queen's Hall. His rendering of five of Domenico Scarlatti's short Sonatas was most refined: at times, indeed, he seemed as if trying to produce harpsichord effects. In Beethoven's 'Sonate Pathétique' he was less successful. Technique and phrasing were correct enough, but there was a lack of warmth, and the Allegro was certainly taken at too rapid a rate. Chopin's Polonaise in A flat, Op. 53, was played with great power and breadth; it was, in fact, a magnificent performance.

HERR KREISLER gave an interesting recital at Queen's Hall yesterday week. Old music, of which his programme was largely composed, has in him an interpreter who can re-create, and make it a living thing. A Bach Suite in E minor was rendered with skill and sympathy; and a Prelude and Allegro by Pugnani, who was a pupil of Corelli and Tartini, with vigour and breadth. In pieces by Padre Martini, Lolli, and Franceur the artist displayed appropriate charm and delicacy. Three Caprices by Paganini offered a splendid opportunity for showing technical skill. As music, too, they are far more interesting than his Concerto in D. The composer wrote them for violin solo, but Herr Kreisler has added a clever and discreet pianoforte accompaniment. Of the three, the third in A minor, a theme with variations, was interesting, for Liszt wrote variations on the same theme, imitating the style of the original; Brahms did so, too, though not to the same extent. Herr Kreisler played an effectively written Introduction and Scherzo-Caprice of his own.

WE owe an explanation to the readers of The Athenæum for apparently ignoring without reason all but one of the London Symphony Concerts, that one being at Queen's Hall under the direction of Dr. Hans Richter on February 20th. The reason is that, with this single exception, since the beginning of 1907 down to the present no tickets have been sent either to this office or to our representative. Through the latter we have asked if there is any reason for this abstention, but have not been accorded the courtesy of a reply.

THE title-rôle of M. Frédéric d'Erlanger's new opera 'Tess of the D'Urbervilles,' which is to be given at Covent Garden in June, will be taken by Fräulein Emmy Destinn.

MM. T. DE WYZEWA AND G. DE ST. FOIX, judging from the style of the first four harpsichord concertos by Mozart (Koechel, Nos. 37, 39, 40, 41), recently came to the conclusion that they were merely transcriptions of works by other composers, which the boy, aged eleven, wrote for practice. These sharp-sighted critics have now discovered that the Andante of the fourth and best Concerto is an adaptation from an Andante by Schobert; also that of five more of the twelve movements in these concertos, four are borrowed from Books I. and II. of the harpsichord sonatas of the Alsatian composer L. Honauer, while the other is in the first book of sonatas by Jean Godefroid Eckard. The discoverers mention that these concertos are not noted in the catalogue drawn up by Leopold Mozart of his son's compositions; and we may add that the manuscripts of the four works are for the most part in the father's handwriting.

A SACRED opera, 'Katherina,' by Edgar Tinel, was successfully produced at Brussels on the 23rd of February. The work is described as semi-sacred, semi-secular. Little is known of the composer's music in this country; his oratorio 'Franciscus' was, however, performed at the Cardiff Festival of 1895.

THE date of the birth of Chopin is still under discussion. Fétis in the first edition of his 'Biographie' gave only the year 1810, but in the second he added month and day, February 8th, 1810. Le Ménestrel of last Saturday gives some interesting details respecting different dates. It mentions a book on Chopin, 'Années de Jeunesse de Chopin,' by Karasowski, who, from statements made to him by members of the composer's family, announced March 1st, 1809, as the correct date. But in 1890 A. Polinski claimed to have discovered the certificate of birth with not only the date February 22nd, 1810, but also that of the christening on April 23rd of the same year. Le Ménestrel, however, contends that the birth and christening, separated by an interval of two months, would not be in the same record, so that Polinski can have seen only extracts, not the document itself. The church records appear not to have been preserved. In the church of the Holy Cross at Warsaw, where Chopin's heart is preserved in an urn, there is a commemorative tablet which names March 2nd, 1809, as date of birth. Again, Le Ménestrel states that the date on the tomb at Père Lachaise is given as 1810; whereas Prof. Niecks states that there is no date of birth, only that of death. Unless, therefore, the parish church books can be found, or unless some unexpected letter or document should be discovered, it seems as if the actual date of Chopin's birth will never be known.

PERFORMANCES NEXT WEEK.

SUN.	Concert, 3.30, Royal Albert Hall.
—	Sunday Society Concert, 3.30, Queen's Hall.
—	Sunday League Concert, 7, Queen's Hall.
MON.	Mr. Egon Petri's Pianoforte Recital, 3, Steinway Hall.
—	Mr. Thomas Beecham's Orchestra, 8, Queen's Hall.
—	Misses F. Howard and Jaeger's Chamber Concert, 8.15, Bechstein Hall.
TUES.	Nolandess String Quartet, 3.15, Æolian Hall.
—	Leighton House Chamber Concert, 4.30, Leighton House.
—	Madame Selma Kurz's Concert, 8, Royal Albert Hall.
—	Madame Gertrude Auld's Vocal Recital, 8.15, Æolian Hall.
—	Mr. Edward Mason's Choir, 8.15, Queen's Hall.
—	Miss Adelina Leon's Cello Recital, 8.30, Bechstein Hall.
WED.	Mr. Moritz Rosenthal's Pianoforte Recital, 3, Queen's Hall.
—	Mr. Plunket Greene's Vocal Recital, 3.30, Æolian Hall.
—	Gaelic League Concert, 8, Queen's Hall.
—	Miss Beatrix Leech's Violin Recital, 8, St. James's Hall.
—	Madame Nina Menzies's Song Recital, 9.30, Bechstein Hall.
THURS.	Broadwood Concert, 8.30, Æolian Hall.
—	Royal Amateur Orchestral Concert, 8.30, Queen's Hall.
FRI.	North London Orchestral Society, 8.30, Queen's Hall.
SAT.	Chappell's Ballad Concert, 2.30, Queen's Hall.
—	Mozart Society, 3, Portman Rooms.
—	Popular Concert for Children and Young Students, 3, Steinway Hall.
—	Madame Elena Gerhardt's Vocal Recital, 3.15, Bechstein Hall.
—	London Chamber Concert, 8.30, Victoria Rooms, Kensington.

DRAMA

THE WEEK.

VAUDEVILLE.—The Head of the Firm: a Play in Four Acts. Adapted from the Danish of Hjalmar Bergstrom by Leslie Faber.

MR. FABER has got hold of an interesting play, but has not given it quite a fair chance. He has transferred the action to England, yet maintained unaltered characterization that is obviously Danish. So we are introduced to types bearing English names and using English idiom which nevertheless again and again betray their foreign origin, and in this way the play takes on, as it would not have done had its Danish setting been preserved, a certain appearance of unreality. Still, even in its adapted form it proves a telling and thoughtful piece of work, handling with some skill the problem of the respective claims of Labour and Capital, and contrasting emotional altruism with the stern, practical ambition of the man of trade-organizing genius. In a word, the commercial Superman and visionary Socialism, as represented by the rebellious son and wife of an ironworks proprietor, are brought into sharp and dramatic opposition.

For more than half the play the conflict holds the attention, and we get a piquant clash of temperament between the lad full of generous sympathy for the slaves of industrialism, yet unable to find any efficient mode of improving the lot of his father's workmen or securing their confidence, and the Jewish manager of the works, who proposes—somehow or other—to stop an impending strike, and baffle competition by establishing a trade trust. So, too, the boy's mother, who is apt to get hysterical in her protests against her husband's complacency, finds a foil in this blustering employer, who, when robbed of his right-hand man, is impotent in face of a crisis, and has to employ his daughter's aid to recall the autocrat to the firm's councils. But both mother and son express their Socialistic sentiments with an ingenuousness that is Scandinavian rather than English; and similarly another character, a man of criminal propensities who poses as a Labour leader, and adopts grotesque airs of condescension and mob-oratory towards his social superiors, essentially belongs to a civilization less sophisticated than our own. He it is who, notwithstanding the neatness and humour with which he is individualized by Mr. Evelyn Beerbohm, puts the play out of joint, and obtrudes what in its English form seems an incongruous element of farce.

Still, though the drama somewhat goes to pieces in its later acts, its weaknesses are disguised at the Vaudeville by the capital representation it obtains. Mr. Beveridge, in the part of a wise old school-master who is everybody's confidant, is seen in his most genial mood. Mr. Faber suggests reserves of power as the Jew manager, and shares pleasantly with Miss Ethelwyn Jones in some pretty love-scenes. Mr. Harcourt Williams delivers the young Socialist's rhetoric with due point; and Miss Henrietta Watson as the boy's neurotic mother once more shows herself one of our best woman-comedians. A play so happy in its idea and so well interpreted, ought not to languish for lack of patronage.

DUKE OF YORK'S.—Strife: a Play in Three Acts. By John Galsworthy.

HERE is another drama concerned with a strike, but far stronger, more vital work than the Vaudeville piece. In that play we never come to close quarters with the workmen; the battle of ideas is confined to the employers. Mr. Galsworthy, on the other hand, brings us right against the grim realities of a conflict between Labour and Capital, and covers the whole ground in his survey. He takes us into a board meeting of directors, into an open-air conference of strikers, and in each case sets in bold contrast the hesitations and scruples and dissatisfaction of the many, and the strength of purpose of the one man who knows his own mind. Both the capitalists and the Labour men have such a leader—the play is virtually a duel between the two—and on either side he has to be sacrificed before a settlement is possible. Mr. Galsworthy holds the balance even before the parties. If he carries us into the workmen's homes and shows us the women maddened with hunger or patiently dying of starvation; if he makes a young director, the chairman's own son, assure his colleagues that on their shoulders rests the responsibility of the suffering caused by the strike, he lets us perceive at the same time that the Labour leader's motives are not quite so pure as he thinks, and that behind all David Roberts's idealism smoulder, unknown to him, feelings of personal exasperation, class hatred, and love of power. If the chairman of the company, John Anthony, is presented as a forbidding old man, hard and immovable as granite, yet he states the case for the capitalist fairly. So when, at the close of the play, the two foes face each other, both beaten men, and Roberts, whom the strike has cost his wife's life, is tempted to laugh hysterically over his "oppressor's" discomfiture, he checks himself, for he sees in old Anthony, as the ex-chairman sees in him, a man worth fighting, an enemy worthy his respect, and so they bow to one another and part. If there is any moral in the piece at all, it turns on the wastefulness of such industrial strife; for the terms on which men and masters agree are identical with those proposed by trade-union officials at the beginning of the struggle.

The drama adheres uncompromisingly to the relations of Labour and Capital; it contains no love-interest, no comedy relief, no laughter or gaiety; it is as grim and gaunt as its subject. Not that Mr. Galsworthy's treatment lacks humanity at any point. There are scenes in this play—notably those in which women of the labouring and employing classes confront and misunderstand one another—which cut like a knife, so true, so affecting, are they. As for the meeting of the strikers, at which man after man gets up to address his fellows, and the mob is swayed this way and that according to the particular prejudice the orator appeals to, it is a wonderfully written scene, but even more wonderfully stage-managed; every member of the crowd at the Duke of York's contributes his share of acting, and, thanks to Mr. Granville Barker's supervision, the shouts, the interruptions, the answers, are given in the most life-like style. To speak of the interpretation in detail would occupy too much space, since there are no fewer than thirty-two names in the cast. It must suffice to say that Mr. McKinnel, who makes the managing director strangely impressive with his dour ways and slow speech, and Mr. Fisher White, who suggests happily Roberts's Welsh temperament, head a company which is efficient in every instance, and includes many well-known actors. The play, however, overtops the acting; it bears out the promise of 'The Silver Box,' and adds distinction to our stage.

Dramatic Gossip.

MESSRS. ROUTLEDGE'S spring announcements include the 'Complete Dramatic works of William Chapman,' edited, with a long Introduction, by Prof. T. F. Parrott.

MESSRS. METHUEN are publishing in the "Arden Shakespeare" 'King Henry VI.,' Parts I. and II., the editing of which, begun by Mr. H. C. Hart, has been completed by Mr. C. K. Pooler.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—C. J. H.—M. G.—H. O.—C. R.—H. H.—C. J. W. T.—A. S.—Received.
M. R.—Not suitable for us.

We cannot undertake to reply to inquiries concerning the appearance of reviews of books.

No notice can be taken of anonymous communications.
We do not undertake to give the value of books, china, pictures, &c.

THE ATHENÆUM,
PRICE THREEPENCE,

Is published every FRIDAY in time for the Afternoon Mails. Terms of Subscription, free by post to all parts of the United Kingdom: For Six Months, 7s. 6d.; for Twelve Months, 15s. 3d. For the Continent and all places within the Postal Union: For Six Months, 9s.; for Twelve Months, 18s., commencing from any date, payable in advance to JOHN C. FRANCIS,

Athenæum Office, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, London, E.C.

INDEX TO ADVERTISERS.

	PAGE
ARNOLD	328
AUTHORS' AGENTS	306
BAGSTER	330
BELL & SONS	328
BUSINESS FOR DISPOSAL	306
CATALOGUES	306
CHATTO & WINDUS	307
DROMINA	331
DUCKWORTH & CO.	329
EDUCATIONAL	305
ENO'S FRUIT SALT	331
EXHIBITIONS	305
HODDER & STOUGHTON	331
KING & CO.	330
LANE	330
LECTURES	305
LONGMANS & CO.	308
MACMILLAN & CO.	308
MAGAZINES, &c.	306
MISCELLANEOUS	305
NOTES AND QUERIES	330
PRINTERS	306
PROVIDENT INSTITUTIONS	305
SALES BY AUCTION	306
SELFLEDGE	331
SHIPPING	330
SITUATIONS VACANT	305
SITUATIONS WANTED	305
SMITH, ELDER & CO.	332
SOCIETIES	305
TYPE-WRITERS, &c.	306
UNWIN	308

MESSRS. BELL'S BOOKS.

ST. PAUL'S SCHOOL QUATER-CENTENARY
JUST PUBLISHED, demy 8vo, 8s. 6d. net.

LIFE OF DEAN COLET,
Founder of St. Paul's School.

By the Rev. J. H. LUPTON, M.A.
Late Surmaster of St. Paul's School, and formerly Fellow
of St. John's College, Cambridge.

With an Appendix of some of his English Writings, and a Facsimile Portrait taken from the Engraving in Holland's
'Heroologia.'

NEW AND REVISED EDITION.

In view of the approaching celebration of the fourth centenary of St. Paul's School, special interest attaches to this new edition of Dr. Lupton's life of its founder.

JUST PUBLISHED, crown 8vo, 6s. net.

HISTORY OF THE LATIN AND
TEUTONIC NATIONS, 1494-1514.

By LEOPOLD VON RANKE.
A Revised Translation by G. R. DENNIS, B.A. (Lond.)
With an Introduction by EDWARD ARMSTRONG, M.A.
Fellow of Queen's College, Oxford.

A thoroughly revised translation of this famous work, which Lorenz called one of Ranke's "most original and instructive contributions to history," and which gives a general account of the history of Europe during a period of the highest interest and importance.

Fcap. 8vo, 5s. net.

CATULLI CARMINA.

Edited, with Copious Explanatory Notes, by CHARLES STUTAFORD.

"Intended for the class whose Latin has become rusty in consequence of the exigencies of a professional or business occupation. Well and wisely annotated for the purpose, and produced admirably."—Evening Standard.

THE

QUEEN'S TREASURES SERIES.

Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.

NEW VOLUME. JUST PUBLISHED.

JAN OF THE WINDMILL.

By MRS. EWING.

With 8 Coloured Illustrations by M. V. WHEELHOUSE
and special Title-Page, Binding, and End-Papers.

JUST PUBLISHED, demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

AN INTRODUCTION TO ECONOMICS.

By HENRY ROGERS SEAGER.

Professor of Political Economy in Columbia University.
Third Edition, Revised and Enlarged.

JUST PUBLISHED, demy 8vo, 8s. 6d. net.

ETHICS.

By JOHN DEWEY.

Professor of Philosophy in Columbia University,
and JAMES H. TUFTS,
Professor of Philosophy in the University of Chicago.

THE STANDARD AUTHORITY.
WEBSTER'S INTERNATIONAL DICTIONARY.

TWENTIETH-CENTURY EDITION.

Revised and Enlarged, with an Appendix of 25,000 Words,
Phrases, and Definitions.

2,348 pages. 5,000 Illustrations.

WRITE FOR DETAILED PROSPECTUS,
with Specimen Pages, hundreds of Opinions of Eminent Men, and prices in various styles of binding.

London: GEORGE BELL & SONS,
York House, Portugal Street, W.C.

MR. EDWARD ARNOLD'S NEW BOOKS.

JANE WARDLE'S NEW NOVEL.
MARGERY PIGEON.

By JANE WARDLE,
Author of 'The Artistic Temperament,' 'The Lord of Latimer Street,' &c. 6s.

MARGERY PIGEON.

NEW NOVEL BY MR. FRANK SAVILE.

SEEKERS:
A ROMANCE OF THE BALKANS.

By FRANK SAVILE,
Author of 'The Desert Venture.' 6s.

SEEKERS.

SECOND LARGE IMPRESSION.

A ROOM WITH A VIEW.

By E. M. FORSTER. 6s.
Spectator.—"Mr. Forster's new novel is not only much the best of the three he has written, but it clearly admits him to the limited class of writers who stand above and apart from the manufacturers of contemporary fiction."

TO BE PUBLISHED ON MARCH 17.
THE "GREEN FINCH" CRUISE:
A CURE FOR ALL ILLS.

By the Rev. F. CLAUDE KEMPSON.
With more than 50 Illustrations from Sketches by the Author. Square 8vo, 5s. net.

NEW BOOK BY THE AUTHOR OF 'THE QUEEN'S POOR.'

AN ENGLISHMAN'S CASTLE.

By M. LOANE, Author of 'The Queen's Poor,'
'The Next Street but One,' &c. Cloth, 6s.
Glasgow Herald.—"A book that should be in the hands of every social reformer, of whatever species...The humour, sympathy, and shrewd common sense with which the author sets forth some of the fruits of her keen observation during her experiences as a district nurse, cannot fail to recommend this most interesting volume to popular favour."

LETTERS FROM A SETTLEMENT

By Miss A. L. HODSON. Illustrated. Cloth, 4s. 6d. net.
Daily Telegraph.—"A very human and pleasant little book, which should interest every form of amateur, as well as professional, sociologist."

THE BODY AT WORK.

By Dr. ALEX. HILL, recently Master of Downing College, Cambridge, Author of 'An Introduction to Science,'
'The Physiologist's Notebook,' &c.

With Illustrations. 440 pages, demy 8vo, 16s. net.

British Medical Journal.—"Dr. Alex. Hill is to be congratulated upon the admirable conception and excellent execution which has resulted in the production of his account of 'The Body at Work.' The book satisfies a long-felt want and constitutes a text-book of physiology adapted to the use of the general public."

A TEXT-BOOK OF EXPERIMENTAL PSYCHOLOGY.

By CHARLES S. MYERS, M.A. M.D.,
Lecturer in Experimental Psychology in the University of Cambridge; Professor of Psychology in King's College,
University of London.

With 66 Diagrams. 8s. 6d. net.

THE ECONOMY AND TRAINING OF MEMORY.

By HENRY J. WATT, Ph.D.
Lecturer on Psychology in the University of Glasgow.
Small crown 8vo, cloth, 1s. 6d. net.

ON THE CALCULATION OF THERMO-CHEMICAL CONSTANTS.

By H. STANLEY REDGROVE, B.Sc. (Lond.).
Demy 8vo, 6s. net.

EDWARD ARNOLD,
London: 41 and 43, Maddox Street, W.

DUCKWORTH & CO.'S NEW PUBLICATIONS.

A NEW NOVELIST.

Miss Rosamond Napier's first work is being daily praised by the press for its freshness and spontaneity. Not for a long time has a first novel received such genuine tributes of approval from the leading critical journals. It is a Novel for a large public; one that engages attention, and is entirely pleasant and wholesome.

THE HEART OF A GYPSY.

A Romantic Tale of Exmoor.

By ROSAMOND NAPIER.

Crown 8vo, 360 pages, 6s.

Dedicated to all those to whom Sun, Wind, and Rain mean much.

"A touching and human story."—Times.

"This clever and thoughtful book."—Academy.

"Imaginative and original work."—Observer.

"Has all the colour and atmosphere of elfland. Miss Napier has poetic and mystic imagination, and can describe country scenes and people well."—Morning Post.

"A romance possessed of vitality, charm, and that yet more precious and indefinable quality, personality. Eager, unexhausted life, poetry, laughter, and tears. A writer to whom expression is a sheer and new delight. A living and poignant piece of work."—Outlook.

A NEW BOOK

BY CUNNINGHAME GRAHAM.

FAITH.

By R. B. CUNNINGHAME GRAHAM.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

FIRST REVIEW.

"A book by Mr. Cunninghame Graham is always a delight. A man who has thought and seen much. One who has power and vision. They are not exactly stories, these sketches, but rather impressions—poetic impressions. Their tone is the tone of life, of Nature. Through them all is a note of sadness, a dash of Eastern fatalism."—Observer.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

HIS PEOPLE. Crown 8vo, 6s.

PROGRESS. Crown 8vo, 6s.

SUCCESS. Small crown 8vo, 2s. net (postage 4d.).

"One realizes that this author stands out from among his fellows, since Stevenson died, as the embodiment of one thing in literature.....that rare thing, charm.....Full of pleasing whimsicality, of literary distinction, of quaint, ironical philosophy.....for all readers who can appreciate literary grace and ironical humour."—Athenæum.

THE INFAMOUS JOHN FRIEND. A Novel.

By Mrs. R. S. GARNETT. Crown 8vo, 6s.

[In the press.]

GREAT ACTORS OF THE EIGHTEENTH CENTURY.

By KARL MANTZIUS.

Being Vol. V. of 'A History of Theatrical Art.'

With 73 Illustrations. Royal 8vo, 10s. net.

[Now ready.]

AN IMPORTANT TEXT-BOOK JUST PUBLISHED. THE SCIENTIFIC FEEDING OF ANIMALS.

By O. KELLNER.

Translated by W. GOODWIN, B.Sc. Ph.D.

404 pages. Crown 8vo, 6s. net.

Prospectus can be had.

GREAT MASTERS OF DUTCH AND FLEMISH PAINTING.

By Dr. W. BODE.

39 Plates. Pott 4to, ix-358 pp., 7s. 6d. net.

Write for Prospectus of this important work.

THE TYROL.

By W. D. McCrackan.

30 Illustrations.

A Re-issue. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d. net.

NORMANDY.

By FRANCIS MILTOUN.

Illustrated by BLANCHE McMANUS.

A Re-issue. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d. net.

BRITTANY.

By FRANCIS MILTOUN.

Illustrated by BLANCHE McMANUS.

A Re-issue. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d. net.

THE COUNTRY MONTH BY MONTH.

By J. A. OWEN and Prof. G. S. BOULGER.

A New Edition. With Notes by the late LORD LILFORD, and 20 Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 6s. net. [Shortly.]

LIFE AND EVOLUTION.

By F. W. HEADLEY, F.Z.S.

With upwards of 100 Illustrations. New and Cheaper Edition.

Demy 8vo, 5s. net.

SOUTH AMERICAN SKETCHES. MEMOIRS OF A SURREY LABOURER.

By W. H. HUDSON.

A Re-issue of a Volume hitherto published under the title of 'El Ombu.'

Crown 8vo, cloth, 1s. net.

By GEORGE BOURNE.

New and Cheaper Edition. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. net. [Shortly.]

MAKERS OF OUR CLOTHES.

By Miss CLEMENTINA BLACK (Author of 'Sweated Industry') and Mrs. CARL MEYER.

Demy 8vo, 5s. net. A volume dealing with the tailoring trade in its industrial and economic aspects.

[In the press.]

PLAYS. The Silver Box: Joy: Strife.

By JOHN GALSWORTHY. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

[Monday, March 15.]

Mr. JOHN LANE announces:

READY MARCH 24.

THE
LOVE LETTERS OF THOMAS
CARLYLE AND JANE WELSH

Edited by ALEXANDER CARLYLE,
Nephew of THOMAS CARLYLE, Editor of 'New Letters and Memorials of Jane Welsh Carlyle,' 'New Letters of Thomas Carlyle,' &c. With 2 Portraits in Colour and 16 other Illustrations.

Demy 8vo, (9 by 5½ in.) 2 vols. 25s. net.

"THE LOVE LETTERS OF THE CARLYLES PROMISES TO BE THE BOOK OF 1909."
BRITISH WEEKLY.

A PHILOSOPHER IN LOVE

This book contains the Letters that passed between Carlyle and Miss Welsh, from the time of their first meeting, May, 1821, till the date of their marriage, October, 1826.
They are 176 in number, and (with the exception of the extracts made by Froude, about 5 per cent of the whole) have never before been published. They are arranged chronologically in the form of Letter and Answer.

THE LOVE LETTERS OF THOMAS
CARLYLE AND JANE WELSH

RECENT MEMOIRS.

MEMOIRS OF A
VANISHED GENERATION.

Chronicles of the Knox Family.

By Mrs. WARRENNE BLAKE. 16s. net.

THE JOURNAL OF JOHN MAYNE.

During a Tour on the Continent upon its Reopening after the Fall of Napoleon, 1814.

Edited by his Grandson, JOHN MAYNE
COLLES. With numerous Illustrations.
Demy 8vo 12s. 6d. net.

A SISTER OF PRINCE RUPERT:

Elizabeth Princess Palatine
Abbess of Herford.

By ELIZABETH GODFREY, Author of 'Heidelberg: its Princes and its Palaces,'
'English Children in the Olden Time,' &c.
With numerous Illustrations reproduced from Contemporary Portraits, Prints, &c. Demy
8vo. 12s. 6d. net.

MEMOIRS OF THE
DUKES OF URBINO.

By JAMES DENNISTOUN of Dennistoun.
A New Edition. Edited by EDWARD
HUTTON. 3 vols. 42s. net.

LADIES FAIR AND FRAIL.

Sketches of the Demi-Monde during the Eighteenth Century. By HORACE BLEACK-
LEY, Author of 'The Story of a Beautiful
Duchess.' With numerous Portraits reproduced from Contemporary Sources. Demy
8vo. 12s. 6d. net.

COKE OF NORFOLK. [Second Edition.

By A. M. W. STIRLING. 2 vols. 32s. net.

Coke of Norfolk was the father of the Earl of Leicester, who died last month.

JOHN LANE, THE BODLEY HEAD, W.

BOOKS RECENTLY PUBLISHED BY MESSRS. P. S. KING & SON,
Orchard House, Westminster.

A HISTORY OF THE BANK OF ENGLAND.

By Prof. A. ANDRÉADES, of the University of Athens. Translated from the French into English by C. M. MEREDITH. With an Introduction by Prof. H. S. FOXWELL. Demy 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d. net.
Westminster Gazette.—"An extremely striking book... will well repay the careful study of all people interested in banking matters."
Financial News.—"This most comprehensive and most readable account of the Bank of England... It is the most serious work of its kind in existence."

THE KING'S REVENUE.

An Account of the Revenue and Taxes raised in the United Kingdom, with a short History of each Tax and Branch of the Revenue. By W. M. J. WILLIAMS, Author of 'Local Taxation,'
&c. Demy 8vo, cloth, 6s. net.
Economist.—"This is a useful compilation, and may even become a book of reference on our revenue and taxation. It does not pretend to be a literary work, or one which can be read straight through, for it is a strictly business-like statement and records the history of each separate tax, gives the rate at which the tax is now imposed, and adds statistics of its yield during recent years."

A HISTORY OF THE ENGLISH AGRICULTURAL LABOURER.

By Dr. W. HASBACH, Professor of Political Science in the University of Kiel. With a Preface by SIDNEY WEBB, LL.B.
Demy 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d. net.
Manchester Guardian.—"This excellent English translation is published as a monograph in connexion with the London School of Economics. The book is an admirable example of scholarly and industrial research, forming a valuable contribution to the history of social and economic progress. The text is fortified by ample notes and copious tables of statistics, the analysis of the best opinion of each succeeding epoch is illuminating, and the conclusions from evidence, varying in quantity and quality are, just and convincing. No more valuable literary aid could be given to the fruitful study of rural regeneration, and no student can in future afford to overlook Dr.
Hasbach's book."

CO-OPERATION AT HOME AND ABROAD.

An Account of the Co-operative Movement in Great Britain and other Countries. By C. R. FAY, B.A., Fellow of Christ's College, Cambridge, and Lecturer in Economics. Demy 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.
net.
Standard.—"The appearance of Mr. Fay's careful and elaborate study marks something of a new departure in economic literature.
Mr. Fay's excellent work shows conclusively that co-operation, intelligently guided, and undertaken with sincerity and enthusiasm, does actually remove many difficulties which appear insuperable."

London: P. S. KING & SON,
Orchard House, Westminster.

COMPLETE CATALOGUE of Publications relating to Economics, Social Questions, Politics, and Local Government, post free on application.

WORKS BY WILLIAM THYNNE LYNN.

ELEVENTH EDITION NOW READY.

Price Two Shillings net.

CELESTIAL MOTIONS:

A Handy Book of Astronomy.

With 5 Plates.

By W. T. LYNN, B.A. F.R.A.S.,

Member of the British Astronomical Association; formerly of the Royal Observatory, Greenwich; Author of 'Remarkable Comets,' 'Remarkable Eclipses,' 'Astronomy for the Young,' &c.

"Well known as one of our best introductions to astronomy."—Guardian.

NINTH EDITION.

Fcap. 8vo, cloth, price Sixpence.

REMARKABLE ECLIPSES:

A Sketch of the most interesting Circumstances connected with the Observation of Solar and Lunar Eclipses, both in Ancient and Modern Times.

By W. T. LYNN, B.A. F.R.A.S.

"The booklet deserves to continue in popularity.
It presents a mass of information in small compass."
Dundee Advertiser.

London:

SAMUEL BAGSTER & SONS, LIMITED,
15, Paternoster Row.

Shipping.

P. & O.

PLEASURE CRUISES FROM MARSEILLES.

(Rail and Steamship connexions from London.)

S. Y.
VECTIS

- No. 2.—March 20 to April 16.
CONSTANTINOPLE,
ASIA MINOR,
GREECE,
CRETE, CORSICA, &c.
- No. 3.—April 22 to May 20.
VENICE, DALMATIA,
CORFU, NAPLES,
SICILY, VILLEFRANCHE, &c.
Fares for Cruises 2 or 3, from 30 Guineas.
- No. 4.—May 21 to June 12.
NAPLES, SICILY,
ALGIERS, SPAIN, &c.
Fares from 20 Guineas.

BY

P. & O. CRUISING YACHT VECTIS,
6,000 tons, 6,000 h.p.

For Passage, Illustrated Handbooks, and all information,
apply Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company, Northumberland Avenue, W.C., or 122, Leadenhall
Street, E.C., London.

NOTES AND QUERIES.

GENERAL INDEXES.

THE FOLLOWING ARE STILL IN STOCK:—

	£	s.	d.
GENERAL INDEX,
* FOURTH SERIES ..	3	3	0
GENERAL INDEX,
* SIXTH SERIES ..	0	6	0
GENERAL INDEX,
* SEVENTH SERIES	0	6	0
GENERAL INDEX,
* EIGHTH SERIES ..	0	6	0
* For Copies by post an additional Threepence is charged.

GENERAL INDEX,
† NINTH SERIES .. 0 10
With Introduction by JOSEPH KNIGHT, F.S.A.

† This Index is double the size of previous ones, as it contains, in addition to the usual Index of Subjects, the Names and Pseudonyms of Writers, with a list of their Contributions. The number of constant Contributors exceeds eleven hundred. The Publishers reserve the right of increasing the price of the volume at any time. The number printed is limited, and the type has been distributed.

JOHN C. FRANCIS & J. EDWARD FRANCIS,
Notes and Queries Office, Bream's Buildings, E.C.

For Acidity of the Stomach.

For Heartburn and Headache.

For Gout and Indigestion.

D I N N E F O R D ' S

M A G N E S I A.

For Sour Eructations and Bilious Affections.

A Safe and most effective Aperient for regular use.

SELFRIDGE'S

OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W

HALF WAY BETWEEN BOND STREET AND MARBLE ARCH

SELFRIDGE'S, the newest and most interesting Shopping centre in Europe; a truly cosmopolitan institution, embodying in construction, equipment and ways of business every modern feature that adds to the comfort, pleasure and convenience of its daily visitors.

A HUNDRED DEPARTMENTS supply nearly every requirement of daily life for Men, Women, and Children (provisions, wines, &c., excepted), and our effort will be to make each Department the VERY BEST of its kind in LONDON, dealing in qualities we know to be absolutely dependable, and selling at what we are determined shall be LONDON'S LOWEST PRICES—ALWAYS

OPENS MARCH 15TH

EVERYONE CORDIALLY INVITED

WILL BE PUBLISHED ON ST. PATRICK'S DAY.

DROMINA.

Price 6/-

By the Author of 'MAROTZ.'

PLACE YOUR ORDER AT ONCE WITH ANY BOOKSELLER.

YOUR BIRTHRIGHT IS HEALTH.

THE SCIENCE IN A NUTSHELL.

'Health is a Man's Birthright. It is as natural to be well as to be born. All pathological conditions, all diseases, and all tendencies to disease are the result of the transgression of physiologic and hygienic law. This is the science of health in a nutshell.'—DENSMORE.

Eno's

Fruit

Salt

IS NATURE'S ANTIDOTE FOR HUMAN ILLS
arising from the neglect or violation of her laws.

'Our Acts, our angels are, for good or ill, our fatal shadows that walk by us still.'

'And such is life, so gliding on, it glimmers like a meteor, and is gone.'

CAUTION.—Examine the capsule, and see that it is marked ENO'S 'FRUIT SALT.' Without it you have the sincerest form of flattery—IMITATION.

Prepared only by J. C. ENO (Limited), 'FRUIT SALT' WORKS, LONDON, S.E.

NOW READY

NINETEENTH CENTURY TEACHERS and other Essays

By JULIA WEDGWOOD

Price 10s. 6d. net

A volume of much importance and interest by Julia Wedgwood, who wrote many fine articles in the Contemporary Review and in the Spectator during the days of Hutton and Townsend, and has consented to the publication of a selection of her essays. These studies of men and manners represent the thoughts and convictions of about thirty years—"convictions illustrated by various circumstances and experiences, but themselves unchanged except so far as time had deepened and expanded them." The following chapters are included in the volume: Samuel Taylor Coleridge—Frederick Denison Maurice—Thomas Erskine of Linlathen—Life of Charles Kingsley—Arthur Penrhyn Stanley—The Cambridge Apostles of 1830—Richard Holt Hutton—A Study of Carlyle—"The Majority"—James Fitz-James Stephen—The Moral Influence of George Eliot—John Ruskin—Laurence Oliphant—Count Leo Tolstoi—Morals and Politics—Ethics and Science—Biography—The Relation of Memory to Will—The Vanity of Men of Letters—Invalids—Apologies—Henry Thomas Buckle—The Unfaithful Steward—Brothers, an Address to Female Students—De Senectute—The Drawbacks of the Intellectual Life.

THE PSYCHOLOGICAL PHENOMENA OF CHRISTIANITY

By GEORGE BARTON
CUTTEN, D.D. Ph.D.

Author of 'The Psychology of Alcoholism.' Price 12s. net

In this interesting and well-studied volume, Dr. Cutten examines in outline the whole range of the phenomena of Christianity, abnormal and normal, pathological and healthful. He treats of such subjects as mysticism, ecstasy, visions, dreams, witchcraft, revivals, faith cure and Christian Science, but does not confine his exposition merely to the unusual and the occult in Christianity. The theological student and the general reader will find much profit in the reading of this book.

THE LIVING WORD

By the Rev. ELWOOD
WORCESTER,
D.D. Ph.D. Price 6s. net

Dr. Elwood Worcester is the founder of the Emmanuel Church Movement, but unlike his well-known volume 'Religion and Medicine,' this book is not concerned with the spiritual healing of disorders half nervous and half moral, but is an attempt to establish from the point of view of modern scientific and philosophic thought faith in the Living God and reassurance as to the supreme problems that eternally press on human life. The book is the argument of a strong and simple nature expressed in language of great charm and power.

HODDER & STOUGHTON,
Warwick Square, London, E.C.

NEW SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

ARAMINTA. By J. C. SNAITH.

"THE SUCCESS OF THE SPRING SEASON."
THIRD IMPRESSION IN THE PRESS.

Sphere.—"Araminta" bids fair to be the most talked of novel of the hour.....the best novel of 1909 by a long way."

Morning Post.—"A novel which may well be the success of the spring season. It is an essentially jolly book."

GEOFFREY CHERITON.

By JOHN BARNETT, Author of 'The Prince's Valet, &c.

Nottingham Guardian.—"A story worthy to rank with the finest records of a man's self-sacrificing devotion to a friend that we have in fiction or in fact."

TERESA.

By EDITH AYRTON ZANGWILL,

Author of 'The Barbarous Babes,' 'The First Mrs. Mollivar,' &c.
Scotsman.—"Mrs. Zangwill's agreeable and interesting novel."

Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

THE IMMORTALS' GREAT QUEST.

By the Rev. J. W. BARLOW, Ex-Vice-Provost of Trinity College, Dublin.

Dundee Advertiser.—"Mr. Barlow combines finely descriptive power with vigorous imagination and original thought."

JUST PUBLISHED. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

MILITARY NEEDS AND MILITARY POLICY.

By the Right Honourable H. O. ARNOLD-FORSTER, M.P.,
Author of 'The Citizen Reader,' 'English Socialism of To-day,' &c.

With a Preface by Field-Marshal EARL ROBERTS
V.C. K.G. K.P., &c.

* * The purpose of the book is to explain in clear and simple language what are the true military needs of this country, and to show that the Territorial force, as at present constituted, does not, and cannot supply those needs. The question of the possibility of Invasion and of successful raids is examined and the strengthening of the Navy is pointed to as the true protection against such dangers.

NOW READY. Small demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

MODERN GERMANY.

Her Political and Economic Problems, her Policy, her Ambitions, and the Causes of her Success.

By J. ELLIS BARKER,

Author of 'The Rise and Decline of the Netherlands,' 'British Socialism,' &c.

THIRD VERY GREATLY ENLARGED EDITION, completely revised and brought up to date.

* * The book has been revised and brought up to February, 1909, and several chapters have been added which deal fully with Germany's economic policy, finances and labour conditions, which should be of interest to Free Traders and Tariff Reformers.

MR. CHARLES LOW in the Daily Chronicle.—"This is one of the best books on Germany to which we have been treated for a long time. It should be read by every one who is interested in the country."

IN PREPARATION.DORRIEN CARFAX: a Game of Hide-and-Seek.

By NOWELL GRIFFYTH.

THE STORY OF HAUKSGARTH FARM.

By EMMA F. BROOKE.

PRISCILLA OF THE "GOOD INTENT."

By HALLIWELL SUTCLIFFE.

DAVINA.

By FRANCES G. BURMESTER.

THE FLYING MONTHS.

By FRANCES M. PEARD.

THE BISHOP OF NORWICH.

With Portraits and Illustrations, large post 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

A BISHOP IN THE ROUGH.

Edited by the Rev. D. WALLACE DUTHIE.

With a Preface by the Right Rev. THE LORD BISHOP OF NORWICH.

Daily Telegraph.—"Fascinating from beginning to end.....We recommend no one to miss this most entertaining volume."

Westminster Gazette.—"Reminiscences of work and travel in many lands.....an interesting and delightful record."

Crown 8vo, 6s. net.

THE WANDER YEARS.

Being some Account of Journeys into Life, Letters, and Art.

By J. H. YOXALL, M.P.,

Author of 'Chateau Royal,' 'Alain Tanger's Wife,' &c.

Morning Post.—"A better or more individual book has not appeared for these many years."

Scotsman.—"Vivacious, cultured, clever, the book, though it is of a fair size materially, will prove all too short for readers who like good talk."

With a Portrait Frontispiece from a Painting by J. S. SARGENT, R.A.

SIXTY YEARS IN THE WILDERNESS.

By HENRY W. LUCY ("TOBY, M.P." of Punch),

Author of 'A Diary of Two Parliaments,' 'Mr. Gladstone: a Study from Life,' 'Peeps at Parliament,' &c.

Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

[In preparation.]

* * Mr. Lucy's pen loses none of its lively humour in depicting his ascent from the lowest rung of the journalistic and literary ladder to his present position. It is a very unusual story of hard work and knowledge of men and books. During the last thirty years Mr. Lucy has been brought into intimate relations with men eminent in politics, literature, art, and the drama.

RE-ISSUE OF THEDICTIONARY OF NATIONAL BIOGRAPHY.

Edited by LESLIE STEPHEN and SIDNEY LEE. IN TWENTY-TWO VOLUMES.

Cloth, gilt top, 15s. net each; half-morocco, marbled edges, 21s. net each.

Now ready. Vol. XIII. (MASQUERIER—MYLES), and a Volume will be issued each month until the completion of the Edition in December, 1909.

MR. CLEMENT SHORTER in the Sphere.—"The 'D. N. B.' is a book that should be in every library, and they are indeed fortunate who can have it on their shelves in twenty-two volumes instead of the sixty-six of the original edition, more particularly as, unlike most reprints, the new form is handier and more attractive than the old. The set is the most perfect birthday present for a bookish person that our age has known."

* * Prospectus, with Specimen Pages, post free on application.

London: SMITH, ELDER & CO. 15, Waterloo Place, S.W.

THE ATHENÆUM

Journal of English and Foreign Literature, Science, the Fine Arts, Music and the Drama.

No. 4247.

SATURDAY, MARCH 20, 1909.

PRICE
THREEPENCE.
REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

Obituary.

FLEAY.—On the 10th inst., at 27, Dafforne Road, Upper Tooting, FREDERICK GARD FLEAY, M.A., aged 78 years.

Lectures.

ROYAL INSTITUTION OF GREAT BRITAIN,
ALBEMARLE STREET, PICCADILLY, W.
THURSDAY NEXT, March 25, at 3 o'clock, Prof. G. H. BRYAN, Sc.D. F.R.S., FIRST OF TWO LECTURES on 'Aerial Flight in Theory and Practice.' Half-a-Guinea the Course.

Exhibitions.

ROYAL SOCIETY OF PAINTER-ETCHERS
AND ENGRAVERS, 5A, Pall Mall, East, S.W.—The 27th ANNUAL EXHIBITION NOW OPEN, 10-6. Admission 1s.
W. P. D. STEBBING, Secretary.

Educational.

DRAPERS' COMPANY.

SOLE SCHOLARSHIP AND EXHIBITION FUND.

The DRAPERS' COMPANY are about to award TWO SCHOLARSHIPS of 60l. per annum, tenable for Two or Three Years at some place of Advanced Education, for the Study of Theoretical or Applied Science, Art, Medicine, or Law, or the Degree Examination of some University in the United Kingdom. The Scholarships will be awarded to (a) Sons or Grandsons, between 16 and 18 years of age, of Freemen of the Drapers' Company; (b) other Boys of the same age. The Parent or Guardian of every Candidate must satisfy the Company that he needs the assistance of the Scholarship to carry on his education. The Company will shortly have the right also to nominate for an EXHIBITION of 70l. per annum, tenable for Three Years at King's College, Cambridge, a Son or Grandson of a Freeman of the Company of not more than 20 years of age. Further particulars may be obtained on application to the CLERK TO THE COMPANY, Drapers' Hall, Throgmorton Street, E.C.

DRAPERS' COMPANY'S GIRLS' SCHOLARSHIPS.

The DRAPERS' COMPANY are about to award THREE SCHOLARSHIPS to enable specially promising Girls to study at some place of advanced education, either in Special Subjects to be approved by the Company or for the Degree Examination of a University in the United Kingdom.

The Scholarships will be of the value of 60l. per annum each, and will be tenable for Two or Three Years. To be eligible for them, Girls must be between 17 and 19 years of age and must have passed some approved Public Examination and give other evidence satisfactory to the Company of successful study. The Parent or Guardian of every Candidate must satisfy the Company that she needs the assistance of the Scholarship to carry on her education.

Further particulars may be obtained on application to the CLERK TO THE COMPANY, Drapers' Hall, Throgmorton Street, London, E.C.

CHRIST'S COLLEGE, BLACKHEATH, S.E.

F. W. AVELING, M.A. B.Sc.
Preparation for Universities and Professions.
Stress on Modern Languages and Science.

EDUCATION.

Parents or Guardians desiring accurate information relative to the CHOICE OF SCHOOLS for BOYS or GIRLS or TUTORs in England or Abroad are invited to call upon or send fully detailed particulars to MESSRS. GABBITAS, THRING & CO., who for more than thirty years have been closely in touch with the leading Educational Establishments. Advice, free of charge, is given by Mr. THRING, Nephew of the late Head Master of Uppingham, 36, Sackville Street, London, W.

LEATHERHEAD COURT, SURREY.

A London School in the Country for 45 Girls (Residents). Principal—Miss TULLIS. The School aims at an intellectual training suited to the individual physical development on safe lines, and the cultivation of generous thoughts and pleasant manners.

Situations Vacant.

WELSH INTERMEDIATE EDUCATION ACT, 1889.

CENTRAL WELSH BOARD.

APPOINTMENT OF ASSISTANT EXAMINER IN ENGLISH LANGUAGE AND LITERATURE.

The EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE of the BOARD will shortly proceed to the appointment of an ASSISTANT EXAMINER in ENGLISH LANGUAGE AND LITERATURE. Particulars relating to the appointment may be obtained from the undersigned not later than MONDAY, March 29.

OWEN OWEN, Chief Inspector.
Central Welsh Board, Cardiff, March 16, 1909.

UNIVERSITY OF BIRMINGHAM.
(FACULTY OF SCIENCE.)

PROFESSORSHIP OF BOTANY AND VEGETABLE PHYSIOLOGY.

The COUNCIL invites applications for the CHAIR OF BOTANY AND VEGETABLE PHYSIOLOGY. Stipend 500l. per annum. The successful Candidate will be required to enter on his duties on OCTOBER 1, 1909.

Applications, accompanied by not less than three references, should be sent to the undersigned on or before MAY 1. Testimonials are not required.

Further particulars may be obtained from
GEO. H. MORLEY, Secretary.

COUNTY BOROUGH OF DUDLEY.

DAY TRAINING COLLEGE.

A VICE-PRINCIPAL (Woman) will be REQUIRED in SEPTEMBER NEXT. She must possess University Degree or equivalent, and Practical and Theoretical Knowledge of Educational Method, including, if possible, Infant Teaching and School Hygiene. Salary 200l. to 250l.

Forms of Application may be obtained from the undersigned (on receipt of a stamped addressed foolscap envelope), and must be returned with envelope endorsed "Training College" not later than APRIL 24, 1909.

J. M. WYNNE, Secretary to College Council.
Education Offices, Dudley.

COUNTY BOROUGH OF CROYDON.

EDUCATION COMMITTEE.

The COMMITTEE require the services of a TEACHER, to act as Junior Tutor of the Classes held at the South Norwood Branch Polytechnic on Monday Evenings and Saturday Mornings for the Preparation of Students for the Certificate Examination of the Board of Education.

The Candidate appointed will be required to teach Geography, History, and the English Subjects contained in the Syllabus for about Six Hours per Week.

The Salary will be at the rate of 26l. for the remainder of the Session, which is of eighteen weeks' duration, the next Term commencing on APRIL 19, 1909.

Applications, stating age, present position, full particulars of qualifications, and any other particulars, accompanied by copies of not more than three Testimonials, should be sent to me not later than the 29th instant.

JAMES SMYTH, Clerk to the Committee.
Education Office, Katharine Street, Croydon,
March 16, 1909.

KINGSTON-UPON-THAMES PUBLIC LIBRARY.

SENIOR ASSISTANT REQUIRED. Salary 52l. per annum, rising by two annual increments to 65l. A practical knowledge of exact Classification is essential, and preference will be given to Candidates holding Library Association Certificates.—Applications, in Candidates' own handwriting, stating age, with two recent Testimonials, to be sent to THE LIBRARIAN, to reach him not later than the first post on the 29th inst.

INTERMEDIATE SCHOOL, ABERDARE, SOUTH WALES.

An ASSISTANT MASTER is REQUIRED for the above School, well qualified to teach Mathematics and to assist in the work of the Commercial Department. Good discipline and experience essential. Commencing Salary, 150l. to 170l., according to qualifications.

Further particulars and Forms of Application, which should be returned by the 31st instant, may be had from THE HEAD MASTER.

KENT EDUCATION COMMITTEE.

DARTFORD HIGHER EDUCATION SUB-COMMITTEE.

DARTFORD COUNTY SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.

WANTED, in APRIL NEXT, an ASSISTANT MISTRESS for the above-named School. Subjects: Geography and Science (Elementary Physics and Chemistry). Candidates should hold Degree of a British University or its equivalent. Initial Salary, 100l. to 110l. per annum according to qualifications and experience, with increments in accordance with the Committee's Scale. Further particulars and Forms of Application may be obtained from THE SECRETARY, County School for Girls, Dartford, and must be forwarded not later than MARCH 24, to Miss A. M. BRETT, County School for Girls, Dartford. Canvassing will be considered a disqualification.

By Order of the Committee,
FRAS. W. CROOK, Secretary.
Canton House, Westminster, March 9th, 1909.

COUNTY BOROUGH OF WEST HAM.

MUNICIPAL TECHNICAL INSTITUTE SCHOOL OF ART, ROMFORD ROAD, STRATFORD, E.

WANTED, a LADY ASSISTANT, who must have had previous experience in Teaching. Salary 100l. per annum, rising by two increments to 120l.—For all further particulars apply to THE PRINCIPAL.

FRED. E. HILLEARY, Town Clerk.
Education Department, 95, The Grove, Stratford, E.
March 9, 1909

Situations Wanted.

SECRETARY (LADY) desires AFTERNOON ENGAGEMENT, London, Shorthand-Typist. German, French.—Address K. S., Chalfont St. Peter, Bucks.

UNIONIST M.P.s, JOURNALISTS, AUTHORS.—Competent STENOGRAPHER, with literary ability, SEEKS WORK. Useful knowledge matters Journalistic. German and French Languages. Own Remington.—Letters to SIGNET, 55, Chancery Lane.

TO PUBLISHERS.—ADVERTISER (37) desires POST as ASSISTANT. Literary, Commercial, and Journalistic Experience. Author of 'When Hawkins Sailed the Sea' (Richards), &c.—Address, TINSLEY PRATT, 7, Lorne Road, Fallowfield, Manchester.

Miscellaneous.

EXPERIENCED TRANSLATOR wants MORE WORK. Oxford Graduate. French, German, Italian into English. Moderate terms.—Address W. L., 23, Thurlow Road, N.W.

TRANSLATIONS INTO ENGLISH from French, Italian, Spanish, Portuguese, German, Dutch, Danish, Norwegian, and Swedish.—W. T. CURTIS, 10, Haringey Park, Crouch End, N.

Yearly Subscription, free by post, Inland, 15s. 3d.; Foreign, 18s. Entered at the New York Post Office as Second Class matter.

TO AUTHORS AND PUBLISHERS.—A well-known CAMBRIDGE MAN, M.A., is open to ADVISE AUTHORS, Revise Copy or Proofs, &c. Highest references.—Address M., Box 1177, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, E.C.

RESEARCH WORK in the British Museum and elsewhere UNDERTAKEN. Experienced.—Y. K., Box 1580, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

LITERARY RESEARCH undertaken at the British Museum and elsewhere on moderate terms. Excellent Testimonials.—A. B., Box 1062, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

REGINALD GLENCROSS, M.A. LL.B. Cantab., undertakes GENEALOGICAL and RESEARCH WORK. Three years' experience in Ulster's Office, Dublin. Highest references. Terms moderate.—3, Chalfont Street, West Kensington.

PRIVATE SOCIAL TOURS FOR GENTLE- WOMEN.—Historic Castles of Loire Valley, APRIL. Austria, including the Danube, Vienna, Budapest, and Salzburg, JUNE. Holland and Switzerland, AUGUST. Inclusive Terms. References exchanged.—Miss BISHOP, 27, St. George's Road, Kilburn, London.

PUBLIC-HOUSE REFORM.—The People's Refreshment House Association, Ltd., founded by the Bishop of Chester, manages 68 Licensed Inns. Ask for List and Report. APPLY FOR 1l. SHARES. 5 per cent paid since 1899. P.R.H.A., Broadway Chambers, Westminster.

PRIVATE ACCOUNT BOOK.—For Country or City Gentleman. Combines every requirement, from Cash Book to Balance Sheet and Income Tax. Satisfaction guaranteed or money returned. Particulars free.—McQUEEN & CO., Moat Road E., Leicester.

Type-Writers, &c.

TYPE-WRITING undertaken by highly educated Women (Classical Tripos; Cambridge Higher Local; Modern Languages). Research, Revision, Translation, Shorthand, Dictation Room.—THE CAMBRIDGE TYPE-WRITING AGENCY, 10, Duke Street, Adelphi, W.C.

AUTHORS' MSS., NOVELS, STORIES, PLAYS, ESSAYS TYPE-WRITTEN with complete accuracy, 9d. per 1,000 words. Clear Carbon Copies guaranteed. References to well-known Writers.—M. STUART, Allendale, Kymberley Road, Harrow.

TYPE-WRITING, 9d. per 1,000 words. All kinds of MSS. accurately typed. Clear Carbon Copies, 3d. per 1,000. References to well-known Authors. Oxford Higher Local. Tel. 1272, Richmond P.O.—M. KING, 24, Forest Road, Kew Gardens, S.W.

AUTHORS' MSS., 9d. per 1,000 words. Sermons, Plays, and all kinds of TYPE-WRITING carefully done at home (Remington). Good paper. Orders promptly executed. Duplicating from 3s. 6d. per 100.—M. L. L., 18, Edgeley Road, Clapham, S.W.

TYPE-WRITING 9d. per 1,000 words; Carbons 3d. French and German Type-writing 1s. per 1,000. Translations. Duplicating 3s. 100 Copies (quarto), 15s. per 1,000. Best work, accuracy, and promptitude.—G. WALKER, 14, Park Road, New Cross, S.E.

TYPE-WRITING.—The WEST KENSINGTON OFFICES. Authors' MSS., Translations, &c. Legal and General Copying. Private Dictation Room. Circulars, &c. Duplicated. Usual Terms. References. Established sixteen years.—SIKES & SIKES, 223A, Hammersmith Road, London, W.

TYPE-WRITER. KINDLY NOTE CHANGE OF ADDRESS. MISS E. M. TIGAR, 10, MAITLAND PARK VILLAS, Haverstock Hill, N.W.

Catalogues.

GLAISHER'S REMAINDER BOOK CATALOGUE

For MARCH (No. 363).

NOW READY, and will be forwarded on application. It comprises a specially attractive Selection of Publishers' Remainders, including many Good Bargains

WILLIAM GLAISHER, LTD.,

Booksellers, 265, HIGH HOLBORN, LONDON.

BOOKS.—ALL OUT-OF-PRINT and RARE

BOOKS on any subject SUPPLIED. The most expert Bookfinder extant. Please state wants and ask for CATALOGUE. I make a special feature of exchanging any Saleable Books for others selected from my various Lists. Special List of 2,000 Books I particularly want post free.—EDW. BAKER'S Great Bookshop, 14-16, John Bright Street, Birmingham.—Yellow Book, 13 vols. 2l. 10s.; Trigg's Art Garden Design, Italy, 2½ guineas for 21s.; E. Fitzgerald's Works, 7 vols. 3l. 3s.

ANCIENT and MODERN COINS.—Collectors and Antiquarians are invited to apply to SPINK & SON, Limited, for Specimen Copy (gratis) of their NUMISMATIC CIRCULAR. The finest Greek, Roman, and English Coins on View and for Sale at Moderate Prices.—SPINK & SON, Limited, Experts, Valuers, and Cataloguers, 16, 17, and 18, Piccadilly, London, W. Established upwards of a Century.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,
74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON.

REPRODUCTIONS IN MONOCHROME OF FAMOUS WORKS OF ART BY THE AUTOTYPE PERMANENT PROCESS.

Amongst the numerous Publications may be mentioned
SELECTIONS from THE NATIONAL
GALLERY (London), THE WALLACE COLLECTION,
THE TATE GALLERY, THE WALKER ART GAL-
LERY (Liverpool).

DRAWINGS BY HOLBEIN, from the ROYAL COLLECTION, Windsor Castle.

SELECTED EXAMPLES OF SACRED
ART from various Collections.

ETCHINGS BY REMBRANDT.

DRAWINGS BY ALBERT DÜRER.

PICTURES from the Louvre, Luxembourg, Paris.

Prospectuses of above Issues will be sent on application.

FULL PARTICULARS OF ALL
THE COMPANY'S PUBLICATIONS ARE GIVEN IN
THE AUTOTYPE FINE-ART CATALOGUE.

NOW READY,

ENLARGED EDITION, with Hundreds of Miniature
Photographs and Tint Blocks of Notable Autotypes.

For convenience of Reference the Publications
are arranged Alphabetically under Artists' Names.

Post free, One Shilling.

A Visit of Inspection is invited to
THE AUTOTYPE FINE-ART GALLERY
74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.

CATALOGUE No. 50.—Drawings by Turner,
Prout, Ruskin, &c.—Turner's Liber Studiorum and other
Engravings—Proofs touched by Turner—Constable's English Landscape—Etchings by Whistler—Japanese Colour Prints—Illustrated
Books. Post free, Sixpence.—WM. WARD, 2, Church Terrace,
Richmond, Surrey.

JUST PUBLISHED.
CATALOGUE of BOOKS, including interesting Items relating to Africa, America, Angling, Arctic, Australia, the Drama, Hunting, Sport, Travels, &c.—Post free of JAMES RIMELL & SON, 53, Shaftesbury Avenue, London, W. Books and Engravings Bought.

MAGG S BROS.,
109, Strand, London, W.C.

DEALERS IN RARE AND VALUABLE BOOKS
PRINTS, AND AUTOGRAPHS.

CATALOGUES sent post free to all parts of the World
Export Orders Solicited.

Telegraphic and Cable Address: "Bibliolite, London."
Telephone: "Gerrard 4664."

Sales by Auction.

The magnificent Library of the Right Hon. LORD
AMHERST of Hackney, deceased (Second and Final Portion).
MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE
will SELL by AUCTION at their House, No. 13, Wellington
Street, Strand, W.C., on WEDNESDAY, March 24, and Three Following Days, at 1 o'clock precisely, the magnificent LIBRARY of choice and valuable Books and Manuscripts, the Property of the Right Hon. LORD AMHERST OF HACKNEY, deceased (Second Portion).
May be viewed. Catalogues may be had, price One Shilling each.

Engravings and Etchings.
MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE
will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on MONDAY, March 29, and Following Day, at 1 o'clock precisely, ENGRAVINGS, ETCHINGS, and DRAWINGS (Framed and in the Portfolio), including Arundel Society Publications, the Property of a GENTLEMAN; PORTRAITS and FANCY SUBJECTS by different Engravers, many in Colours—Mezzotints published by Carrington Bowles, R. Sayer, and others; Views, Portraits, &c., the Property of J. HUTCHINS, Esq., of Newport, Monmouth; other Properties, comprising Mezzotint and other Portraits by W. Whiston Barney, J. R. Smith, W. Dickinson, J. Watson, J. McArdeil, P. Bartolozzi, J. Smith, and others—Engravings after
J. M. W. Turner—Foreign Costume Plates, in Colours—Etchings by Rembrandt, J. M. Whistler, Seymour Haden, and others—Drawings of the English School, by N. Hone, P. Hayman, T. Rowlandson, W. Havell, David Cox, Birket Foster, T. S. Cooper, &c.—Drawings by celebrated Old Masters and others, &c.
May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

The Collection of Coins and Medals of the late
C. H. T. HAWKINS, Esq.
MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE
will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on WEDNESDAY, March 31, at 1 o'clock precisely, the collection of COINS and MEDALS of the late C. H. T.
HAWKINS, Esq., of Portland Place, W., comprising Greek Coins in Silver and Bronze, collected in Greece in the early part of the Nineteenth Century—English Coins in Gold, Silver, and Copper—English and Foreign Medals—Coin Cabinets, &c.
May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

MESSRS. CHRISTIE, MANSON & WOODS
respectfully give notice that they will hold the following
SALES by AUCTION, at their Great Rooms, King Street, St. James's
Square, the Sales commencing at 1 o'clock precisely:—
On MONDAY, March 22, a valuable COLLEC-TION of ENGRAVED PORTRAITS, ENGRAVINGS in MEZZO-
TINT and COLOURS.

On TUESDAY, March 23, the COLLECTION of OLD WORCESTER, CHELSEA, and SEVRES PORCELAIN of
J. CHEETHAM COCKSHUT, Esq.

On WEDNESDAY, March 24, fine OLD ENG-LISH SILVER of JOSEPH WREN, Esq., FABIA LADY STANLEY
OF ALDERLEY, deceased, and others.

On THURSDAY, March 25, JEWELS of
FABIA LADY STANLEY OF ALDERLEY, deceased, the Rev.
H. A. MACPHERSON, deceased, and others.

On FRIDAY, March 26, PORCELAIN, OLD ENGLISH and OLD FRENCH FURNITURE from private sources, and OLD ENGLISH MINIATURES of FABIA LADY STANLEY
OF ALDERLEY, deceased.

On SATURDAY, March 27, the COLLECTION of choice MODERN PICTURES of the late ABRAHAM FARRAR, Esq.; MODERN PICTURES and DRAWINGS, the Property of the late RICHARD HOBSON, Esq., and others.

STEVENS'S AUCTION ROOMS,
Established 1760.
TUESDAY NEXT, at 1 o'clock.

The COLLECTION of BRITISH LEPIDO-
PTERA formed by the late J. PARDOE, Esq., including many Extinct and Rare Species, together with the Cabinets in which the Collection is contained.

On view day prior 10 to 4 and morning of Sale. Catalogues on application.

THURSDAY and FRIDAY NEXT, at half-past 12 o'clock.
MISCELLANEOUS PROPERTY and PHOTO-GRAPHIC APPARATUS.

TUESDAY, March 30, at half-past 12 o'clock.
ETHNOGRAPHICAL CURIOS, CHINA,
BAXTER PRINTS, &c.

TUESDAY, April 6, at half-past 12 o'clock.
NATURAL HISTORY SPECIMENS, HEADS and HORNS of BIG GAME.

Mr. J. C. STEVENS has received instructions to offer the above for SALE by AUCTION at his Rooms, 38, King Street, Covent Garden, W.C.

Valuable Natural History Books—Standard Works from the Library of a Gentleman, &c.

MESSRS. HODGSON & CO. will SELL by
AUCTION, at their Rooms, 115, Chancery Lane, W.C., on THURSDAY, April 1, and Following Day, at 1 o'clock, VALUABLE NATURAL HISTORY BOOKS, including a fine and complete Set of Curtis's Botanical Magazine, in 113 vols. calf, 1787-1907—Lovell Reeve and Sowerby's Conchologia Iconica, 20 vols. half-calf, quarto—Harvey's Phycologia Britannica and Australica, 9 vols.—Loddiges'
Botanical Cabinet, 20 vols.—Bateman's Orchidaceous Plants, &c.,
2 vols.—Moore's Lepidoptera of Ceylon, 3 vols.—Entomological Society's Transactions, complete from 1836 to 1905, &c. Also Standard Modern Works from the Library of a Gentleman, including handsomely bound Sets of Fielding, Horace Walpole, Thackeray, Marryat, Whyte-Melville, Surtees, and others—a Set of the Folk-Lore Society's Publications, 53 vols.—Hakluyt's Voyages, 12 vols.—Sporting Magazine, 1847-69—Cussans's Hertfordshire, 3 vols. large paper—a coloured copy of Boydell's Thames, 2 vols.—Punch, a complete set in half-morocco—Encyclopædia Britannica, Tenth Edition, 36 vols.—Standard Works in General Literature—First Editions of Esteemed Authors, &c.
Catalogues on application.

The Stock and Plant of Sowerby's Botany.

MESSRS. HODGSON & CO. will offer for SALE on THURSDAY, April 1, at 3 o'clock, the VALUABLE PROPERTY of SOWERBY'S ENGLISH BOTANY, 12 vols., comprising the entire Stock and Plant of the Third Edition of this Standard Work.

Full particulars on application.

Printers.

HAVE YOU A FAMILY PEDIGREE which you would like to have PRINTED? Send it to us and it will be done under Expert Supervision at the lowest rates.—GERRARDS, Lrn. (The Westminster Press), Genealogical Printers, 411A, Harrow
Road, London, W.

Authors' Agents.

TO AUTHORS.—LITERARY AGENT has opportunity of INTRODUCING THEOLOGICAL WORKS to a high-class FIRM of PUBLISHERS. No fees.—Write A. B. C.,
Box 5105, Willings, 125, Strand, W.C.

THE AUTHOR'S AGENCY.—Established 1879.
The interests of Authors capably represented. Agreements for Publishing arranged. MSS. placed with Publishers.—Terms and Testimonials on application to Mr. A. M. BURGESS, 24, Paternoster Row.

Magazines, &c.

"THE WORLD-RENOWNED"

BOTANICAL MAGAZINE.

FOURTH SERIES, No. 51. MARCH, 1909.

Hand-Coloured Plates, with Historical and Structural Descriptions and Hints for Culture of New and Rare Flowering Plants, suitable for the Garden, Stove, or Conservatory.

Edited by Lieut.-Col. D. PRAIN, C.I.E. LL.D. F.R.S., Director of the Royal Botanic Gardens, Kew.

Contents.

CYCAS Micholitzii. Indo-China Double Plate.

SAXIFRAGA scardica. Balkan Peninsula.

PSEUDERANTHEMUM seticalyx. Tropical Africa.

NIGELLA integrifolia. Turkestan.

RUBUS Koehneanus. Japan.

3s. 6d. Monthly. Annual Subscription, 42s.

LOVELL REEVE & CO., Lrn., 6, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden.

L E S P E C T A T E U R

MONTHLY JOURNAL OF PSYCHOLOGY AND LOGIC,

as applied to Everyday Life, Business Methods, Politics, and Scientific Work.

Yearly Subscription, 6s. 10d.

Apply for Sample Copies to

R. MARTIN-GUELLIOT, 99, Boulevard Raspail,
Paris VI.

[Magazines, &c., continued on p. 358.]

LONDON LIBRARY, ST. JAMES'S SQUARE, S.W.

Patron—HIS MAJESTY THE KING. President.—The Right Hon. A. J. BALFOUR, M.P.

Vice-Presidents—FREDERIC HARRISON, Esq.; Sir FRANK T. MARZIALS, C.B.; GEORGE MEREDITH, Esq. O.M.; ALFRED RUSSEL WALLACE, Esq. O.M. F.R.S.

Trustees—EARL of ROSEBURY, K.G.; Right Hon. LORD AVEBURY, F.R.S.; HENRY YATES THOMPSON, Esq.

Committee—Right Hon. Sir Rowland Blennerhassett, Bart. LL.D., Bernard Bosanquet, Esq. LL.D., Prof.
A. C. Bradley, LL.D., Horace T. Brown, Esq. LL.D. F.R.S., Prof. Ingram Bywater, D.Litt., Austin Dobson, Esq.
LL.D., Hon. Arthur Eliot, D.C.L. J. Fitzmaurice-Kelly, Esq. Litt.D., Sydney Gedge, Esq., Sir A. Geikie, K.C.B.
F.R.S., Sir R. Giffen, K.C.B. F.R.S., Edmund Gosse, Esq. LL.D., Mrs. J. R. Green, Rev. W. Hunt, Litt.D., Sir C. P.
Ibert, K.C.B. K.C.S.I., Walter Leaf, Esq. Litt.D., Sidney Lee, Esq. Litt.D., W. S. Lilly, Esq., Sidney J. Low, Esq., Dr. J. F.
Payne, Sir F. Pollock, Bart. LL.D., Rev. J. H. Rigg, D.D., H. R. Tedder, Esq. F.S.A., A. W. Ward, Esq. Litt.D. LL.D.

The Library contains about 220,000 Volumes of Ancient and Modern Literature, in various Languages. Subscription, 3l. 3s. a year, with an entrance fee of 1l. 1s.; Life Membership, according to age.
Fifteen Volumes are allowed to Country and Ten to Town Members. Reading-Room open from Ten to Half-past Six. The NEW CATALOGUE (1526 pp. 4to, 1903), price 2l. 2s.; to Members, 25s.

"ONE OF THE MOST SAGACIOUS AND JUDICIOUSLY LIBERAL MEN I HAVE EVER KNOWN, THE LATE LORD DERBY, SAID THERE WAS A KIND OF MAN TO WHOM
THE BEST SERVICE THAT COULD BE RENDERED WAS TO MAKE HIM A LIFE
MEMBER OF THE LONDON LIBRARY."—W. E. H. LECKY.

C. T. HAGBERG WRIGHT, LL.D., Secretary and Librarian.

Mudie's Sale of books

Mar. 15 to Ap. 3

Send for catalogue without delay, so as to secure the best bargains.
100,000 new, second-hand and re-bound books, from 4d. each.

30-34 New Oxford St., London, W.C.; 48 Queen Victoria St., E.C. (City Branch);
132 Kensington High Street, W. (New West End Branch)

MESSRS. METHUEN'S NEW BOOKS

Messrs. Methuen's New Illustrated Announcement List, containing Notes of many new and interesting Books, is now ready, and will be sent post free to any applicant.

On March 25 will be published a New Play by MAURICE MAETERLINCK, entitled THE BLUE BIRD, fcap. 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

The latest Novel published by Messrs. Methuen this Spring is a New Romance of Mediæval Italy by BERNARD CAPES, entitled THE LOVE-STORY OF ST. BEL.

Two other Novels recently published by them are KATHERINE THE ARROGANT, by Mrs. B. M. CROKER, and MY LADY OF SHADOWS, by JOHN OXENHAM. Both these Novels went into a Second Edition a few days after publication.

Nearly all Messrs. Methuen's Spring Novels are in Second or Third Editions.

They call particular attention to THE GIFTED FAMILY, "a delightful novel—immensely and superlatively happy," and also to THE STORY OF VIRGINIA PERFECT—a book (as the Morning Post says) "full of tears and laughter and true human things." This book is one of the greatest successes of the year.

GENERAL LITERATURE

NAPOLEON'S MARSHALS. By R. P. DUNN PATTISON. With 20 Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

THE BLUE BIRD: a Fairy Play in Five Acts. By MAURICE MAETERLINCK. Translated by ALEXANDER TEIXEIRA DE MATTOS. Fcap. 8vo, deckle edges, 3s. 6d. net.

A HISTORY OF ENGLISH LAW. By W. S. HOLDSWORTH, M.A. With a Plan. Vols. II. and III. In 3 vols. demy 8vo, each 10s. 6d. net.

The first volume of this general History of Law in England contained a history of the various Courts which have administered English Law, together with an account of their jurisdiction, and deals with the beginnings of the various branches of English Law—of Equity, Admiralty, Commercial, and Ecclesiastical Law—which make up the Common Law of the present day. In these volumes the detailed history of these branches of law is traced.

THE CONFLICT OF RELIGIONS IN THE EARLY ROMAN EMPIRE. By T. R. GLOVER, M.A., Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

This work is an attempt to make the reader see the Founder of the Christian movement and some of His followers as they appeared among their contemporaries; to represent Christian and Pagan with equal goodwill and equal honesty, and in one perspective.

GEORGE SELWYN AND THE WITS. By S. PARNELL KERR. With 16 Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

Mr. Kerr has been fortunate in obtaining access to a series of unpublished letters by Selwyn. They are addressed to a relative, and contain many intimate and personal touches. The book, which will be illustrated, also deals largely with Selwyn's circle—a circle which included practically all the famous wits and men of fashion of the eighteenth century.

GALICIA: the Switzerland of Spain. By ANNETTE M. B. MEAKIN. With many Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

THE COMPLETE HOCKEY PLAYER. By EUSTACE E. WHITE. With many Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 5s. net.

'The Complete Hockey Player' comprises an historical sketch of hockey, its evolution, progress, and present popularity, and chapters dealing in an interesting and informative way with club, county, interdivisional, international, and university hockey.

THE TRIALS OF FIVE QUEENS. By R. STORRY DEANS. With 12 Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

A book dealing with the Trials of Mary, Queen of Scots, Anne Boleyn, Katherine of Aragon, Marie Antoinette, and Queen Caroline.

TRAGEDY QUEENS OF THE GEORGIAN ERA. By JOHN FYVIE. With 16 Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

This book is a series of biographical sketches of all the most prominent English tragedy actresses of the eighteenth century, from the famous Madame Barry and the fascinating Oldfield down to the majestic Siddons.

"Mr. Fyvie's work is sound throughout, and is not marred by the vulgarity of extravagant enthusiasm."—Morning Post. "Full of amusing incidents."—Daily News.

"The writer always has an interesting, well-studied story to tell."—Scotsman.

THE THOUGHTS OF LUCIA HALLIDAY. Edited by R. M. Fcap. 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.

"If Mr. Benson's pen did not write this book then somebody else has imitated him very successfully. Anyhow, the very suspicion is a very real form of praise.... It is a genial series of papers which show a cultured, kindly mind."—Daily Chronicle.

"The letters are delightful, but it is the 'Thoughts' that give the charm and tone to the book and make it so treasurable."—Liverpool Courier.

LORENZO THE MAGNIFICENT; and Florence in Her Golden Age. By E. L. S. HORSBURGH. Illustrated. Demy 8vo, 15s. net.

"A work of literary value and philosophic value, which will bring profit and delight at every reading."—Outlook.

THE CREED IN THE EPISTLES. By WILFRID RICHMOND, M.A. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.

BOTTICELLI. By MARY L. BONNOR. With a Frontispiece in Photogravure and 32 other Illustrations. Demy 16mo, gilt top, 2s. 6d. net. [Little Books on Art].

THE FOUNDATIONS OF THE ENGLISH CHURCH. By J. H. MAUDE, M.A., Rector of Hilgay. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.

The first of a new series. It deals with the foundation of the English Church, and its history to the year 800. [Handbooks of English Church History].

THE ANGLO-SAXON CHURCH AND THE NORMAN CONQUEST. By C. T. CRUTTWELL, M.A., Rector of Ewelme and Canon of Peterborough. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. net. [Handbooks of English Church History].

THE END OF THE MIDDLE AGE, 1273-1453. By E. C. LODGE, Vice-Principal and History Tutor, Lady Margaret Hall. With many Maps. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. [Six Ages of European History].

This book marks the decay of the political system of the Middle Ages and the disappearance of the old unity in Western Europe.

ENGLAND'S RUIN: Discussed in Fourteen Letters to a Protectionist. By A. M. S. METHUEN. Crown 8vo, 3d. net. [Eighth Edition]. This is the eighth edition, and the book has been carefully revised and all the figures brought up to the end of 1906.

FICTION

HOLY ORDERS. By MARIE CORELLI. 113th Thousand. Crown 8vo, 6s.

SALTHAYEN. By W. W. JACOBS. Illustrated by WILL OWEN. Crown 8vo, 6s. [Second Edition].

"No admirer of 'A Master of Craft' will be disappointed with 'Salthaven.'"—Morning Post.

"We consider Mr. Jacobs a national benefactor."—Times.

"He would be a churl who could read the work without laughing aloud."—Observer.

KATHERINE THE ARROGANT. By B. M. CROKER, Author of 'Peggy of the Bartons.' Crown 8vo, 6s. [Third Edition].

"The charm of the book is the tenderness of the human touch throughout."—Liverpool Post.

"Bright, and smart, and witty, and full of amusing situations."—Morning Post.

"Mrs. Croker is always amusing; her theme is made fresh and vivid, and Katherine herself is delightful."—Standard.

MY LADY OF SHADOWS. By JOHN OXENHAM, Author of 'The Gate of the Desert.' Crown 8vo, 6s. [Second Edition].

In this novel Mr. Oxenham's many readers have the pleasure of meeting again a number of old friends, and many new ones, all most excellent company. The novel deals with a somewhat difficult and delicate situation—the complete lapse of memory on the part of a bride immediately after the wedding.

THE GIFTED FAMILY. By BARRY PAIN, Author of 'Lindley Kays.' Crown 8vo, 6s. [Third Edition].

"A delightful mixture of laughter and tears."—Onlooker.

"Mr. Barry Pain has a remarkable command of all the leading motives of fiction, and his book is full of good things."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"A delightful novel, interesting from the first page to the last.... Kindly and humorous. I repeat that this is a delightful book."—Punch.

"In Mr. Pain's best vein, and is full of shrewd observation."—Liverpool Post.

"It is all immensely, superlatively happy, very charming, and very human."—Court Journal.

"It is all very true, all very amusing."—Standard.

THE STORY OF VIRGINIA PERFECT. By PEGGY WEBLING, Author of 'Blue Jay.' Crown 8vo, 6s. [Second Edition].

"It dabbles in no melodrama; its interest throughout is limited to the humble lives of working people; and it is a very simple story exquisitely told."—Sketch.

"The book is gracefully written and is full of humour."—Daily Mail.

"There is a charm and a freshness about Miss Webling's style that is infinitely refreshing after a course of machine-turned fiction."—Onlooker.

"In this story Miss Webling presents her readers with a delicate and beautiful piece of work, full of that quality which—for want of a better word—we may term heart."—Morning Leader.

"Miss Webling is a writer of whom we have heard before, and of whom we shall hear again. She tells her story charmingly, and it is very nearly perfect. Miss Webling—please go on."—Daily Graphic.

"Here is a book that the New Year will find hard to beat, welcome as the aconite and snowdrop, full of tears and laughter and true human things."—Morning Post.

"A book at once fragrant and unconventional."—Punch.

BROTHERS ALL: More Stories of Dutch Peasant Life. By MAARTEN MAARTENS, Author of 'An Old Maid's Love.' Crown 8vo, 6s. [Second Edition].

"It is both carefully and sympathetically written, and bears throughout the impress of reality."—Outlook.

"Each story is a finished piece of work."—Daily Telegraph.

"Mr. Maartens' creative faculty is vigorous, clever, effective, and fertile."—Daily News.

THE FLOWER OF THE HEART. By H. B. MARRIOTT WATSON. Crown 8vo, 6s. [Third Edition].

"Alice Eversley is one of the sweetest, most delicately charming women of modern fiction."—Daily Mail.

"A fine and powerful novel. No one can question the sincerity and power."—Daily Telegraph.

A SON OF THE EMPEROR. By NEWTON V. STEWART. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"Mr. Stewart works out with great skill the pattern of the story, and has written a book of unusual interest."—Daily Mail.

"Mr. Stewart has written his story with spirit, and he has an eye for colour and the picturesque."—Daily Chronicle.

IN THE POTTER'S HOUSE. By G. D. ELDRIDGE. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"The attitudes of the characters are powerfully handled and the whole book has strength and freshness."—Morning Leader.

"It is a strong work, and the characters are etched in incisively and vehemently."—Standard.

TO BE PUBLISHED LATER

BARBARY SHEEP. By ROBERT HICHENS, Author of 'The Garden of Allah.' Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

SET IN SILVER. By C. N. and A. M. WILLIAMSON, Authors of 'The Lightning Conductor.' With a Frontispiece in Colour by ARTHUR H. BUCKLAND, and other Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 6s.

In this new novel, which describes a motor tour through England, Mr. and Mrs. Williamson again are faithful to the motor-car, into which they pack their characters, and from which are caught those glimpses of England which they give so alluringly.

MACMILLAN'S NEW BOOKS.

Psyche's Task: a Discourse Concerning the Influence of Superstition on the Growth of Institutions. By J. G. FRAZER, D.C.L. LL.D. Litt.D. 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.

Social Life at Rome in the Age of Cicero.

By W. WARDE FOWLER, M.A., Author of 'The Roman Festivals of the Period of the Republic,' &c. With Map and Plans. 8vo, 10s. net.

Monuments of Christian Rome from Constantine to the Renaissance. By ARTHUR L. FROTHINGHAM, Ph.D., Professor of Archaeology and Ancient History at Princeton University. Illustrated. Extra crown 8vo, 10s. 6d. [Handbooks of Archaeology and Antiquities.]

The Ancient Greek Historians (Harvard Lectures). By J. B. BURY, Litt.D. LL.D., Regius Professor of Modern History in the University of Cambridge. 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

The Characters of Theophrastus. An English Translation from a Revised Text, with Introduction and Notes by R. C. JEBB, M.A., Fellow and Assistant-Tutor of Trinity College, Cambridge, and Public Orator of the University, 1870. A New Edition. Edited by J. E. SANDYS, Litt.D. 8vo, 7s. 6d. net. [Classical Library.]

The Acropolis of Athens. By MARTIN L. D'OOGE, Professor of Greek in the University of Michigan. Fully illustrated. 8vo, 17s. net.

THIRD EDITION, WITH SOME REFERENCE TO DR. HORT'S 'APOCALYPSE OF ST. JOHN I-III.'

The Apocalypse of St. John. The Greek Text, with Introduction, Notes, and Indices, by Prof. HENRY BARCLAY SWETE, D.D. 8vo, 15s.

WRITING PAPER EDITION FOR MARGINAL NOTES.

The New Testament in the Original Greek. The Text Revised by BROOKE FOSS WESTCOTT, D.D., and F. J. A. HORT, D.D. Demy 8vo, 5s. net.

The Religion of the Common Man. By Sir HENRY WRIXON, K.C. Crown 8vo, 3s. net. Guardian.—"A notable contribution to the increasing number of books which are written not for the expert, but for the cultivated, thinking layman."

Jimbo. A Fantasy. By ALGERNON BLACKWOOD, Author of 'John Silence,' &c. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net. World.—"In this delightful romance of a small boy Mr. Algernon Blackwood, who in John Silence has already revealed himself as the possessor of a marvellous imagination, has beautifully illustrated for us the mind of an imaginative child, and at the same time preached a most eloquent sermon against the cruelty of frightening children with ogres and bogies and other nameless terrors."

The Novels of Henry James. ÉDITION DE LUXE. In 24 vols. 8vo, 8s. 6d. net each. Vol. XIII. THE REVERBERATOR; MADAME DE MAUVES; A PASSIONATE PILGRIM, and other Tales.

NEW 6/- NOVELS.
SECOND IMPRESSION.
Tono-Bungay. By H. G. WELLS.
SECOND IMPRESSION.
One Immortality. By H. FIELDING HALL.

MACMILLAN & CO., LTD., London.

MR. HEINEMANN'S NEW BOOKS.

WE TWO IN WEST AFRICA.

By DECIMA MOORE and Major F. GORDON GUGGISBERG, C.M.G. R.E.

With Map and many Illustrations from Photographs and Drawings, 1 vol. demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

* * A light-hearted volume of travel by Major Guggisberg and his wife. It concerns itself with their adventures and experiences while in West Africa, its salient features being observation, vivacity, and good humour. The authors describe bush journeys undertaken for the purpose of surveying, an arduous expedition through the Gold Coast Highlands, and their visits to Sekondi, Accra, and Takwa, the centre of the gold-mining industry.

CONQUERING THE ARCTIC ICE.

By EJNAR MIKKELSEN.

Profusely illustrated. Demy 8vo, 20s. net.

"Few books in the now imposing mass of Arctic literature contain more varied matters; none certainly are written with more modesty, or with a greater gift of relating adventure in simple yet graphic fashion."—Athenæum.

RECOLLECTIONS OF BARON DE FRÉNILLY, PEER OF FRANCE (1768-1828).

With a Portrait. Demy 8vo, 10s. net.

"It is the testimony of an eye-witness to great happenings—full of vivacity, brilliant characterization, extraordinarily alive."—Nation.

VOL. V., demy 8vo, 6s. net, of THE GREATNESS AND DECLINE OF ROME.

By GUGLIELMO FERRERO.

Vol. V. EAST AND WEST.
The Republic of Augustus.

"Everywhere he gives us the impression of mastery of his subject. The great merit of the book is that it is not only scholarly but also thoroughly readable." Notes and Queries.

NEW SIX-SHILLING NOVELS. FRATERNITY.

By JOHN GALSWORTHY, [2nd Imp.

Author of 'The Man of Property' and 'The Country House.' "There are many things in this book that are unforgettable; there are whole chapters that are masterpieces of delicate and restrained workmanship."—Standard.

RACHEL LORIAN.

By Mrs. HENRY DUDENEY, [2nd Imp.

Author of 'Folly Corner,' &c. "It is the real thing."—Daily Telegraph.

UNCLE GREGORY.

By GEORGE SANDEMAN,

"We congratulate him on his subject and style. His people are quite real, and he writes with ease." Fall Mall Gazette.

SYRINX.

By LAURENCE NORTH.

"It is seldom indeed that one meets a book at once so virile and so excellent in manner and matter."—Sketch.

MAURICE GUEST.

By H. H. RICHARDSON. [2nd Imp.

"One of the most remarkable novels ever written." Evening Standard.

THE CLIMBER.

By E. F. BENSON, Author of 'Sheaves,' &c.

"The heroine may be likened to the immortal figure of Becky Sharp. It must be acknowledged that Mr. Benson's study is eminently successful."—Spectator.

A PRINCE OF DREAMERS.

By FLORA ANNIE STEEL,
Author of 'On the Face of the Waters.'

"As a romance the book is a fine one; the intrigues are closely knotted; there is an abundance of vivid colour and picturesque background; and the narrative power grows effectively to the climax."—Saturday Review.

THE GUEST OF QUESNAY.

By BOOTH TARKINGTON,
Author of 'Monsieur Beaucaire.' [2nd Imp.

"The book breathes gaiety and good humour."—Observer.

WM. HEINEMANN, 21, Bedford Street, W.C.

J. M. DENT & CO.

BEETHOVEN'S LETTERS.

Critical Edition, with Explanatory Notes by Dr. ALF. CHR. KALISCHER.

Translated, with Preface, by
J. S. SHEDLOCK, B.A.

This Edition contains a Facsimile in Coloured Photogravure from the famous Miniature of Beethoven in his twenty-first year. Also Facsimiles of Music hitherto unpublished, &c. 2 vols. demy 8vo, 21s. net.

This will be the First Complete English Edition of Beethoven's Letters, and will contain over 1,100 Letters and Notes.

OLD WORLD TRAVEL.

A new and attractive Series of Travel Books. Illustrated in Colour. Square medium 8vo, 7s. 6d. net each.

Each volume will contain some 25 Coloured Illustrations and many Line Drawings in the text.

THE FIRST TWO VOLUMES.

ALONG THE RIVIERAS OF FRANCE AND ITALY.

Written and Illustrated in Colour and Line by GORDON HOME.

"We congratulate the author-artist and the publishers on a delightful book which is very moderate in price."—ATHENÆUM.

VENETIA AND NORTHERN ITALY.

By CECIL HEADLAM. Illustrated in Colour and Line by GORDON HOME.

"Mr. Home's illustrations serve to heighten the value of an entirely delightful book."—DAILY NEWS.

"Guides to the spirit of the place."

DAILY NEWS.

THE MEDIAEVAL TOWN SERIES.

A SERIES OF LITERARY GUIDE BOOKS.

With numerous Topographical Drawings, Reproductions from Paintings and Sculptures, Maps, and Plans. Fcap. 8vo (pocketable). In grey cloth and limp green paste-grain binding.

Price per vol., cloth, 4s. 6d. net; roan, 5s. 6d. net.

THE LATEST VOLUME JUST ISSUED IS:

P I S A.

By JANET ROSS and NELLY ERICHSEN.
Illustrated by NELLY ERICHSEN.

"This little book is charmingly written, and by that we do not mean with careless rapture, but with knowledge and imagination, held in leash by judgment and historical perspective."—STANDARD.

Other Volumes in the same series are:—

ASSISI. BRUGES. BRUSSELS.
CAIRO. CAMBRIDGE. CHARTRES.
CONSTANTINOPLE. DUBLIN. EDINBURGH.
FERRARA. FLORENCE. LONDON.
MILAN. MOSCOW. NUREMBURG. PARIS.
PERUGIA. PRAGUE. ROME.
ROUEN. SEVILLE. TOLEDO. SIENA.
VENICE. VERONA.

"They are guide books, books for study, and books for reference, and at the same time little galleries of art."—ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

"For visitors it would be hard to imagine a more desirable companion."—ATHENÆUM.

Prospectuses post free on application.

J. M. DENT & CO.
15, Aldine House, Bedford Street, W.C.

SATURDAY, MARCH 20, 1909.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE
ARNOLD-FORSTER ON MILITARY NEEDS	337
FITZMAURICE-KELLY ON SPANISH LITERATURE ..	338
A MARINER OF ENGLAND	339
VICTORIA HISTORY OF BUCKINGHAM	339
NEW NOVELS (The House called Hurrish; Daphne in Fitzroy Street; Transplanted Daughters; The Merry Heart; The Harp of Life; The Fault; A Friar Observant; Sparrows; An Actress's Husband)	340-341
THEOLOGICAL LITERATURE	341
OUR LIBRARY TABLE (Lorenzo the Magnificent; The Iliad of the East; The Philosophy of Gassendi; Myths of the Norsemen; The Message) ..	344-345
OXFORD NOTES; W. H. BLISS; PRE-TRACTARIAN OXFORD; VILLON AND JOB; APPROPRIATING TITLES; MR. MOSES TEGGART; GUY PATIN'S 'JUGEMENT' ON THE RELIGIO MEDICI	345-347
LIST OF NEW BOOKS	347
LITERARY GOSSIP	348
SCIENCE—THE MECHANICAL PRODUCTION OF COLD; SCIENTIFIC IDEAS OF TO-DAY; ANTHROPOLOGICAL NOTES; SOCIETIES; MEETINGS NEXT WEEK; GOSSIP	350-351
FINE ARTS—FONTS AND FONT COVERS; SPENCER STANHOPE'S WORK; THE WATER-COLOUR, PASTEL, AND DRAWING SALON; THE HORSE GUARDS PARADE; GOSSIP; EXHIBITIONS	352-354
MUSIC—SYMPHONY CONCERT; HERR MORIZ ROSENTHAL'S RECITAL; M. VINCENT D'INDY'S 'JOUR D'ÉTÉ A LA MONTAGNE'; GOSSIP; PERFORMANCES NEXT WEEK	354-355
DRAMA—HAMLET; THE HOUSE OF BONDAGE	355
INDEX TO ADVERTISERS	356

LITERATURE

Military Needs and Military Policy. By the Right Hon. H. O. Arnold-Forster. (Smith, Elder & Co.)

THE author of this book was not a man to wish that critical judgment of it should be modified by reason of his death. For many years he had overworked body and mind. He knew the danger he ran when he spoke on the Army Estimates this month, and he deliberately risked his life in the belief that what he said and wrote on military and naval questions was demanded by public duty: in our opinion, his work constituted the performance of a service rightly rendered.

It was in regard to the Navy rather than the Army that Arnold-Forster was successful. The impulse towards return to sound doctrine given by Admiral Philip Colomb had no more strenuous backer than the author of 'In a Conning Tower.' There were many who preceded Arnold-Forster in schemes of Army reform which he afterwards in some degree made his own. In naval matters his energy and enthusiasm triumphed; and although he came to rule the War Office, while he did not rise in naval administration above the Secretaryship of the Admiralty, it was on the west side of Charing Cross rather than in Pall Mall that his policy succeeded. The new War Office, on the east side of Parliament Street, has before it the effigy of a Commander-in-Chief: the old War Office had the civilian Sidney Herbert, who was killed by his work in a post that Panmure took less seriously. Arnold-Forster was grievously stricken just before he became Secretary of State for War, but he might have recovered from his first attack had he not worn himself out in worry caused, to such a man, by the defeat of schemes the adoption of which he thought necessary.

His last book is on the Army, but contains some references to naval matters, and many to the need for treating the two services in a common policy. An appendix on volunteer crews for local torpedo-boat stations is of high value, and its proposals are applicable to certain special cases (such as that of Jersey) which have not received sufficient consideration. A passage in which the writer contrasts "British Methods—Naval and Military," might be used as a text for statesmen. It will be quoted without doubt during the present week by defenders of the Admiralty against critics, who will have only the reply that the doctrine is inconsistent with that lately set up by the same Ministers in respect to Army matters. Another passage—on invasion—again places Arnold-Forster, where he stood three years ago, and four years ago, in agreement with all leading politicians of both parties in this doctrine: "Provided the Navy be maintained in a proper state of efficiency, the danger of invasion is not one which need be contemplated." The corollary is that if the Navy be not sufficient and efficient, "no military precautions will prevail to preserve the country."

It is in this connexion that we felt surprise at finding the name of Lord Roberts on the title-page. The appearance, in joint announcement of an Army book, of the names of Lord Roberts and of Arnold-Forster suggests that military affairs occasionally bring together experts whose differences have been notorious. It excites a wonder such as that aroused among historians by the Treaty of January, 1815, leading to arrangements by which the veterans of Bonaparte were to have been led to victory, against the Russo-Prussian allied forces, by the Duke of Wellington himself. Lord Roberts is now best known to the outsider as the advocate of a mild form of general compulsion to service in arms; whereas Arnold-Forster stands out as the Secretary of State for War who denounced any such proposal in the fiercest language, and brought down upon him the special thunder of Lord Roberts as being a deadlier enemy of the military state than even his bugbears Mr. Balfour and the late Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman.

Arnold-Forster explains the apparent contradiction, involved in the collocation of names representing such different principles, by adhering in the strongest fashion—as might be expected of him—to all his well-known views. The Territorial Army finds a modest place, as did the Volunteers, in Arnold-Forster's scheme; and he accepts the assistance of Lord Roberts only to the extent—a very slight one—to which it is in accordance with his principle. Circulars issued in the present spring from companies and detachments of infantry of the Territorial Army explain that "the fact that we are now called Territorials makes but little difference except in name. A Territorial is a man trained for defence of these islands under conditions no more onerous than those of the Volunteers."

This was Arnold-Forster's view, as well as that of those who, disregarding ministerial "assurances" in the House of Lords, are touting for subscriptions to company funds.

Our author explains that, when Lord Roberts asks for "a million men" trained to the use of the rifle, there are 900,000 inhabitants of the United Kingdom "receiving pay from the State in time [of peace, in consideration of instruction in arms under official regulation]; and "over three million persons within the military age who are receiving or have received military instruction at the expense of the State." Like all who have to do with organizing our fighting power, and less to do with finding how to pay for it by taxes, Arnold-Forster is prepared to take "every advantage.... of.... zeal and public spirit." He admits the popular position, like a distinguished peer who said, "Very likely invasion is as impossible as Mr. — says it is. But I'm going to say, all the time, it is possible, or else how am I to raise officers for —?" Lord Roberts, in explaining that on "the possible invasion of this country Mr. Arnold-Forster and I must agree to differ," adopts a somewhat similar position, asserting, no doubt rightly, that the first necessity (in which the writers agreed) is to overcome "indifference," on the part of "the general public, to the problems of national defence." To Arnold-Forster, however, the great soldiers are the enemy, inasmuch as, in their approval of expenditure on a Territorial Army and on the Special Reserve, they profess adherence only "because they believe that it can be made the stepping-stone to another and a very different policy, namely, Conscription.... under an alias."

With the great soldiers, members of the Army Council and others, Arnold-Forster couples a member of the Defence Committee of the Cabinet who, curiously enough, was the first to proclaim sanction from on high to the reformer's view as expressed in Arnold-Forster's scheme:—

"Given the problem, there is no military man in the world, outside our own War Office, who would propound a solution even remotely resembling that which Lord Esher and Mr. Haldane have induced or compelled the nation to adopt."

In another passage, dealing with the events of the last three months, Arnold-Forster again attacks Lord Esher:—

"Lord Esher, though he speaks with all the influence which membership of the Committee of Defence may give him, has no right whatever to threaten this country with conscription merely because his plans have failed. He speaks with no authority on this subject, and he is powerless to enforce his threat."

The conspirators, according to this theory, are backed by "a 'Press Bureau' in connexion with the War Office," who "draw their inspiration and their 'matter' from the War Office, or from some member of the Committee of Defence."

There is a tendency in the volume which we should not notice but for the fact that it may militate against the eventual success of those reforming views with regard to the Army to which Arnold-Forster gave the last years of his life. The main lines of reform, as well as the details which were his own, are, all through the book, "my plan." The first, perhaps, of those who, belonging by profession to the Army, were converted to the old sound views of earlier times by Admiral P. Colomb and his friends, was Charles Brackenbury; but, after him, General Sir George Chesney (among soldiers) and Mr. Spenser Wilkinson (among civilians), and others had laid down that outline of reform which, in spite of Arnold-Forster's failure, is certain one day to triumph. While in naval matters Arnold-Forster stood almost alone in giving definite shape, with energy and courage in expression, to the policy enunciated in the House of Commons by Sir John Colomb in his brother's name, in Army matters Arnold-Forster acted with many others who placed the military problem before statesmen and the country. He attached his signature to a letter of February, 1894, in which Sir George Chesney and Mr. Spenser Wilkinson had doubtless a considerable part; and this letter, addressed to the leaders of the various parties, in both Houses, seems to have converted Mr. Balfour to the principles he has expressed on several occasions in the last five years. In January, 1898, Arnold-Forster's signature appeared—with those, curiously enough, of Mr. George Wyndham, afterwards the representative of the War Office in the House of Commons, and Sir Alexander Acland-Hood, now chief Conservative whip—as recommending a double period of enlistment for the same battalions and the ending of the costly linked-battalion system. This document was probably in part his composition, but represented the opinion stated long previously by Sir John Colomb and others among those who signed the memorandum. Arnold-Forster supplied the unconquerable spirit needed for success; but death in his case has cut short a patriotic effort. The principles adopted by him and many others (how many? he inquires in this volume) will survive.

There was nothing more perplexing to our author than the assumption, by the Esher Committee and the Defence Committee of the Cabinet in the winter in which he became Secretary of State for War, that these principles were sound and certain of adoption, viewed in contrast with the subsequent defection of his military and his political colleagues. But it would weaken his cause to admit that his were "personal opinions which are not popular, and are not at present shared by many," although it is the case that there has been a "rapid growth of an opinion favourable to a" very different plan, unduly costly and wholly unsuited to our needs. Considerations of economy will be sufficient to overcome a temporary change of military fashion. In a passage added at the last moment Arnold-Forster points out that "the military correspondent to The Times, who has been such a powerful defender of the new system, has now reconsidered his position." It is in our opinion certain that other men of weight will do the same.

Chapters on Spanish Literature. By James Fitzmaurice-Kelly. (Constable & Co.)

WE have no hesitation in saying that this volume forms the most valuable English contribution to Spanish letters since the same author gave us his 'History of Spanish Literature.' Though much of it necessarily goes over the same ground, it is an absolutely fresh work, and cannot be neglected by any one interested in Spain. We are not acquainted with any other papers dealing with Spanish literature from which we derive the same enjoyment as we do from these: they combine the scholarship of Ferdinand Wolf with the literary charm of the Comte de Puymaigre; they are equal to, if indeed they do not surpass, the essays of M. Morel-Fatio at his best, as in the first series of the 'Études sur l'Espagne.'

Mr. Fitzmaurice-Kelly is so steeped in his subject, lives with it so constantly, that he seems incapable of repeating himself. We may take it that the present volume represents his mature judgment, and we are glad to note that some of his more extreme views have become modified with time. Thus when our author, some years ago, appeared at Oxford as a special pleader for Lope de Vega, some scholars felt, as they had on reading his 'History,' that he unduly, however brilliantly, exalted Lope at the expense of his great dramatic rival, Calderon. Every one nowadays admits that Lope is the greater playwright; but, unless we are mistaken, Mr. Fitzmaurice-Kelly has never before stated Calderon's claims as a poet with such enthusiasm. The most ardent admirer of that master will be satisfied with this passage on the autos:—

"Calderón dealt with his abstruse theme more than seventy times—not always with equal success, but never quite unsuccessfully, and never repeating himself unduly. This is surely one of the most dexterous exploits in literature, and Calderón appears to have done it with consummate ease. His reflective genius, steeped in dogma, was far more interested in the mysteries of faith than in the passions of humanity, far more interested in devout symbolism than in realistic characterisation. His figures are pale abstractions? Yes: but he compels us to accept them by virtue of his sublime allegory, his majestic vision of the world invisible, and the adorable loveliness of his lyricism."

And what can be more eloquent than the final verdict?

"To most of us, as to Lowell, the Spain of romance is the Spain revealed to us by Calderón. Though not the greatest of Spanish authors, nor even the greatest of Spanish dramatists, he is perhaps the happiest in temperament, the most brilliant in colouring. He gives us a magnificent pageant in which the pride of patriotism and the charm of gallantry are blended with the dignity of art and 'the fair humanities of old religion.' And unquestionably he has imposed his enchanting vision upon the world."

The chapter on 'The Cid' is perfect in its balanced treatment of the hero in history and in legend: one feels that it supplies just what Mr. Gibson would have given us, if he had been spared for the task. The immortal Archpriest has never been presented with more insight: the influences that went to form his literary stock are set out in detail, while the national characteristics that made of him a great poet are brought out with especial skill and sympathy. We may note, by the way, that the fable concerning the mountain in labour, though missing from the collection of Marie de France, will be found in the 'Yzopet' edited by Foerster, if, indeed, it is necessary in this case to go back to a French source at all. Moreover, we do not agree with Mr. Fitzmaurice-Kelly in his depreciation of Pamphilus 'de Amore.' But nowhere is his critical faculty more happily displayed than when he is dealing with the literary Court of Juan II. We have here all the literary graces of Puymaigre's book allied to far sounder judgment. Enrique de Villena is put in his proper place, somewhat lower than that assigned him by tradition; while the sterling merits of the 'Loores' of Pérez de Guzmán have never been so skilfully set forth as in the memorable passage on pp. 65-6. It may be objected to the chapter on the Romancero that the author was perhaps not well advised in basing his study on Lockhart's famous, and deservedly famous, versions; his obvious motive for doing so, the popularity of the book, was hardly adequate. In scarcely any branch of Spanish literature has our knowledge made such strides of recent years as in the case of these romances. That Mr. Fitzmaurice-Kelly has kept fully abreast of scholarship in the case of the ballads (as with all else) will be clear from a comparison of the original edition of his 'History' with the French version, and of the latter with the present volume. He sees the errors as to chronology and the like into which Lockhart fell—as he was bound to fall; and in putting these errors straight, he incidentally shows us the right path. But we hope that in a later edition he will, in dealing with this fascinating theme, give free rein to his sound scholarship and fine literary sense, and thus save himself and his readers much criticism of a destructive and negative character. There is not a flaw in the literary presentment of the three giants, Cervantes, Lope de Vega, and Calderon. All the sources have been mastered, and the dry bones unearthed by Pérez Pastor and the rest are here endowed with life. Mr. Fitzmaurice-Kelly's powers of artistic selection are extraordinary. No one will deny the permanent value of Prof. Rennert's laborious biography of Lope; yet that monumental book does not contain a single essential detail that will be missed from the short twenty pages in which our author deals not only with that extraordinary man's life, but with his work as well. While Prof. Rennert and those who had laboured before him (among whom our author himself occupies an honourable place) performed the indispensable "spadework," we get here, in these twenty pages, the complete artistic picture.

There is much in the chapter on the dramatic school of Calderon (as well as in most of the others in the book) that would have astonished Ticknor. Every lover of Spanish literature is indebted to that indefatigable student for his important work; but it would be strange indeed if the generations of scholars that have succeeded him had not reached a higher level, both in details and in a broader literary outlook. We lay special stress on this point because it is apt to be forgotten, and because no book known to us contains more striking proof thereof than the present volume. The lightness with which Mr. Fitzmaurice-Kelly carries his learning is notable (to give only one instance) in his treatment of Moreto, whether he is dealing, in happy vein, with his life or with the comedy 'El desdén con el desdén' (p. 224 sqq.). This play may also serve as an example of our author's mastery over questions concerning the sources and influence of the Spanish drama—a point in which his knowledge of general European literature, especially French, Italian, and English, stands him in good stead.

We will close our review of a work which is in every way a credit to English letters with a short reference to the chapter on modern Spanish novelists. Here, among the older men, particularly brilliant appreciations are devoted to Pereda and Valera; while living writers are treated with a brief but unerring touch. We wonder how many Hispanists of the day would be equally successful in dealing with the Archpriest of Hita and with Blasco Ibáñez.

A Mariner of England. Edited by Col. Spencer Childers. (John Murray.)

THE introduction of William Richardson by this simple title is adequate and happy. The term "mariner" implied at one time a greater degree of skill than that of the sailor, and Richardson, in this sense, was emphatically a mariner; his journals, here edited by Col. Spencer Childers, reveal him as a consummate seaman, and as a brave, modest, and upright man. It is pleasant to reflect that, though emphatically a man of more than average merit, he yet may be regarded as typical of thousands of his countrymen whose very names have perished. But the book is more than an interesting character-study: it is a piece of historical evidence to which a certain importance may fairly be ascribed.

Richardson first went to sea as a boy in a coasting trader in 1780, and continued serving in merchant ships until the outbreak of the French Revolutionary war. He had experience of European waters from the White Sea to the Mediterranean, of the slave trade on the Guinea coast, of America, and of the East Indies, where he was in 1793, when the King's need of men brought him suddenly into the Navy. He had reason to cry out upon his evil fate, for he found himself once more at the foot of the ladder. In the merchant service he had long had a mate's berth, but in the Navy, as was most usual in such cases, he was rated as an able seaman. However, although disposed at first to lament his altered fortunes, he determined to make the best of a bad job, and, having proved himself worthy of advancement, was promoted rapidly till he reached warrant rank as a gunner. In that rank he saw a good deal of interesting service—in a prison ship in the West Indies before the Peace of Amiens, and afterwards in the line-of-battle ship Cæsar. With such a captain as Sir Richard Strachan, known to the seamen as "Mad Dick," the Cæsar's service could not be humdrum, and during this commission she had a distinguished share in the blockade of Brest, and in the capture of Dumanoir's squadron which had escaped from Trafalgar. With another, but less enterprising captain, Richardson was present in the same ship at the affair of Basque Roads, and afterwards in the Walcheren expedition. Of all these events he gives a clear account, the substantial accuracy of which is attested by the standard narratives. His value as a witness is thus established, and we can therefore readily accept his evidence as to the state of the Navy at the time and concerning incidents not recorded elsewhere.

It would perhaps be too high praise to say that this book deserves to be compared with the 'Recollections of James Anthony Gardner,' which were recently issued by the Navy Records Society; but the comparison none the less suggests itself. Richardson was contemporary with Gardner, and the narratives of both men are valuable rather for the insight they afford into the interior economy of the Navy of their time than for any great addition to our knowledge of events; the warrant no less than the commissioned officer accepted the evil conditions which prevailed as a part of the established order, and each would seem to have been comparatively a clean liver in a hard-swearing, deep-drinking age. Richardson had not the education and literary taste which surprise us agreeably in Gardner's writing, nor had he the Irishman's native wit; but he had as retentive a memory, a longer experience, and an equal degree of shrewdness. The point of view also is naturally somewhat different, but the picture drawn is manifestly the same. One incident, otherwise forgotten, though it seems to have been notorious enough at the time, is commemorated by both writers—the tricing-up of a refractory midshipman to the mast-head by the first lieutenant of a ship of the line lying at Spithead. It would be easy to notice many curious details of information which Richardson's journal supplies, such as his remark that in 1785 the skipper of the North Sea trader in which he was then serving came aboard with his hair tied in a pigtail, this being the first time that he had seen that fashion. Such matters are worth putting on record, and it is only from private recollections of this description that they are to be had.

The editor has rightly allowed Richardson to tell his own tale in his own words; there are a few petty slips, possibly due to Richardson's lack of education, or to bad handwriting; but the narrative is in no way doctored. In order to bring the volume within reasonable limits, some parts have been bodily omitted, as of minor interest, and, though in this case we may regret it, we recognize the fact that such moderation is as a rule to be commended.

Victoria History of the County of Buckingham. Edited by William Page. Vol. II. (Constable & Co.)

A VARIETY of writers have contributed to the second volume of this history of Buckinghamshire; and the whole work cannot fail to be appreciated as an excellent example of a thorough and comprehensive county history. No small part of these 400 folio pages is due to two ladies, both of whom are of the Oxford Honour Schools. Miss S. S. Smith writes on Romano-British Buckinghamshire, and Miss C. Jamison contributes articles on 'Social and Economic History' and on 'Industries,' and is also responsible for the general descriptions and manorial descents of the various parishes of the three Hundreds of Aylesbury. Mr. Leach has much to say of the schools of the county, some fifty pages being devoted to a good sketch of Eton, whilst interesting short accounts are given of the old schools of Buckingham, High Wycombe, Stony Stratford, Amersham, Marlow, Aylesbury, and Wycombe Abbey, as well as of the modern county schools of High Wycombe and Wolverton. Mr. George Clinch enters into details as to 'Ancient Earthworks,' whilst Dr. Cox deals with his favourite subject of 'Forestry,' both ancient and modern. We note no reference, under 'Forestry' or elsewhere in the volume, to that tree-pest the felted beech coccus (Cryptococcus fagi), which is causing much destruction of beeches in East Berkshire; this leads us to hope that it has not crossed the Thames, to any material extent, to play havoc with the beech trees of the High Wycombe district. 'Sport Ancient and Modern,' is the work of many hands, under the general editorship of Mr. E. D. Cuming. The royal buckhounds were given up in 1901, and it was hoped by many that the hunting of carted stags would be then abandoned; but two packs devoted to this form of amusement are still flourishing.

The section dealing with 'Industries' is at once attractive and informing. Buckinghamshire has never been a manufacturing county, and it is probable that up to the sixteenth century there were no industries beyond those carried out on a small scale for the actual wants of the local agricultural population. During, however, the last three centuries there have been introduced a variety of small trades which have created employment, chiefly for women and children, in particular localities. Among the cottage industries the most prominent are straw-plaiting, chair-seating, and lace-making. Straw-plaiting spread all over the county towards the end of the eighteenth century, when the French war stopped the importation of foreign plait. The demand was so great in 1813 that no women or girls could be found for fieldwork. At the present time there are only about 500 straw-plaiters in the county, and the number declines year by year; the workers prefer factory or domestic service. Lace-making at home flourished in this county at least as early as the beginning of the seventeenth century; it was termed "bone-lace," which was the old name for pillow-lace. The bobbins were originally made of bone. Aylesbury was specially noted for the fine quality of its lace, and in days when that borough enjoyed Parliamentary representation, this trade played no small part in electoral contests. No candidate had any chance of success unless he pledged himself to uphold the bone-lace industry and was ready to denounce the machine-made lace of Nottingham. The latter, however, gradually gained the upper hand, and the trade proper died out in 1884. Of late years efforts have been made in Buckinghamshire to revive the old hand lace-making. No one will dispute that Miss Jamison is correct in saying that the wages of the lace-makers of to-day in Buckinghamshire "are not very high," for the payment for this skilled and unhealthy work varies from 1¼d. to 1½d. an hour! Nor is the present rate of pay for chair-seating, as carried on by women and girls at their own homes, any higher; most of this seating is now done with split canes instead of rushes.

The fine stretch of beech woods on the Chiltern Hills gave rise some centuries ago to special industries, which are still thriving in certain directions at the present day. Chesham was long noted for its wooden ware, such as trenchers, platters, and bowls; a variety of wooden dairy utensils are still the speciality of certain manufacturers in that town and district. During comparatively recent times chair-making has outstripped every other form of beech-wood industry; it is still steadily increasing; every village round Wycombe has its manufactory, which employs the young and old of both sexes. Paper-making is another important, old-established, and still flourishing industry of Buckinghamshire. The water-power obtained from the tributaries of the Thames, the convenience of water-carriage, and the nearness to London all combine to make the Thames Valley a favourite place for paper-makers. One John Spilman, jeweller to Queen Elizabeth, obtained a Crown licence conferring on himself and his deputies the privilege of erecting paper-mills in the county, and collecting linen rags; but by 1636 there were twelve Buckinghamshire paper-mills, owned by as many proprietors.

The last 150 pages of this volume mark the beginning of the topography of the county, wherein each parish receives special and extended treatment. The general description and laborious work of tracing the whole of the manorial descents, is due to Miss Jamison. The architectural descriptions have been compiled under the supervision of Mr. C. R. Peers, and the information as to charities supplied by Mr. J. W. Owsley, late Official Trustee of Charitable Funds.

As we have before remarked, the success of this great scheme for supplying England with a complete set of trustworthy county histories depends far more on the accuracy and fullness of the parochial accounts than on special essays. It may again be stated that this portion of the work is marked by extraordinary care and thoroughness, and those who know the Hundreds of Aylesbury well will have much difficulty in finding any flaws or omissions. Take, for instance, the first parish here treated, that of Bledlow. Half a page is devoted to a general description of its appearance, position, size, and soil, together with the various hamlets, and the occupations of the inhabitants. The detailed descents of the several manors and chief estates are followed up with exactness, the notes giving references to no fewer than 103 record authorities. Drawings of the heraldic bearings of the four principal families are supplied. A ground-plan and two good plates of the parish church also appear, together with five columns descriptive of its architecture and details. The story of the advowson is set forth, whilst Mr. Owsley supplies a trustworthy account of the various parochial charities.

NEW NOVELS.

The House called Hurrish. By Rita. (Hutchinson & Co.)

IN her new story Rita again takes her readers to Ireland, and keeps them there. The greatest part of the action, at any rate, passes in the country house of the title, near a dilapidated village on the West Coast of Ireland. The people who find themselves grouped there are not, however, all Irish. The impoverished young owner of the place has let it for a year to a friend, an Englishman, with the idea of departing himself to the South African War. The war gives the author an opportunity of reviving some of the old strictures on its conduct and management. A great part of the interest—the painful part—centres on Lady Moonrake, the wife of the English tenant. Before we see her we feel her mystery. Those who mention her do so vaguely. Before long, however, Lady Moonrake turns out to be one of those terrible products of latter-day existence, a morphomaniac of the worst type. When the story begins she has been for five years a willing victim to the drug. The husband is likewise a victim, but only to his hopeless resolve to conquer the evil. Skill is shown in the first appearance of the mysterious woman who sometimes looks half-dead and wholly uncanny. Her appearance and personality undergo almost incredible changes under the influence, or in the absence, of the drug. She and a grim and horrible maid have to resort to every sort of subterfuge to procure it in the out-of-the-way place where her husband has hoped to effect a cure. As the slave of perverted tastes and her own sensations, she is drawn with a disagreeable intensity, and yet—this adds to the force of the picture—one wonders what sort of identity she started with before the life of pleasure and poison changed her. Happily, the rest of the story is not so depressing. Most of the people are lightly and brightly sketched, but have not much to distinguish them. Two love-affairs run abreast, and we expect at least two weddings. The writing as well as the machinery of the plot is a little wild at times.

Daphne in Fitzroy Street. By E. Nesbit. (George Allen & Sons.)

THIS pleasant little story, which begins in a convent school and ends at the altar, tells how a charming young girl, with her little sister, runs away from an insufferable household of middle-aged relatives, and finds a home on the fringes of Bohemia. It is not the Bohemia of Murger, but a far more attractive and better-mannered community. Naturally, she finds many admirers, and eventually espouses the least agreeable of them all; while her disappointed suitors pair off with some of her fascinating girl-friends. On the whole, it is a readable and pretty book, especially for young people, although E. Nesbit seems hardly in her element when writing for adults.

Transplanted Daughters. By Mrs. Burton Harrison. (Fisher Unwin.)

MRS. HARRISON writes pleasantly of the Crimean peninsula, with its semi-Asiatic cities and bizarre medley of inhabitants, and we could wish that she had devoted more space to this comparatively novel theme, and less to the seamy side of European-American marriages in high life. We would fain hope that two such matrimonial failures as are here recorded are an unusually high average for one family. As in the ancient folk-tales, however, the true heroine is a third daughter surpassing both her sisters in wisdom, inasmuch as her choice falls on a deserving compatriot of her own, and not, as in their cases respectively, on a sprig either of the Scotch or French nobility. The characterization has humour, and the style is sympathetic; but the story is loosely constructed, and gives an impression of haste.

The Merry Heart. By Frank A. Swinerton. (Chatto & Windus.)

THIS "gentle melodrama," as it is styled in the sub-title, is set against a background drawn, with a freshness and accuracy altogether unusual, from lower middle-class English life. The combination is not one to be unreservedly condemned. Circumstances seemingly the most commonplace offer no guarantee against the invasion of tragedy; and at least one instance here introduced—the terrible story of the waitress at the "Tarratonga Tea Depot"—seems to us well within the bounds of possibility. But we draw the line at the disguised nobleman condemned by a cruel father to see his children growing up in the traditions of a social order essentially different from his own. The aristocracy, in truth, have nothing to do in this amusing, yet wholly sympathetic study of the City office and the suburban villa.

The Harp of Life. By Alan St. Aubyn. (White & Co.)

WHY is it that persons who set out to write of Oxford and Cambridge almost invariably succeed in presenting us with a mere travesty of University life? Possibly because neither undergraduates nor Dons make good heroes in fiction. Alan St. Aubyn does not give us a satisfactory presentment of things. Her university stories, as detailed pictures of a life with which we are familiar, are liable to end in caricature. 'The Harp of Life' is more than usually guilty in this respect. There is a strange plot, in which the "Romish" Church plays a somewhat sinister part. There are also odd descriptions of Newnham and uncalled-for criticisms of Dons' wives and undergraduates; and there are various other touches which combine to give a tiresome impression of University life.

The Fault. By C. T. Podmore. (John Long.)

MR. PODMORE'S book is tragedy unrelieved, but wrought out minutely and with convincing power. The two friends, Waterlow and Cridland—the former a schoolmaster, able and ambitious, with a natural morbidness of character aggravated to the verge of despair by the shadow of illegitimacy; the latter a kindly compound of romanticism and indolence, squandering his talents as "juvenile lead" in a travelling theatre—are skilfully drawn and subtly contrasted. A remarkable facial resemblance between Cridland and himself opens the eyes of the schoolmaster to their real relationship; and wild jealousy of the brother thus discovered, enhanced by a fancied rivalry in love, moves an ill-ordered mind, by sure and relentless degrees, to the pitch of murder, with the fantastic hope of starting life afresh in the dead man's shoes. Notable is the study of Hester Lane, the village beauty and unwitting incentive to crime—regarded, and regarding herself, as above her station, and rendered thereby the more vulnerable to temptations of class and sex. In so sombre a setting, humour, unless it is excellently done, does not ring true, and hence it is that the author's least successful creations are the Dorrabys—uninspiring echoes of Mr. and Mrs. Vincent Crummies—whose theatre serves as a somewhat conventionally sketched background to the earlier scenes of the story.

A Friar Observant. By Frances M. Brookfield. (Pitman & Sons.)

THE attraction of 'A Friar Observant' consists in an elusive personal quality far more than any merits of plot, psychology, or style. In the last respects, indeed, the novel is weak: the narrative is not well held together, and much of it is unconvincing; the characters are drawn with little sense of subtle discrimination; and the language, with its occasional spasmodic suggestions of archaism, is unskilfully handled. The story is supposed to be narrated by a friar of the Reformation period, and Luther figures in the book, being depicted in anything but flattering colours: no doubt he had his offensive side, but it is hardly handsome to dwell exclusively upon it, and we cannot think that Mrs. Brookfield has treated him fairly. From its historical side, indeed, the book is throughout somewhat open to criticism; but with all its faults there is a certain amiability in it which will redeem it in the eyes of many readers, and a good deal of enjoyment has evidently gone to the making of it.

Sparrows. By Horace W. C. Newte. (Alston Rivers.)

A FEW decades ago romances of unprotected girlhood centred largely round the forlorn figure of the private governess. To-day her place is taken by the girl behind the counter, on the stage, or in the office. In 'Sparrows,' which is up-to-date in this respect, the author's aim seems to have been to give an exact and unrelieved picture of the temptations and trials of friendless youth. Photographic preciseness in delineation—which makes the assertion that several of the characters have their prototypes in real life almost unnecessary—renders the story undesirable for general home reading. The self-sacrificing sufferer of many wrongs seems somewhat lacking in common sense, but the crowded ranks of the "sparrows" are recruited often from those, trained and educated for a sheltered existence, whose practical wisdom is painfully wanting. As a signpost to contemporary social evils, intended to open the eyes of the comfortable to the realities of a cruel world outside—to preach as well as to amuse—this novel may be useful.

An Actress's Husband. By Gertrude Warden. (C. H. White.)

THE stage is but a minor accessory in the setting of Miss Warden's story, which has for heroine Michal Garth, an obscure actress of striking beauty, and granddaughter to a wealthy Hebrew moneylender. Thanks to the old gentleman's social ambitions and occult influences, she realizes her heart's desire by becoming the wife of the man she loves, the dissolute and fascinating Bertie Hastings, who on his side had looked for a more convenient end to the flirtation. The meanness, duplicity, and imperturbable good-humour of the husband, culminating in his elopement with a Society siren with eyes of a "star-like brilliancy," are well drawn, and show considerable insight into the more frivolous springs of human nature; but the troubles of Michal herself, whose personality is elaborated to the verge of tediousness, leave us unmoved. With the exception of a vulgar, kindhearted aunt and the old moneylender—portraits conventional in surroundings, but possessing distinctive features—the lesser characters (chief among whom is Edgar Mannering, a high-souled, but nebulous American playwright, and the deceived wife's ultimate consoler) are scarcely noteworthy. Incidentally the hollowness of "Society" meets with its wonted castigation, and the drawbacks attendant upon a too facile style are aggravated by printer's errors.

THEOLOGICAL LITERATURE.

Dictionary of the Bible. Edited by James Hastings, John A. Selbie, John C. Lambert, and Shailer Mathews. (Edinburgh, T. & T. Clark.)—The short but well-planned Preface by Dr. Hastings begins by stating that it has been his aim "to provide a complete and independent Dictionary of the Bible in a single volume and abreast of present-day scholarship." The four paragraphs which follow are a kind of commentary on this pronouncement; and we will, by way of indicating the nature and scope of the work, refer to some of the more salient points brought out by the editor.

In order to assure completeness, the Index of Dr. Hastings's larger 'Bible Dictionary' was used as basis, and such additions were made to it "as the latest research has suggested." The scheme thus includes Biblical theology and ethics, the antiquities, and the languages—"English as well as Hebrew and Greek." Stress is then laid on the fact that the present work is not a condensation of the five-volume Dictionary or any similar publication; though it is admitted that in the case of certain minor articles, such as those dealing with many proper names, the wording of the large Dictionary has been retained. The single-volume Dictionary is, we are further told, intended for those "who have not the means to buy or the knowledge to use the Dictionary in five volumes." The comment on the phrase "abreast of present-day scholarship" contains an interesting ambiguity. Dr. Hastings first says that he means by it "the average scholarship of its day," but his subsequent remarks make one think of scholars holding a moderate critical position. The two characterizations are clearly not identical. A special interest attaches, however, to the statement that it would have been impossible to have "the whole of the work done satisfactorily by either very advanced or very conservative scholars," simply because "they are not numerous enough."

Our examination of the volume has not disappointed the expectations raised by the foregoing remarks in the Preface. The work is well suited to serve the purpose for which it is intended, though it will naturally be in greater favour with those who wish to assimilate the results of modern criticism in a sufficiently full measure than with the more conservative sections of readers. The standpoint is as a rule as advanced as can well be expected, especially on matters connected with the Old Testament. The Pentateuch and the Book of Joshua are treated jointly, in true modern fashion, under the heading 'Hexateuch,' by the Rev. E. A. Edghill. In discussing the question of Davidic Psalms, Prof. Buchanan Gray is not even prepared to affirm that Psalm xviii., "which is most generally claimed for David," was composed by that monarch. The Book of Isaiah is by the same competent scholar duly divided into the various constituent parts acknowledged by advanced critics. The Rev. J. Taylor, who contributes a remarkably concise, but sufficiently comprehensive article on the Book of Daniel, says: "There can be little doubt that Dn. appeared about B.C. 166." These indications seem sufficient to show the general critical position taken by the Dictionary on this part of the subject.

A clear and useful paper on the 'Canon of the Old Testament' is contributed by Prof. D. M. Kay. Of the article on the 'Text, Versions, and Languages of the Old Testament' it is sufficient to say that it is from the pen of Prof. Buchanan Gray. Prof. A. R. S. Kennedy writes with authority on 'Tabernacle' and 'Temple.' Among the contributions bearing on the Old Testament may also be counted those on 'Assyria and Babylonia,' 'Egypt,' and 'Arabia,' respectively written by the Rev. C. H. W. Johns, Mr. F. Ll. Griffith, and Prof. Nöldeke. In taking leave of this part of the subject we must mention that Prof. G. A. Barton's contribution on 'Israel,' though in many ways useful and praiseworthy, offers an example of the drawbacks which, through lack of space, must attend parts of a concise Bible Dictionary. In the section dealing with the pre-Jahvistie religion of Israel, Prof. Barton could apparently find no room for conclusions differing from his own. It can hardly be maintained that there is a sufficient consensus of opinion in favour of placing totemism in the forefront of the early religion of the Hebrews, nor should the claims of ancestor-worship have been eliminated. The stress laid on the processes of reproduction in connexion with the ancient worship might, on the other hand, be considered an exaggeration. An even stronger case of dogmatic assertion is Dr. Oesterley's statement on p. 582 that the cuttings for the dead spoken of in Deut. xiv. 1 were done "in order the more easily to be seen by the spirit."

Passing over the subject of the Apocrypha, which is briefly dealt with under one heading, we reach the writings of the New Testament. A general article on the canonical Gospels is contributed by Bishop Maclean, who also writes the separate articles on the three synoptic Gospels. A sketch of the apocryphal Gospels is given by Prof. Shailer Mathews. In summing up the argument regarding the Gospel of St. John, Prof. W. T. Davison says that "the balance of probability is decidedly in favour of Johannine authorship, though some difficulties involved in that hypothesis have not been denied, and the possibility of co-operation on the part of John's disciples in Ephesus has not been excluded."

In the course of an article on 'Paul the Apostle,' Bishop Maclean arrives at the conclusion that the thirteen Epistles ascribed to St. Paul are genuine. The same conservative note is struck in the separate articles on the Epistles by Bishop Maclean and other writers; but undue dogmatism is avoided, the arguments being fairly set out. The contribution on the 'Acts of the Apostles' is also by Bishop Maclean.

The article 'Jesus Christ,' extending from p. 441 to p. 465, by Prof. W. P. Paterson, will be found helpful. The method is critical, and the tone undogmatic. Prof. Paterson tries to bring us to the heart of things, and he deserves our gratitude. There are also articles on 'Person of Christ,' 'Incarnation,' 'Resurrection,' and 'Atonement.' Prof. A. R. S. Kennedy writes on the 'Canon of the New Testament,' and Dr. F. G. Kenyon has a long article on the 'Text of the New Testament,' which includes an account of the versions. The last-named scholar also writes separately on the 'English Versions' of the Bible. The subjects 'Eucharist' and 'Faith' receive fairly full attention, and there is also an article headed 'Christianity.'

The article 'God,' by Bishop Maclean, will be found instructive; but one is inclined to think that the results of investigation regarding the pre-Mosaic conception of God need not be "almost entirely negative." Thus it seems fair to make use of the aid afforded by the conceptions of the Babylonians and other Semitic nations in olden times, particularly as the prohibitions of idolatrous forms of worship to be found in the Old Testament often point directly to the kinds of cults that were prevalent among other Semites, the legitimate inference often being that these cults were partly popular survivals among the Hebrews themselves. Among other subjects more or less affecting the Bible in its entirety may be mentioned 'Revelation,' 'Miracles,' 'Messiah,' and 'Inspiration.'

Prefixed to the Dictionary is a paper by Principal Alexander Stewart on the 'Pronunciation of Proper Names' found in the Bible. The writer contrasts the systems recommended by different authorities, particularly Profs. T. K. Cheyne and W. B. Stevenson.

The Dictionary is, apart from the diagrams accompanying the article 'Temple,' not illustrated, nor is any literature named at the end of the contributions; but there are four good maps.

Spirit in the New Testament. By Edward W. Winstanley. (Cambridge, University Press.)—On the last page of this book it is said "that we need in the present time as Churches and as individual disciples, with all our restless competition and our ceaseless controversies, more inwardness, more divine-human communion or interaction, more life ἐν τῷ πνεύματι."

These words reveal the purpose of the writer, and by those who share his religious sympathies the book will be prized. Apart altogether from its religious value, the work will interest the student of history and the New Testament scholar. The Acts of the Apostles, for example, which is the first Church history writing, might be termed, according to Mr. Winstanley, "The Acts of the Holy Spirit in and through Peter, Paul, and other leaders." Then, again, if we pass down the ages to the twelfth and thirteenth centuries, we come to Joachim of Floris and John of Parma and Brother Gerard, with their theory of the third age of the world's history under the guidance of the Holy Spirit. For the student of the New Testament the interest of the book lies in such a fact as this, that "the first and most marked feature," to use the words of another writer, "in the Pauline Epistles is the place assigned to πνεῦμα—the presence and action of the πνεῦμα in the Christian life." Much has been written on πνεῦμα, especially in its connexion with Paulinism, by such writers as Holsten, Richard Schmidt, and Lüdemann; but for the instances of the use of the word students have had to turn to Bruder's 'Concordance,' and for their significance to Grimm's or Cremer's 'Lexicon.' There is need for Mr. Winstanley's book, which has been constructed with scholarly exactness, and which deals directly with its professed subject without entering into discussions of the theories in other works.

The Targum to 'The Song of Songs'; The Book of the Apple; The Ten Jewish Martyrs; A Dialogue on Games of Chance. Translated by Hermann Gollancz. (Luzac & Co.)—Prof. Gollancz has rendered a useful service to Hebrew students and others by publishing the translations contained in the present volume. The pieces selected are calculated to give the reader an insight into certain modes of thought and forms of expression characteristic of sections of Jewish scholars in the Middle Ages and later, and 'The Book of the Apple' is interesting besides as a pseudo-Aristotelian work, tinged with Jewish ideas, and so far not known in any earlier form than that represented by the Hebrew text.

'The Targum to "The Song of Songs,"' with which the volume opens, is an Aramaic legendary and homiletical exposition of the Biblical text in the style of the Midrash. The term "Targum," meaning translation, or, at the most, paraphrase, is therefore in reality a misnomer. All that can be said with certainty regarding the date of composition is that it belongs to a period anterior to the eleventh century. The 'Sepher hat-Tapuah,' or 'Book of the Apple,' was translated in the thirteenth century into Hebrew from an Arabic form of the work, but neither the supposed original Greek text nor the Arabic version has come down to us. The first mention of it so far has been found in an Arabic philosophical encyclopædia of the tenth century. Aristotle is represented as conversing with his disciples on his death-bed, much in the style of Plato's 'Phædo,' on the immortality of the soul, and other philosophical problems. He holds in his hand an apple, in order to refresh by its scent his failing vital power. 'These Things I Remember' is a liturgical piece in Hebrew, describing the death of ten Jewish martyrs, some of whom belonged to the latter days of the Second Temple, whilst others of the number lived in later periods. The different episodes are, however, united in the poem to form a single continuous elegy. A metrical rendering, by Prof. Israel Gollancz, of another version of the story is added. The volume ends with 'A Dialogue on Games of Chance,' translated from a Hebrew composition of Leo de Modena (1571-1648), a highly gifted, but wayward writer, who has been well described as "halting all his life between superstition and unbelief, between vice and the struggle against it, between philosophy and rationalism." The little work, of which there also exist translations in other modern languages, is written in a spirited style, and is filled with allusions to Biblical and later Hebrew literature. The habitual devotee of games of chance acknowledges at the end that his defence of the practice was only intended as a jeu d'esprit, and he then proceeds to utter a much more effective indictment against it than had been brought forward by his zealous and virtuous friend.

The volume is not without its blemishes. One cannot help thinking that the author has not in all respects given us here of his best. The literary information contained in the Introduction is often meagre, and what it does offer might have been improved by more careful revision. In speaking of the high estimation in which Aristotle was held by the Jews, Prof. Gollancz says that "even the great Maimonides speaks of him in flattering terms." But such a statement seems far from doing justice to the fact that the philosophy of Maimonides was in the main nothing but that of Aristotle as presented in the most authoritative Arabic works to which he had access. Mistakes like "Ari Noham" (p. 7, for Nohēm) and "Midrash Conan" (p. 10, for Conēn) may also be attributed to haste.

The Decline and Fall of the Kingdom of Judah. By the Rev. T. K. Cheyne. (A. & C. Black.)—Prof. Cheyne has in the present work endeavoured to apply his well-known Yerahmeel theory to the later stages in the history of Judah, beginning with the finding of the law-book (commonly identified with Deuteronomy) in the Temple under Josiah, and ending with the destruction of Jerusalem. The learned author himself is anxious to substitute the title "North Arabian" for the term "Yerahmeel" in connexion with the theory associated with his name. It is indeed true that the former designation would, as the wider, be more appropriate; but we believe that the title Yerahmeel will nevertheless in a special manner remain attached to the theory on account of the great prominence which Prof. Cheyne himself has given to the name in his emendations of the Biblical text.

In an Introduction covering no fewer than forty-eight pages the criticisms to which the hypothesis has been subjected are dealt with; and it must be owned that so far as kindness of critical temper goes, Prof. Cheyne by far outstrips his assailants. He never recriminates, but always finds something creditable to say about them. The question as to correctness of view is, however, entirely independent of a consideration of this kind. Some parts of the Introduction betoken a mind that is still open to be convinced of opinions contrary to those that are its own. Thus on p. xlviii we read:—

"None of us is infallible; why, then, should not both Prof. Winckler and I, and even our critics, have made many mistakes?"

But this truly critical attitude does not at present dispose the author to abandon any essential part of his theory. He, on the contrary, proceeds to add some important new links to it, undismayed by the fact that his hypothesis has created for him an almost isolated position among scholars.

The outstanding points in Part I., which deals with the political and prophetic movements of the period, are that Pharaoh Neko, who is reported to have slain Josiah at Megiddo, must give place to a Misrite King of North Arabia, and that Nebuchadnezzar himself, though not to be set aside altogether, did not do all that is related of him, his name having possibly been confused with that of a North Arabian prince. The second part treats in a full and often incisive manner on the "law-books" (excepting the priestly code); and here also Prof. Cheyne is at pains to demonstrate what may be called a maximum amount of North Arabian influence, without, however, denying either direct or indirect Babylonian influence on the development of Israelitish law. There are, on the other hand, those who think that the "borrowing" theories have been carried far enough, and that it would be worth while to see what can be done with a hypothesis affirming more decided originality on the part of the Hebrews.

The Greek and Eastern Churches. By Walter F. Adeney. (Edinburgh, T. & T. Clark.)—"The International Theological

Library" aims at providing a series of volumes "which may adequately represent the present condition of investigation," written by "scholars of recognized reputation in the several branches of study assigned to them." So far as this volume on the Eastern Churches is concerned, it cannot be said that the programme is fulfilled. The carelessness and want of scholarship displayed are inexcusable. We admit that any one who reads the book through will obtain a general idea of the history and movements of the Eastern Churches; the ground is covered, and the main movements are grasped. We also recognize that the chapters on Arianism and the earlier controversies about the person of Christ are meritorious, and seem to be the result of conscientious study. But we cannot recommend the work as a trustworthy guide, or as abreast of recent research.

One of the most important events in the history of the Greek Church was the restoration of image-worship by the Empress Theodora. In a history of that Church published in 1908 we expect to find the right date assigned to such a leading event. Here is Mr. Adeney's notice of it:—

"On the death of Theophilus (A.D. 842) his widow Theodora.....restored the image-worship, and so put an end to the second iconoclastic campaign. Within a few months of her accession to power (Jan., 842) she summoned a Council which confirmed the decision of the second Council of Nicea."

Here an old exploded date is repeated. The true date of the Council is A.D. 843. Again, we expect to find an authoritative statement about the foundation of the Church in Bulgaria. Very little is said about it, and that little includes the time-honoured error that Cyril and Methodius were the "founders and early organizers." When the author speaks of "the separation of the Eastern and Western Empires, followed by the slow dissolution of the latter, and then its marvellous resurrection as an independent power," he shows that he has not assimilated the teaching of Bryce's 'Holy Roman Empire.' He has devoted some pages to the position of the Christians in the kingdom of the Sassanids, but the principal recent work on the subject—that of Labourt—is unknown to him. The dependence of the Greek Church on the Emperors is frequently mentioned, but in a work of this scope we look for a definite exposition of the relations between Church and State, of the position of the Patriarch in regard to the Basileus, and we expect to find that Gelzer's important monograph on the question has been used. But the expectation is not fulfilled. And what are we to say of a book on the Greek Church in which the name of Leontius Byzantius, the greatest theologian of the sixth century, is not even mentioned? The serious gaps in the author's knowledge of modern investigations render his bibliographical notices at the heads of chapters unsatisfactory. It is, for instance, surprising to find that the well-known work of Messrs. Lethaby and Swainson on Sancta Sophia is omitted in the books which are cited on Byzantine art.

The author informs us that the Goths "were defeated and driven back by the Emperor Claudius (A.D. 269), just about the time when the elder Theodosius was repulsing the Saxons in Britain." It would be an exact parallel to this amazing statement if Mr. Adeney were to say that William III. became King of England just about the time when the French Revolution broke out. On the same page (302) a false conception is conveyed of the position of Hermanric, through the failure to distinguish between the Ostrogoths and Visigoths.

The Emperor Constantine V. received an unsavoury nickname from the religious party which he persecuted. Mr. Adeney has baptized him with a new nickname, "Copronicus," which sounds equally unsavoury. It is not a misprint, for it occurs at least six times. Yaroslav, the great prince of Kiev, whose reign was so important for the early development of Christianity in Russia, appears under the form of "Yasolaf." As the name occurs four times on the same page, it cannot be a printer's error.

On Consideration. By Saint Bernard. Translated by George Lewis. (Oxford, Clarendon Press.)—St. Bernard's 'De Consideratione,' accounted by many his greatest work, deserves to be translated and to be correctly translated. The Clarendon Press, from which this volume has issued, ought to be, and is not, a guarantee of its accurate scholarship. The slips or blunders in translation are many, and are in every book, if not in every one of the small chapters. Some examples from the First Book may be given. In chap. v. the words "Quin et camelis pueri Abrahæ potum tribuas" cannot be rendered "Nay let the servants of Abraham give drink even to the camels." Mr. Lewis offers us "Why should they not scorn to give judgement concerning men's poor earthly possessions, seeing that they shall judge heavenly things and angels too?" for the Latin (chap. v.) "Quidni contemnunt judicare de terrenis possessiunculis hominum, qui in cœlestibus et angelos judicabunt?" The obvious translation is surely "in heavenly matters even the angels." In chap. viii. there is a discussion on the Mean, and the words occur, "Propterea dico tibi: a paucis advertitur, quia paucorum prudentia est." The rendering should be "Therefore I say to you, it [the Mean] is perceived by few, because few have prudence." Mr. Lewis gives as his version, "Why do I tell you this? Few pay attention to Prudence because few possess it." Turning to chap. x., we find the words "Publicantes semetipsos ad multorum conscientias, in quo vel suæ solius satis poterant confundi iudicio," and these are translated by Mr. Lewis into "revealing themselves to the consciences of the multitude, a tribunal before which they would, as in the judgement of even their own conscience, be confounded." The right rendering is "in which they might have been sufficiently confounded by the judgement of their own conscience alone."

In Book IV. chap. iii. is this sentence: "Uterque ergo Ecclesiæ et spiritualis scilicet gladius, et materialis; sed is quidem pro Ecclesia, ille vero et ab Ecclesia exserendus," and Mr. Lewis translates it: "Both swords belong to the Church, the spiritual and the material; the one is to be used to defend the Church, but the other must even be banished from the Church." The sentence, as given by Mr. Lewis, contradicts itself. Both swords belong to the Church, and yet one is to be banished from it. St. Bernard never made any statement of that kind. What he did say was that the one sword (the temporal) was to be drawn for the Church, and the other (the spiritual) by the Church.

Another and a last example of Mr. Lewis's translations may be given. These words occur in Book V. chap. x.: "Quam bene ea mulier fermentavit ut nec divisione quidem facta carnis et animæ, a carne vel anima Verbum divideretur! Mansit et in separatione inseparabilis unitas," and they may be rendered: "How well did a woman leaven them, so that not even when division was made of flesh and spirit from either was the Word divided. Even in the separation there remained the inseparable unity."

The translation supplied by Mr. Lewis may be compared with the Latin and with the rendering just given :—

"How well the woman leavened them. And so, in the parallel, without dividing the body and soul, the Word was distinct from the body and soul, yet so that in the separation the inseparable union was maintained."

Pontifical Services. Edited by Athelstan Riley. Vol. IV. (Longmans & Co.)—The fourth section of 'Pontifical Services,' illustrated from sixteenth-century woodcuts, with descriptive notes by Mr. Athelstan Riley, has been issued by the Alcuin Society. These woodcuts are reproduced from two early printed editions of the Roman Pontifical, about the time of the Reformation, both of which were printed at Venice, in the respective years 1520 and 1572. The illustrations are interesting in themselves as good examples of the rough woodcut pictures of the times, and are also valuable to ecclesiologists as affording accurate testimony to the liturgical practice of the day. The usage represented is doubtless that which prevailed in the city of Venice. There is not a little interest in comparing the two series, which are separated by about half a century. The liturgical arrangement of the altars and the vestments of the ministers show very little change; but the general Gothic treatment of the architectural features and surroundings of the first series gives way to a frankly Renaissance feeling in the latter. The altars always have frontals, but they lack gradines, except in a single case. Where candlesticks are shown, there are not more than two. About a third of the cuts in this volume are illustrative of the various episcopal acts connected with the founding and consecrating of a church, beginning with the laying of the foundation stone, and subsequently showing the bishop on a low ladder, anointing and censing the twelve consecration crosses on the walls of the completed building. A curious instance of a change of custom occurs in the two cuts illustrative of the 'Reception of an Empress or Queen'; in the first case (1520) the lady, crowned, sits astride her horse; in the latter (1572) the lady rides on a side-saddle. This may supplement the recent discussion of the subject in Notes and Queries.

OUR LIBRARY TABLE.

Lorenzo the Magnificent, by E. L. S. Horsburgh (Methuen & Co.), is one of the crowd of books now available concerning the Italian Renaissance. Whether the world really needed another work on Lorenzo dei Medici is doubtful, as the author appears to admit. Still, it is always a good thing to have a book of which the author clearly enjoyed the writing, as in the case of that before us. If Mr. Horsburgh's work is not exactly a contribution to knowledge, it is at least a very agreeable presentment of what is known, and is written pleasantly and lucidly, without that touch of preciousness one often finds in books dealing with this period.

We do not know of any place where the intricacies of Italian politics are better unravelled. The reader previously ignorant—and this book is obviously designed for the general public—will gain some notion of what the balance of power meant to the statesmen who first made it a working principle. The portrait of Lorenzo is convincing and well-proportioned, though Mr. Horsburgh suffers a little from the tendency to apologize. He prides himself especially on his study of the literary work of his hero; and it certainly leaves little to be desired on the ground of fullness. Sympathetic, and on the whole just, as it is, we rather weary of the lengthy prose paraphrases of Lorenzo's works, though perhaps they were necessary. On one point in particular we are in emphatic disagreement with the critic. Mr. Horsburgh quotes with approval the dictum of Johnson which compares sonnetteering to carving cherry-stones, and adds that in his opinion there are not twelve sonnets in the English language (apart from Shakespeare's) which were worth the writing. With the work of Milton, Wordsworth, Keats, Mrs. Browning, Rossetti, and Matthew Arnold before him—not to mention living writers of distinction—a critic who so delivers himself is surely out of court. Perhaps the best characteristic of the book is the way it brings out the versatility of Lorenzo, and exhibits him as the perfect embodiment of the spirit of the Renaissance. We quote one passage, which shows our author at his best :—

"These verses of occasion, however, were done so well, his sportive fancy touched so many points of human interest, that Lorenzo takes rank as an Italian poet whose work, within its limits, may challenge comparison with similar work executed by any other. He has a fluent and happy command of a language which he did much to dignify and rescue from neglect and debasement. Gifted with extraordinary versatility, he took an interest in everything, and his facile gift of versification enabled him to express his interests in poetic form. Nothing left him indifferent or untouched; each new fancy, emotion, or experience promptly found an appropriate poetic embodiment in sonnet or satire, in pastoral or lyric song. Thus his poetry is indeed himself, nor can he be known as he really was only from the study of diplomatic despatches and official records. 'Nencia da Barberini' is as much a part of the man himself as his influence over the government of Florence; indeed, we shall the better understand his government if we realize him as the author of 'Nencia.' As he was in his poetry so he was in his government, sometimes cold and cynical, sometimes impassioned and impulsive; now gratifying the worst passions of his animal nature, now rising to lofty heights of self-criticism and moral enthusiasm; at one time careless how much he might corrupt, at another time intent on edification and spiritual exaltation. . . . His was no dual personality. He was a stone cut with many facets, essentially one, but catching and flashing back all the light and life which was around him. He stretched out both hands to grasp whatever experience the world had to afford, and gave it again to the world individualized and interpreted in poetic forms of art."

There is a little too much conventional cant—we can really call it nothing else—about the Renaissance; a repetition of the strange misconception that the Middle Ages were joyless, as compared with later times. How such statements can be made, apart from unworthy prejudice, we have never been able to understand. Joyless! the ages that produced Salisbury Cathedral and the 'Chanson de Roland,' Giotto's frescoes, and the wedding of the Adriatic. Foolish and ignorant from the standpoint of latter-day enlightenment they may have been, but they seem to us as little joyless as any age the world has seen.

We have one further suggestion to make. It is surely not good literary manners to cite a living writer without a prefix of some sort, nor does the practice tend to clearness.

The Iliad of the East. By Frederika MacDonald. (John Lane.)—The second title of this volume describes its contents as a selection of legends drawn from the Rāmāyana (spelt on the title-page Ramayāna, in accordance with the popular mispronunciation, and elsewhere Rāmāyana). If it is necessary to call the two chief Sanskrit epics by the titles of their Greek analogues, it would surely be more appropriate to compare the Rāmāyana with the Odyssey, as being in the main the story of the adventures of a hero, and to reserve the name Iliad for the Mahābhārata, which resembles it in so far as it is primarily the history of a great war.

The English versions here presented were first published in 1870, and are condensed from Fauche's French translation of the Rāmāyana. They fairly represent the principal subjects of the Sanskrit epic, and thus fulfil the object of the volume, which is to convey to English readers some idea of its wealth of imagination and stores of traditional lore, which have permeated the life and thought of India for twenty-four centuries. But the change in appearance which these stories have undergone is indeed passing strange. The style of expression sometimes suggests Walter Scott rather than the Rāmāyana. Opening the book at random, we find, for instance, "At that the angry monarch sprang to his feet and began to pace the narrow hermitage to and fro," and such expressions as "thou contemptuous troglodyte!" and "this cantankerous priest," for which no equivalent is to be found in the original. There is an amusing error on p. 308 in a note on the demon Rāhu, who is described as "a headless monster, who in times of eclipse was supposed to devour the sun or moon, as the case might be." The note proceeds :—

"How he managed this little matter, lacking a head, and consequently one would suppose a mouth, I cannot undertake to say; nor do any of the mythological works I have searched throw light on the subject."

It is the severed head of Rāhu which, according to Hindu mythology, continues to pursue the sun and moon in the attempt to devour them.

The Philosophy of Gassendi. By G. S. Brett. (Macmillan & Co.)—Though well known to all readers of Descartes as a foremost figure in the philosophy of the first half of the seventeenth century, Gassendi has been but little studied, and this book—the first in English devoted to his philosophy, and one of few even when all literatures have been searched—amply accounts for the neglect. The main part of Mr. Brett's task has been to give us the substance, with a running commentary, of Gassendi's 'Syntagma'—a work which, if we may judge from certain passages in which Mr. Brett takes us into his confidence, is almost, if not altogether, unreadable. That Gassendi revived the principles of "atomism," and refurbished anew the philosophy which has become known as "Epicureanism," may be gathered from histories of philosophy. But beyond this is there anything of importance to be gained by a detailed study of this genial, but too monumental author? Mr. Brett appears to think that there is; but in spite of his manifest knowledge and sympathetic historical point of view, we fear that the main result of his labour will be to increase the confidence with which students of philosophy will continue to neglect Gassendi.

Myths of the Norsemen. By H. A. Guerber. (Harrap & Co.)—That the myths of the Teutons have figured but seldom in literature and art is as well known as it is regrettable.

This is not a state of things to be desired; no nation should be ignorant of its own resources, and every fresh attempt to call attention to them deserves a hearty welcome, especially when it takes a form so pleasing as Mr. Guerber's volume. We do not propose to touch on its contents in detail; the reader should find out its excellences for himself. We do not mean, of course, that it will arouse in him only admiration; on the contrary, those to whom they are unfamiliar will find much in these old legends to shock and repel them. It becomes clear on the hastiest study that they are fierce and brutal beyond those of other nations; the rage of Brunhilde is almost unparalleled in story; their horizon is too often bounded by war and revelry; for the Viking, if for any primitive warrior, to live meant, before all, to fight and to carouse. Unlike the myths of Hellas, they are not endowed with grace to atone for much ferocity; they do not, like the Celtic, call up visions of enchantment; they are homely to a fault—"plump" the Germans call it—in many of their details; their ideas are often puerile; and their humour (that of the genre painter at its best) is apt on occasion to degenerate into absurdity. Yet such blemishes as they have are paid for to the full by their rugged grandeur, their spirit of tragic resignation, their intense sympathy with human nature. Their gods are no serene abstractions, looking down on the map of life with philosophic coldness; they struggle and suffer and make merry, knowing that though they dwell in golden palaces they too must die. And this death is the price of sin; they have listened to the tempter Loki, and they and theirs must be wiped out before the birth of a new world of righteousness and well-being. The idea of moral obligation, which is at the root of this myth of Ragnarok, is no less clearly traceable in the Frithiof Saga; the hero, who is guilty of sacrilege, scorns to shield himself behind a lie, and puts aside the cup of happiness when it is already at his lips.

Mr. Guerber's style is bright and picturesque. The stories are well told by him, and he has heightened the effect by a judicious use of poetical extracts. We do not always admire his choice of illustrations; heroes seldom gain by being presented in visible form; but they are attractive as a whole, and younger readers at any rate are not likely to find fault with them. If we have any complaint to make it is that he intersperses his narrative with comments without bringing forward evidence to substantiate his views. Learned criticisms are not de rigueur in books of this kind—indeed, in many cases they would be better left out; but if they are to be introduced at all, they must have the sanction of authority. Statements such as that the goddess Frigga is identical with the German Dame Holle, or with Ostara, or Bertha, or Frau Venus, or the White Lady of Hohenzollern; that the Nornies (the Scandinavian Fates) reappear in the tale of the Sleeping Beauty, and as the witches in 'Macbeth'; that Bishop Hatto's rats are the souls of the murdered peasants, &c., may be stimulating, but they can hardly be said to carry with them their own verification.

A CHEAP edition has just appeared of The Message (Grant Richards), the best written of the crowd of modern stories concerning a foreign invasion of England. The author, Mr. A. J. Dawson, now adds a modest and effective Preface concerning the aims and reception of the book.

OXFORD NOTES.

"THE Constitution is saved." "A Commission is needed at once." So say severally the very old and the very young amongst our legislators. And what say those of uncertain years, the slightly grizzled? One of these at least is tending more and more to side with the party of youth and impatience.

Two important constitutional reforms have been proposed this term. Both have suffered shipwreck. The first was concerned with the constitution of Congregation. At present every Master who resides within a mile and a half of Carfax is a member of the Domestic Assembly. Most persons who take an active part in the work of the University contrive to live inside the magic circle, though some who woo the breeze on Headington Hill are obliged, it is whispered, to be careful on which side of the bed they sleep. On the other hand, a goodly number of those whose interests are not academic can likewise claim benefit of locality. There are the professional men of the city, clergy, doctors, and so forth. Besides, there are the residents who come for residence's sake. What brings them to this pestiferous spot is a standing puzzle to the sociologist. The fact remains that their number steadily mounts, whilst the attendances at the Bodleian do not show a corresponding rate of increase. Of course they are honourable men. Are they not Masters? But to those who have regard for the logic of our institutions, it is not obvious on what principle these onlookers should have a place in Congregation as well as in Convocation, where their presence is entirely legitimate. However, logic and its principles are at a discount in this land of ours. The British public is careless thereof, because it is so stupid. So are our Constitutionalists, because they are so clever. Enunciate a principle, and they undertake to drive a coach and four through it. In the present case it was a pass coach. The principle on which the proposed reform rested was that Congregation ought to be reserved for such as take part in the educational work of the University. Unanswerable reply: Every resident takes part in that work, for he is a coach, either actually or at least potentially, since presumably he would teach if he could get pupils. Triumph of the constitutional party, assisted by the disinterested persons whose status was in question.

The second reform had reference to the M.A. At present this degree implies two things, namely, that its possessor has survived the taking of his B.A. by something like three years, and that he has 12*l.* to spend. Now neither longevity nor wealth is peculiar to the intellectual man. Meanwhile, there is reason to suspect that, away from Oxford, the Bachelor who dons the Master's hood is commonly held to have undergone some higher initiation of an intellectual kind. Hence the question arose: Is not the University guilty of dishonest trading? The constitutionalist reply is that the Oxford man who says we are trading in a sham is as a bird that fouls its own nest. The comparison is more odorous than convincing. Surely "Honour amongst thieves" is not amongst the Commandments. There was a much stronger argument for the defence, however, but it was overlooked. It is this. The degree of Doctor of Divinity carries with it no stigma of intellectuality; yet it confers an added grace which is justly prized. No one in his senses could accuse the clergy of foisting a bogus article upon an unsuspecting public. Therefore, if cleric, why not layman? The University, in fact, is in this respect like a tailor's shop that puts in its window some expensive and at the same time garish article of dress. Any one may in theory buy it; any one may wear it. In practice, however, it takes a man of uncommon grit, a veritable leader of fashion, to sport so egregious a decoration. So it comes about that, after all, exceptional qualities of mind are connoted in the wearer. The only possible danger in this line of argument is that it carries one so far. Plainly there ought to be "no d—d merit" about the B.A. either. Think of it. These men you plough in "Mods" or Group A have shared your life, are attached to you by the bond of commensality—nay, are perhaps the very men to whose feats in the stricken field you owe your keenest emotions of corporate pride. So let residence be all in all. Is not "Sit tight" the watchword of constitutionalism?

Unfortunately, the alternative to accepting this view of the question was to vote for a measure which did not embody the principle to which its promoters made appeal. That principle clearly was that the M.A., since it was distinct from the B.A., should involve a distinct intellectual test. But the proposal before Congregation was that the man who achieved a class, as contrasted with a pass, in the B.A. examination should thereupon be entitled to proceed to a Master's degree no less bogus than ever. Only the passman who went on to take a Diploma, win a University Scholarship, or otherwise achieve the impossible, could be said to have won a real M.A. Hence it is, perhaps, not surprising that the second reform shared the fate of the first.

How long are we to be allowed to "mark time" thus? A good many excellent persons, indeed, do not see the need of reform at all. "Let us alone," is their cry. Nor are they lotus-eaters. Life is "all labour" here nowadays; and on the whole we may be said, I think, to look very well after the morals, the manners, and up to a certain point the minds, of our young men. In fact, conscience doth make Tories of us all. To one, indeed, who tries to recollect the spirit of twenty years ago, it certainly seems that there is more pious self-satisfaction, and less "divine discontent," than there used to be. Yet it is hard to deny that our machinery, both legislative and executive, is exceedingly cumbrous; that the teaching resources of the University are not utilized to the full, thanks mainly to inter-collegiate rivalry; and that advanced study lacks consistent encouragement. Good as we are, we might become much better, with wise reorganization. This is a view of the case held not merely by the Labour Party—that bugbear of the timorous—but likewise by organs of conservative opinion that shall be nameless. Granting, then, that reconstruction must come, the question arises: Can we reform ourselves from within, or do we await the Platonic μικρὰ ῥοπήν ἔξωθεν? Now the University seems bent on dodging the one horn of this dilemma. There are too many private interests at stake—not personal exactly, but rather sectional—for change in any form to be generally acceptable. So we are threatened with the other horn. Rumour has it that the Chancellor's scheme is already at the printer's. Will it commend itself to the majority? It is doubtful, since it is said to include Degrees for Women, as any plan to bring Oxford into harmony with the requirements of modern sentiment is bound to do. That hope failing, however, a Commission is inevitable.

From the dust of the arena let us turn aside for a moment to "the olive grove of Academe." There are, happily, aspects of University life in regard to which one would have it changeless. This is borne in upon one when one tastes the suave and humorous Latinity of Dr. Merry's Croweian Orations, a collection of which his friends have induced him to publish. They cover twenty-seven years, and it might be thought that the salt would have lost its savour. But no. Our Commemoration mood would not seem to vary with the lapse of time, to judge from the perennial freshness of the themes pursued, whether grave or gay. Hear Dr. Merry, for instance, on the joys of Summer Term:—

"Ubi enim terrarum tot oblectamenta atque desidiæ invitamenta quasi in unum collecta invenias? Ubi tot athletarum et remigantium contentiones ceteraque callidæ juventutis ludicra? Adde etiam tot puellarum amabiles occursums, musicorum acroamata, saltationes festivas, hospitales matronarum mensas et pomeridiana pocula."

On the other hand, behold in our Public Orator a very Juvenal when scandals have to be lashed. There is, for instance, a positively terrifying description of a College "Rag" and its results. It ends thus:—

"Crastina vero luce cum turbulentissimus quisque crapulam edormiverit, neque aliud stolidæ lætitiæ ["stolid" is hardly what the College Dean would call it!] existet monumentum præter immundos cineres et fenestrarum ruinas tum demum—mentem lymphatam Mareotico redegit in veros timores instans pœnarum expectatio, cunctis tacite secum rogantibus 'O rus, quando te aspiciam?' Nec diu in dubio res hæret. Confestim fit iudicium et reorum relegatio;

exinde per amplum
mittitur Elysium et pauci læta arva tenemus."

Let me hastily add, lest a previous remark be misunderstood, that the aspect of University life here objurgated is not one of those in regard to which I would have it changeless.

Two benefactions deserve to be put on record. Dr. Arthur Evans has once more made the University his debtor, by giving to the Ashmolean Museum his father's magnificent collection illustrating the art of the Gothic and Teutonic peoples of the Migration Period. Some of the specimens of Anglo-Saxon and Frankish goldsmiths' work are worthy of a place by the side of our priceless Alfred Jewel. Again, the sixteen holders of Oxford Honorary Degrees in the United States have most gracefully presented a valuable contribution to the Chancellor's Fund, and the cordial letter that accompanied it was worth even more than the present itself in the eyes of all Oxford men. The distribution of the Chancellor's Fund, by the by, will begin shortly, if it has not already begun; and it is rumoured that a policy of concentration will be followed. It is to be hoped that this does not mean that the very newest developments—for instance, the Diploma Courses, which on account of their very newness are not strongly represented at headquarters—will be left entirely in the cold. To-day must not be endowed at the expense of to-morrow.

This has been a term of lectures. Never have Inaugurals and Special Courses rained upon us from heaven in so continuous a downpour. And the remarkable thing is that there have been large audiences. Even if every one else did not "draw" like Dr. Sven Hedin, no one at least could complain of empty benches. The Parks' System of course fulfilled its natural function. (The Parks' System is mainly the creation of our Professors, who, taking unto themselves wives, "called a new world into existence to redress the balance of the old.") But College Tutors were likewise assiduous in their attendance. When one was not lecturing oneself, one was listening to a friend. If this fever goes on spreading, the undergraduates will be coming next. M.

W. H. BLISS.

THE death of Mr. W. H. Bliss, which occurred on the 8th of the current month at Rome, will be much regretted by the many English scholars who have had occasion to consult MS. sources there. He had for more than thirty years been the official representative of the Public Record Office in Rome and Central Italy, and the willing helper of all who applied to him for assistance. He regarded himself as a sort of literary Consul in Rome, and spared neither time nor trouble in the execution of his duties in that capacity.

William Henry Bliss, born April 26th, 1835, was the son of the Rev. William Bliss of Newton St. Loe, near Bath, by his wife Jane Monck Bridges, and nephew of the Rev. James Bliss, the editor of the works of Beveridge and Laud. He was educated at Winchester (1847-52), and remained all his life an enthusiastic Wykehamist. In 1854 he entered Magdalen College, Oxford, then a society with only a very few undergraduates. He graduated as B.A. in 1859, M.A. in 1863, and B.C.L. in 1868.

He lost his father while still at school (February 5th, 1850), and his mother took him with her to Hursley, near Winchester, where as a boy and a young man he learned to know and love his father's friend "Mr. Keble," as he always called him. Keble's personality and character made a lasting impression on him, and in after life he took great pride and pleasure in the recollection of this intimacy. His mother died September 9th, 1871.

Mr. Bliss was ordained deacon in 1858 and priest in 1865, between which dates he did both literary and clerical work, acting, for instance, as curate to his uncle James Bliss at Plymouth in 1863. From 1866 to 1868 he was Vicar of North Hinksey, near Oxford. In 1869 he felt it his duty to be received into the Roman Communion, and in 1872 he took advantage of the Act relieving him of his clerical disabilities.

In 1859 (May 4th) he married Mary Jane, eldest daughter of the Rev. Cecil Wray, Incumbent of St. Martin's, Liverpool. His wife and a large family survive him. It was not until 1865 that he returned to Oxford, to which, as to Winchester, he was devotedly attached; and in March, 1866, he had the great joy of being appointed a member of the Bodleian staff under H. O. Coxe. Here he remained until the end of 1876, acting as Keeper of Periodicals, and after 1871 superintending the preparation of the printed Catalogue. The occupation was congenial, and he never severed his connexion with the Library: one of his last visits in England was to the Bodleian. He did not finally give up his Oxford house till 1898 or thereabouts.

At the end of 1876 the Rev. Joseph Stevenson, who was employed by the Public Record Office to obtain transcripts of documents of historical importance in the Vatican Archives, resigned his appointment; and Sir Thomas Hardy, on Cardinal Manning's recommendation, appointed Mr. Bliss as his successor. Mr. Stevenson (who joined the Society of Jesus in September, 1877) did not quit Rome immediately on his resignation; and when Mr. Bliss took up his duties in January, 1877, his position was a difficult one. The interposition of Cardinals Manning and Cullen and of Lord Denbigh, and above all Mr. Bliss's own persistence and tact, ultimately removed all difficulties, and he became the only non-official student who had continuous access to the Archivio Segreto until the opening of the Archives by Leo XIII. in 1881. Mr. Bliss was thus the oldest of the historical students at the Vatican, although on the occasion of the recent presentation to Mgr. Wenzel he waived his claim to that dignity in favour of Prof. Pastor. Of his services in this capacity it is hardly necessary to speak. The mass of transcripts at the Public Record Office, many of them in his own hand, sufficiently attests his diligence. Father Foley and Father Knox drew freely upon them for their works on the English Catholics; and the constant references to them in Gardiner's histories bear witness to their importance.

Bliss's printed work is less extensive. He had, while at the Bodleian, edited the 'Liber Regalis' which was issued by Earl Beauchamp to the Roxburghe Club in 1871; and in 1890, under Sir Henry Maxwell-Lyte's directions, he began a Calendar of the entries in the Register of Papal Bulls relating to the British Isles. The first volume was issued in 1893, and eight volumes have now appeared, bringing the work down to 1447; but since the fifth volume the Calendar has been edited by Mr. J. A. Twemlow, who succeeded Mr. C. Johnson as assistant-editor in 1897. The first volume of a corresponding Calendar of the Register of Petitions appeared in 1894.

When thus enabled to relinquish the Calendar, Mr. Bliss gladly returned to his original province of procuring transcripts of documents of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries. It was work in which his natural modesty found more satisfaction, and for which he was much better fitted. His personal qualities were peculiarly adapted to dealing with the custodians of collections not yet sufficiently arranged to be conveniently opened to the public. He never asked as a right what could only be conferred as a favour, and the transparent sincerity of his character disarmed all suspicions. He thus succeeded in penetrating private archives whose owners would not willingly have admitted students of a less attractive disposition. For he did not confine his researches to the Vatican. Wherever he went, his first thought was to promote the publication of unprinted historical material. It was characteristic of him that a summer holiday in Stockholm in 1881 led to his spending part of his vacation there in the two following years, and forming (with the sanction of the Deputy-Keeper) the collection of Stockholm Transcripts now at the Public Record Office. In the same way he procured transcripts from Naples, Milan, and Zurich, the last due to his anxiety to utilize even the misfortune of an operation for cataract in the service of history.

On his last visit to Zurich, for a final operation, he was knocked down by a cab and broke his leg, and there can be no doubt that this accident contributed to shorten his life. He died of influenza followed by pneumonia, after a very short illness.

One incident of his life in Italy was his appointment as English tutor to the then Prince of Naples; for this he refused to accept any remuneration, and he had the gratification on more than one occasion to find that he was not forgotten by his old pupil. Italy filled a great place in his later life, and it would almost have broken his heart to give up his work in Rome.

It would be difficult to say more of his personal character without betraying the partiality of friendship, yet no one could know him at all well without feeling warmly towards him; and owing to the varied circumstances of his life his friends were many both at Rome and in England. They will remember, and miss, his light-heartedness and courage, no less than his kindness and his honesty. He was, as a Roman tradesman once expressed it, una così cara persona.

PRE-TRACTARIAN OXFORD.

THE well-informed reviewer of my book makes me date Hampden's appointment to Hereford incorrectly as 1837. I turn to p. 144, and find it rightly given as 1847.

Magee characterized somebody's religion as insufficient for a tomtit. This is more incisive than the reviewer's tomcat, coming nearer to devotional negation. The cat is possibly a devil-worshipper, but religious to that extent.

The reviewer refers three times to unpublished correspondence with which he discerns me to be unacquainted. If his polite prognostic of a second edition to the book is fulfilled, it might gain something by my obtaining access to these sources of information.

W. TUCKWELL.

* * Our reviewer writes: "On p. xi. (a list of dates) Hampden is set down as 'Bishop 1837-1868,' and there are similar slips, which should be noticed before a new edition is printed. Magee is said to have described a certain sermon (not somebody's religion) as 'not containing enough Gospel to save a tomtit.' I was not quoting this, or mixing my zoology."

VILLON AND JOB.

Glasgow, March 13, 1909.

MR. HEYER may be interested by a reference to Lockhart's 'Scott' showing that the process certainly referred to by Villon, and perhaps by Job, had in its more modern phase attracted Sir Walter, and evoked from him a striking comment. Lockhart, sub anno 1817 states that Mr. John Smith, a Glasgow bookseller,

"remembers particularly the delight which Scott expressed on seeing the process of singeing muslin—that is, of divesting the finished web of all superficial knots and irregularities by passing it with the rapidity of lightning over a bar of red-hot iron. 'The man that imagined this,' said Scott, 'was the Shakespeare of the Websters—'

Things out of hope are compass'd oft with vent'ring."

'Venus and Adonis.'

The Wycliffite version reads: "My daies passiden swiftliere thanne a web is kit doun of a webster."

G. N.

Blackheath, March 17, 1909.

IT may be worth while to point out that the Douay version renders, "My days have passed more swiftly than the web is cut by the weaver," which seems to be the view expressed by your correspondent, although a foot-note has "Web, Heb., the weaver's shuttle." Of course in any case the idea is that of speed.

W. T. LYNN.

APPROPRIATING TITLES.

San Silvestro in Capite, Rome.

BEING a constant subscriber to The Athenæum, I may perhaps be allowed to avail myself of the hospitality of your columns to ask if there be any means of preventing authors appropriating the title of books already in circulation.

From the notices in the press, I see that a Rev. S. C. Gayford, M.A., has just published a book called 'Life after Death.' Now that is the precise title I chose for a book which I published in 1895, and which is still selling well. It ought to be as well known as most books, for it is in its fourteenth edition, and has been translated into French, Italian, German, and Spanish.

The confusion, arising from another publication bearing exactly the same title, is not only unfair to me, but most annoying to purchasers. People writing for the one book will no doubt often receive the other. May I make this protest?

JOHN S. CANON VAUGHAN.

MR. MOSES TEGGART.

WITH sincere sorrow I ask leave to record the death of Mr. Moses Teggart, a Nature-poet of singular charm, whose special theme was the bogland of the North of Ireland. Though he never published a book of poems, he poured out a profusion of lyrics characterized by a happy exactness in the portraiture of birds, &c. During his life he published chiefly, if not solely, in American newspapers—especially The Republican of Springfield, Mass.; but it is hoped that, thanks to the initiative of his friend Mr. George D. Chesson, he may be introduced to British readers in a posthumous collection, at present in my custody.

Mr. Teggart, or Taggart (he was called by both names), was born on February 1st, 1854, in Tartaraghan, co. Armagh, and died at sea on the 19th ult. He was educated at Belfast, and became a schoolmaster and afterwards a book-keeper. Intimately as he knew his part of Ireland, and much as he loved it (treasuring dialect words which but for him would perhaps be absent from contemporary literature), he grew to love his American home even more than his native land.

W. H. C.

GUI PATIN'S 'JUGEMENT' ON THE 'RELIGIO MEDICI.'

AMONG contemporary criticisms of the 'Religio Medici' those in the letters of the famous Paris physician Gui Patin are very often quoted. He had received the first Latin edition, 1644, and writes on April 16th, 1645, "On fait ici grand état du livre intitulé 'Religio Medici,' which he thinks is a doubtful contribution to religion. On the 21st of October, 1646, he again writes to his friend Spon, this time quite enthusiastically, "C'est un livre tout gentil et curieux"; and he praises the liberty under which such a book could be written. In 1650, and again in 1657, he refers to the work, which had evidently become a favourite with him. The other day, in looking through the collection of Patin letters in the Bibliothèque Nationale, I found at the end of vol. i., and unconnected with any letter, a much fuller criticism, which is worth reproducing:—

Jugement de M. G. P. D. M.A.P. sur l'auteur du livre intitulé 'Religio Medici.'

L'auteur de ce livret se dit Anglois, et peut estre l'est il; mais de quelque pays qu'il soit, il est chrestien, huguenot, bigot et superstitieux. Il hait les ceremonies de l'église romaine. Il souhaite la réunion de tous les chrestiens; Il se plaint d'estre excommunié du pape comme huguenot, combien qu'il ne lui veuille point de mal. Il prétend que sa religion est toute judicieuse, fondée sur la philosophie et le raisonnement. Il n'est pas bien confirmé en sa erance; sa bigotie l'empesche d'aller a l'atheïsme, où peut estre enfin parviendra il avec sa philosophie qui n'est gueres assurée. Mais il n'est pas encore assés meschant pour cela. Son esprit scrupuleux et superstitieux le retient. C'est un melancholique contemplatif, un solitaire méditatif. Il n'est peut estre pas si homme de bien qu'il dit. Il fait le philosophe et l'esprit subtil, puis tost apres devient bigot. Il n'est pas si fort huguenot qu'il ne se fit plustost papiste que d'en mourir. Il croit bien les anges gardiens, et les miracles du Japon, mais il se defie des Jésuites. Il ne voudroit pas tout a fait nier l'intercession des saints. Il croit des sorciers, et le retours des esprits tres frequent, tant il est sot, pag. 122. Il est melancholique a devenir fou, et glorieux cagot. Il se defie de la fin du monde et ne sçait qu'en croire. Il croit fort en dieu, en l'immortalité de l'ame et en la vie éternelle, et in Christum crucifixum, in quo solo salutem reponit. Il ne sçait que croire de l'entrée du ciel et n'est pas en cet article ferme huguenot. Il s'attend de voir au grand jugement plusieurs grands effets de la misericorde de Dieu. Il avoue qu'il est medecin; mais il me semble sot et fat quand il veut si fort qu'on fasse estat de ses prieres vers dieu. Non requirit aeger medicum precantem, sed sanantem. Il n'est pas encore marié et n'a pas grande envie de l'estre, non plus que de besoin. Il est medecin et n'en raisonne pas mal. Il tient la mort pour le plus grand remede qui soit en la nature, en tant qu'elle remede a tous nos maux, et qu'elle nous ouvre la porte de l'immortalité. Il croit du diable autant que le plus sot et le plus bigot de tous les moines, car il croit que cette vilaine beste metaphysique se trouve partout; mais, de malheur pour luy, il n'est pas si fin que nos moines qui font provision d'eau beniste pour le chasser a toute heure. Il a cela de bon qu'il se tient tres heureux et tres content. Il avoue qu'il est naturellement melancholique et saturnien. Il voudroit ne servir dieu qu'en songe. Il est bien bigot pour un reformé. Il fait grand estat du sommeil et n'oseroit s'endormir sans avoir prié dieu. Il est fort bon homme, fort charitable, et a beaucoup d'esprit. Il réduit la felicité humaine a 3 choses, sçavoir paix en la conscience, commandement sur ses passions, et piété envers dieu et nostre prochain, qui est la charité chrestienne, et la vraye marque d'un homme de bien contre un hypocrite: et c'est le meilleur mot qui soit en tout son livre.

Fin.

WM. OSLER.

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

ENGLISH.

Theology.

- An Cath Spioradail le Lorentzo Scupoli, 1/6. Issued by the Catholic Press of Scotland.
 Carus (P.), The Bride of Christ, 3/6 net.
 Coppens (C.), Choice Morsels of the Bread of Life, 2/6 net. Select readings from the Old Testament.
 Ellis (Percy Ansley), Old Beliefs and Modern Believers, 3/6 net.
 Girdlestone (R. B.), Old Testament Theology and Modern Ideas, 1/ net. One of the Anglican Church Handbooks.
 Glover (T. R.), The Conflict of Religions in the Early Roman Empire, 7/6 net.
 Margolis (Max L.), The Holy Scriptures with Commentary: Micah.
 Morgan (Rev. G. C.), The Gospel according to John, 3/6. Part of the Analysed Bible.
 Picton (J. A.), Man and the Bible, 6/ net. A review of the place of the Bible in human history.
 Rivière (J.), The Doctrine of Atonement, Vol. I., 7/6. Translated by L. Cappadelta.
 Russell (M.), Little Angels: a Book of Comfort, 2/6 net.
 Sherlock (F.), Easter Offerings: with some Remarks on Whitsun Offerings, 1/ net.
 Stanford (C.), Symbols of Christ, 3/6.
 Stone (Darwell), A History of the Doctrine of the Holy Eucharist, 2 vols., 30/ net.
 Ströter (Prof. E. F.), The Glory of the Body of Christ, 2/6 net. An exposition of the Epistle to the Ephesians.
 Webster (Rev. F. S.), In Remembrance of Me, 1/. An answer to the Eucharistic Congress of September, 1908.

Fine Art and Archaeology.

- Art Prices Current, 1907-8, 10/6 net. A record of sale prices at Christie's during the season, with an Index to Artists' and Engravers' Names.
 Bayley (Harold), A New Light on the Renaissance Displayed in Contemporary Emblems, 12/6 net. A study in mediæval symbolism, especially in regard to paper-making and printing, illustrated by upwards of 400 fac-similes.
 Burne Jones (Sir Edward), 5/ net.
 Calvert (Albert F.), El Greco, 3/6 net. An account of his life and works. Illustrated. Spanish Series.
 Hamel (F.), Fair Women at Fontainebleau, 15/ net. Illustrated.
 Hogarth (D. G.), Ionia and the East, 3/6 net. Six lectures delivered before the University of London, with map.
 Konody (P. G.), Brockwell (M. W.), and Lippmann (F. W.), The National Gallery, Part 9, 1/ net. With illustrations in colour.
 Norton (D. M.), Freehand, Perspective, and Sketching, 6/ net.
 Whitwell (Mrs. E. R.), Through Bosnia and Herzegovina with a Paint Brush, 6/ net. Illustrated.

Poetry and Drama.

- Ainslie (D.), The Song of the Stewarts, Prelude, 7/6 net. The first of a series of poems on the Stewarts.
 Atkinson (E. J. R.), By a Midnight Sea: Poems, 6/ net.
 Galsworthy (J.), Plays: The Silver Box, Joy, and Strife, 6/ net.
 Mackail (J. W.), The Springs of Helicon, 4/6 net. A study in the progress of English poetry from Chaucer to Milton.
 Mantzius (K.), A History of Theatrical Art in Ancient and Modern Times: Vol. V. The Great Actors of the Eighteenth Century, 10/ net. Authorized translation by Louise von Cossel.
 Middleton (T.) and Rowley (W.), The Spanish Gipsie, and All's Lost by Lust, 2/6 net. Edited by E. C. Morris. Belles-Lettres Series.
 Musæus, Sibylline Leaves, 2/6 net. Eight short poems.
 Otway (T.), The Orphan, and Venice Preserved, 2/6 net. Edited by C. F. McClumpha. Another of the Belles-Lettres Series.
 Pinkerton (P.), At Hazebo', and other Poems, 3/ net.
 Stratton (Rev. J.), Fireside Poems, 1/. Second Series.
 Tabor (R. M.), Odds and Ends, 5/. A series of amusing light verses with abundant tinges of classical scholarship.
 Voluspa, 2/6 net. Done into English out of the Icelandic of the Elder Edda by Ananda K. Coomaraswamy.

Music.

- Farr (F.), The Music of Speech, 2/6 net. Contains the words of some poets, thinkers, and music-makers regarding the practice of the bardic art, together with fragments of verse set to melody.

Bibliography.

Karslake (F.), Notes from Sotheby's. A compilation of 2,032 notes from catalogues of book-sales at Messrs. Sotheby's between 1885 and 1900.

Philosophy.

Fraser (A. C.), Berkeley and Spiritual Realism, 1/ net.
Pratt (J. B.), What is Pragmatism? 5/ net. A criticism presenting the position of those who are unable to accept the Pragmatist view.
Taylor (A. E.), Plato, 1/ net.

Political Economy.

Hillquit (M.), Socialism in Theory and Practice, 6/6 net.
Nathan (Sir N.), Economic Heresies, 10/6 net. An unorthodox attempt to appreciate the economic problems presented by "things as they are."
Vaughan (Father B.), Socialism: is it Liberty or Tyranny? 6d. net. A lecture in Queen's Hall on March 10.

History and Biography.

Barker (J. E.), Modern Germany, 10/6 net. 'Deals with her political and economic problems, her foreign and domestic policy, her ambitions, and the causes of her success. Third and greatly enlarged edition, revised up to February, 1909.
Bonar (Dr. Horatius), Memories of, by Relatives and Public Men, 2/6 net.
Curious Case of Lady Purbeck, by the Author of 'The Life of Sir Kenelm Digby,' 6/ net. A scandal of the seventeenth century.
Dictionary of National Biography: Vol. XIII., Masquerier—Myles, 21/ net. Reissue.
Felkin (F. W.), from Gower Street to Frognal, 1/ net. A short history of University College School, 1830-1907.
Gilmour (James), of Mongolia, his Diaries, Letters, and Reports, 1/6. Edited and arranged by Richard Lovett. A new illustrated edition at a cheap price.
Kalischer (Dr. A. C.), Beethoven's Letters, 2 vols., 21/ net. A critical edition, with explanatory notes, including portraits of Beethoven's grandfather, father, mother, and tiresome nephew; also a facsimile in coloured photogravure of a miniature of Beethoven. Translated with preface by J. S. Shedlock.
Kerr (S. Parnell), George Selwyn and the Wits, 12/6 net. Contains 16 illustrations.
Melville (L.), Brighton: its History, its Follies, and its Fashions, 10/6 net. With portraits, caricatures, views, &c.
More (P. E.), Shelburne Essays. Sixth Series, 5/ net.
Ruvigny (Marquis de), The Nobilities of Europe.
Thorold (A.), Six Masters in Disillusion, 6/ net. Six essays concerning Fontenelle, Méréme, Ferdinand Fabre, Huysmans, Maeterlinck, and Anatole France, which have already appeared, much in their present form, with an Epilogue.
Toynbee (W.), Glances of the Twenties, 12/6 net. Illustrated.

Geography and Travel.

Aflalo (F. G.), Sunset Playgrounds, 7/6 net. Deals with sport and scenery in California and Canada, with many illustrations.
Cornish (V.), The Panama Canal and its Makers, 5/. With map, plans, and photographs taken by the author.
Cust (Mrs. H.), Gentlemen Errant, 12/ net. Recounts the journeys and adventures of four noblemen in Europe during the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries.
Lacoste (Major de B. de), Around Afghanistan, 10/6 net. With a preface by M. G. Leygues. Translated from the French by J. G. Anderson, and contains 80 illustrations.
Moore (D.) and Guggisberg (Major F. G.), We Two in West Africa, 12/6 net. With numerous illustrations and maps.
Phillips Handy Administrative Atlas of Ireland—of Scotland, 3/ net each. Edited by G. Philip.

Sports and Pastimes.

Sayers (H.), Fights Forgotten, 6/ net. A history of the chief English and American prize-fights since 1788, illustrated.

School-Books.

Hugo (Victor), Selected Poems, 2/6 net. Edited by A. Schinz.
Scott's Legend of Montrose, 1/6. With an introduction and notes by Arthur T. Flux. Sir Walter Scott Continuous Readers.
Stewart (R. Wallace) An Elementary Text-Book of Physics: Part 3—Light, 3/6 net.

Science.

Abbey (G.), The Balance of Nature and Modern Conditions of Cultivation, 7/6 net. A practical manual of animal foes and friends. Illustrated.
Emerson (C. P.), Essentials of Medicine, 8/6 net.
Finn (F.), Wild Beasts of the World, Part XI., 1/ net. With illustrations in colour by L. Sargent, C. E. Swan, and W. Austen.
Fowler (C. E.), Law and Business of Engineering and Contracting, 10/6 net.
Jenkinson (J. W.), Experimental Embryology, 12/6 net.
Journal of Experimental Zoology, Vol. VI., No. 2, February. Edited by W. E. Castle, E. G. Conklin, and others.
McGibbon (W. C.), Indicator Diagrams for Marine Engineers, 7/6 net. Fully illustrated and explained.
Mellor (J. W.), Higher Mathematics for Students of Chemistry and Physics, 15/ net.
Moore (Col. E. C. S.), Sanitary Engineering, 2 vols., 42/ net. A practical treatise on the collection, removal, and final disposal of sewage and house refuse, and the design and construction of works of drainage and sewerage, with numerous hydraulic tables, formulae, and memoranda, including an extensive series of tables of velocity and discharge of pipes and sewers. Third Edition, in part rewritten by E. J. Silcock.
Munro and Jamieson's Pocket Book of Electrical Rules and Tables, 1909, 8/6.
Parham (E. C.) and Shedd (J. C.), Shop Tests on Electric-Car Equipment, 4/6 net.
Power (M.), The Alcohol Case, the Summing-Up, 6d. net. A medical, legal, and historical sketch.
Pronunciation of Plant-Names, 1/ net. Reprinted from The Gardeners' Chronicle.
Report on Reciprocating Steam Engines for Electrical Purposes, 2/6 net. Engineering Standards Committee, Report 42.

Rogers (Allen), Laboratory Guide of Industrial Chemistry, 6/ net.
Sinclair (Upton), and Williams (Michael), The Art of Health: a Primer of the New Hygiene.
Sindall (R. W.), The Manufacture of Paper.
Soddy (F.), The Interpretation of Radium, 6/ net. The substance of six free popular experimental lectures delivered at the University of Glasgow, 1908, with illustrations.
Steinmetz (C. P.), Theory of Calculation of Transient Electric Phenomena and Oscillations, 21/ net.
Thonger (C.), The Book of the Cottage Garden, 2/6 net. Is written for those who, whilst possessing country cottages, are in no sense cottagers. Contains 18 illustrations.
Wright (H. J. and W. P.), Beautiful Flowers and How to Grow Them, Part 10, 1/ net. With illustrations in colour.

Fiction.

Ayscough (J.), Dromina, 6/. Deals partly with the young uncrowned Louis XVII. of France, who, escaping from the Temple, gets among gipsy folk and rises to be their king. The scene changes from the South of Ireland to Spain, Italy, California and Hayti.
Bell (J. J.), Oh Christina, 1/ net. A companion picture to 'Wee Macgregor.'
Blyth (J.), The Member for Easterby, 6/. A tale concerning the present law of divorce.
Capes (B.), The Love Story of St. Bel, 6/. The story treats of Siena in the days of St. Catherine, and adapts her and one or two of her contemporaries to its exigencies.
France (Anatole), Thais, 6/. A translation by Robert B. Douglas.
Gerard (Morice), A Fair Refugee, 6/. Recounts the wooing and winning in a Cornish village of an émigré from the French Revolution. With 4 illustrations.
Hornung (E. W.), Raffles, the Amateur Cracksman, 7d. net. New Edition. For former notice see Athen., July 28, 1906, p. 102.
Hudson (W. H.), South American Sketches, 1/ net. Reissue of stories which appeared in 1902, under the title 'El Ombu.' See Athen., May 17, 1902, p. 622.
Jones (C. E.), Woman's Looking-Glass, 6/. A spinster's chronicle.
Last Days of John Hus, 2/6. An historical romance, translated from the Czech with an introduction by Prof. W. R. Morfill, and 24 illustrations by J. Dedina.
Leighton (M. C.), Money, 6/. A lurid tale of vengeance and love.
Thurston (E. Temple), The City of Beautiful Nonsense, 6/. A sentimental story of love in London and Venice.
Trafford-Taunton (Winefride), The Threshold, 6/. A study of passion and humanity.
Wardle (J.), Margery Pigeon, 6/. Has to do with the adoption of a barmaid by a lady of title.
Whitechurch (V. L.), The Canon's Dilemma, and other Stories, 6/. Mostly humorous.
Young (F. E. Mills), Chip, 6/. A story of the lives of a small community of Europeans dwelling amid the swamps of East Africa.

General Literature.

Beeton's (Mrs.) Cookery Book, 1/ net. All about cookery, household work, marketing, trussing, carving, &c., illustrated with coloured and photographic plates. New edition of this well-known book.
Foreign Office List and Diplomatic and Consular Year-Book for 1909, 10/6.
Ideas of a Plain Country Woman, by "The Country Contributor," 3/ net.
MacColl (Hugh), Man's Origin, Destiny, and Duty, 4/6 net.
Rittenberg (Max), How to Compose Business Letters, 1/6 net.
Smith (D. Nichol), The Functions of Criticism, 1/ net. A lecture delivered before the University of Oxford on February 22.
Thornton (A.) Key to Students' Manual of Book-keeping, 7/6 net.
Wilson's Arte of Rhetorique, 1560, 5/ net. Edited by G. H. Mair.

Pamphlets.

Alderson (A. W.), The Worst Tax of All, 3d. A pamphlet against the use of Dutch in South Africa.
Levy (J. H.), The Inebriates Acts and their Reform, 2d.
Levy (J. H.), Syphilitic Vaccination, 1d.
Zulueta (F. M. de), Frequent and Daily Communion even for Men, 1d. net.

FOREIGN.

Fine Art and Archaeology.

Wörter und Sachen: kulturhistorische Zeitschrift für Sprach- und Sachforschung, Vol. I. Part I., 12m. This part has 44 illustrations and a map.

Drama.

Dacier (É.), Une Danseuse de l'Opéra sous Louis XV.: Mlle. Sallé.

History and Biography.

Lepelletier (E.), Émile Zola: Sa Vie, son Œuvre, 3fr. 50. Pages choisies des Grands Écrivains: Fontenelle, 3fr. 50. With an introduction by H. Potez.

Geography and Travel.

Duchesse-Fournet (J.), Mission en Éthiopie, 1901-3, 2 vols. and Atlas, 60f.
Maitre (H.), Les Régions Moï du Sud Indo-Chinois: Le Plateau du Darlac, 4fr.

Philology.

Reichelt (H.), Awestisches Elementarbuch, 13m. 20. Part of the Indogermanische Bibliothek.

Science.

Gantier (É.), L'Année scientifique et industrielle, 3fr. 50.

Fiction.

Lafforgue (J.), La Revanche de Paris, 3fr. 50.
Nyst (Ray), La Caverne, 4fr. A history of a family of 29 persons in the time of the Tertiary forests.
Zobeltitz (H. de), Le Journal d'une Fille d'Honneur, 3fr. 50. In the Bibliothèque de Romans pour les Jeunes Filles. Translated by Joel Ritt.

* * All Books received at the Office up to Wednesday Morning will be included in this List unless previously noted. Publishers are requested to state prices when sending Books.

Literary Gossip.

The Cornhill Magazine for April opens with a poem by Mr. Thomas Hardy, 'Let Me Enjoy.' Of literary interest are 'Edward FitzGerald at Woodbridge,' by Mr. A. C. Benson; 'Did Browning Whistle or Sing?' an essay on his power of expression in verse, by Prof. Padelford; and 'A Martyr for Style,' a criticism by Mr. W. P. James of Flaubert. The Rev. P. H. Ditchfield writes on 'The Mind of the Rustic'; and Lady Bell contributes 'Some Impressions of Coquelin.'

MESSRS. SMITH & ELDER expect to publish Mr. H. W. Lucy's 'Sixty Years in the Wilderness' on the 1st of next month. The chapters of the reminiscences which have appeared with marked success in The Cornhill Magazine are supplemented in the volume by additional matter equal to one-third of the whole; and the author contemplates the publication of a second volume at a later date if the present one is regarded with favour, as he has by no means exhausted his material. The book has as frontispiece an excellent portrait of Mr. Lucy from a painting by Mr. J. S. Sargent.

In 'Richard Savage: a Mystery in Biography,' by Mr. Stanley V. Makower, which Messrs. Hutchinson will publish, readers will meet with several characters of unusual interest in the department of biography. One of these is that singular woman, Anne Brett, once Countess of Macclesfield, whom the poet claimed as his mother.

MESSRS. CHAPMAN & HALL will publish about the end of April 'Chapters of my Life: an Autobiography,' by Mr. Samuel Waddington. It contains a number of original letters from Longfellow, Gladstone, J. A. Symonds, Walter Pater, F. T. Palgrave, Mrs. Lynn Linton, Dr. A. R. Wallace, &c., several of which are reproduced in facsimile. It also includes many anecdotes or incidents concerning Disraeli, Steinitz, Thomas Woolner, and other celebrities.

In the April number of The Dublin Review the editor, Mr. Wilfrid Ward, discusses 'Moral Fiction a Hundred Years Ago'; and other articles are 'The Export of Capital,' by Mr. Hilaire Belloc, M.P.; 'The Mantle of Voltaire,' by Mr. F. Y. Eccles; and 'Catherine of Braganza and Old Hammersmith.' A paper comes to the Dublin, too, from Cardinal Gibbons under the expansive name of 'The Needs of Humanity.'

MR. FRANCIS THOMPSON's remarkable monograph on Shelley, which appeared in the same Review will be published on Wednesday by Messrs. Burns & Oates in England, and by Messrs. C. Scribner's Sons in the United States.

MR. MURRAY will shortly publish in his "Wisdom of the East" series 'The Splendour of God,' a work dealing with the Bahai religion, which had its origin in Persia eighty years ago. The author, Mr. Eric Hammond, has given extracts from the sacred writings of the Bahais, together with an introduction dealing with their three prophets. Abbas Effendi, the third of these, has sent to the author his special blessing, which will be printed in the book.

A NEW book by Prof. William James will be issued by Messrs. Longman & Co. early in April. It will be called 'A Pluralistic Universe,' though the lectures it contains were delivered at Oxford last year under the title of 'The Present Situation in Philosophy.' They criticize vigorously the school of transcendental idealism which flourished under T. H. Green.

'A VINDICATION OF WARREN HASTINGS,' by Mr. G. W. Hastings, is announced by Mr. Henry Frowde. The author's object is to prove that "Warren Hastings, the man who made our Indian Empire and preserved it for the Crown, was wholly innocent of the crimes so often and so grievously laid to his charge."

MR. RAFAEL SABATINI, the author of 'The Trampling of the Lilies' and other popular romances, has ready for immediate publication through Messrs. Hutchinson & Co. a new story, entitled 'St. Martin's Summer.'

WE devote our first article to-day to Mr. Arnold-Forster's 'Military Needs and Military Policy,' paying a tribute to the resolute attention to public service, in spite of bad health, which ended in his death on Friday week last.

BORN in 1855, the son of W. Delafield Arnold, and the grandson of Arnold of Rugby, he was adopted by W. E. Forster, whose name he added to his own, and early showed exceptional ability, which was somewhat discounted by an unfortunate manner. His little book 'In a Conning Tower' was a great success, and was published by Messrs. Cassell & Co., of whose business he was for a time a director. He also published 'The Citizen Reader' and several books on the Army. The more recent of these are 'The War Office, the Army, and the Empire' (1900), and 'The Army in 1906: a Policy and a Vindication,' to which we gave a long notice.

MISS EMMA BROOKE's new novel 'The Story of Hauksgarth Farm' will be published by Messrs. Smith & Elder next Friday. It is a story of Cambrian fell-folk, and life and character on a moorland farm.

IN the April Sunday at Home the Rev. A. R. Buckland, who has recently visited the Far East, gives 'Impressions of China.' An Easter paper, entitled 'Manifestations of the Risen Lord,' by the Rev. T. A. Gurney, is illustrated by three of Mr. Frederic Shields's pictures in the Church of the Redeemer, Bayswater Road. Mrs. Butt Clark of Rome writes on the recent earthquake at Messina; and there is a short life of Sir Robert Hart.

MR. FISHER UNWIN has entered into an agreement with Mr. Karl Baedeker whereby he will become the sole publisher for the British Isles, India, and the Colonies, of Baedeker's Guides. The arrangement will come into force on April 1st, and will cover all editions of the Guides—in English, French, and German.

THE REV. GEORGE TYRRELL is preparing for the press a small volume of verse, consisting mainly of translations, most of these being from the German.

WHETHER for good or evil, Nietzsche is now a power to be reckoned with in modern thought. Authorized translations of his complete works are to be published in England by Mr. T. N. Foulis, under the editorship of Dr. Oscar Levy. This edition will appear in eighteen volumes, including the autobiography, 'Ecce Homo,' 'Thoughts out of Season,' 'The Birth of Tragedy' (with introduction by the philosopher's sister), 'Thus Spake Zarathustra,' 'Beyond Good and Evil,' and 'The Future of our Educational Institutions' will be ready this spring, and will be followed later in the year by 'Human, all-too-Human,' 'The Gay Science,' and 'The Will to Power.'

AT the annual meeting of the Scottish Record Society, Sir James Balfour Paul said the Council had been thinking of issuing county records simultaneously with the Edinburgh records. There was a manuscript which had been found in the Sheriff Clerk's office in Edinburgh supposed to be lists of the liabilities of persons who declared themselves to be unable to meet the sums levied upon them by Cromwell in 1656. Mr. W. Moir Bryce suggested the copying and printing of inventories such as had been compiled by Mr. Maitland Thomson and Mr. Matthew Livingstone.

DR. GEORGE NEILSON read three papers to the Old Glasgow Club on Monday night, one being a notice of the 'Song of Otterburn,' a Latin poem written after 1388 by Thomas of Barry, a Canon of Glasgow. Dr. Neilson regards him as the earliest Glasgow author whose literary record has survived.

MR. PETER MCNEILL, of Tranent, Haddingtonshire, recently received a birthday gift of 300*l.*, half of which was from Government funds, the other half being the contributions of friends. Mr. McNeill, who was sent to work in the mines at nine, gave up ten years later, owing to ill-health, and latterly kept a shop in Tranent. He has published histories of Tranent and Prestonpans, and is now engaged on a history of mines and mining from the earliest time to the present.

THE KING OF ITALY has promised to assist at the opening of the Keats-Shelley Memorial House in Rome on April 3rd. Funds collected in America and the United Kingdom justify the Memorial Association in concluding the purchase of the house in the Piazza di Spagna where Keats died, and where numerous relics of the poet are already housed, with a collection of items concerning Keats, Shelley, and other contemporary authors. But at least 500*l.* is still needed to pay off an overdraft at the bank, and to equip the house properly for the purposes of the Association. Mr. Frederick Harrison has kindly offered to the Committee a literary and artistic matinée at the Haymarket Theatre, with the object of enabling them to raise the necessary funds.

MISS CHARLOTTE FELL SMITH writes to claim the authorship of an article we ascribed to Mr. Fell Smith in our notice of 'Memorials of Old Essex,' and thinks the reviewer might have recognized one who has been acting editor of The Essex Review for many years.

MR. ELLIOT STOCK announces for immediate publication 'Balkania: a Short History of the Balkan States,' by Mr. William Howard-Flanders. The same firm will also publish a new novel by E. M. Forbes, entitled 'The Love-Tale of a Misanthrope.'

THE REV. J. P. MAHAFFY, C.V.O., will represent the University of Dublin at the 75-year feast of the University of Louvain on the 9th of May next.

THE manuscript of Thoreau's 'Walden' has lately come into the possession of the Boston Bibliophile Society, and is shortly to be printed. It is said to contain some twelve thousand words excised by the publishers of the book.

THE Revue des Deux Mondes is giving to the world an unfinished and hitherto unpublished novel by Taine, entitled 'Étienne Mayran.' M. Paul Bourget, in an introduction to this work, the existence of which has long been known, protests against the prejudice which confines an author to a special line, and says that Taine, on his own confession, gave up his novel because he found he had unconsciously copied Stendhal. We cannot regret in these days of superabundant fiction the loss of a possibly good novelist in a great historian.

THE Seventy-Second Annual Report of the Booksellers' Provident Institution shows the receipts to have been 2,768*l.* last year, as against 2,400*l.* for 1907; but as the former amount includes 400*l.* from Mrs. Harriet Goodchild, there is a diminution of ordinary income on the year, while the amount expended in assistance to necessitous members has increased by 50*l.* Twenty-eight new members joined during the year. Three members succeeded in obtaining Old-Age Pensions, and we are glad to know that it has been decided to leave them in the enjoyment of both sources of income. After the annual meeting on Tuesday last, at which Mr. Charles James Longman presided, a pleasant conversazione was held, when the Lord Mayor delivered an address, followed by an excellent musical programme.

AMONG recent Parliamentary Papers of interest we note: Cost of Living in French Towns (4*s.* 1*d.*); Royal Commission on Afforestation, Evidence and Appendices (5*s.* 3*d.*); Report on a Tour through the Eastern Province of Uganda (3½*d.*); and Table of Holiday Courses on the Continent (2*d.*).

SCIENCE

OUR LIBRARY TABLE.

The Mechanical Production of Cold. By J. E. Ewing. (Cambridge, University Press.)—The author was perhaps wise to state that this book is a reprint of lectures delivered before the Society of Arts so long ago as 1897, but so much has been added that was not available at that time that he would have been justified in sending forth the volume as a new treatise on the subject, saying that it was based on the Howard Lectures.

A large portion of this book—as of any work dealing with a special branch of science—will interest only those who are more or less familiar with the phenomena dealt with, but the man who takes an intelligent interest in matters affecting our daily life cannot fail to find in Mr. Ewing's pages much that will appeal to him. He will learn, for instance, that a temperature infinitely lower than anything which occurs in nature can be produced by an "engine" driven by heat, and that the extreme cold thus obtained is used to extract oxygen from the air, the oxygen in turn being employed in the oxy-acetylene blowpipe, where the enormous temperature of 3500° Centigrade is generated, by means of which iron two inches or more in thickness can be "cut" right through, the heat being so concentrated and localized that the "cut" or line of fusion is no wider than a quarter of an inch! Liquid oxygen—another product of the refrigerating machine—was used, in combination with other ingredients, as an explosive during the excavation of the Simplon tunnel.

Mechanical refrigeration is also used in breweries and in candle-making; by its means artificial skating-rinks are created; it enters into the manufacture of dynamite and cordite; and silkworms' eggs are by its agency kept from hatching out until there are mulberry leaves for the worms to feed on.

In well-sinking, if the boring tool enters a stratum saturated with "bad" water, cold air is pumped down the hole until the surrounding ground is frozen hard; the boring can then be carried down with ease until solid ground is reached. This process has also been used in cutting a railway tunnel where the incursion of water was troublesome.

On refrigeration and "cold storage" a large proportion of mankind is dependent for supplies of fresh meat, fish, and other perishable articles of diet. In this connexion it is interesting to note that "cold stores" are built with walls unbroken by doors or windows, the only access being through the roof. The reason for this is that the cold air, which is very much heavier than warm air, would flow out like water from any aperture near the ground level.

The modern substitutes for gunpowder deteriorate, and become liable to explode spontaneously, in warm temperatures, especially in confined spaces such as the magazines of warships; but the danger of such accidents is now prevented by the installation of refrigerating machines which keep the temperature of the magazines within proper limits.

These are a few of the interesting facts to be gleaned from Mr. Ewing's pages, and while the book is intended primarily for scientific readers, it is in the main couched in language readily intelligible to the general public. As there is only one half-tone block in the book, there seems to be no reason for employing a paper the glossy surface of which renders the task of reading it a trial to the eyes. The line blocks, of which there are many, are well designed to illustrate the text.

Scientific Ideas of To-day. By Charles R. Gibson. (Seeley & Co.)—The design of this book is sufficiently ambitious, inasmuch as Mr. Gibson proposes on his title-page to give "a popular account of the nature of matter, electricity, light, heat, &c., &c., in non-technical language," and this large claim is, perhaps, indicative of a certain looseness of thought and expression to be met with in the body of the book. It is needless to say that Mr. Gibson does not explain the nature of electricity—which remains for the present a puzzle of which no solution has been even suggested—nor do anything more than summarize the views of some of the best-accredited teachers of the present day as to the other questions on which he touches. But it may be said at once that what he does he does well, and the uninstructed reader after a perusal of this book will have a much clearer idea of the nature of the problems before him than he would be likely to derive from his unaided imagination. This is not to say that the book is of equal excellence throughout, for, while in some matters the author has evidently a clear grip of his subject, there are others in which he is as evidently trusting blindly to the conclusions of others, not always with the happiest results.

Mr. Gibson early commits himself to the uncompromising theories of the nature of electrical action and of matter at present professed at Cambridge. "Prof. J. J. Thomson's theory," we are told, "seems to stand head and shoulders above all others," the reason assigned being that its "mathematics have been so beautifully worked out." Following on this, the beginner is invited to believe that all matter is "composed of atoms, and these atoms are nothing more or less than little spheres of positive electricity within which tiny units of negative electricity are constantly revolving in certain definite orbits, the one atom only differing from another in the number and arrangement of its negative units or electrons," and that "all the waves in the ether are transverse vibrations," and "are caused by moving [negative] electrons," which act, apparently, through the electric and magnetic fields surrounding them upon the compressible medium that Mr. Gibson postulates. Yet, as has been said more than once in these columns, no amount of mathematical analysis can enable Sir Joseph Thomson's theory here stated to overcome its own inconsistencies, and the existence of positive electrons, to the recognition of which even Cambridge physicists are gradually coming, upsets it. Moreover, Prof. Kaufmann's experiment on the indeformability of the electron, on which alone rests the assumption that all mass is electro-magnetic, and that all matter consists on final analysis of negative electrons, has been challenged by M. Henri Poincaré, and was shown to be untrustworthy at the Naturforscherversammlung held last autumn at Cologne.

In such matters Mr. Gibson has, perhaps, erred by following implicitly guides who, distinguished as they are, are only, like the rest of us, still groping falteringly towards the light; but he is not above making mistakes on his own account. Thus, he tells us that "the old Ptolemaic theory could not satisfactorily explain the planetary motions"; but this is exactly what it did do. With the help of a hypothetical system of epicycloids the Ptolemaic astronomers accounted fairly for all the apparent motions of the planets, the only difficulty being that although the mathematics of the theory were, in Mr. Gibson's phrase,

"so beautifully worked out," the theory itself corresponded to nothing in nature. Again, he says that "elaborate experiments" made with floating magnets "have verified the arrangements suggested by purely mathematical calculations"; but we know of no experiments that have been made in the matter since Sir Joseph Thomson's repetition of the original one of Mayer. Nor do we think Mr. Gibson is very happy when he defines force as "any cause which alters a body's state of rest or of uniform motion in a straight line"; for whether the motion be in a straight line or a curve makes no difference to the definition, and he might further have noticed that his definition holds good only if applied to a material point. Of energy, which he says in one place is to be distinguished from force, he never, so far as we can see, gives any definition at all. Moreover, it was on the discharge of electrified bodies by ultra-violet light, and not, as Mr. Gibson states, on the charge of unelectrified matter by the same agency, that Hertz wrote; and "inter-atomic energy," as he more than once spells it, would mean energy between, instead of within, the atoms. The latter sense is the one demanded by the context.

When Mr. Gibson turns from such matters to those that have either been longer settled or have been less confused by the discoveries of the last decade, he becomes, however, not only accurate, but also instructive. Thus there is little, if any, fault to be found with what he says on the subject of light; and his explanation of the spectrum, and of reflection, refraction, and polarization, leaves nothing to be desired on the score of clearness. Particularly is this the case with the subject of colour, which, as he says, is extremely difficult for the "ordinary" (that is, the uninstructed) person to understand. His hypothesis that the "selective property," as he puts it, of substances "for the absorption of certain wave-lengths," is due to the speed of rotation of their electrons, is not, indeed, new, but we have never seen it stated before in a form so easily intelligible, and there is no doubt he is right in the physiological additions he here makes to it. His remarks on the spectroscopy and its use in the chemistry of the stars and other heavenly bodies are both clear and trustworthy, and his account of the Zeeman and Doppler effects an excellent specimen of lucid exposition. That he gives us no great information in his chapters on the origin of life, and the nature of gravitation, is, perhaps, due to the fact that nothing is to be found in the usual textbooks on these subjects, which have, no doubt, been included in the present work from a striving after completeness.

To sum up, then, we think Mr. Gibson's is an honest, able, and useful book, though perhaps less suited to the beginner than he fancies. Its occasional inaccuracies and too great dependence on authority might cause a person unacquainted with science to conceive many ideas that he would have to get rid of later. On the other hand, he who is sufficiently interested in its subject to have followed, no matter at how great a distance, the advances which have been made since the discovery of the Röntgen rays, will know how to read between the lines, and find much that will help to clarify and co-ordinate his views.

ANTHROPOLOGICAL NOTES.

THE Proceedings of the Society of Anthropologists for the session of 1907-8, which have just been issued, contain matter of interest to anthropologists. Lord Avebury in his retiring address as President reviewed the anthropological work of the year at some length. He referred to the volume of essays presented to Prof. Tylor, to the controversies on the origin and development of the family, to the question of totems, to the supposed Australian belief in an All-Father, to the antiquity of Avebury (which Sir Norman Lockyer dates at 3500 B.C.), and the antiquity of man.

The report on the excavations carried out by the Red Hills Exploration Committee is full, occupying 50 pages and being illustrated by 27 figures. These hills—some of them several acres in size—consist of deposits of red burnt clay, intermingled with fragments of rude pottery, some of it prehistoric, and exist to the number of several hundreds, mainly along the margins of the estuaries and tidal rivers of Essex. Mr. F. W. Reader superintended the excavation of several of these hills; and the geology, chemistry, archaeology, and botany of the remains were described by other authorities.

Another interesting record of excavation is that at Harborough Cave, near Brassington, Derbyshire. Here Mr. W. S. Fox reports, and Mr. Reginald Smith describes the discovery of a number of objects—bone needles, bone prickers, spindle whorls of antler and stone, a hand comb, a perforated and worked tip of an antler, and a bronze brooch set with coral. Mr. Smith's conclusion is that the cave was used in the first and second centuries of our era, and perhaps two or three hundred years earlier, by people who were in touch with the pre-Roman civilization of Yorkshire.

The National Trust for Places of Historic Interest or Natural Beauty is making an attempt to secure White Barrow, near Tilshead, Wiltshire, which will be the first occasion on which it has noticed a property of purely anthropological importance. It has the sympathy of the Royal Anthropological Institute, and it is hoped that those who are interested in the study of anthropology will support it, and thus make misuse of the barrow impossible. The barrow is 255 ft. long, 156 ft. wide, and 8 ft. high.

The Bristol Kyrle Society has been fortunate in securing Stokeleigh Camp in Leigh Woods, Clifton, through the munificence of Mr. George A. Wills, and in raising a sustentation fund to preserve it. A trust has been formed of representatives of archaeological and other societies interested, who will undertake the conservation of the camp and the woods in its neighbourhood. Mr. James Baker is to be congratulated on the success of his exertions in the matter.

The Prehistoric Congress of France will hold its fifth session at Beauvais from the 26th to the 31st of July. Excursions have been arranged to the dolmens and menhirs at Trie-Château, Bourg, and Sérifontaine, to Cæsar's Camp at Hermes, and to Compiègne and Mont-Sainte-Geneviève.

In Man for March the Rev. H. G. O. Kendall figures and describes: 1, a beautiful little arrowhead of flint found in Dorset, length 3 centimetres, breadth 18 millimetres; 2, another of unusual type, leaf-shaped, but modified by a small piece having been removed from the edge on each side; 3, a small bronze tool (weight $\frac{1}{4}$ oz.) found near Marlborough.

Mr. J. R. Mortimer contributes to Man a paper on the stature and cephalic index of the prehistoric men whose remains are preserved in the Mortimer Museum at Driffield. These are (a) 101 of the late Neolithic or early Bronze Age, (b) 53 of the early Iron Age, (c) 61 of the Anglo-Saxon period. The computed stature of (a) is from 5 ft. 6 in. to 5 ft. 7 in., with a slight advantage in favour of the dolichocephalic individuals.

SOCIETIES.

LINNEAN.—March 4.—Dr. D. H. Scott, President, in the chair.—Mr. W. A. Clarke, Mr. F. Hicks, and Miss I. M. Roper were elected Fellows.—Mr. R. A. Rolfe exhibited flowers of several crosses derived from the hybrid Epidendrum kewense and its parents, which showed Mendelian phenomena. Dr. A. B. Rendle and Prof. F. E. Weiss contributed some remarks.—Prof. Weiss exhibited specimens of the curious development of the roots of a sycamore which had grown on very stony soil, and further illustrated the developments by lantern-slides. Dr. O. Stapf, Mr. J. C. Shennstone, and the President remarked upon the phenomena thus shown.—Miss L. S. Gibbs read a paper entitled 'A Contribution to the Montane Flora of Fiji, including Cryptogams, with Ecological Notes.' An animated discussion followed, in which Dr. A. B. Rendle, Mr. R. A. Rolfe, Prof. P. Groom, Dr. O. Stapf, Mr. J. Hopkinson, Mr. A. P. Young, Mr. T. A. Sprague, Mr. A. Groves, and Mr. Clement Reid took part.

ZOOLOGICAL.—March 2.—Mr. G. A. Boulenger, V.P., in the chair.—Mr. R. H. Burne exhibited specimens of elastic mechanisms in fishes and a snake which had been prepared for the museum of the Royal College of Surgeons.—Dr. R. F. Scharff exhibited a number of reindeer bones and antlers, obtained from Irish caves, which displayed marks showing that they had been gnawed by different kinds of animals, probably in some cases by rodents.—Mr. R. I. Pocock exhibited the skulls of some leopards, and called attention to the differences in skulls from Africa and India, and the evidence afforded by them as to the existence of a small and a large type of leopard in Africa.—Miss Margaret Poole read a paper on 'The Development of the Subdivisions of the Pleuro-peritoneal Cavity in Birds,' and illustrated her remarks with lantern-slides.—A paper entitled 'The Growth of the Shell of Patella vulgata, L.,' was received from Mr. E. S. Russell.—Mr. Frank Balfour-Browne presented a paper on 'The Life-History of the Agrionid Dragonfly.'—Mr. C. Davies Sherborn communicated a paper by Mr. W. D. Lang, entitled 'Growth-Stages in the British Species of the Coral Genus Parasmilia.'

INSTITUTION OF CIVIL ENGINEERS.—March 9.—Mr. J. C. Inglis, President, in the chair.—The paper read was 'Concrete and Masonry Dam Construction in New South Wales,' by Mr. L. A. B. Wade.

ANTHROPOLOGICAL INSTITUTE.—March 9.—Mr. Henry Balfour, past-President, and afterwards Sir Henry Howarth in the chair.—The election of Messrs. H. Higgins, B. E. Nicholls, and Edwin Smith as Fellows was announced.—Dr. C. G. Seligmann read a paper on 'The Veddas,' in which he gave a description of the manners and customs of these people. A most interesting feature of these customs is the cult of the dead, which has given rise to a series of dances, often pantomimic in character, and so perhaps in the nature of imitative magic, and accompanied by offerings of food to the spirits of the departed. These dances are performed especially by men who have been trained to invoke the spirits of the dead. The use of a ceremonial arrow, with a blade over a foot long and with a short handle, is an indispensable feature of some of these ceremonies, in all of which the chief actor becomes possessed by one or more of the spirits he invokes.

MATHEMATICAL.—March 11.—Prof. W. Burnside, V.P., in the chair.—The following papers were communicated: 'The Transformation of the Electrodynamical Equations and the Laws of Motion,' by Mr. H. Bateman, 'The Transformation of the Electrodynamical Equations of Moving Bodies,' by Mr. E. Cunningham, 'The Kinetic Image of a Convected Electric System formed in a Conducting Plane Sheet,' by Prof. J. Larmor, 'On an Integral Equation,' by Mr. G. H. Hardy, and 'On Term-by-Term Integration of Oscillating Series,' by Dr. W. H. Young.—Mr. A. L. Dixon gave a preliminary account of 'Some Further Researches in the Theory of Elimination.'

FARADAY.—March 2.—Dr. N. T. M. Wilsmore in the chair.—Dr. V. H. Veley read a paper 'On the Rate of Evolution of Gases from Homogeneous Liquids.'

MEETINGS NEXT WEEK.

Mon. Society of Arts, 8.—'Steam Turbines,' Lecture I., Mr. G. G. Stoney. (Cantor Lecture.)
—Surveyors' Institution, 8.—Discussion on 'Giant London.'

Mon. Geographical, 8.30.—'The Colorado Canyon: some of its Lessons,' Prof. W. M. Davis.
Tues. Royal Institution, 3.—'The Evolution of the Brain as an Organ of Mind,' Lecture V., Prof. F. W. Mott.
—Institution of Civil Engineers, 8.—'Construction and Wear of Roads,' Mr. A. Mallock.
—Anthropological Institute, 8.15.—'Flint Implements of the "Older Series" from Ireland,' Miss N. F. Layard; 'Melanesians and Polynesians,' Rev. Dr. Brown.
Wed. British Numismatic, 8.—'Some Medals and Tokens connected with the London Stock Exchange,' Mr. J. B. Caldecott; 'A Parcel of Stycas from the York Find of 1842,' Mr. N. Heywood.
—Geological, 8.—'Glacial Erosion in North Wales,' Prof. W. M. Davis.
—Society of Arts, 8.—'Afforestation and Timber Planting in Great Britain and Ireland,' Dr. J. Nisbet.
Thurs. Royal Institution, 3.—'Aerial Flight in Theory and Practice,' Lecture I., Prof. G. H. Bryan.
—Chemical, 4.—Annual Meeting; President's Address on 'Elements and Electrons.'
—Royal, 4.30.
—Society of Arts, 4.30.—'Native Man in Southern India,' Mr. Edgar Thurston.
—Institution of Electrical Engineers, 8.—'The Electrical System of the London County Council Tramways,' Mr. J. H. Rider.
—Society of Antiquaries, 8.30.
Fri. Physical, 5.—'Note on the Production of Steady Electric Oscillations in Closed Circuits and a Method of testing Radiotelegraphic Receivers,' Prof. J. A. Fleming and Mr. G. B. Dyke; 'The Effect of an Air Blast upon the Spark Discharge of a Condenser charged by an Induction Coil or Transformer,' Prof. Fleming and Mr. H. W. Richardson; 'On the Action between Metals and Acids and the Conditions under which Mercury causes Evolution of Hydrogen,' Dr. S. W. J. Smith.
—Royal Institution, 9.—'Recent Results of Astronomical Research,' Mr. A. Eddington.
Sat. Royal Institution, 3.—'Properties of Matter,' Lecture V., Prof. Sir J. J. Thomson.

Science Gossip.

At a recent meeting of the Royal Irish Academy Dr. R. F. Scharff lectured on the Irish horse and its early history. He contended that the Irish horse was of Libyan origin. The most complete remains of the horse yet discovered in Ireland were obtained not long since by Mr. George Coffey in the Craigwarren Crannog, co. Antrim. The human implements and weapons found with these remains implied that the occupation of the crannog dated back to early Christian times. Their resemblance to the Arab type of horse was as striking as in the modern Connemara pony.

PROF. MAX WOLF announces the discovery, at Königstuhl, Heidelberg, of a variable star in the constellation Ursa Major. It is very near the edge of the nebula Messier 101, and was found to be of the tenth magnitude on the 21st ult. It was not registered on a plate taken on April 5th, 1907, which contained stars down to the seventeenth magnitude, so that its range of variability must be large. It is stated that it was once before registered at the Lick Observatory, when its magnitude was somewhat less than the Heidelberg observation gives it; but the date of the former is unknown. In a general list the star will be reckoned as var. 6, 1909, Ursæ Majoris.

THE first Report of Mr. Hough as His Majesty's Astronomer at the Cape of Good Hope has been received, and relates to the two years 1906 and 1907, Sir David Gill having retired on the 20th of February in the latter year. No substantial additions to the instrumental equipment were made during the period under notice, but experiments have been conducted with a view to the introduction of a clockwork motion for driving the travelling wire of the Repsold micrometer attached to the new transit-circle; and a reinvestigation was made of the circles of the transit instrument in order to ascertain whether they showed any trace of flexure in their own planes, with a negative result. The meridian instruments have been chiefly used for miscellaneous observations of stars, especially of those selected from a list for the formation of a Fundamental Catalogue. All the exterior planets have been systematically observed with the heliometer, whilst the equatorials have been principally employed in the observation of occultations and casual phenomena. The astrographic telescope has been devoted to the completion of the Cape zones of the great photographic chart; and the Victoria telescope and Laboratory to the photography of stellar spectra for the determination of radial velocities by means of the four-prism spectrograph. The meteorological and seismographical observations have been regularly continued. Further operations for the geodetic survey of South Africa are chronicled; the fieldwork in Northern Rhodesia was brought to a close at the end of December, 1906. When Mr. Hough took charge of the Observatory in succession to Sir David Gill, Dr. J. K. E. Halm was appointed Chief Assistant, and arrived at the Observatory on June 30th, 1907.

THE Forty-First Report of the Board of Visitors to the Melbourne Observatory has been received, together with that of the Government Astronomer of Victoria (Mr. Baracchi) for the period from December 1st, 1906, to April 30th, 1908. Since the death of Mr. Ellery, Mr. T. R. Lyle has been Chairman of the Board. A Chief Assistant has been again appointed at the Observatory, Mr. J. M. Baldwin, who had till recently been working at Potsdam, and did not arrive at Melbourne until last November. At the end of 1907 the meteorological work and staff were transferred to the new Weather Bureau under the Commonwealth Government. The meridian observations have been carried on regularly, and the astrographic work for the Melbourne zone is in a forward state. Mr. Baracchi concludes his Report with a strong recommendation that a Solar Physics Department should be established at the Adelaide Observatory. That at Melbourne, he says,

"is not at present in a position to undertake the work of a complete solar station, for which new special equipment and increased staff would be necessary; but failing the above suggestion or any other proposal for Australian co-operation as requested, a useful part of the photographic programme could be done at the Melbourne Observatory by bringing into systematic use the existing photoheliograph of 4 inches aperture, with which pictures of the sun's disc 8 inches in diameter could be obtained on every favourable day in the year, provided that an additional expenditure of 200*l.* per annum were allowed."

DR. J. PALISA communicates to Nos. 4310-4311 of the Astronomische Nachrichten the results of a large number of observations of small planets (chiefly of those discovered last year) obtained with the 27-inch refractor of the Vienna Observatory.

IN the latter number details are reported with respect to the bands of aqueous vapour which have lately been noticed at the Lowell Observatory in the spectrum of Mars. These bands are in the extreme red part of the spectrum, and are comparable in intensity with (though somewhat fainter than) those which have been noticed in the spectrum of our moon. It need hardly be remarked that the intensity in question is very small.

FINE ARTS

Fonts and Font Covers. By Francis Bond. (Frowde.)

MR. BOND is to be congratulated on his new work on 'Fonts and Font Covers.' There was no necessity for him to apologize for its production, for although numerous valuable papers on special series of fonts—such as those on leaden fonts, those illustrative of the Seven Sacraments, or those of particular counties or districts—have been produced during recent years, there has been no genuine monograph dealing with the subject as a whole since the issue of two volumes more than sixty years ago, the one by Mr. F. Simpson, and the other by Mr. F. A. Paley; and in both of those cases the survey was comparatively limited in extent. In Mr. Simpson's work only forty fonts were illustrated, whilst in Mr. Paley's later volume the number merely amounted to a hundred and twenty-three. The plates in both books were of necessity reproduced from drawings, which were in each case of much beauty and merit. But, as Mr. Bond remarks in his Preface, drawings are apt to be inaccurate; they cannot, however attractive, be relied upon for the scientific exactness of a photograph. The present volume marks a great step in advance in both the quantity and carefulness of the descriptive letterpress, especially in the number of illustrations, which amount to four hundred and twenty-six; of these by far the greater number have never appeared before, while the more important examples are produced on a generous scale.

The number, variety, beauty, and interest of the fonts and font covers will probably come as a surprise to not a few educated and well-travelled Englishmen. Competent authorities are of opinion that there is no other part of Christendom where such an extensive series of examples—"infinite in number as in diversity of design"—can be found as in England; and this is especially the case with our less-known country churches, where the old Norman or Early English font is not infrequently the one surviving relic left unharmed after a succession of drastic restorations.

The first section of this book is concerned with the story of baptism, wherein are discussed its original import, the methods of administration, the baptistery and its piscina, and the transformation of the baptistery tank into a tub font, a font on legs, a pedestal font, a chalice font, and even a metal basin or earthenware bowl. This, doubtless, is the portion of the book most open to criticism of a theological description. We note that the archæological evidence from early sculpture and painting as to the manner of the administration of the rite has been already collected and published by Mr. Clement Rogers in his 'Baptism and Christian Archæology.'

The second part of Mr. Bond's work discusses the classification of fonts and their symbolism, together with the exceptional materials of which they are sometimes formed, such as various metals and brick. Other chapters of this section deal with the conversion of pagan altars, Roman columns, or the shafts of Christian crosses into fonts, and with the inscriptions with which they are occasionally ornamented. Mr. Bond deals ingeniously with their classification, dividing them in the first instance into unmounted fonts and fonts mounted on legs. Unmounted fonts, which rest directly on the floor or on a plinth, without the interposition of pedestals or shafts, are subdivided into (1) cylindrical, (2) rectangular, (3) polygonal, (4) caldrons, and (5) block fonts. Mounted fonts are subdivided into those of which the bowl rests on several legs, and those in which it rests on one leg or pedestal. The chapter which deals with appendages to fonts is of great value, for wild statements are often printed on this subject. The chief reason for the occasional projecting basins that are found near the rims of a few ancient fonts, such as that of Youlgreave, Derbyshire, was to supply a receptacle for the water which dripped from the child's head, and was not to be allowed to fall again into the font itself. In cases where there was no such permanent receptacle, a portable basin was used for the purpose. This is in accordance with the present Rituale Romanum; in many modern cases the actual bowl of the font is divided into two parts for this purpose. This use also explains the gifts in mediæval days of silver font-bowls, as not infrequently mentioned in wills. It is strange to find Mr. Bond suggesting that such gifts support the idea that small fonts or basins were in old days placed within the big font, for economical or more handy use. This practice, however, of baptizing from a small bowl or movable basin is purely of Puritanical origin. As is stated in these pages, if 'The Directory of Public Worship' of Commonwealth origin be consulted it will be found that fonts proper were distinctly prohibited. Mr. Bond makes use of a word we do not like, "fontlet," to describe the diminutive stone fonts that are occasionally found in churches. Broadly, such "fontlets" are all of common or domestic origin, and have been ignorantly introduced into churches in modern days by those who fancied that they were intended for ecclesiastical purposes. Every homestead in old days used to possess its mortar or mortars for the pounding of various grains, vegetables, or meat in culinary operations; and occasionally of larger size for the preparing of meal for the pigs. We know a case in Derbyshire in which a pig-meal mortar has been transferred to a newly erected church, and there serves as a font. Such mortars were usually strengthened by projecting ribs at the angles. So far as we can judge from a photograph, the present Conway "font" seems to be a large secular mortar.

The chapter on inscribed fonts is full of information and particularly well illustrated. The most valuable of these are the pre-Conquest fonts of Bridekirk, Cumberland, Potterne, Wiltshire, and Little Billing, Northamptonshire. There are, however, far more instances of actual old inscriptions given in 'English Church Furniture' in the series of "Antiquary's Books."

The third part divides English fonts into those of pre-Norman date, and those of designs attributed respectively to the twelfth, thirteenth, fourteenth, fifteenth, and sixteenth centuries, as well as those of the post-Reformation period. As to pre-Conquest fonts, the ornamental features of those of Deerhurst, Gloucestershire, Edmond and Bucknall, Salop, and a few others point distinctly to Anglo-Saxon workmanship; but with regard to a considerable number of rude and undoubtedly early examples, it is mere guesswork as to whether they are Saxon or Norman. It is possible that Mr. Bond may be right in often favouring the former supposition. The considerable beauties and great variety of Norman fonts are adequately treated. We are particularly glad to find good illustrations of such fonts as those of Fincham, Cowlam, Coleshill, Southrop, Locking, and Bodmin which are much more rarely illustrated than the better-known examples of the Winchester type.

As to post-Reformation fonts a note of warning is needful, because when stone fonts became again obligatory after the restoration of episcopacy in 1660, various fonts, that had been ejected into the churchyard or elsewhere, were brought back into the church; and in honour of their being restored and occasionally repaired, the date 1660, 1661, or 1662 was cut upon them, although they were in reality of far greater age. This was done, for instance, with a Norman font at Parwich, Derbyshire. Nevertheless there are some fairly good fonts that were sculptured with no little care at that particular period. A good example is that of Wirksworth, Derbyshire; but the most striking Restoration font in England is that in Orston Church, Nottinghamshire, to which Mr. Bond does not allude. It is a fine piece of carving after a mediæval model, but at the same time shows originality. Mr. Bond's pages are not entirely silent as to the fonts of classical shape and design to be found in some of Wren's churches and others of that period. Though usually too small, they are often of considerable merit, and the design, not only of bowl and pedestal, but also of the covers, is excellent of its kind. In not a few cases they have been discarded in favour of "imitation Gothic" successors. Mr. Bond pictures two good examples of these classical fonts and their covers, namely, those of St. Stephen, Walbrook, and St. Catherine Cree. We could wish he had given us at least one example of those of Nicholas Stone. Perhaps his best example is the marble pedestal font of Great Stanmore, which is dated 1634. It was made for the fine brick church consecrated by Laud when Bishop of London in 1632. Laud's church is now in ruins, having been superseded by a pretentious successor in 1849. At that time Queen Adelaide gave a big Gothic font; but happily Stone's beautiful font, with an excellently carved contemporary cover, has been placed in the new church, and is, we believe, occasionally used. There are also fonts by Stone in the churches of St. Andrew Undershaft (1631), of All Hallows, London Wall, and probably of St. Margaret, Westminster.

A long section on font covers, the joint work of Mr. Bond and Mr. F. C. Eden, forms the fourth and concluding part of this valuable book. The splendid tabernacled lofty cover of Ufford is well illustrated, besides the somewhat similar examples of Sudbury St. Peter, North Walsham, Hepworth, Castleacre, and others. There are also illustrations of the two most remarkable examples of font covers, namely, those of Thaxted and Littlebury, which embrace the font itself, and, whilst towering up above the font, are provided at the front with hinged doors to give access to the bowl. The instances named and the description supplied form the first serious attempt to deal with this interesting adjunct to English baptismal fonts, of which far more numerous examples remain than is generally supposed to be the case. We think that the best extant specimens are here pictured, or at least described; but there are a large number of other cases which are not mentioned. It is, for instance, a little surprising that neither of the beautiful old Middlesex font covers is even named, viz., those of Heston and Littleton; and at least a score of other noteworthy covers could be readily set forth. These remarks, however, are not made with any intention of belittling the value of this section of the book, but merely to point out that its publication need not in any way interfere with the appearance of a good monograph on font covers.

THE WORK OF THE LATE R. SPENCER STANHOPE.

A COLLECTION of work by this serious follower of Burne-Jones is gathered at the Carfax Gallery, and in the Preface to the Catalogue Mr. W. De Morgan (once known as potter, but now as novelist) improves the occasion by demonstrating the changed commercial condition of the painter since the advent of photography in its latest developments of realism. Exaggerating somewhat the intrinsic superiority of the latter to the efforts of the modern illustrator who has to compete with it, but not in the least exaggerating the economic disaster such rivalry means to the artist, he concludes that art must henceforth have for its object "creation," and not record.

While we entirely agree that this conclusion is in practice a wise one, and indeed so recently as last week were urging that the changed objective inevitable for the next generation of painters should be faced, we yet cannot see in the work of Spencer Stanhope a fortunately chosen example of the superiority of one aim to the other. Seriously convinced as he was that he was aiming at something higher than mere record, he was, both by his natural gifts and the nature of his training, forbidden success in any but the more obvious aim. Naively bent on imitation of some few inches of flower-covered earth, he sometimes, as in Aphrodite (15), achieved a passage of painting of some charm; but into the means by which—either through form or colour—painting attains expressiveness in more abstract regions, he never had much clear insight, nor does he seem to have been favoured, as was from time to time Burne-Jones, with those moments of plenary inspiration when instinct and sentiment take the place of actual knowledge, and suffice. Occasionally, as in the sickly rose and green of the 'Aphrodite' already referred to, a colour-scheme of some poignancy seems to have been half revealed; but the mood passed before the picture was complete, and the painter's efforts to fill in the gaps show failure to grasp the conditions to which what he seemed to have secured owed its validity. More often his only idea of a colour-scheme is the placing of a peculiarly excruciating note of pink in a setting of grisaille, which cannot but be soothing by comparison. A water-colour, The Bathers (8), is an example of the same negative use of colour without the disturbing note, and is harmonious in the depressing fashion which belongs to a timid colourist.

Timidity and lack of independence were indeed handicaps of this school—that is to say, of those of the English Pre-Raphaelites who cherished the ambition of design as opposed to the realists like Millais or Mr. Holman Hunt; and it is interesting in this connexion to speculate whether their close sympathy with the Oxford Movement was not perhaps a source of weakness in the artistic sense, in that it inclined them to an almost blind acceptance of authority. Certainly the history of British pictorial design at that period points in encouraging fashion to the paramount value of strenuous individual research—of that critical study which makes the achievements of the past points of departure for free development, not models for uncomprehending imitation. Lacking these qualities, the school of design which based itself on the earlier masters resulted in very little, in the domain of painting at any rate; even the frankly realistic departure from convention of Millais has more abiding value. Stevens and Watts undertook the far more difficult task of carrying on the tradition of the later painters, whose more complex achievement (including as it does much dross with its gold) is so full of danger as apparently to warn off followers; yet, thanks to the masculine discernment with which they took from their masters only what was of use to themselves, they succeeded in building up the stronger and more enduring art.

THE WATER-COLOUR, PASTEL, AND DRAWING SALON.

THIS, the first exhibition of a new series at the Goupil Gallery, shows a certain phase of modern art more fully, and certainly more happily, than any previous exhibition in London on the same scale. To the mind of many of the more modern painters of to-day, water-colour is a medium essentially unsuitable for the production of elaborate paintings, and its proper field is the slight, if not necessarily unconsidered sketch which charms chiefly by its spontaneity. We are by no means prepared to accept such a dictum as one of the eternal canons of art, but it would be idle to deny that at the present day the greater part of what fine water-colour is done, is done within such boundaries. The present show demonstrates how much and how varied brilliance is expended to-day on these apparent trifles. To many of the artists here represented water-colour is, we should imagine, a comparatively new field of experiment. It has for them the zest of novelty, and they come to it in the intervals of work of a more strenuous order.

Sketches done in such circumstances are the main feature of this exhibition, and their vigorous handling and often dazzling lightness of key make them dangerous neighbours for the few artists who send work of more elaborate character. Mr. W. G. von Glehn's The River (174) and Mr. Frank Carter's Outskirts of Toledo (203) may be noticed as examples of successful handling of a high key of colour by artists we had not known hitherto as water-colour painters. They are as deftly coloured, if not so brilliantly drawn as the wonderful drawings (190 and 191) by the veteran Mr. Francis James alongside. So also Mr. Tom Mostyn, hitherto known only as an oil painter, sends one drawing, The Sky (6), astonishingly powerful in its handling of deeper tones of colour, though he might be incapable of Mr. George Thomson's more deliberate handling of tones as rich, but more under the control of the painter. Threshing (72), The Ramparts, Montreuil (152), and The Butter Market, Montreuil (179), are excellent examples by the latter artist.

So large a proportion of the exhibits are successful within the limits of their intentions that we can only enumerate a few of the more important; to wit, the well-planned designs of sober colour by Mr. H. M. Livens (200 and 208); the pastel by Mr. James Aumonier (157); the blunt statement of a vivid effect by Mr. James Pryde (161); the caricatures of Mr. Max Beerbohm (136, 138, and 140); the Prado interior by Sir William Eden (162); and the deliberate Sturry Mill by Mr. Sydney Lee (175). Paris Houses, View on the Seine (58), by M. Charles Geoffroi, is one of the most perfect drawings in the exhibition; Mr. Augustus John's large cartoon (236) one of the least satisfactory. It is an example of his habit of casting together in haphazard fashion certain specimens of angular humanity, and endeavouring to reconcile their conflicting lines by idle experiments with capricious and illogical landscape forms.

THE HORSE GUARDS PARADE.

A CORRESPONDENT writes:—

"The fine-art critics of The Athenæum have admired, from the 'vista' theory, a suggested improvement of the Horse Guards Parade, the author of which has circulated a list of British military statues to be collected there, and a further list of statues of British 'military characters' to be placed in recesses on a 'Canal Walk,' intended to lead to the Horse Guards. Based as it is on the example of new Berlin, the list suggests comparisons. The Lady 'Ethelfled,' the French-speaking Richard Cœur de Lion, the Duke of Bedford who ruled France when Joan of Arc was burnt, and the Marquis of Granby—a good general no doubt, but suggestive rather of old Weller and the more military Dr. Slammer than of war in the present day—all figure in the list. Ethelfled the Unready occurs to one as a rival claimant to the honours conferred on the Lady Ethelfled, and more characteristic, by his military habits, of English military genius as displayed in preparation for war. Some will even ask where the line is to be drawn, and whether we are to commemorate Sir Richard Strachan, General Whitlocke, and the Brook Green Volunteer. The statues proposed to be brought together 'on Parade' include the alien Achilles erected in Hyde Park by the women of England in honour of the Duke of Wellington, but not our old friend of Constitution Hill, now in miserable banishment at Aldershot. The Crimean memorial, known as 'The Quoit Player,' is to be brought from Waterloo Place; but the County Council 'Boadicea' of Westminster Bridge is omitted from the list.

"Marochetti's 'Cœur de Lion,' dear to Ruskin, at the back of Westminster Abbey, is apparently forgotten by the author of the printed scheme. If size were considered, Achilles would already dwarf such moderns as the Duke of Cambridge from Whitehall and Lord Strathnairn from Knightsbridge. In any case, the effect attained would be that of an Italian cemetery, or of setting the inmates of the Abbey transept to shiver in the open air."

Fine-Art Gossip.

At a general assembly of the Royal Society of British Artists held this week the following were elected members: Messrs. J. P. Beadle, A. Streeton, and John G. Withycombe.

MESSRS. CHRISTIE sold on the 13th inst. the remaining works by the late David Farquharson. 'Ardlui, Loch Lomond,' 1900, fetched 147*l.*; and 'Eventide,' 1906, 115*l.*

A VERY serious situation has arisen in Dublin with regard to the funds from which the income of the Dublin Gallery of Modern Art is derived. At the time that the Gallery was opened it was understood that a sum of 500*l.* a year was available for its maintenance under the Public Libraries Act. Unfortunately, however, the fund from which the libraries derive their income is now exhausted, and there seems no immediate prospect of obtaining any money for the support of the Gallery from municipal sources. The only solution of the difficulty would seem to lie in the formation of a private endowment. The Gallery contains a most valuable and representative collection of French, English, Dutch, Italian, and other modern pictures, and it would be little short of a national calamity if it were closed owing to lack of funds for its maintenance.

THE death of M. Jules Roques, the director and founder of the Courrier Français illustré, removes a figure well known in the journalistic and artistic circles of Paris.

THE "jury de sculpture" of the Paris École des Beaux-Arts have in the concours Lemaire awarded first place to Mlle. Heuvelmans, who has carried off the prize and also the première médaille.

THE death in his seventy-first year is announced from Munich of Dr. Alwin Schultz, formerly Professor of the History of Art at the University of Prague, and author of numerous interesting works, among them 'Höfisches Leben zur Zeit der Minnesänger,' 'Kunst und Kunstgeschichte,' 'Alltagsleben einer deutschen Frau zu Anfang des 18^{ten} Jahrhunderts,' and 'Häusliches Leben im Mittelalter bis in die zweite Hälfte des 18^{ten} Jahrhunderts.'

AN interesting find is reported to have been made by Fräulein Prof. Mestorf, Director of the Museum Schleswiger Altertümer at Kiel. In the grave of a Germanic woman dating from the pre-Christian era was found a stone box containing a set of sewing utensils, a pair of scissors of considerable weight, a horn knife with an iron blade, a stiletto, and several thorns, which were used as needles. There was also a stone resembling the so-called "Genidelsstein," which was still in use as a flat-iron as late as the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries.

THE distinguished archæologist August Mau, whose death at the age of sixty-eight is announced from Rome, studied classical philology at Kiel, and became teacher at the gymnasium in Glückstadt; but his health obliged him to go to the South, and he became assistant at the German Archæological Institute in Rome. He was soon recognized as an authority on matters connected with Pompeii, and he annually lectured on this subject, both for his own and the American Archæological Institute. Among his works are 'Pompejanische Beiträge,' 'Geschichte der decorativen Wandmalerei in Pompeji,' 'Führer durch Pompeji,' and 'Pompeji in Leben und Kunst,' which first appeared in English.

THE death is reported from Cannes on Sunday last, in his sixty-seventh year, of Mr. Frederick G. Hilton Price, Director of the Society of Antiquaries. A banker by profession, he wrote 'A Handbook of London Bankers,' which has recently been reissued, and treated the antiquarian side of the subject in 'The Marygold.' He published also 'Signs of Lombard Street' and 'Old Base Metal Spoons.' Mr. Price was President of the Egypt Exploration Fund, a Vice-President of the Society of Biblical Archæology, and a Fellow of the Geological and other learned Societies. He had a considerable collection of Egyptian antiquities, of which he published a catalogue. An antiquary of wide accomplishments, he will be missed by many scholars and friends.

THE MARGARET STOKES MEMORIAL LECTURES will be delivered at Alexandra College, Dublin, on Wednesday next and the two following days by Prof. William Ridgeway. The subject of the lectures will be Ireland in the Bronze Age, the early Iron Age, and the Early Middle Age.

EXHIBITIONS.

SAT. (March 20).—Spring Exhibition of Portraits and Landscapes by Early British Masters, Private View, Messrs. Shepherd's Gallery.

MUSIC

THE WEEK.

QUEEN'S HALL.—Symphony Concert. Herr Moriz Rosenthal's Recital. M. Vincent d'Indy's 'Jour d'Été à la Montagne.'

HERR MORIZ ROSENTHAL was the pianist at the Symphony Concert last Saturday afternoon. He has not been here since 1900. His wonderful technique was then fully appreciated, but he was looked upon as a great virtuoso rather than a great artist. His rendering of Chopin's Concerto in E minor on Saturday was most refined, but neither in this nor in the clever and brilliant E flat Concerto of Liszt had he full opportunity of showing what he can do as an interpreter of music of strongly emotional character. Meanwhile his perfect technique—his delightful production of tone, delicate in soft passages, and powerful when needed, yet never hard—and his clear grasp of the music, won for him a warm and well-deserved reception.

The programme of his pianoforte recital on Wednesday afternoon included Schumann's 'Carneval,' of which he gave a vivid performance. 'Reconnaissance' and especially 'Promenade' were beautifully played, and the March was given with great power and effect; on the whole, however, the reading was too objective. With the rendering of Chopin's Sonata in B flat minor we were disappointed. As regards technique there was, as usual, no fault to find; but the music, to use Beethoven's forcible expression, did not come from the heart to the heart.

M. Vincent d'Indy will pay his first visit to England next week, and conduct his 'Wallenstein' trilogy at Queen's Hall. All three sections of the work have been heard here, but never together; hence a good opportunity will be offered for judging a composer who enjoys a high reputation in his own country, and whose trilogy ranks among his best works. Meanwhile, a performance was given on Monday last of his 'Jour d'Été à la Montagne,' Op. 61, at the second of Mr. Thomas Beecham's Symphony Concerts. This symphonic poem for orchestra and pianoforte consists of three sections, respectively entitled 'Aurore,' 'Jour,' and 'Soir.' But the composer gives a further clue to the meaning of his music, namely, passages from Roger de Pampe-lonne's 'Les Heures de la Montagne.' We have always maintained that an indicated poetic basis of a work is of great assistance in following music whose form and varying moods are determined by it. In the present instance, however, the mind, at any rate at a first hearing, is too much occupied in trying to discover not only how far the music illustrates the lines of poetry quoted, but even at times to which particular line or lines the music is referring. There were, on the other hand, certain realistic effects—the opening of the first section, the bird notes, the "simple melody" in 'Jour,' the rhyth-mical theme which follows, also the clever imitation of wind by chromatic kettle-drums in the final section—all of which were obvious enough, the last named, perhaps, too much so. The work is earnest, and M. Vincent d'Indy is skilled in the art of scoring. We felt that he has tried to express poetical and religious thoughts in tones, but also that the striking moods and the colouring of the music required thematic material of greater power and spontaneity. In saying this we willingly admit that a first hearing of the work is not sufficient to judge of its merit. Then the performance, although Mr. Beecham had evidently taken great pains in rehearsing the difficult music, was not ideal; moreover, Mr. Harold Brooke's rendering of the pianoforte part seemed to us too reserved.

Musical Gossip.

THE programme of the concert given by the London Chamber Concert Association last Saturday evening at the Victoria Rooms, Kensington, included two Quintets by C. F. Abel and J. Christian Bach, who soon after the arrival of the latter in London in 1762 began giving concerts which were maintained for many years. These two works of light, cheerful character helped one to realize the kind of chamber music which was popular in the days before Mozart began to compose. Of the two works, one was for flute and strings, the other for oboe and strings. The first two movements of a Concerto in c minor by J. J. Quantz showed skill and vigour, and he may have touched up the Finale, ostensibly by the flautist's pupil Frederick the Great. A seventeenth-century Paduan and Courant by Scheidt was noticeable for its breadth and feeling. Messrs. Fransella and Dubrucq (flute and oboe), and as strings Mr. Harold Bonarius, the Misses Dorothy Fletcher and Ida Stamm, and Messrs. Percy Such and J. Hadyn Ward, were the excellent interpreters. Miss Hannah Bryant officiated at the pianoforte.

MISS SELMA KURZ gave a concert at the Albert Hall on Tuesday evening. Her well-trained voice is still fresh and clear, and in "Una voce poco fa," the Mad Scene from 'Lucia,' and an air from 'Ernani,' she did full justice to herself and to the music. At first she was not wholly at her ease, but this soon passed off. The orchestra was under the direction of Mr. Landon Ronald.

CHARPENTIER'S 'Louise,' Debussy's 'Pel-léas et Mélisande,' Saint-Saëns's 'Samson et Dalila,' Erlanger's 'Tess,' and perhaps also 'Habanera' by Laparra, the Basque composer, are to be given during the forthcoming season at Covent Garden. On the opening night, April 26th, Madame Tétrazini will probably appear in 'La Traviata.'

THE first festival under the auspices of the Musical League will be held at the Phil-harmonic Hall, Liverpool, September 23rd to 25th. The programmes will consist chiefly of the works of living British com-posers. MM. Debussy, Vincent d'Indy, Max Schillings, and Gustav Mahler hope to be present and conduct works of their own. The Liverpool Welsh Choral Union, under Mr. Harry Evans, will take part in all choral works.

PERFORMANCES NEXT WEEK.

SUN.	Concert, 3.30, Royal Albert Hall.
—	Sunday Society Concert, 3.30, Queen's Hall.
—	Sunday League Concert, 7, Queen's Hall.
MON.	Mr. Egon Petri's Pianoforte Recital, 3, Steinway Hall.
—	London Symphony Orchestra, 8, Queen's Hall.
—	London String Quartet, 8.30, Æolian Hall.
TUES.	Miss K. R. Heymann's Pianoforte Recital, 3, Queen's Hall.
—	Messrs. Griffiths and Poole's Chamber Concert, 3.15, Steinway Hall.
—	Leighton House Chamber Concert, 4.30, Leighton House.
—	Mr. Andrew Bevan's Violin Recital, 8, Æolian Hall.
—	Madame de Wieniawski's Vocal Recital, 8, Bechstein Hall.
WED.	New Symphony Orchestra, 3, Queen's Hall.
—	Selma Kurz's Vocal Recital, 8, Royal Albert Hall.
—	London Choral Society, 8, Queen's Hall.
—	Société de Concerts Français, 8, Bechstein Hall.
—	Miss Ethel Bird's Pianoforte Recital, 8.15, Steinway Hall.
THURS.	Brinsmead's Popular Concert, 3, St. James's Hall.
—	Royal Choral Society, 8, Royal Albert Hall.
—	Messrs. Maurice D'Oisy and Cecil Pearson's Vocal Recital, 8.30, Bechstein Hall.
FRI.	Miss Dorothy Wiley's Vocal Recital, 8, Bechstein Hall.
—	London Trio, 8.30, Æolian Hall.
SAT.	String Club Concert, 3, Salle Erard.
—	Queen's Hall Orchestra, 3, Queen's Hall.
—	Mr. Howard Jones's Pianoforte Recital, 3.15, Bechstein Hall.

DRAMA

THE WEEK.

LYCEUM.—Hamlet.

THE LYCEUM directors are persisting in their laudable enterprise of popularizing Shakespeare, their latest choice being 'Hamlet,' and no one can withhold admiration from a policy which brings our greatest poet into touch with the thoughts and aspirations of the patrons of melo-drama. It is quaint, to be sure, to find Hamlet's remark to Polonius, "You are a fishmonger," received with tremendous guffaws, or to hear the Prince's descrip-tion of his play within a play as 'The Mousetrap' hailed with just such storms of applause as greet a hero when he defies, or the comic man when he exposes, the villain of popular drama. But at the same time it is difficult not to envy such an audience its freshness of enthusiasm and its lack of sophistication. Of course a price has to be paid when a classic is presented in such a fashion as to please popular taste, and in this Lyceum render-ing much of the poetry and philosophy has had to be sacrificed in the endeavour to obtain "broad" effects. The manage-ment have relied on the story of the tra-gedy, and everybody knows how fine a story 'Hamlet' contains. In arranging their text they have constantly kept before them the idea that their audience must be granted plenty of plot; and so, in order to retain such picturesque episodes as those which deal with the Prince's banishment to England and his return, they have cut out the recorder's scene, and, what is stranger still, the episode in which Hamlet catches the King at his prayers and spares his life—passages the preservation of which the modern stage has usually regarded as essential to a proper exposition of Hamlet's nature.

Just as the text has been prepared with an eye to the demands of a popular audience, so also the stage-management has consulted its tastes, and we perceive the hidden Polonius allowing himself to be half seen during the first meeting of Hamlet and Ophelia; we have the Prince playing hide-and-seek behind the throne in order to surprise Rosencrantz and Guildenstern, and snatching up the Clown's bladder during his address to the players. As for the acting, nothing apart from Miss Hutin Britton's limp but affecting Ophelia calls for comment, except Mr. Matheson Lang's work in the part of Hamlet; and inasmuch as he had scarcely recovered from illness and was hampered by the persistent coughing of the audience, it would not be fair to judge him entirely by his first performance. He makes a young Hamlet—indeed, he is too young to appreciate the variety of the Prince's character or give full point to his views of life. Nor does he suggest the courtier, the scholar, or the man of vivid imagina-tion. We see a youth with raven locks straggling down his back and over his forehead, who gives way to fits of passion, sudden changes of mood, and exhibitions of eccentricity, but is too tender and sentimental to play the avenger. Mr. Lang, indeed, seems to go through the various scenes as if they had little relation to one another. On the other hand, he is just the Hamlet for his environment, avoiding complexities, discovering no diffi-culties, and proceeding straightforwardly on lines that make Hamlet a gallant, if rather melancholy hero of romance.

HIS MAJESTY'S (AFTERNOON THEATRE).—

The House of Bondage: a Play in Three Acts. By Seymour Obermer.

MUCH may be forgiven a management which has such a record of good works as the Afternoon Theatre, and so perhaps the less said the better on the selection of so tedious a piece as 'The House of Bondage.' They were misled, apparently, by the author's seriousness of aim. But it is possible, as was proved in this case, for a drama to be at once serious and dull—to urge a plea for which there is consider-able justification, and in doing so make the stage a mere platform for the delivery of rhetoric. A playwright has every excuse for endeavouring to illustrate in the theatre the imperfections of our divorce laws, provided that in the working out of his thesis he introduces live persons, makes their talk natural, and draws their characters interestingly. Mr. Obermer's dialogue is full of rodomontade; his people are bores when not puppets moved this way or that according to the requirements of plot; and his scheme alternates between dreary lengths of conversation that in no sense advance the action or reveal personality, and sudden bursts of emotion that seem neither sincere nor inevitable.

The story turns on a coincidence that is not a little strained. A famous surgeon is supposed to be the one man able to cure of cerebral trouble the husband of the woman he loves, a lawyer. He is called in to perform an operation, and feels tempted to remove his rival from his path; but the wife encourages him to resist the temptation. The patient is cured, and rewards his wife's devotion by resuming an intrigue with a certain duchess. The exasperating feature of his conduct consists in his refusing to give poor Lady Joan a reason for divorce. He has not deserted her, and will not provide her with evidence of cruelty. So in the end her endurance breaks down, and she, a good woman who had wished to avoid scandal, decides to risk loss of reputation, and seek happiness with her lover. The final speech of farewell to her husband, in which she arraigns the law, has passion in it; but other didactic passages have no such recommendation, while scenes showing on the one hand the incompatibility of husband and wife, and on the other the rebellious self-restraint of the lovers, are repeated with so little variation as to become wearisome.

The dullness of the play seemed to affect its interpreters at the first performance. Miss Eva Moore made a sympathetic, but rather listless heroine. Mr. Aubrey Smith and Mr. Herbert Waring worked their hardest to individualize the doctor and the lawyer, but appeared to feel that they had thankless tasks. Perhaps Miss Beryl Faber was best off in the part of the Duchess, in which she suggested rather happily a note of artificial levity; yet even she could not disguise the conventionality of the character.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—S. C.—G. C.—G. B.—C. J.—G. N.—Received. C. H.—Too late.

WE cannot undertake to reply to inquiries concerning the appearance of reviews of books.

NO notice can be taken of anonymous communications.

WE do not undertake to give the value of books, china, pictures, &c.

THE ATHENÆUM,

PRICE THREEPENCE.

Is published every FRIDAY in time for the Afternoon Mails. Terms of Subscription, free by post to all parts of the United Kingdom: For Six Months, 7s. 8d.; for Twelve Months, 15s. 3d. For the Continent and all places within the Postal Union: For Six Months, 9s.; for Twelve Months, 18s., commencing from any date, payable in advance to

JOHN C. FRANCIS,

Athenæum Office, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, London, E.C.

INDEX TO ADVERTISERS.

	PAGE
AUTHORS' AGENTS	334
AUTOTYPE CO.	334
BELL & SONS	360
BISHOP'S VARALETES	358
BOWES & BOWES	359
CASELL & CO.	357
CATALOGUES	333
DENT & CO.	336
EDUCATIONAL	333
EXHIBITIONS	333
HEFFER & SONS	359
HEINEMANN	336
INSURANCE COMPANIES	359
LECTURES	333
LIBRACO	356
LONDON LIBRARY	334
LONGMANS & CO.	356
MACMILLAN & CO.	336
MAGAZINES, &c.	334
METHUEN & CO.	335
MISCELLANEOUS	333
MUDIE'S LIBRARY	334
OBITUARY	333
PRINTERS	334
SALES BY AUCTION	334
SANATOGEN	358
SHIPPING	359
SITUATIONS VACANT	333
SITUATIONS WANTED	333
SONNENSCHNEIN & CO.	359
TYPE-WRITERS, &c.	333

Messrs. Longmans & Co.'s

LIST.

SECOND IMPRESSION.

Historical and Political Essays.

By WILLIAM EDWARD HARTPOLE LECKY. 8vo, 10s. 6d. net. (Inland postage 5d.)

A History of the Doctrine of the Holy Eucharist.

By DARWELL STONE, M.A., Librarian of the Pusey House, Oxford. 2 vols. 8vo, 30s. net. (Inland postage 6d.)

The Springs of Helicon: a Study in the Progress of English Poetry from Chaucer to Milton.

By J. W. MACKAIL, M.A. LL.D., Professor of Poetry in the University of Oxford. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d. net. (Inland postage 4d.)

The Dawn of the Catholic Revival in England, 1781-1803.

By BERNARD WARD, F.R.Hist.S., President of St. Edmund's College, Ware. With Portraits and other Illustrations. 2 vols. 8vo, 25s. net. (Inland postage 6d.)

Germany in the Later Middle Ages, 1200-1500.

By WILLIAM STUBBS, D.D., formerly Bishop of Oxford. Edited by ARTHUR HASSALL, M.A. With 2 Maps, 8vo, 7s. 6d. net. (Inland postage 4d.)

Ireland under the Stuarts and during the Interregnum.

By RICHARD BAGWELL, M.A., Author of 'Ireland under the Tudors.' (In Three Volumes.) Vols. I. and II.: 1603-1660. With 2 Maps. 8vo, 28s. net. (Inland postage 6d.)

Sir George Mackenzie, King's Advocate, of Rosehaugh: His Life and Times, 1636(?) - 1691.

By ANDREW LANG. 8vo, 15s. net. (Inland postage 5d.)

"Mr. Lang has had one aim, and one aim only, to get at the facts about a very difficult character. The result is a complete portrait of Mackenzie, a criticism based upon a true understanding."

Blackwood's Magazine.

Ecclesia Discens: the Church's Lesson from the Age.

By the Rev. JAMES H. F. PEILE, M.A. Crown 8vo, 5s. net. (Inland postage 4d.)

"A collection of essays and sermons by a practised writer dealing with present day topics, which have all the charm and discursiveness of his 'Reproach of the Gospel.' No one can lay down this book without admiration for the literary gifts of the author and his manliness in facing hard questions."—Church of Ireland Gazette.

The Curious Case of Lady Purbeck: a Scandal of the XVIIth Century.

By the Author of 'The Life of Sir Kenelm Digby,' 'The Life of a Prig,' &c. 8vo, 6s. net. (Inland postage 4d.)

NEW NOVEL OF COUNTRY LIFE BY THE AUTHOR OF 'MISS BADSWORTH, M.F.H.'

Polly Winford.

By EYRE HUSSEY. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"Polly Winford is a delightful girl."—Daily Telegraph.

LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.
39, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON, E.C.

Bookshelving

Built on the Unit Principle.

Libraco Portable Shelving is designed on simple, practical lines for the owner and user of books who requires the maximum of accommodation at the minimum cost, and the advantage of using a stock article that can be added to economically in sections as the need arises.

Libraco Shelving is built for strength and utility—parts uniform and interchangeable—shelves adjustable to any height by a special metal fitting. It is sold at a remarkably low price—less than 2d. per volume for shelving capacity.

The following Opinions are abstracts from letters acknowledging delivery:—

Nov. 18, 1908.

G. BRITTEN, Esq., The Grocers' Company's School, Hackney Downs.

"My bookcase has arrived safely. I am greatly pleased with it. It is strong, well turned out, and most ingeniously simple in its fitting. I shall hope to add to it in the near future, and shall meanwhile strongly recommend it."

Dec. 11, 1908.

J. A. STOKES, Esq., West Dulwich.

"I have pleasure in expressing my entire satisfaction with the Shelving. It is better than I anticipated, and just what I have wanted. The price I consider very moderate."

Dec. 31, 1908.

G. H. ROBINSON, Esq., Keynsham, Somerset.

"The Bookcase safely to hand, with which I am very pleased, and think it good value for the money."

Oct. 2, 1908.

The Rev. W. S. WOOD, of Stamford (late Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge), the owner of a large library, says—

"I am much pleased with your Shelving, which is both economical and efficient for its purpose."

Oct. 3, 1908.

F. G. HOWE, Esq., of Bromley Park, Kent, says:

"The Bookcase arrived safely yesterday, and I am very pleased with its design and construction."

Feb. 5, 1908.

W. E. KELLY, Esq., Westport, Co. Mayo.

"The 'Libraco' Portable Shelving has arrived, and I put it together to-day. It fits very well, and is easily handled."

June 10, 1907.

Rev. EDWARD KOCH, 4, Holly Mount, Hampstead, N.W.

"The Bookcase arrived to-day, and is in position. It gives every satisfaction. I have never seen anything of the kind I like better, and only wish I had known of it long ago. I wish you every success, and enclose cheque."

Dec. 30, 1907.

W. JERROLD, Esq., Jessamine House, Hampton-on-Thames.

"The Shelving arrived safely. It is wonderfully easy for handling when putting up, and looks well."

Nov. 11, 1907.

EDWARD W. LEWIS, Esq., 7, Auckland Road, Upper Norwood, S.E.

"The Bookcase arrived on Saturday in good condition. It is now put up, and quite answers my expectations."

C. G. BROWN, Esq., Allahabad, India.

"I am very pleased with the Bookcases."

Send for Descriptive Price List No. 20.

LIBRACO, Ltd.,

60, WILSON STREET, LONDON, E.C.

CASSELL'S NEW AND FORTHCOMING BOOKS

EVERY-DAY JAPAN

Written after Twenty-Five Years' Residence and Work in the Country

By ARTHUR LLOYD, M.A.

With an Introduction by Count TADASU HAYASHI, and 8 Coloured Plates and 96 Reproductions from Photographs. 12s. net

"Gives a very complete idea of the everyday life, the curious customs, and the startling contrasts of modern Japan."—Standard.

THE NATURE BOOK

A Book for those who would know the joys of the open air

A great feature of the work is the Illustrations reproduced from Photographs by Nature Photographers, and a series of exquisite Coloured Plates from Water-Colour Drawings by leading Artists.

Vol. I. Now Ready. Cloth gilt, gilt edges, 12s. net

THE ROYAL BOTANIC GARDENS, KEW

Historical and Descriptive

By W. J. BEAN

With an Introduction by Sir WILLIAM THISELTON-DYER, late Director of the Gardens. Illustrated with 20 Reproductions in Colour from Paintings by H. A. OLIVIER, and 40 Reproductions of Photographs by E. J. WALLIS.

Cloth, gilt back, 20s. net

LARGE-PAPER EDITION, limited to 100 copies, £3 3s. net

QUAINT SUBJECTS OF THE KING

By JOHN FOSTER FRASER

Brings the reader face to face with almost unknown peoples, tells of their methods of life, their superstitions and customs, how they make love, fight, hunt, and are buried.

With 77 Reproductions from Photographs. 6s.

[In preparation.]

HEALTH AND COMMONSENSE

By WOODS HUTCHINSON, M.A. M.D.

6s. net

This book describes in a bright, interesting, and practical manner the physical necessities of the body and the methods of obtaining the greatest efficiency from it, and corrects popular fallacies regarding food, exercise, sleep, &c.

GARDENING IN THE NORTH

By S. ARNOTT and R. P. BROTHERSTON

With Illustrations. Paper covers, 2s. net; cloth, 2s. 6d. net

This book deals in a thorough and workmanlike manner with the subject of Northern Gardening, and contains practical advice on the important details of cultivation under the climatic and other conditions prevailing in the North of England and Scotland.

WOMEN OF ALL NATIONS

Edited by T. ATHOL JOYCE, M.A., and N. W. THOMAS, M.A.

In 2 vols. 15s. net each

Profusely Illustrated with Reproductions of Striking and Original Photographs, and a Series of magnificent Plates in Colour from Paintings specially executed for the work by NORMAN HARDY.

Second Impression Now Ready. 6s.

RIDER HAGGARD'S

Latest and most thrilling novel. The Daily Express says, "A capital stirring romance.....Mr. Haggard at his best."

THE YELLOW GOD

An Idol of Africa.

READY APRIL 2. 3s. 6d.

JOSEPH HOCKING'S

new novel. A stirring story of Martin Luther and his times.
With Frontispiece in Colours.

THE SWORD OF THE LORD

Third Impression now ready. 6s.

PEGGY THE DAUGHTER

By KATHARINE TYNAN.

"Full of charm, with a pleasant breath of romance.....The whole story makes very delightful reading."—Christian World.

Second Impression of this brilliant novel Now Ready. 6s.

THE LURE OF EVE

By EDITH MARY MOORE.

"The emotions are real emotions, and the passions real passions—the men are alive as well as the women."—MR. JAMES DOUGLAS in the Star.

Second Impression Now Ready. 6s.

THE CONQUEST OF CHRYSTABEL

By Mrs. GEORGE DE HORNE VAIZEY.

Ready March 26. 3s. 6d.

POLLY OF THE CIRCUS

By MARGARET MAYO.

With 8 Illustrations.

RECENT SIX-SHILLING NOVELSTHE GHOST KINGS

By H. RIDER HAGGARD

THE VIRGIN IN JUDGMENT

By EDEN PHILLPOTTS

MAD BARBARA

By WARWICK DEEPING

MISS FALLOWFIELD'S FORTUNE

By ELLEN THORNEYCROFT FOWLER

ROSE WHITE YOUTH

By DOLF WYLLARDE

THE CAIRN OF THE BADGER

By MADGE BARLOW

Shipping.

P. & O. PLEASURE CRUISES FROM MARSEILLES.

(Rail and Steamship connexions from London.)
S.Y. VECTIS	No. 3.—April 22 to May 20. VENICE, DALMATIA, CORFU, NAPLES, SICILY, VILLEFRANCHE, &c. Fares from 30 Guineas.
	No. 4.—May 21 to June 12. NAPLES, ALGIERS, LISBON, AND LONDON. Fares from 20 Guineas. Special Terms for Cruises 3 & 4 in conjunction. From London and Leith.
	No. 5.—July 1 to July 27. SPITZBERGEN, NORWAY, &c. Fares from 30 Guineas.
	No. 6.—July 29 to August 11.
	No. 7.—August 13 to August 26. THE NORWEGIAN FJORDS. Fares from 12 Guineas.
BY

P. & O. CRUISING YACHT VECTIS,

6,000 tons, 6,000 h.p.
For Passage, Illustrated Handbooks, and all information, apply Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company, Northumberland Avenue, W.C., or 122, Leadenhall Street, E.C., London.

Insurance Companies.

ACCIDENTS OF ALL KINDS, SICKNESS,
EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY, BURGLARY, AND
FIDELITY GUARANTEE RISKS

INSURED AGAINST BY THE

RAILWAY PASSENGERS ASSURANCE CO.

Capital (fully subscribed), £1,000,000. Claims paid, £5,600,000.

64, CORNHILL, LONDON.

A. VIAN, Secretary.

NATIONAL

PROVIDENT

INSTITUTION

FOR

MUTUAL LIFE ASSURANCE.

Established 1835.

ASSURANCE AND INVESTMENT.

Write for Leaflet on net cost of Endowment Assurances,
43, Gracechurch Street, London, E.C.

Applications for Agencies invited.

HIGHEST AWARDS.

CORK, 1883. LIVERPOOL, 1886. PARIS, 1886. ADELAIDE, 1887.
PARIS, 1889. CHICAGO, 1893. PARIS, 1900. ST. LOUIS, 1904.
FRANCO-BRITISH, 1908.

OLD BUSHMILLS.

Have you tried this—the Prize-Winning Whisky?

From all Wine Merchants.

Address of nearest Agent sent on application.

“OLD BUSHMILLS” DISTILLERY CO., LTD.,
20, Mark Lane, E.C.

HOW FAMOUS PEOPLE RENEW THEIR ENERGIES.

REMARKABLE TESTIMONY.

Never was life so strenuous as now. Everyone acknowledges it—the famous and the non-famous. The famous feel it most, for the strain to obtain a foremost place and keep it is universally recognized. They, however, have a great advantage over the less notable members of the community, for their friendly intercourse with the prominent physicians enables them to hear at the earliest moment of the best means science has discovered to renew the energy, nerve force, and vitality they have consumed in their work.

In consequence, they are all taking Sanatogen, the ideal tonic food and revitalizing agent to whose merits nearly eight thousand physicians have attested in writing, while practically every medical man prescribes it.

The most eminent representatives of every profession have sent voluntary testimonials recording the wonderful results obtained from Sanatogen in renewing their energies when they have been over-worked or run down. From among the most recent, the following have been chosen to give some idea of the merits of the preparation.

Thus Lord RONALD SUTHERLAND GOWER, the sculptor and historian, writes:—

“I feel it only due to the benefit conferred on my general health by Sanatogen to write to inform those interested in that wonderful medicine that in a couple of months' time it has cured me of all gouty trouble. Sanatogen has done me far more good than all the waters of Bath and Harrogate.”

Ronald Sutherland Gower

Sir GILBERT PARKER, M.P., the popular novelist, says:—

“I have used Sanatogen with extraordinary benefit. It is to my mind a true food tonic, feeding the nerves, increasing the energy, and giving fresh vigour to the over-worked body and mind.”

Gilbert Parker

Madame SARAH GRAND, the gifted authoress of ‘The Heavenly Twins,’ writes:—

“Sanatogen has done everything for me which it is said to be able to do for cases of nervous debility and exhaustion. I began to take it after nearly four years' enforced idleness from extreme debility, and felt the benefit almost immediately. And now, after taking it steadily three times a day for twelve weeks, I find myself able to enjoy both work and play again, and also able to do as much of both as I ever did.”

Sarah Grand

Sir JOHN HARE, the popular actor, says:—

“I have found Sanatogen a most valuable tonic and stimulant during a period when I had to work very hard under conditions of great weakness and ill-health. I can heartily recommend it to those working under similarly distressing circumstances.”

John Hare

Considering this evidence, can anyone suffering from depletion of the mental, nervous, or physical forces, afford to forego the advantages he cannot fail to derive from Sanatogen, which, by the way, is also largely used in royal circles, where the strain of life is no less felt than among humbler people? An instructive booklet on the preparation may be obtained, post free, on application to The Sanatogen Company, 12, Chenies Street, London, W.C., mentioning the Athenæum. Sanatogen can be obtained from all chemists, in tins from 1s. 9d. to 9s. 6d.

THE COURSE OF GOUT.

HOW ACIDITY AND HEARTBURN DEVELOP INTO PAINFUL MALADIES.

The early evidences of a gouty habit are various, though usually they take the form of acidity, heartburn, pain and fullness after meals; in other words, the commonest symptoms of indigestion are nothing more or less than signs of the gouty tendency.

Other symptoms, which in some cases may be the first signs of the gouty tendency, and not prefaced or attended by the dyspeptic symptoms, take the form of ‘come-and-go’ pains, swelling, stiffness and inflammation in the joints and muscles.

Yet another way in which the gouty tendency shows itself in its early stages is by irritation and burning of the skin, while small lumps often form on the fingers, ankles, outer rim of the ear or the eyelids.

It is undeniable that the presence of any of these symptoms is conclusive proof of the gouty tendency. Slowly but surely the uric acid-impregnated blood is leaving pain—causing irritant deposits in muscles, tissues, organs, and joints.

COMMON GOUTY AILMENTS.

The resulting disorder may present itself in the form of gout, rheumatic gout, and gouty rheumatism (pain, inflammation, stiffness, and swellings, chiefly in the joints), gouty eczema (affecting the skin), lumbago (persistent and intense pain in the loins), sciatica (acute pain extending from hips down thigh to knee, often causing lameness), stone and gravel (causing agonizing pains and prostrating illness), neuritis (numbness or tingling in the muscles of the arm, developing into a very severe pain), suppressed gout (general discomfort, lowness of spirits, poor appetite, nervous irritability, and ill-temper).

What is required in every gouty case is a remedy which has the property of converting uric acid and its compounds into soluble harmless substances, and of eliminating them from the innermost recesses of the muscles, tissues, organs, and joints.

The one remedy which accomplishes this perfectly is Bishop's Varalettes. Every one who has any of the early gouty symptoms should start taking Bishop's Varalettes at once.

In cases where neglect or mistreatment of the early uric acid symptoms has resulted in the full development of some gouty complaint, Bishop's Varalettes are positively indispensable. Only by their use can the gouty habit be effectually counteracted, attacks prevented, and good health maintained.

A VALUABLE BOOKLET.

Bishop's Varalettes are little white discs, which dissolve quickly with brisk effervescence, and may be taken in any beverage without altering the flavour of the drink or impairing the efficiency of the Varalettes. They may be had of all chemists at 5s. (twenty-five days' treatment), 2s., and 1s., or direct from the makers, Alfred Bishop, Limited, Manufacturing Chemists, 48, Spelman Street, London, N.E., from whom may be had, post free, an interesting booklet describing gouty ailments and the medicinal action of Bishop's Varalettes. This booklet contains a valuable non-acid-forming dietary, and should be in the hands of every gouty subject. Please write to-day for a copy of Booklet V.

BOWES & BOWES

(formerly Macmillan & Bowes),

New and Second-Hand Booksellers,
1, TRINITY STREET, CAMBRIDGE.

JUST ISSUED.

CATALOGUE No. 329.SECOND-HAND BOOKS:

Alpine and Climbing—Archæology—Art—Bibliography—Church History—Classical Languages and Literature—Economics and Social Questions—Education—English History and Literature—Eton—French Literature—Germany—Greece—History—Ireland—Italy—Japan—Law—Sciences—America—Africa, &c. Including some from the LIBRARY of the late Rev. C. TAYLOR, D.D., Master of St. John's College, Cambridge.

Some of the Items:

Palæographical Society's Publications complete. Alpine Journal, 1863-1908. A complete set.
Henry Bradshaw Society Publications. Complete set.
Journal of Classical and Sacred Philology and Journal of Philology. Complete set.
Hermathena: Vols. I.-XIV., 1874-1907.

IN PREPARATION.CATALOGUE OF THEOLOGICAL AND ORIENTAL BOOKS, including Rabbinica and Judaica,

From the LIBRARY of the late
Rev. CHARLES TAYLOR, D.D., Master of St. John's College, Cambridge.

Inspection of the LIBRARY invited, also inquiries for special books.

Magazines, &c.—continued.

THE BUILDER (founded 1842), 4, Catherine Street, London, W.C., MARCH 20, contains:—

ENGLISH CATHEDRALS ILLUSTRATED FROM THEIR ANCIENT SEALS.

AMERICAN ARCHITECTURE (Institute of Architects). GROWTH AND DEVELOPMENT OF LONDON (Surveyors' Institution).

SPECIFICATION OF TIMBER (Society of Architects).

RICHMOND IMPROVEMENT SCHEME (with Plan).

CARPENTERS' HALL LECTURES.

A FERRO-CONCRETE STANDARD SPECIFICATION.

ILLUSTRATIONS:

MESSRS. DEBENHAM & FREEBODY'S BUILDING, WIGMORE STREET;

"PUTTERIDGE BURY," HERTS;

FOREST HILL, WIMBORNE;

AN ARCHITECT'S HOME;

CEILING, "BISHOPSBARN," YORK;

ALMSHOUSES, MILTON, DORSET.

From Offices as above (4d., by post 4½d.), at Railway Bookstalls, Bookshops, and of all News-

agents.

THE BRITISH EMPIRE:

Its Past, its Present, and its Future.

Edited by A. F. POLLARD, M.A.

Pp. 896, 5s. net.

Fifteen Special Contributors, and over a Hundred Authorities in all parts of the Empire have collaborated in its production.

LEAGUE OF THE EMPIRE,

Caxton Hall, Westminster; and all Booksellers.

NOW READY.

THE NEWSPAPER PRESS DIRECTORY
AND ADVERTISER'S GUIDE for 1909.

THE SIXTY-FOURTH ANNUAL ISSUE.

Price 2s. net; post free, 2s. 6d.; foreign 3s. 2d.

C. MITCHELL & CO., Advertising Agency, Mitchell House
Snow Hill, Holborn Viaduct, London, E.C.

EBENEZER PROUT'S WORKS.

Bound, each net 5s.

HARMONY: its Theory and Practice. Twenty-fourth Impression.

Revised and largely Re-written.

ANALYTICAL KEY TO THE EXERCISES in the same. Net 3s.

COUNTERPOINT: Strict and Free. Ninth Impression.

DOUBLE COUNTERPOINT AND CANON. Fourth Impression.

FUGUE. Fifth Impression.

FUGAL ANALYSIS. Third Impression.

MUSICAL FORM. Seventh Impression.

APPLIED FORMS. Fifth Impression.

THE ORCHESTRA. 2 vols. Fourth Impression.

AUGENER Ltd., 6, New Burlington Street, and 22, Newgate Street.

Swan Sonnenschein & Co.

LTD.

SOME BIOGRAPHICAL WORKS.

WORKS BY CLARA TSCHUDI.

Demy 8vo.

MARIE ANTOINETTE.

With Coloured Portrait. Third Edition. 7s. 6d.

EUGÉNIE.

With Coloured Portrait. Second Edition. 6s.

THE GREAT NAPOLEON'S MOTHER.

With a Coloured Portrait. 7s. 6d.

THE EMPRESS AUGUSTA.

With Coloured Portrait. 7s. 6d.

ELIZABETH, EMPRESS OF AUSTRIA.

With Coloured Portrait. 7s. 6d.

MARIA SOPHIA (Queen of Naples).

With Coloured Portrait. 7s. 6d.

LUDWIG II. OF BAVARIA.

With Coloured Portrait. 7s. 6d.

WILLIAM CLARKE.

A Collection of his Writings, with a Biographical Sketch. Edited by HERBERT BURROWS and JOHN A. HOBSON. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d.

PRINCE KROPOTKIN'SMEMOIRS OF A REVOLUTIONIST.

A New, Cheaper, and Enlarged Edition. 3s. 6d.

"One of the most remarkable autobiographies of recent years."—New Age.

"Surely no novel ever dreamed of could be so thrilling as the life of this remarkable man."—Morning Leader.

"Should be widely read. Ostensibly autobiographical, it really gives a vivid picture of Russian social conditions."—Scotsman.

A NEW EDITION OFFRANCES POWER COBBE'S AUTOBIOGRAPHY.

1 vol. crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

DIARY AND LETTERS OF MADAME D'ARBLAY.

Edited by her Niece, CHARLOTTE BARRETT. 4 vols. demy 8vo, 16s. net.

LIFE OF BEAU BRUMMELL.

By Capt. W. JESSE. Demy 8vo, 4s. 6d. net.

THE PRIVATE LIFE OF WARREN HASTINGS.

By Sir CHAS. LAWSON. 3 Portraits and 78 Illustrations and Facsimiles. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d.

LIFE OF PESTALOZZI.

By ROGER DE GUIMPS. Edited by J. RUSSELL, B.A. Portrait. Third Edition. 6s.

AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF FRIEDRICH FROEBEL.

Translated and Annotated by EMILE MICHAELIS and H. K. MOORE, Mus. Bac. B.A. Ninth Edition. 3s.

BOSWELL'S LIFE OF JOHNSON.

Together with a Journal of a Tour in the Hebrides.

Edited, with Notes, by PERCY FITZGERALD, M.A. F.S.A. 3 vols. demy 8vo, 12s. net.

THE LIFE AND TIMES OF THE EMPRESS PULCHERIA.

By ADA B. TEETGEN. With 9 Illustrations and Map. Demy 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

SWAN SONNENSCHN & CO., LTD.,

25, High Street, Bloomsbury, W.C.

W. HEFFER & SONS'

THEOLOGICAL PUBLICATIONS.

Crown 8vo, pp. viii-194, 3s. 6d. net; postage, 4d.

LIGHT ARISING:

Thoughts on the Central Radiance.

By CAROLINE EMELIA STEPHEN,
Author of 'Quaker Strongholds.'

Contents:—I. Rational Mysticism.—II. Quakerism and Free Thought.—III. The Quaker Tradition.—IV. What does Silence Mean?—V. The Door of the Sanctuary.—VI. War and Superfluities.—VII. Living Alone.—VIII. The Faith of the Unlearned.—IX. The Fear of Death.—X. Signs and Wonders in Divine Guidance.—Letter to Young Friends.—Conclusion.

"This able exposition of Quakerism."—Spectator.

"To those who would know something of the spiritual experience and methods of the Society of Friends we would commend 'Light Arising.'"—Guardian.

HELPS BY THE WAY SERIES.

By S. STEWART STITT, M.A.,

Rector of Stretham with Thetford, Ely, late Chaplain of Gonville and Caius College, formerly Scholar of Pembroke College, Cambridge.

SECOND EDITION.

Crown 8vo, sewed, 2s. net each (postage 2d.).

OLD TESTAMENT HISTORY

ANALYSED. (Based on Canon Foakes Jackson's 'Biblical History of Hebrews,' 6s.)

EARLY CHURCH HISTORY ANALYSED.

(Based on Canon Foakes Jackson's 'History of the Christian Church,' 7s. 6d. net.)

ENGLISH CHURCH HISTORY ANALYSED.

SCOPE AND AIM OF THE SERIES—The books in this Series are not intended as substitutes for the recognized text-books, they are rather to test the results of reading, to sum up the essentials of the text-book, and to prepare the student for examination day. The books will be found admirably lucid and, at the same time, thorough.

BOOKS FOR THE USE OF THEOLOGICAL STUDENTS,

By the late J. HAMBLIN SMITH, M.A.

Arranged in the Form of Question and Answer.

The under-mentioned books, hitherto privately issued, are now first published. The main feature of the books is the Question and Answer arrangement, which in the hands of a competent teacher is unquestionably the best method of imparting knowledge. That Mr. Hamblin Smith was a competent teacher—the first of his time—is admitted by all who knew him; and his books, wherever known, have been greatly appreciated.

8vo, sewed.

1. AN EXPOSITION OF THE XXXIX. ARTICLES. 6s. net (postage 3d.).2. A HISTORY OF THE PRAYER BOOK. 3s. net (postage 2d.).3. THE FIRST THREE CENTURIES OF ECCLESIASTICAL HISTORY. 2s. 6d. net (postage 3d.).4. HISTORY OF THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND. 6s. net (postage 4d.).5. NOTES ON THE GOSPEL OF ST. MATTHEW. 2s. 6d. net (postage 2d.).6. LECTURES AND QUESTIONS ON PALEY'S EVIDENCES OF CHRISTIANITY. 2s. 6d. net (postage 2d.).

SECOND EDITION.

Crown 8vo, cloth, pp. i-xxxii-421, 6s. (postage 4d.).

THE BIBLICAL HISTORY OF THE HEBREWS. By F. J. FOAKES-JACKSON, D.D.,

Fellow of Jesus College, Cambridge, and Hon. Canon of Peterborough.

Second Edition, containing an Appendix consisting of Translations of the most important inscriptions referring to the History of Israel.

Crown 8vo, cloth, pp. i-vii-128, 3s. net (postage 3d.).

THE UNWRITTEN SAYINGS OF CHRIST. Words of our Lord not recorded in the Four Gospels, including those recently discovered.

With Notes. By C. G. GRIFFINHOOF, M.A., St.

John's College, Cambridge, Rector of Stretham.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.—"The Unwritten Sayings of Christ must be taken to mean 'The Sayings of Christ,' unwritten, it is true, in various Christian writings, but not written in the Four Canonical Gospels, which are the official record of the Life and Teaching of the Lord."

Cambridge: W. HEFFER & SONS.

London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL & CO.

MESSRS. BELL'S PUBLICATIONS.

READY SHORTLY, crown 4to.

MODERN HOMES. By C. RAFFLES DAVIDSON, Editor of 'The British Architect.' Illustrated by Photographs and Pen-Drawings by the Author.

A book of typical specimens of modern country house architecture, which should appeal to all who are interested in modern architecture, or who are contemplating building.

READY IMMEDIATELY, fcap. 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

LONDON'S LURE. An Anthology of Prose and Verse Passages bearing on London. By HELEN and LEWIS MELVILLE. With special Binding and End-Papers.

JUST PUBLISHED, crown 8vo, 6s. net.

HISTORY OF THE LATIN AND TEUTONIC NATIONS (1494-1514). By LEOPOLD VON RANKE. A Revised Translation by G. R. DENNIS, B.A. (London). With an Introduction by EDWARD ARMSTRONG, M.A., Fellow of Queen's College, Oxford.

NOW READY, demy 8vo, illustrated, 10s. 6d. net.

CANADIAN TYPES OF THE OLD RÉGIME (1608-1698). By C. W. COLBY, Professor of History in the McGill University, Montreal.

NOW READY, crown 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

BUILDERS OF UNITED ITALY (1808-1898). By R. S. HOLLAND. With 8 Portraits.

NOW READY, demy 8vo, 8s. 6d. net.

LIFE OF DEAN COLET, FOUNDER OF ST. PAUL'S SCHOOL. By the Rev. J. H. LUPTON, M.A., late Surmaster of St. Paul's School, and formerly Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge. With an Appendix of some of his English Writings, and a Facsimile Portrait taken from the Engraving in Holland's 'Heroölogia.' New and Revised Edition.

In view of the approaching celebration of the fourth centenary of St. Paul's School, special interest attaches to this new edition of Dr. Lupton's life of its founder.

NOW READY, Vol. IV., containing Parts VII. and VIII. Small 4to, with 3 Maps and 2 Plans, 12s. net.

THE ITINERARY OF JOHN LELAND. Newly Edited from the MSS. by LUCY TOULMIN SMITH.

Vol. V., completing the work, is in active preparation.

"The present edition was worth waiting for, and we are grateful to Miss Smith for the care she has bestowed on a congenial task. The result of Miss Smith's editing is eminently satisfactory."—Westminster Gazette.

NOW READY, fcap. 8vo, 5s. net.

CATULLI CARMINA. Edited, with copious Explanatory Notes, by CHARLES STUTTAFORD.

"Intended for the class whose Latin has become rusty in consequence of the exigencies of a professional or business occupation. Well and wisely annotated for the purpose, and produced admirably."—Evening Standard.

BOHN'S LIBRARIES.—NEW VOLUMES.

NOW COMPLETED IN TWELVE VOLUMES. 5s. each.

THE PROSE WORKS OF JONATHAN SWIFT. Edited by TEMPLE SCOTT. In 12 vols, small post 8vo, with numerous Portraits and Facsimiles. [Bohn's Standard Library.]

Vol. XII., completing the Edition. Complete Biography by W. SPENCER JACKSON, and Full Index, with Essays on the Portraits of Swift and Stella by the Right Hon. Sir FREDERICK FALKINER, K.C., and on the Relations between Swift and Stella by the Very Rev. J. H. BERNARD, D.D., Dean of St. Patrick's. With 2 Portraits and a View of Woodpark.

A NEW TRANSLATION OF HOMER'S ILIAD.

In 2 vols. Vol. I., containing Books I.-XII., in the Press.

THE ILIAD OF HOMER. Translated into English Prose by E. H. BLAKENEY, M.A., Head Master of the King's School, Ely.

READY IMMEDIATELY. 5s.

THE TRAGEDIES OF AESCHYLUS. A New Prose Translation from a Revised Text. By WALTER HEADLAM, Litt.D., and C. E. S. HEADLAM, M.A.

IN THE PRESS. 5s.

MORE'S UTOPIA. Robinson's Translation of the 'Utopia,' together with Roper's 'Life of Sir Thomas More,' and 'More's Letters to Margaret Roper,' and others. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by GEORGE SAMPSON.

NOW READY, demy 8vo, with 48 Illustrations, 7s. 6d. net.

IN VIKING LAND: Norway, Its People, Its Fjords, and Its Fjelds. By W. S. MONROE.

A compendium of information on the history, people, religion, commerce, life, scenery, literature, music, and art of Norway, with suggestions for travellers and a short biography.

THE CHILDREN'S BOOK FOR EASTER.

NOW READY, crown 4to, 2s. 6d. net.

EASTER EGGS. An Easter Idyll for Children by CHRISTOPH VON SCHMID, with many Illustrations in Colour and Black and White by Miss M. V. WHEELHOUSE, and special Binding and End-Papers. "An ideal Easter gift for the children."—MR. CLEMENT SHORTER in Sphere.

THE QUEEN'S TREASURES SERIES.

Each with 8 Coloured Plates and Decorated Title-Page, Covers, and End-Papers. Small crown 4to, 2s. 6d. net each.

NEW VOLUMES.

JAN OF THE WINDMILL. By Mrs. EWING. Illustrated by M. V. WHEELHOUSE.

MRS. OVERTHEWAY'S REMEMBRANCES. By Mrs. EWING. Illustrated by M. V. WHEELHOUSE.

BELL'S MINIATURE SERIES OF GREAT WRITERS.

NEW VOLUME JUST PUBLISHED.

Pott 8vo, cloth, illustrated, 1s. net.

GOLDSMITH. By E. S. LANG BUCKLAND.

Write for Illustrated Prospectus, with full List of the Series.

NOW READY, crown 8vo, illustrated, 5s.

A HOLIDAY TOUCH, AND OTHER TALES OF UNDAUNTED AMERICANS. By CHARLES BATTELL LOOMIS, Author of 'Cheerful Americans,' &c.

"A light touch—the holiday touch, in fact—Mr. Loomis undoubtedly possesses. Gently satirical, mildly sentimental, or downright farcical.....his stories are always cheerful and generally amusing, even when they have a touch of pathos.....Delightfully typical of American humour."—Punch.

NOW READY, crown 8vo, cloth, 1s.

RUGBY FOOTBALL. By HARRY VASSALL and ARTHUR BUDD. New Edition, thoroughly revised and brought up to date. By C. J. B. MARRIOTT, Secretary of the Rugby Union.

READY IMMEDIATELY, crown 8vo, with 4 Coloured Plates and 24 other Illustrations, 7s. 6d. net.

FISH STORIES. Alleged and Experienced, with a Little History, Natural and Unnatural. By CHARLES FREDERICK HOLDER and DAVID STARR JORDAN.

READY IMMEDIATELY, crown 8vo, 5s. net.

ATHLETIC GAMES IN THE EDUCATION OF WOMEN. By GERTRUDE DUDLEY, Director of the Women's Department of Physical Education, Chicago University, and FRANCIS A. KELLOR.

Demy 8vo, with numerous Illustrations, 8s. net.

WHEN RAILROADS WERE NEW. The Story of Early Railway Enterprise in the United States. By CHARLES F. CARTER.

THE WORLD'S AUTHORITY.

WEBSTER'S INTERNATIONAL DICTIONARY

TWENTIETH-CENTURY EDITION.

Revised and Enlarged, with an Appendix of 25,000 Words, Phrases, and Definitions.

2,348 pages. 5,000 Illustrations.

BOUND IN SHEEPSKIN.

WEBSTER is the Standard Authority in the Postal Telegraph Department of the United Kingdom.

WEBSTER is the Standard in the Postal Telegraph Departments of the Australian Commonwealth, New Zealand, Cape Colony, Natal, the Orange River Colony, and the Transvaal.

WEBSTER is constantly used for reference in the Royal Courts of Justice.

WEBSTER is used in the offices of more than 1,200 English Journals.

WRITE FOR DETAILED PROSPECTUS, with Specimen Pages, hundreds of Opinions of Eminent Men, and prices in various styles of binding.

London: GEORGE BELL & SONS, York House, Portugal Street, W.C.

THE ATHENÆUM

Journal of English and Foreign Literature, Science, the Fine Arts, Music and the Drama.

No. 4248.

SATURDAY, MARCH 27, 1909.

PRICE
THREEPENCE.
REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

Exhibitions.

GOUPIL & CO., 25, Bedford Street, Strand.—
EXHIBITION OF ORIGINAL ETCHINGS by Sir CHARLES HOLROYD, R.E.; also a unique Collection of Japanese Colour Prints of the Eighteenth Century. Admission, including Catalogues, One Shilling. Hours 10 to 5. Saturdays 10 to 1.

Provident Institutions.

THE BOOKSELLERS' PROVIDENT INSTITUTION.

Founded 1837.

Patron—HER MAJESTY QUEEN ALEXANDRA.

Invested Capital, 30,000l.

A UNIQUE INVESTMENT

Offered to London Booksellers and their Assistants.

A young man or woman of twenty-five can invest the sum of Twenty Guineas (or its equivalent by instalments), and obtain the right to participate in the following advantages:—

FIRST. Freedom from want in time of Adversity as long as need exists.

SECOND. Permanent Relief in Old Age.

THIRD. Medical Advice by eminent Physicians and Surgeons.

FOURTH. A Cottage in the Country (Abbots Langley, Hertfordshire) for aged Members, with garden produce, coal, and medical attendance free, in addition to an annuity.

FIFTH. A furnished house in the same Retreat at Abbots Langley for the use of Members and their families for holidays or during convalescence.

SIXTH. A contribution towards Funeral expenses when it is needed.

SEVENTH. All these are available not for Members only, but also for their wives or widows and young children.

EIGHTH. The payment of the subscriptions confers an absolute right to these benefits in all cases of need.

For further information apply to the Secretary MR. GEORGE LARNER, 24, Paternoster Row, E.C.

Educational.

ROYAL AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE, CIRENCESTER. (Founded 1845. Reorganized 1908.)

Patron—H.M. KING EDWARD VII.

Chairman—LORD MORETON.

For Landowners, Land Agents, Surveyors, Agriculturists,

Intending Colonists, &c.

FARMING AND COLONIAL BRANCH.

ESTATE MANAGEMENT AND FORESTRY BRANCH.

For Prospectus of Curriculum, Fees, Entrance Examinations, Scholarships, Diplomas, &c., apply to THE PRINCIPAL.

NEXT TERM BEGINS TUESDAY, May 18.

BEDFORD COLLEGE FOR WOMEN

(UNIVERSITY OF LONDON).

YORK PLACE, BAKER STREET, LONDON, W.

Principal—Miss M. J. TUKE, M.A.

The EASTER TERM BEGINS on THURSDAY, April 22, 1909. Lectures are given in preparation for all Examinations of the University of London in Arts, Science, and Preliminary Medicine for the Teachers' Diploma, London, the Teachers' Certificate, Cambridge, and for the Cambridge Higher Local Examination.

Six Laboratories are open to Students for practical work.

There is a Special Course of SCIENTIFIC INSTRUCTION in HYGIENE, designed to furnish Training for Women, Factory and Sanitary Inspectors, and Teachers of Hygiene.

The ART SCHOOL (which is conducted at South Villa, Regent's Park), may be attended by Students who are not taking other Subjects at the College.

A Single Course in any Subject may be attended. Regular Physical Instruction is given free of cost to Students who desire it, by a fully qualified Woman Teacher.

ENTRANCE SCHOLARSHIPS.

ONE REID SCHOLARSHIP in Arts, value 31l. 10s. First Year. 28l. 7s. Second and Third Years.

ONE OLD PUPIL SCHOLARSHIP in ARTS, value 20l. for Two Years.

ONE PFEIFFER SCHOLARSHIP in SCIENCE, annual value 48l., tenable for Three Years: will be awarded on the results of the Examination to be held in June.

RESIDENCE.

Accommodation for about 40 resident Students is provided in the College. At Easter the College will open as an additional Residence. South Villa, Regent's Park, where further accommodation for 15 Students will be provided. The New House is about five minutes' walk from York Place, and has large Gardens available for Students of the College.

Full particulars on application to the Principal at the College.

DEPARTMENT FOR PROFESSIONAL TRAINING IN TEACHING.

Head of the Department—Miss MARY MORTON, M.A.

The Course includes full preparation for the Examinations for the Teaching Diplomas granted by the Universities of London and Cambridge.

Students are admitted to the Training Course in October and in January. One Free Place (value 26l. 5s.), one Scholarship of the value of 20l., and a limited number of Grants of 10l. are offered for the Course beginning in October 1909.

They will be awarded to the best Candidates holding a Degree or its equivalent in Arts or Science.

Applications should be sent to the Head of the Department.

LIBRARY ASSOCIATION. — SUMMER SCHOOL.—A SUMMER SCHOOL for PROVINCIAL and other STUDENTS will be held at the LONDON SCHOOL of ECONOMICS, JULY 19-24, 1909. Courses of Lectures will be given in all Sections of the Syllabus, and visits to Libraries and Printing and Binding Works will be arranged. Applications for admission should be sent, not later than MAY 31, to ERNEST A. BAKER, M.A. D.Litt., Hon. Sec. Education Committee, 24, Whitcomb Street, W.C.

DRAPERS' COMPANY.

SOLE SCHOLARSHIP AND EXHIBITION FUND.

The DRAPERS' COMPANY are about to award TWO SCHOLARSHIPS of 60l. per annum, tenable for Two or Three Years at some place of Advanced Education, for the Study of Theoretical or Applied Science, Art, Medicine, or Law, or the Degree Examination of some University in the United Kingdom. The Scholarships will be awarded to (a) Sons or Grandsons, between 16 and 18 years of age, of Freeman of the Drapers' Company; (b) other Boys of the same age. The Parent or Guardian of every Candidate must satisfy the Company that he needs the assistance of the Scholarship to carry on his education.

The Company will shortly have the right also to nominate for an EXHIBITION of 70l. per annum, tenable for Three Years at King's College, Cambridge, a Son or Grandson of a Freeman of the Company of not more than 20 years of age.

Further particulars may be obtained on application to the CLERK TO THE COMPANY, Drapers' Hall, Throgmorton Street, E.C.

DRAPERS' COMPANY'S GIRLS' SCHOLARSHIPS.

The DRAPERS' COMPANY are about to award THREE SCHOLARSHIPS to enable specially promising Girls to study at some place of advanced education, either in Special Subjects to be approved by the Company or for the Degree Examination of a University in the United Kingdom.

The Scholarships will be of the value of 60l. per annum each, and will be tenable for Two or Three Years. To be eligible for them, Girls must be between 17 and 19 years of age and must have passed some approved Public Examination and give other evidence satisfactory to the Company of successful study. The Parent or Guardian of every Candidate must satisfy the Company that she needs the assistance of the Scholarship to carry on her education.

Further particulars may be obtained on application to the CLERK TO THE COMPANY, Drapers' Hall, Throgmorton Street, London, E.C.

THE DOWNS SCHOOL, SEAFORD, SUSSEX.

Head Mistress—Miss LUCY ROBINSON, M.A. (late Second Mistress, St. Felix School, Southwold). References: The Principal of Bedford College, London; The Master of Peterhouse, Cambridge.

CHRIST'S COLLEGE, BLACKHEATH, S.E.

F. W. AVELING, M.A. B.Sc.

Preparation for Universities and Professions.

Stress on Modern Languages and Science.

EDUCATION.

Parents or Guardians desiring accurate information relative to the CHOICE of SCHOOLS for BOYS or GIRLS or TUTORs in England or Abroad are invited to call upon or send fully detailed particulars to MESSRS. GABBITAS, THRING & CO., who for more than thirty years have been closely in touch with the leading Educational Establishments.

Advice, free of charge, is given by Mr. THRING, Nephew of the late Head Master of Uppingham, 36, Sackville Street, London, W.

LEATHERHEAD COURT, SURREY.

A London School in the Country for 45 Girls (Residents).

Principal—Miss TULLIS.

The School aims at an intellectual training suited to the individual physical development on safe lines, and the cultivation of generous thoughts and pleasant manners.

Situations Vacant.

UNIVERSITY OF BIRMINGHAM.

(FACULTY OF ARTS.)

PROFESSORSHIP OF FRENCH LANGUAGE AND LITERATURE.

The COUNCIL invites applications for the CHAIR OF FRENCH LANGUAGE AND LITERATURE. Stipend 500l. per annum. The successful Candidate will be required to enter on his duties on OCTOBER 1, 1909.

Applications, accompanied by not less than three References, should be sent to the undersigned on or before MAY 8. Sixty-five copies should be sent.

Testimonials are not required.

Further particulars may be obtained from

GEO. H. MORLEY, Secretary.

UNIVERSITY OF BIRMINGHAM.

(FACULTY OF SCIENCE.)

PROFESSORSHIP OF BOTANY AND VEGETABLE PHYSIOLOGY.

The COUNCIL invites applications for the CHAIR OF BOTANY AND VEGETABLE PHYSIOLOGY. Stipend 500l. per annum. The successful Candidate will be required to enter on his duties on OCTOBER 1, 1909.

Applications, accompanied by not less than three References, should be sent to the undersigned on or before MAY 1. Sixty-five copies should be sent.

Testimonials are not required.

Further particulars may be obtained from

GEO. H. MORLEY, Secretary.

UNIVERSITY OF BIRMINGHAM.

(FACULTY OF SCIENCE.)

PROFESSORSHIP OF BOTANY AND VEGETABLE PHYSIOLOGY.

The COUNCIL invites applications for the CHAIR OF BOTANY AND VEGETABLE PHYSIOLOGY. Stipend 500l. per annum. The successful Candidate will be required to enter on his duties on OCTOBER 1, 1909.

Applications, accompanied by not less than three References, should be sent to the undersigned on or before MAY 1. Testimonials are not required.

Further particulars may be obtained from

GEO. H. MORLEY, Secretary.

Yearly Subscription, free by post, Inland, 15s. 3d.; Foreign, 18s. Entered at the New York Post Office as Second Class matter.

THE ATHENÆUM is published on FRIDAY AFTERNOON at 2 o'clock.

UNIVERSITY OF MANCHESTER.

PROFESSORSHIP OF FRENCH.

The COUNCIL is about to appoint a PROFESSOR of FRENCH. Salary, 600l. per annum.

Applications should be sent not later than MAY 22 to the REGISTRAR, from whom further particulars may be obtained.

UNIVERSITY OF MANCHESTER.

The COUNCIL is about to appoint an ASSISTANT LECTURER in BOTANY. A knowledge of Vegetable Physiology will be required. For further particulars apply to THE REGISTRAR.

THE UNIVERSITY OF LIVERPOOL.

CHAIR OF LATIN.

The COUNCIL invite applications for the CHAIR OF LATIN. The Salary is fixed at not less than 600l. per annum. The successful Candidate will be required to enter upon his duties on OCTOBER 5, 1909.

Applications, together with the names of not less than three persons to whom reference may be made, and (if the Candidate so desires) twelve copies of Testimonials, should be in the hands of the undersigned on or before MAY 15, 1909.

Further particulars may be obtained from

P. HEBBLETHWAITE, Registrar.

COUNTY OF LONDON.

The LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL invites applications for the following posts:—

The County Secondary School, Holloway. — TWO ASSISTANT MASTERS, One specially qualified in German and One in English (Literature and History).

The County Secondary School, Chelsea. — THREE ASSISTANT MISTRESSES—One specially qualified in English and Latin, One in Science and Mathematics, and One in Latin and General Subjects with experience in teaching younger children.

A full-time MISTRESS OF DRAWING. The County Secondary School, Fulham. — An ASSISTANT MISTRESS to take charge of a Form and to teach French in the direct method. Games desirable.

The County Secondary School, Bermondsey. — A JUNIOR SCIENCE MISTRESS specially qualified in Botany and Nature Study. A knowledge of Geography and Mathematics will be an additional qualification.

The County Secondary School, Putney. — An ASSISTANT MISTRESS specially qualified in English. A knowledge of French will be an additional qualification.

The County Secondary School, Eltham. — An ASSISTANT MISTRESS for a Junior Form to teach general English subjects, Arithmetic, Nature works, and Gardening. Ability and willingness to supervise School Games essential.

L.C.C. Moorfields Training College for Elementary School Teachers. — TWO ASSISTANT LECTURERS (Women), One specially qualified in Geography and One in Mathematics. ONE ASSISTANT MISTRESS OF METHOD with special knowledge of Infant School Work.

L.C.C. Fulham Training College for Elementary School Teachers. — ONE LECTURER (Woman) in SCIENCE specially qualified to teach Chemistry and Physics.

TWO ASSISTANT LECTURERS specially qualified in English and History.

TWO ASSISTANT MISTRESSES OF METHOD (applicants should specify in what other Subjects of the College curriculum they are prepared to give instruction).

L.C.C. Avery Hill Training College for Elementary School Teachers. — ASSISTANT LECTURER (Woman) to take some History and to help in the Supervision and Criticism of Lessons given by the Students in Elementary Schools.

Unattached. — THREE ASSISTANT MASTERS or ASSISTANT MISTRESSES OF METHOD for work in connexion with the supervision of the School Practice of the Students of the Council's Training Colleges.

The persons appointed will be required to commence work at the beginning of the Autumn Term, 1909. The Salaries attached to the posts are as follows:—Assistant Masters—Commencing Salary 150l. a year, rising by annual increments of 10l. to 300l. a year; Assistant Mistresses—Commencing Salary 120l. a year, rising by annual increments of 10l. to 220l. a year; Lecturer—Commencing Salary 180l. a year, rising by annual increments of 10l. to 250l. a year; Assistant Lecturers—Commencing Salary 130l. a year, rising by annual increments of 10l. to 170l. a year; Teachers of Drawing (Women)—160l. a year fixed.

In the case of Assistant Masters and Mistresses in Secondary Schools and Lecturers and Assistant Lecturers in Training Colleges, commencing Salaries higher than the minima specified above will be allowed to Candidates entering the service with satisfactory experience in work of a similar nature; in this connexion two years' experience in a School or College approved by the Council for the purpose will be counted as equivalent to one year spent in one of the Council's Schools or Colleges, provided that (1) experience of less than two years in any one School or College shall not be reckoned; and that (2) not more than ten years' outside service in all shall be taken into account. This rule does not apply to Teachers of Drawing.

All Lecturers and Assistant Lecturers in the Council's Training Colleges should be able to help in the supervision of practical teaching of the Students in Schools.

Applications should be made on Form H 40, to be obtained, together with particulars of the appointments, from the EDUCATION OFFICER, London County Council, Education Offices, Victoria Embankment, W.C., to whom they must be returned not later than 11 A.M. on APRIL 19, 1909, accompanied by copies of three Testimonials of recent date. All communications on the subject must be endorsed "H 4," and a stamped addressed foolscap envelope must be enclosed.

Canvassing, either directly, or indirectly, will be held to be a disqualification for employment.

G. L. GOMME, Clerk of the London County Council.

Education Offices, Victoria Embankment, W.C.

March 25, 1909.

VICTORIA UNIVERSITY OF MANCHESTER

FACULTY OF TECHNOLOGY.

DEPARTMENT OF PURE AND APPLIED CHEMISTRY.

The MANCHESTER EDUCATION COMMITTEE and the UNIVERSITY invite applications for the position of PROFESSOR OF PURE AND APPLIED CHEMISTRY in the SCHOOL OF TECHNOLOGY. Applications, addressed to the Dean of the Faculty of Technology (Mr. J. H. REYNOLDS), should be sent in on or before MAY 1, 1909. The Salary is 550*l.* per annum. The successful Candidate will be required to take up his duties about the MIDDLE OF SEPTEMBER NEXT.—Further particulars may be had on application to the Municipal School of Technology, Sackville Street, Manchester.

WELSH INTERMEDIATE EDUCATION ACT, 1889.

CENTRAL WELSH BOARD.

APPOINTMENT OF ASSISTANT EXAMINER IN ENGLISH LANGUAGE AND LITERATURE.

The EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE of the BOARD will shortly proceed to the appointment of an ASSISTANT EXAMINER in ENGLISH LANGUAGE AND LITERATURE. Particulars relating to the appointment may be obtained from the undersigned not later than MONDAY, March 29.

OWEN OWEN, Chief Inspector.

Central Welsh Board, Cardiff, March 16, 1909.

COUNTY BOROUGH OF SUNDERLAND.

BEDE COLLEGIATE SCHOOL.

WANTED, to begin work on APRIL 27 if possible, FORM MASTER for BOYS' SECTION OF SCHOOL. Disciplinarian, able to teach History and some Classics, and willing to take an active part in the management of the Boys' Debating Society. Must be Oxford or Cambridge Man, with Honours Degree and some Teaching experience. Salary according to Scale, but not less than 150*l.* to begin with.

Application Form and Scale of Salaries obtainable on sending stamped addressed envelope to the undersigned, who will receive applications up to APRIL 6.

T. W. BRYERS, Education Secretary.

15, John Street, Sunderland.

COUNTY BOROUGH OF SUNDERLAND.

BEDE COLLEGIATE SCHOOL.

WANTED, for September 14, CLASSICAL MISTRESS for GIRLS' SECTION OF SCHOOL. Disciplinarian, Honours in Classics at Oxford or Cambridge and some teaching experience in a good Secondary School indispensable. Salary according to Scale, but not less than 130*l.* to begin with.

Application Form and Scale of Salaries obtainable on sending stamped addressed envelope to the undersigned, who will receive applications up to MAY 9.

T. W. BRYERS, Education Secretary.

15, John Street, Sunderland.

BATLEY (BOYS) GRAMMAR SCHOOL.

Head Master—N. L. FRAZER, M.A.

ASSISTANT MASTER REQUIRED for SEPTEMBER. Graduate preferably, with experience in teaching Young Boys. Strong qualifications in English; Class Singing and Nature Study recommendations. Games. Salary 140*l.* per annum.—Application Forms, which must be returned to me not later than MAY 15, 1909, may be obtained from

G. R. H. DANBY, M.A. Oxon., Secretary to the Governors. Education Offices, Batley.

ASSISTANT SECRETARY.—Applications to fill this position at the CHAMBER OF COMMERCE, MANCHESTER, are invited. Candidates must state age (not to exceed 30), experience, and Salary expected. Literary ability, and a knowledge of some Foreign Languages important.—Address THE PRESIDENT, marking envelopes "Application." Personal canvassing debarred.

DESIGNER and ILLUSTRATOR WANTED by a LONDON EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTION to assist with Courses of Instruction in Ornamental Lettering and Showcard Writing, and also Black-and-White and Colour Work. Whole time engagement.—Apply, stating qualifications, to Box A, care of Paul E. Derrick, 34, Norfolk Street, Strand.

Situations Wanted.

AUTHOR and CONTRIBUTOR to leading Reviews and Magazines desires ENGAGEMENT. Would collaborate with Novelist or Dramatist, or undertake Secretarial duties. Research in British Museum if desired.—Box 1581, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

UNIONIST M.P.s, JOURNALISTS, AUTHORS.—Competent STENOGRAPHER, with literary ability, SEEKS WORK. Useful knowledge matters Journalistic. German and French Languages. Own Remington.—Letters to SIGNET, 55, Chancery Lane.

Miscellaneous.

TRANSLATIONS INTO ENGLISH from French, Italian, Spanish, Portuguese, German, Dutch, Danish, Norwegian, and Swedish.—W. T. CURTIS, 10, Haringey Park, Crouch End, N.

GERMAN and FRENCH TRANSLATIONS—from or into these Languages—undertaken by an ENGLISH GENTLEMAN. Absolute correctness guaranteed. Seven years residence in Germany as University Lecturer. Two years in France.—Write to Box 1574, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, E.C.

ACCURATE RESEARCH and GENEALOGICAL WORK undertaken by R. M. OLENCROSS, M.A. LL.B. Advice also supplied to Persons drawing up their own Pedigree. Excellent Testimonials.—3, Chalfont Street, West Kensington.

RESEARCH WORK in the British Museum and elsewhere UNDERTAKEN. Experienced.—Y. K., Box 1580, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

LITERARY RESEARCH undertaken at the British Museum and elsewhere on moderate terms. Excellent Testimonials.—A. B., Box 1062, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

PUBLIC-HOUSE REFORM.—The People's Refreshment House Association, Ltd., founded by the Bishop of Chester, manages 68 Licensed Inns. Ask for List and Report. APPLY FOR 1*l.* SHARES. 5 per cent paid since 1899. P.R.H.A., Broadway Chambers, Westminster.

PRIVATE SOCIAL TOURS FOR GENTLE-WOMEN.—Miss BISHOP leaves on APRIL 16 for the Historic and Picturesque Medieval Castles of the Loire Valley. Easy journeys. Inclusive Terms. References exchanged.—Details of this and later Tours, 27, St. George's Road, Kilburn, London.

PRIVATE ACCOUNT BOOK.—For Country or City Gentleman. Combines every requirement, from Cash Book to Balance Sheet and Income Tax. Satisfaction guaranteed or money returned. Particulars free.—McQUEEN & CO., Moat Road E., Leicester.

Type-Writers, &c.

AUTHORS' MSS., NOVELS, STORIES, PLAYS, ESSAYS TYPE-WRITTEN with complete accuracy, 9*d.* per 1,000 words. Clear Carbon Copies guaranteed. References to well-known Writers.—M. STUART, Allendale, Kymberley Road, Harrow.

TYPE-WRITING, 9*d.* per 1,000 words. All kinds of MSS. accurately typed. Clear Carbon Copies, 3*d.* per 1,000. References to well-known Authors. Oxford Higher Local. Tel. 1272, Richmond P.O.—M. KING, 24, Forest Road, Kew Gardens, S.W.

AUTHORS' MSS., 9*d.* per 1,000 words. Sermons, Plays, and all kinds of TYPE-WRITING carefully done at home (Remington). Good paper. Orders promptly executed. Duplicating from 3*s.* 6*d.* per 100.—M. L. L., 18, Edgeley Road, Clapham, S.W.

TYPE-WRITING 9*d.* per 1,000 words; Carbons 3*d.* French and German Type-writing 1*s.* per 1,000. Translations. Duplicating 3*s.* 100 Copies (quarto), 15*s.* per 1,000. Best work, accuracy, and promptitude.—G. WALKER, 14, Park Road, New Cross, S.E.

TYPE-WRITING undertaken by highly educated Women (Classical Tripos; Cambridge Higher Local; Modern Languages). Research, Revision, Translation, Shorthand, Dictation Room.—THE CAMBRIDGE TYPE-WRITING AGENCY, 10, Duke Street, Adelphi, W.C.

Catalogues.

BOOKS.—ALL OUT-OF-PRINT and RARE BOOKS on any subject SUPPLIED. The most expert Bookfinder extant. Please state wants and ask for CATALOGUE. I make a special feature of exchanging any Saleable Books for others selected from my various Lists. Special List of 2,000 Books I particularly want post free.—EDW. BAKER'S Great Bookshop, 14-16, John Bright Street, Birmingham.—Yellow Book, 13 vols. 2*l.* 10*s.*; Trigg's Art Garden Design, Italy, 3*l.* guineas for 2*l.*; E. Fitzgerald's Works, 7 vols. 3*l.* 3*s.*

ANCIENT and MODERN COINS.—Collectors and Antiquarians are invited to apply to SPINK & SON, Limited, for Specimen Copy (gratis) of their NUMISMATIC CIRCULAR. The finest Greek, Roman, and English Coins on View and for Sale at Moderate Prices.—SPINK & SON, Limited, Experts, Valuers, and Cataloguers, 16, 17, and 18, Piccadilly, London, W. Established upwards of a Century.

CATALOGUE No. 50.—Drawings by Turner, Prout, Ruskin, &c.—Turner's Liber Studiorum and other Engravings—Proofs touched by Turner—Constable's English Landscape—Etchings by Whistler—Japanese Colour Prints—Illustrated Books. Post free, Sixpence.—WM. WARD, 2, Church Terrace, Richmond, Surrey.

FIRST EDITIONS of MODERN AUTHORS, including Dickens, Thackeray, Lever, Ainsworth; Books illustrated by G. and R. Cruikshank, Phiz, Rowlandson, Leech, &c. The largest and choicest Collection offered for Sale in the World. CATALOGUES issued and sent post free on application. Books Bought.—WALTER T. SPENCER, 27, New Oxford Street, London, W.C.

JUST PUBLISHED.

CATALOGUE of BOOKS, including interesting items relating to Africa, America, Angling, Arctic, Australia, the Drama, Hunting, Sport, Travels, &c.—Post free of JAMES RIMMELL & SON, 53, Shaftesbury Avenue, London, W. Books and Engravings Bought.

OLD ENGLISH LITERATURE—Engraved Portraits—Engravings of London and Middlesex. CATALOGUES post free.—A. RUSSELL SMITH, 28, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C.

GLAISHER'S REMAINDER BOOK

CATALOGUE

For MARCH (No. 363).

NOW READY, and will be forwarded on application.

It comprises a specially attractive Selection of Publishers' Remainder including many Good Bargains

WILLIAM GLAISHER, LTD.,

Booksellers, 265, HIGH HOLBORN, LONDON.

Printers.

THE HISTORY OF YOUR LANDED ESTATES should be put into permanent form. We undertake this Work in its entirety. Searches made; material arranged and printed under Expert Supervision.—GERRARDS, Ltd., Genealogical Printers, 411*a*, Harrow Road, London, W.

Authors' Agents.

TO AUTHORS.—LITERARY AGENT has opportunity of INTRODUCING THEOLOGICAL WORKS to a high-class FIRM of PUBLISHERS. No fees.—Write A. B. C., Box 5105, Willings, 125, Strand, W.C.

THE AUTHOR'S AGENCY.—Established 1879. The interests of Authors capably represented. Agreements for Publishing arranged. MSS. placed with Publishers.—Terms and Testimonials on application to Mr. A. M. BURGHESE, 24, Paternoster Row.

MR. GEORGE LARNER, Accountant and Licensed Valuer to the Bookselling, Publishing, Newspaper, Printing, and Stationery Trades. Partnerships Arranged. Balance Sheets and Trading Accounts Prepared and Audited. All Business carried out under Mr. Larner's personal supervision.—28, 29, and 30, Paternoster Row, E.C., Secretary to the Booksellers' Provident Institution.

Sales by Auction.

Engravings and Etchings.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on MONDAY, March 29, and Following Day, at 1 o'clock precisely, ENGRAVINGS, ETCHINGS, and DRAWINGS (Framed and in the Portfolio, including Arundel Society Publications, the Property of a GENTLEMAN, PORTRAITS and FANCY SUBJECTS by different Engravers, many in Colours—Mezzotints published by Carrington Bowles, R. Sayer, and others; Views, Portraits, &c., the Property of J. HUTCHINS, Esq., of Newport, Monmouth; other Properties, comprising Mezzotint and other Portraits by W. Whiston Barney, J. R. Smith, W. Dickinson, J. Watson, J. McARDILL, F. Bartolozzi, J. Smith, and others—Engravings after J. M. W. Turner—Foreign Costume Plates, in Colours—Etchings by Rembrandt, J. M. Whistler, Seymour Haden, and others—Drawings of the English School, by N. Hone, F. Hayman, T. Rowlandson, W. Havell, David Cox, Birket Foster, T. S. Cooper, &c.—Drawings by celebrated Old Masters and others, &c.

May be viewed. Catalogues may be had.

The Collection of Coins and Medals of the late C. H. T. HAWKINS, Esq.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on WEDNESDAY, March 31, at 1 o'clock precisely, the collection of COINS and MEDALS of the late C. H. T. HAWKINS, Esq., of Portland Place, W., comprising Greek Coins in Silver and Bronze, collected in Greece in the early part of the Nineteenth Century—English Coins in Gold, Silver, and Copper—English and Foreign Medals—Coin Cabinets, &c.

May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

The Library of J. HUTCHINS, Esq., of Newport, Monmouthshire.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on THURSDAY, April 1, and Following Day, at 1 o'clock precisely, BOOKS and MANUSCRIPTS, including the LIBRARY of J. HUTCHINS, Esq., of Newport, Monmouthshire, a Collection of Books and Manuscripts by and relating to Philip James Bailey (Author of 'Festus,' &c.), and other Properties, comprising rare Works relating to America—First Editions of the Writings of Dickens, Thackeray, Ainsworth, &c.—Books illustrated by Rowlandson, Cruikshank, H. K. Browne, and others—Sporting Works—Caricatures—Scarce Pamphlets—Civil War Tracts, &c.—Boydell's Shakespeare Gallery—Naval and Martial Achievements—Stedman's American War, 2 vols. General Clinton's own copy, with autograph pencil notes—Hogarth Restored—Smirke's illustrations to Don Quixote, proofs before the letters, &c.

May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

Valuable Natural History Books—Standard Works from the Library of a Gentleman, &c.

MESSRS. HODGSON & CO. will SELL by AUCTION, at their Rooms, 115, Chancery Lane, W.C., on THURSDAY, April 1, and Following Day, at 1 o'clock, VALUABLE NATURAL HISTORY BOOKS, including a fine and complete Set of Curtis's Botanical Magazine, in 113 vols. calf, 1787-1907—Lovell Reeve and Sowerby's Conchologia Iconica, 20 vols. quarto, half-calf—Harvey's Phycologia Britannica and Australica, 9 vols.—Loddiges' Botanical Cabinet, 20 vols.—Bateman's Orchidaceae Plants, &c., 2 vols.—Moore's Lepidoptera of Ceylon, 3 vols.—Entomological Society's Transactions, complete from 1836 to 1905, &c. Also Standard Modern Works from the Library of a Gentleman, including handsomely bound Sets of Fielding, Horace Walpole, Thackeray, Marryat, Whyte-Melville, Surtees, and others—A Set of the Folk-Lore Society's Publications, 53 vols.—A Collection of Books on Economic Subjects—Hakluyt's Voyages, 12 vols.—Sporting Magazine, 1847-69—Cussans's Hertfordshire, 3 vols. large paper—Punch, a complete set in half-morocco—Encyclopaedia Britannica, Tenth Edition, 36 vols.

To be viewed and catalogues had.

The Stock and Plant of Sowerby's Botany.

MESSRS. HODGSON & CO. will offer for SALE, at their Rooms, on THURSDAY, April 1, at 3 o'clock, the VALUABLE PROPERTY of SOWERBY'S ENGLISH BOTANY, 13 vols., comprising the entire Stock and Plant of the Third Edition of this Standard Work.

Full particulars on application.

The Library of the late JOHN BRUNSKILL, Esq., removed from Gaisgill, Elstree, Herts (by order of the Executors).

MESSRS. HODGSON & CO. will SELL by AUCTION, at their Rooms, 115, Chancery Lane, W.C., on TUESDAY, April 6, and Following Day, at 1 o'clock, the above LIBRARY, comprising fine Library Editions of Chaucer, Spenser, Marlowe, Shakespeare, Sir T. Browne, Pope, Fielding, Gibbon, Hallam, and others—a Set of the English Historical Review, from the commencement to 1903—Higgins's Analyses and Celtic Druids, 3 vols.—Bruce's Roman Wall, Best Edition—Rare Books relating to America—Editions of the Classics, including Modern Critical Texts, and Standard Works in General Literature. To which are added other Properties, comprising Thackeray's Works, Library Edition, 22 vols.—Coombe's Napoleon, 1815, and other Books with Coloured Plates—a few Books in Old English Literature—Modern Philosophical Works from the Library of the late HERBERT SPENCER, Esq., &c.

Catalogues are preparing.

The Library of the late MATTHEW H. JOHNSON, Esq., removed from No. 85, Northam Road, Holloway (by order of the Executors).

MESSRS. HODGSON & CO. will SELL by AUCTION, at their Rooms, 115, Chancery Lane, W.C., DURING APRIL, the above LIBRARY, comprising Botanical, Zoological, and other Scientific Books—Works in History and Biography—Books in Sixteenth and Seventeenth Century Literature, &c.

Catalogues are preparing.

STEVENS'S AUCTION ROOMS.

Established 1760.

TUESDAY and WEDNESDAY NEXT, March 30 and 31, at half-past 12 o'clock.

CURIOSITIES, including an interesting Collection of Weapons and other Curios from the Sudan, the South Sea Islands, and other parts—Burmese Bronze and Marble Buddhas—Bronze Bells and Gongs—Chinese and Japanese Porcelain—Ivory Carvings—Bronzes, &c.; also Tanagrian Figures—an Antique Roman Stone Head—Framed Engravings—a Sir Walter Scott Letter—and about 150 lots of Baxter Prints, &c.

Mr. J. C. STEVENS will Sell the above Property by AUCTION at his Rooms, 38, King Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C. On view Monday prior 10 to 4 and mornings of Sale. Catalogues on application.

WEDNESDAY NEXT, at about 2 o'clock.

A choice COLLECTION of BAXTER PRINTS from various sources, including many rare Subjects (in all about 150 Lots).

Mr. J. C. STEVENS will include the above in his SALE on WEDNESDAY NEXT, at his Rooms, 38, King Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C.

MESSRS. CHRISTIE, MANSON & WOODS respectfully give notice that they will hold the following SALES by AUCTION, at their Great Rooms, King Street, St. James's Square, the Sales commencing at 1 o'clock precisely:—

On MONDAY, March 29, the COLLECTION of ENGRAVINGS of the late RICHARD HOBSON, Esq., and the late LORD BATTERSEA.

On TUESDAY, March 30, the COLLECTION of OLD CHINESE PORCELAIN of the late RICHARD HOBSON, Esq.

On WEDNESDAY, March 31, a COLLECTION of valuable AUTOGRAPH LETTERS and BOOKS.

On THURSDAY, April 1, JEWELLERY of J. G. HAMILTON STARKE, Esq., deceased, and BIJOUTERIE and OBJECTS OF VERTU from various sources.

On FRIDAY, April 2, the COLLECTION of OLD NANKIN PORCELAIN, OBJECTS OF ART, and DECORATIVE FURNITURE of the Right Hon. LORD BATTERSEA, deceased.

On SATURDAY, April 3, MODERN PICTURES, the Property of the late J. J. BROWN, Esq.

Books and Manuscripts.

PUTTICK & SIMPSON will SELL by AUCTION at their Galleries, 47, Leicester Square, W.C., EARLY in APRIL, the LIBRARY of the late EDWARD CHAPLIN, Esq., of Hamburg, removed from that city, and other Properties, including a Collection of Works relating to the County of Notts, Books relating to the Fine Arts, and Standard Works in all Branches of Literature, further particulars of which will appear.

Magazines, &c.

THE BUILDER (founded 1842), 4, Catherine Street, London, W.C., MARCH 27 contains:—

A FORGOTTEN ARCHITECT.

VARIATION IN CONTRACTS.

WAGES IN THE BUILDING TRADE IN FRANCE AND GERMANY.

THE BRITISH SCHOOL AT ROME.

A LESSON FROM THE PAST (Architectural Association).

THE GROWTH OF LONDON (Surveyors' Institution).

THE OLD BATH PRESERVATION SOCIETY.

ILLUSTRATIONS:

VERNON HOUSE, ST. JAMES'S;

DINING-ROOM, LANSDOWN PARK;

SKETCHES AT WORCESTER AND HEREFORD CATHEDRALS;

OLD TUDOR ARCHES EXCAVATED AT HAMPTON COURT;

BUBWITH'S ALMSHOUSES, WELLS.

From Offices as above (4d., by post 4½d.), at Railway Bookstalls, Bookshops, and of all Newsagents.

APPLETON'S LIST.

THE FIRING LINE.

By ROBERT W. CHAMBERS.

With 8 Full-Page Illustrations. 499 pages, cloth, 6s.

Globe.—"In its character-drawing, its gentle philosophy, its charming pictures, its happy radiance, 'The Firing Line' is one of those books which bring to us the best form of sentiment, the healthiest tone of romance."

R O S N A H.

By MYRA KELLY. 6s.

Lady Rosnah, an attractive Irish girl full of brightness and irresponsible fun, impersonates a young girl friend called on to rejoin her family after long absence. This is the story of Rosnah's adventures when surrounded by four big brothers and settling down to home life under these unusual conditions.

CY WHITTAKER'S PLACE.

By J. C. LINCOLN, Author of 'Cap'n Eri.' 6s.

A novel full of original humour and every characteristic associated with this author's work.

THE PLEASURES OF THE TELESCOPE.

By G. P. SERVISS. Illustrated. Cloth, 6s. net.

An Illustrated Guide for Amateurs, with a popular description of the Chief Wonders of the Heavens.

MAN IN THE LIGHT OF EVOLUTION.

By J. M. TYLER. Cloth, 6s. net.

This is a study showing the bearing of the evolutionary theory on man's history, progress, and life.

PROBLEMS OF CITY GOVERNMENT.

By L. S. ROWE. Cloth, 6s. net.

An original and suggestive discussion of municipal questions.

APPLETON & CO., Publishers,
25, Bedford Street, London.

Messrs. LONGMANS & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

RECENTLY PUBLISHED. With 168 Illustrations. Medium 8vo, 21s. net. (Inland postage 5d.)

THE ORIGIN OF VERTEBRATES

By WALTER H. GASKELL,

M.A. F.R.S. M.D. (Camb.), LL.D. (Edinburgh, and McGill Univ., Montreal), &c.

"Dr. Gaskell has produced a book of unusual merit, and of the utmost importance. It embodies the results of a vast amount of steady, patient research, extending over a period of many years, combined with a wide knowledge of the literature.....Dr. Gaskell is to be warmly congratulated on its completion. He has brought forward a vast array of evidence which it will be difficult for his critics to subvert."—British Medical Journal.

RECENTLY PUBLISHED.

With 12 Coloured Plates and 51 Micro-Photographs by RICHARD MUIR. 4to, 42s. net. (Inland postage 6d.)

THE BONE-MARROW.

A Cytological Study. Forming an Introduction to the Normal and Pathological Histology of the Tissue, more especially with regard to Blood Formation, Blood Destruction, &c. Together with a short Account of the Reactions and Degenerations of the Tissue in Disease.

By W. E. CARNEGIE DICKSON, M.D. B.Sc. Edin., M.R.C.P. Edin.,

Lecturer on Pathological Bacteriology and Senior Assistant to the Professor of Pathology in the University of Edinburgh, &c.

"Mr. Dickson is to be congratulated on having produced a book which will certainly be a classic on the subject, and indispensable to pathologists and hæmatologists."—Edinburgh Medical Journal.

RECENTLY PUBLISHED. Illustrated by nearly 2,000 Figures, largely Original and from Nature. In 3 vols. 4to, 63s. net. (Inland postage 1s. 4d.)

DESIGN IN NATURE

Illustrated by Spiral and other Arrangements in the Inorganic and Organic Kingdoms as exemplified in Matter, Force, Life, Growth, Rhythms, &c., especially in Crystals, Plants, and Animals. With Examples selected from the Reproductive, Alimentary, Respiratory, Circulatory, Nervous, Muscular, Osseous, Locomotory, and other Systems of Animals.

By J. BELL PETTIGREW, M.D. LL.D. F.R.S. F.R.C.P.,

Laureate of the Institute of France, late Chandos Professor of Anatomy and Medicine in the University, St. Andrews.

This is an attempt to trace design in the inorganic and organic kingdoms. A Creator or First Cause, it is claimed, regulates and upholds everything. The author asserts that plants and animals differ from each other from their first inception, and that there is no such thing as universal protoplasm common to all.

MONOGRAPHS ON BIOCHEMISTRY.

Edited by R. H. ADERS PLIMMER, D.Sc., and F. GOWLAND HOPKINS, M.A. M.B. F.R.S.

THE FOLLOWING VOLUMES ARE NOW READY:—

GENERAL CHARACTERS OF THE PROTEINS.

By S. B. SCHRYVER, D.Sc. Ph.D.

2s. 6d. net. (Inland postage 3d.)

THE NATURE OF ENZYME ACTION.

By W. M. BAYLISS, D.Sc. F.R.S.

Roy. 8vo, 3s. net. (Inland postage 3d.)

CHEMICAL CONSTITUTION OF THE PROTEINS.

By R. H. ADERS PLIMMER, D.Sc.

In Two Parts. Part I.,

3s. net. Part II., 2s. 6d. net. (Inland postage 3d. each.)

RECENT ADVANCES IN ORGANIC CHEMISTRY.

By A. W. STEWART, D.Sc., Lecturer on Stereochemistry in University College, London. With an Introduction by J. NORMAN COLLIE, Ph.D. LL.D. F.R.S., Professor of Organic Chemistry in University College, London. 8vo, 7s. 6d. net. (Inland postage 4d.)

TEXT-BOOKS OF PHYSICAL CHEMISTRY. (NEW VOLUME.)

Edited by Sir WILLIAM RAMSAY, F.R.S.

THE THEORY OF VALENCY.

By J. NEWTON FRIEND, Ph.D. (Würz), M.Sc.

Crown 8vo, 5s. (Inland postage 4d.)

AN INTRODUCTION TO THE SCIENCE OF RADIO-ACTIVITY.

By CHARLES W. RAFFETY. With Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d. net. (Inland postage 4d.)

ELECTRIC FURNACES:

The Production of Heat from Electric Energy, and the Construction of Electric Furnaces.

By WILHELM BORCHERS, Professor of Metallurgy at the Royal Technical College, Aachen. Translated by HENRY G. SOLOMON, A.M.I.E.E. With 232 Illustrations. 8vo, 7s. 6d. net. (Inland postage 4d.)

VECTORS & VECTOR DIAGRAMS, applied to the Alternating Current Circuit. With Examples on their use in the Theory of Transformers, and of Single and Polyphase Motors, &c.

By WILLIAM CRAMP, M.I.E.E. Consulting Engineer and Special Lecturer in Electrical Design in the University of Manchester; and CHARLES F. SMITH, M.I.E.E., Assoc. M.Inst.C.E. 8vo, 7s. 6d. net. (Inland postage 4d.)

LONGMANS, GREEN & CO., 39, Paternoster Row, London, E.C.

SMITH, ELDER & CO.'S LIST.

NEW 6/- NOVELS.

TERESA

By EDITH AYRTON ZANGWILL,
Author of 'The First Mrs. Mollivar,' &c.

Morning Post.—"A story full of surprises and full of interest. Teresa, the heroine, is really a triumph. Mrs. Zangwill has scored a success."

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE STORY OF HAUKSGARTH FARM.

By EMMA F. BROOKE,
Author of 'Transition,' 'A Superfluous Woman,' 'Sir Elyot of the Woods,' 'Susan Wooded and Susan Won.'

Small demy 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

THE MEANING OF MONEY.

By HARTLEY WITHERS,
City Representative of the Times.

THIRD IMPRESSION IN THE PRESS.
Financial News.—"There can be no doubt that Mr. Withers's book will supersede all other introductions to monetary science.... Readers will find it a safe and indispensable guide through the mazes of the Money Market."

Crown 8vo, 6s. net.

THE WANDER YEARS.

Being some Account of Journeys into Life,
Letters, and Art.

By J. H. YOXALL, M.P.,
Author of 'Chateau Royal,' 'Alain Tanger's Wife,' &c.
Daily Mail.—"Mr. Yoxall bubbles over with polished patter.... He is a most agreeable companion.... There is a spicy, honest scent of pot-pourri about his book."

THE WATERLOO LIBRARY.

Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. per vol.

NEW VOLUME NOW READY.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS FROM ANIMAL LIFE.

By the late FRANK BUCKLAND.

Guardian.—"A book brimful of anecdote and animal adventure—delightful reading for all times and places."

Small demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

MODERN GERMANY.

Her Political and Economic Problems, her Policy, her Ambitions, and the Causes of her Success.

By J. ELLIS BARKER,
Author of 'The Rise and Decline of the Netherlands,'
'British Socialism,' &c.

THIRD VERY GREATLY ENLARGED EDITION, completely Revised and brought up to date.

Daily Express.—"A crushing answer to those who maintain that Germany is not prospering under Protection."

THE CORNHILL MAGAZINE.

For APRIL. Price One Shilling.

Contents.

LET ME ENJOY. By Thomas Hardy.
SOME IMPRESSIONS OF COQUELIN. By Lady Bell.
THE PALADIN. Chaps. 8-9.

AN OLD SERVANT. By Horace Annesley Vachell.
THEIR HEARTS' DESIRES. By S. G. Tallentyre.

DID BROWNING WHISTLE OR SING? By his Honour Judge Parry.
THE MIND OF THE RUSTIC. By Frederick M. Padelford, Ph.D.

A MARTYR FOR STYLE. By the Rev. P. H. Ditchfield.
RACHEL MARY. By W. P. James.

EDWARD FITZGERALD AT WOODBRIDGE. By Dorothea Deakin.
PRISCILLA OF THE GOOD INTENT. Chaps. 20-21.

By Arthur C. Benson.
By Halliwell Sutcliffe.

London: SMITH, ELDER & CO.
15, Waterloo Place, S.W.

HARPER & BROTHERS.

THE BRITISH TAR IN FACT AND FICTION.

The Poetry, Pathos, and Humour of the Sailor's Life.

130 Illustrations. Demy 8vo, gilt tops, 15s. net.

By Commander C. N. ROBINSON, R.N., Author of 'The British Fleet.'

With Chapters on the place of the Sea Officer and Seaman in Naval History by JOHN LEYLAND, Author of 'The Blockade of Brest.'

"An inestimable contribution to English literature. For all who are interested in the development of British sea power, the evolution of our national character and the action and reaction of the sea upon our drama, poetry, and politics. It will appeal to a wide circle of readers, and will be treasured as a standard for reference."—Daily Telegraph.

THE NEW ENGLISH HUMORIST.

IKONA CAMP.

COLIN FITZGERALD. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

Irresistibly humorous from first line to the last. Ikona Camp is the up-river boating-haunt of a small party, who keep each other—and the reader—in continuous good humour and merriment.

BY THE AUTHOR OF 'THE COMIC SIDE OF SCHOOL LIFE.'

MERRY MOMENTS

WITH SCHOLARS.

HENRY J. BARKER. Cover Design by J. HASSALL. 1s. net.

"A delight to readers who are fond of a good thing."—Scotsman.

"The reader will find many a laugh in these samples of unconscious juvenile humour."

Birmingham Post.

DIANA OF THE SWAMP.

ROY N. CLARKE. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"A well-told story."—Spectator.

"A thoroughly good story, excellently presented."—Daily Telegraph.

"The interest is intense, and the last scene highly dramatic."—Belfast Newsletter.

THE SPELL.

W. D. ORCUTT, Author of 'The Flower of Destiny.'

Illustrated by G. D. HAMMOND, R.I. Crown 8vo, 6s.

The story of a man's love that seems to waver between the frank, charming girl and her studious friend; pictured with subtle force amid the glamour of travel and study in Italy.

HARPERS' LIBRARY OF LIVING THOUGHT.

Fcap. 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d. net; leather, 3s. 6d. net.

"Short studies on great subjects by distinguished living men."—Standard.

Please write for a Prospectus of this Series, announcing Works by

ALGERNON CHARLES SWINBURNE,

LEO TOLSTOY,

W. M. FLINDERS PETRIE,

SIR OLIVER LODGE,

THEODORE WATTS-DUNTON, &c., &c.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE.

APRIL NUMBER NOW READY.

SHAKESPEARE'S 'CYMBELINE.' Illustrations by EDWIN A. ABBEY, R.A.

Comments by THEODORE WATTS-DUNTON.

RECENT SURGICAL PROGRESS. By W. M. KEEN, M.D. LL.D.

DIPLOMATIC LIFE AT THE HAGUE, 1869-71. By MADAME DE BUNSEN.

60 Illustrations by FRANK CRAIG, HOWARD PYLE, F. SHIPPEN GREEN, and others.

7 COMPLETE STORIES and Part V. of a New Serial, THE INNER SHRINE.

HARPER & BROTHERS, 45, Albemarle Street, London, W.

CHARLES GRIFFIN & CO., LTD., PUBLISHERS.

JUST READY. In medium 8vo, handsome cloth, fully illustrated. DUSTLESS ROADS; TAR MACADAM.

By J. WALKER SMITH, City Engineer, Edinburgh.

Contents :—Necessity for Improved and Standard Road Construction—Tar—Standardization of Matrix—Aggregate for Macadam—Different Modes of Repairing and Laying—Mechanical Mixing—Effects of Wear—Density—Porosity—Distribution of Weight—Scavenging—Watering and Maintenance—Cross Fall, Gradient, Noise, Hygienic Advantages—Rolling Statistics—Tar Spraying—Index.

RECENT TECHNICAL WORKS.

SECOND EDITION. In large 8vo, handsome cloth, fully illustrated, 21s. net.

A STANDARD TREATISE ON ROAD MAKING AND MAINTENANCE.

A Practical Treatise for Engineers, Surveyors, and others.

By Thomas AITKEN, A.M.Inst.C.E.

"A comprehensive and modern book. The literary style is excellent."—Surveyor.

In large 8vo, handsome cloth, profusely illustrated, 30s. net.

A TREATISE ON COLOUR MANUFACTURE.

A Guide to the Preparation, Examination, and Application of all the Pigment Colours in Practical Use.

By GEORGE ZERR and Dr. R. RÜBENCAMP. English Edition by Dr. C. MAYER of Burgdorf.

"This comprehensive guide.... useful and interesting."—Oil and Colour Trades Journal.

In large 8vo, handsome cloth, pp. i-xv-405. 16s. net.

THE SYNTHETIC DYESTUFFS,

AND THE INTERMEDIATE PRODUCTS FROM WHICH THEY ARE DERIVED.

By JOHN CANNELL CAIN, D.Sc., and JOCELYN FIELD THORPE, Ph.D.

"We have no hesitation in describing this as one of the most valuable books that have appeared."—Chemical Trade Journal.

In large 8vo, handsome cloth, fully illustrated, 15s. net.

LEATHER TRADES' CHEMISTRY.

A Practical Manual on the Analysis of Materials and Finished Products.

By S. R. TROTMAN, M.A. F.I.C.,

Public Analyst for the City of Nottingham, Member of the International Association of Leather Trades' Chemists.

In crown 8vo, handsome cloth, profusely illustrated, 6s. net.

THE COTTON WEAVERS' HANDBOOK.

A Practical Guide to the Construction and Costing of Cotton Fabrics, with Studies in Design.

By HENRY B. HEYLIN, of the Royal Technical Institute, Salford.

"It is difficult to mark out any special points among so much excellent matter."—Dyer and Calico Printer.

In crown 8vo, handsome cloth, with 76 Illustrations, 5s. net.

DYEING AND CLEANING.

By FRANK J. FARRELL, M.Sc. &c.

"A timely and valuable contribution.... well got up in every way."—Dyer and Calico Printer.

In medium 8vo, handsome cloth, 5s. net.

A HANDBOOK FOR CEMENT WORKS' CHEMISTS.

By FRANK B. GATEHOUSE, F.C.S.

"Concise.... excellent.... a useful addition to cement literature."—Concrete.

THIRD EDITION, thoroughly Revised, in cloth, fully illustrated, 21s. net.

THE PRINCIPLES AND PRACTICE OF BREWING.

By WALTER J. SYKES, M.D. Revised by A. R. LING, F.I.C., Ed. Journal of the Institute of Brewing.

"A thorough and comprehensive text-book.... up to date.... a standard text-book."—Brewers' Journal.

In large crown 8vo, cloth, with Illustrations, 4s. 6d. net.

ELEMENTARY AGRICULTURAL CHEMISTRY.

By HERBERT INGLE, B.Sc. F.I.C. F.C.S.

In large crown 8vo, cloth, with 147 Illustrations, 15s. net.

THE PRINCIPLES OF SEWAGE TREATMENT.

By Prof. DUNBAR, Director of the Institute of State Hygiene, Hamburg.

Translated by H. T. CALVERT, M.Sc. Ph.D. F.I.C., Chief Chemical Assistant, West Riding of Yorkshire Rivers Board.

"An interesting and valuable treatise on the subject."—Medical Officer.

Crown 8vo, handsome cloth, with 30 Illustrations. 6s. net.

THE CLAYWORKERS' HANDBOOK.

An Epitome of the Materials and Methods Employed in Brick-making and Pottery.

"We can thoroughly recommend this handy little book."—Brick and Pottery Trade Journal.

SECOND EDITION, Revised, Enlarged, and Re-set. With valuable Bibliography. In 2 vols. 45s. net.

PETROLEUM AND ITS PRODUCTS.

By Sir BOVERTON REDWOOD, D.Sc. F.R.S.E. F.I.C. &c.

"Indisputably the most comprehensive and complete treatise on petroleum.... wonderfully complete."—Petroleum World.

A FULL AND DESCRIPTIVE CATALOGUE SENT POST FREE ON APPLICATION.

MARINE ENGINEERING BOOKS.

JUST PUBLISHED.

In large 8vo, cloth, with 60 Tables, 12s. 6d. net.

THE SCREW PROPELLER, and other Competing Instruments for Marine Propulsion.

By A. E. SEATON, M.Inst.C.E. &c.

SIXTEENTH EDITION, cloth, pp. i-xxiv-712, 21s. net.

A MANUAL OF

MARINE ENGINEERING. By A. E. SEATON, M.Inst.C.E. &c.

"The most valuable handbook of reference on the marine engine now in existence."—Marine Engineer.

In cloth, with 252 Illustrations, 15s. net.

THE THEORY OF

THE STEAM TURBINE: a Treatise on the Principles of Construction, with Historical Notes on Development. By ALEXANDER JUDE.

"One of the latest text-books... also one of the best."
Sir WM. WHITE in the Times.

FOURTH EDITION, Revised, pocket size, leather, 12s. 6d. BOILERS, MARINE AND LAND: their Construction and Strength. By T. W. TRAILL, M.Inst.C.E.

"A most useful volume."—Engineer.

SIXTH EDITION, Revised, 6s. net.

ENGINE-ROOM PRACTICE: a Hand- book for Engineers and Officers in the Royal Navy and Mercantile Marine. By JOHN G. LIVERSIDGE, R.N. A.M.Inst.C.E.

"Very useful."—Engineer's Gazette.

NINTH EDITION, Revised, pocket size, leather, 8s. 6d.

A POCKET BOOK OF

MARINE ENGINEERING RULES AND TABLES. By A. E. SEATON and H. M. ROUN- WAITE.

"The best book of its kind."—Engineer.

GRIFFIN'S NAUTICAL SERIES.

Introductory Volume. 3s. 6d.

THE BRITISH MERCANTILE MARINE.

By EDWARD BLACKMORE.

"Interesting and instructive."—Glasgow Herald.

SIXTH EDITION, Revised. Illustrated. 6s.

ELEMENTARY SEAMANSHIP. By D.

WILSON BARKER, F.R.S.E. &c.

"This admirable manual."—Athenæum.

SECOND EDITION, Revised. 3s. 6d.

NAVIGATION: Practical and Theo- retical. By D. W. BARKER and W. ALLINGHAM.

"A capital little work."—Shipping World.

In cloth, Illustrated, 7s. 6d.

MARINE METEOROLOGY. By

WILLIAM ALLINGHAM.

"Quite the best."—Shipping Gazette.

THIRD EDITION. Illustrated. 3s. 6d.

PRACTICAL MECHANICS. By THOMAS

MACKENZIE, F.R.A.S.

"Exceedingly helpful."—Shipping World.

SECOND EDITION. Revised, 2s.

LATITUDE AND LONGITUDE. By

W. J. MILLAR, C.E.

"Concise and clear."—Marine Engineer.

SECOND EDITION. Revised, 4s. 6d.

LEGAL DUTIES OF SHIPMASTERS.

By BENEDICT W. GINSBERG, M.A., Barrister-at-Law.

THIRD EDITION. Revised. Illustrated, 6s.

A MEDICAL AND SURGICAL HELP

For Shipmasters and Officers. By W. JOHNSON
SMITH, F.R.C.S.

NINTH EDITION. Revised. 7s. 6d.

KNOW YOUR OWN SHIP. By THOMAS

WALTON, Author of 'Steel Ships.'

"Exceeding handy."—Shipping World.

WORKS BY RICHARD C. BUCK.

A MANUAL OF TRIGONOMETRY. 3s. 6d.

A MANUAL OF ALGEBRA. 3s. 6d.

London: CHARLES GRIFFIN & CO., LIMITED, Exeter Street, Strand.

MACMILLAN'S NEW BOOKS.

Psyche's Task: a Discourse Concerning the Influence of Superstition on the Growth of Institutions. By J. G. FRAZER, D.C.L. LL.D. Litt.D. 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.

Social Life at Rome in the Age of Cicero.

By W. WARDE FOWLER, M.A., Author of 'The Roman Festivals of the Period of the Republic,' &c. With Map and Plans. 8vo, 10s. net.

Monuments of Christian Rome from Constantine to the Renaissance. By ARTHUR L. FROTHINGHAM, Ph.D., Professor of Archaeology and Ancient History at Princeton University. Illustrated. Extra crown 8vo, 10s. 6d. [Handbooks of Archaeology and Antiquities.]

The Ancient Greek Historians

(Harvard Lectures). By J. B. BURY, Litt.D. LL.D., Regius Professor of Modern History in the University of Cambridge. 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

The Characters of Theophrastus.

An English Translation from a Revised Text, with Introduction and Notes by R. C. JEBB, M.A., Fellow and Assistant-Tutor of Trinity College, Cambridge, and Public Orator of the University, 1870. A New Edition. Edited by J. E. SANDYS, Litt.D. 8vo, 7s. 6d. net. [Classical Library.]

The Acropolis of Athens.

By MARTIN L. D'OOGE, Professor of Greek in the University of Michigan. Fully illustrated. 8vo, 17s. net.

NEW EDITION JUST PUBLISHED.

Investigations in Currency and Finance.

By W. STANLEY JEVONS, LL.D. Edited, with an Introduction, by Prof. H. S. FOXWELL, M.A. New Edition, Abridged, with Preface by H. STANLEY JEVONS, M.A. B.Sc. 8vo, 10s. net.

Jimbo. A Fantasy.

By ALGERNON BLACKWOOD, Author of 'John Silence,' &c. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net. Daily Telegraph.—"A singularly powerful piece of psychological analysis....The thing is wonderfully well done, and will evoke an eerie feeling in the least imaginative nature."

NEW 6/- NOVELS.

SECOND IMPRESSION.

Tono-Bungay. By H. G. WELLS.

SECOND IMPRESSION.

One Immortality. By H. FIELDING HALL.

Ode on the Centenary of Abraham Lincoln.

By PERCY MACKAYE. Royal 16mo, 3s. net.

THE CENTURY MAGAZINE.
ILLUSTRATED.

Price 1s. 4d. Annual Subscription, 16s.

BURNS. By Charles D. Stewart.

THE NEW RULER OF CHINA: Prince Chiin, the Regent, with Glimpses of the Court at Peking. By Isaac T. Headland.

THE MESSINA EARTHQUAKE. By Frank A. Perret. Pictures from Photographs.

And numerous other Stories and Articles of General Interest.

MACMILLAN & CO., LTD., London.

Messrs. Longmans & Co.'s LIST.

THE ARCHITECTS' LIBRARY.—New Volume.
A History of Architectural Development.

(IN THREE VOLUMES.) Vol. II. MEDIÆVAL. By F. M. SIMPSON, Professor of Architecture, University of London. With 257 Illustrations. Medium 8vo, 21s. net. (Inland postage 6d.)

SECOND IMPRESSION.

Historical and Political Essays.

By WILLIAM EDWARD HARTPOLE LECKY. 8vo, 10s. 6d. net. (Inland postage 5d.)

Ireland under the Stuarts and during the Interregnum.

By RICHARD BAGWELL, M.A., Author of 'Ireland under the Tudors.' (In Three Volumes.) Vols. I. and II.: 1603-1660. With 2 Maps. 8vo, 23s. net. (Inland postage 6d.)

"Mr. Bagwell's masterly and scholarly work."—Outlook.

Sir George Mackenzie, King's Advocate, of Rosehaugh: His Life and Times, 1636(?)–1691.

By ANDREW LANG. 8vo, 15s. net. (Inland postage 5d.)

"Mr. Lang has had one aim, and one aim only, to get at the facts about a very difficult character. The result is a complete portrait of Mackenzie, a criticism based upon a true understanding."—Blackwood's Magazine.

The Springs of Helicon: a Study in the Progress of English Poetry from Chaucer to Milton.

By J. W. MACKAIL, M.A. LL.D., Professor of Poetry in the University of Oxford. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d. net. (Inland postage 4d.)

The Dawn of the Catholic Revival in England, 1781–1803.

By BERNARD WARD, F.R.Hist.S., President of St. Edmund's College, Ware. With Portraits and other Illustrations. 2 vols. 8vo, 25s. net. (Inland postage 6d.)

Ecclesia Discens: the Church's Lesson from the Age.

By the Rev. JAMES H. F. PEILE, M.A. Crown 8vo, 5s. net. (Inland postage 4d.)

"A collection of essays and sermons by a practised writer dealing with present-day topics, which have all the charm and discursiveness of his 'Reproach of the Gospel.'" Church of Ireland Gazette.

A History of the Doctrine of the Holy Eucharist.

By DARWELL STONE, M.A., Librarian of the Pusey House, Oxford. 2 vols. 8vo, 30s. net. (Inland postage 6d.)

The Human Species: Considered from the Standpoints of Comparative Anatomy, Physiology, Pathology, and Bacteriology.

By LUDWIG HOPE. Authorized English Edition. With 7 Plates and 217 Illustrations in the Text. 8vo, 10s. 6d. net. (Inland postage 6d.)

Odds and Ends: Miscellaneous Verses. By R. MONTAGU TABOR, M.A. Fcap. 8vo, 5s. (Inland postage 3d.)

NEW NOVEL OF COUNTRY LIFE BY THE AUTHOR OF 'MISS BADSWORTH, M.F.H.'

Polly Winford. By EYRE HUSSEY. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"Polly Winford is a delightful girl."—Daily Telegraph.

The Curious Case of Lady Purbeck: a Scandal of the XVIIth Century.

By the Author of 'The Life of Sir Kenelm Digby,' 'The Life of a Prig,' &c. 8vo, 6s. net. (Inland postage 4d.)

"Curious indeed, and highly diverting to read....a well-composed, scholarly version is this 'scandal of the seventeenth century.'"—Evening Standard.

LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.
39, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON, E.C.

THE FOUNDATIONS OF LIBERTY

By E. F. B. FELL

Crown 8vo, 5s. net

The aim of the book is to point out that the essence of Socialism consists in the complete mergence of the individual in the whole, and in the denial of the "a priori" or natural rights of the Person. Political right and wrong thus ceases to be based on the moral nature of the Person, and becomes a question of speculations as to the Good of the Whole. Thus viewed, it is held that Socialism exists in its essence in many forms.

"We find some interesting comments on prominent schools of political thought; there is much acute criticism of the controversies that have arisen over the Socialist's political ideal; and certain kinds or classes of Individualism are subjected to severe examination."—Athenæum.

"This book should be read by all Christian Socialists, for the author bases his plea on the Christian doctrine of Personality; they will find in its pages much fresh and virile criticism of a growing opportunism and sentimentality in public affairs."—Economic Review.

"A really philosophic attempt to examine the moral and social theories implied in the Socialist movement. Mr. Fell has written a stimulating book on a difficult subject, and his theme is worked out carefully and well."

Morning Leader.

"Mr. Fell deals with the questions at issue in an elaborate and careful manner, and the book is an interesting contribution to a subject of no little perplexity."—Scotsman.

"This is an unpretentious book, comparatively small in compass but remarkably big in conception and character, for Mr. Fell, in sounding the depths of political ideas, reaches the heights of a transcendental political philosophy. It is undoubtedly a valuable contribution to the social and political literature of the day."—Liverpool Courier.

"A brilliant, original, and suggestive book."

Birmingham Post.

A SON OF THE EMPEROR

BY

NEWTON V. STEWART

Crown 8vo, 6s.

"Mr. Stewart works out with great skill the pattern of the story—he brings vividly before us the picturesqueness of the times—and has written a book of unusual interest."

Daily Mail.

"Mr. Stewart gives us a stirring record, with plenty of movement and adventure in it."—Sunday Times.

"Mr. Stewart is a valuable addition to the ranks of our historical novelists, and his work interests us by exploiting a new period."—Morning Post.

"A longish, leisurely, and full historical story of a good class, from a period not often drawn upon."—Times.

"Makes a book well worth reading, fluently and conscientiously written."—Observer.

"Mr. Stewart tells the story with sympathy as well as learning."—Daily Graphic.

"A novel very much above the ordinary class, in that it has been carefully written and skilfully limned, is Mr. Newton V. Stewart's 'A Son of the Emperor.'....One looks forward to other works of a similar character from the same pen."—Queen.

"A fine historical romance is 'A Son of the Emperor.'.... The author has made a very moving story."—Madame.

"He has a leisurely style, and his narrative sticks close enough to the historical facts of a career full of nobleness and tragedy."—Outlook.

"The author's diction is excellent, and the tone and spirit sympathetic with the days when Sicily's Court was famous among the Courts of the world."—Globe.

METHUEN & CO. 36, Essex Street, London, W.C.

SATURDAY, MARCH 27, 1909.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE
THE GROWTH OF NATIONALITIES	367
RICHARD JEFFERIES	368
THE OXYRHYNCHUS PAPYRI	368
TOMMY SHORT OF TRINITY, OXFORD	369
LADIES FAIR AND FRAIL	369
NEW NOVELS (Magnificat; Uncle Gregory; The Grip of Fear; The Heart of a Gypsy; The Lure of Eve; The Sin of the Duchess; The Broken Snare; The Priest of the High Fjelds)	371
SOCIAL PROBLEMS	373
OUR LIBRARY TABLE (The Immortals' Great Quest; Seventeenth Century Men of Latitude; Songs of Love and Praise; Scandinavian Britain; The Accentuation of Latin Words in Modern English; Everyman's Library; Geneva; Rothenburg on the Tauber; Statutes of Ireland from John to Henry V.)	373-374
CAMBRIDGE NOTES; F. G. FLEAY; 'DORANDO,' BY BOSWELL	374-376
LIST OF NEW BOOKS	376
LITERARY GOSSIP	377
SCIENCE—RESEARCH NOTES; SOCIETIES; MEETINGS NEXT WEEK; GOSSIP	379-381
FINE ARTS—STORIES OF ENGLISH ARTISTS—STORIES OF FLEMISH AND DUTCH ARTISTS; NICHOLAS STONE'S SCULPTURAL WORK; EARLY BRITISH MASTERS; OTHER EXHIBITIONS; THE BRITISH SCHOOL AT ROME; SALE; GOSSIP; EXHIBITIONS	382-385
MUSIC—LONDON SYMPHONY CONCERT; NEW SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA; LONDON CHORAL SOCIETY; AUGUST MANNS AND THE SATURDAY CONCERTS; GOSSIP; PERFORMANCES NEXT WEEK	385-386
DRAMA—THE FIFTH QUEEN CROWNED; THE NOBLE SPANIARD; DRAMAS AND DIVERSIONS; A SHAKE-SPEARE WORD-BOOK; PROSE PINE; GOSSIP	386-388
INDEX TO ADVERTISERS	388

LITERATURE

The Cambridge Modern History.—Vol. XI. The Growth of Nationalities. Edited by A. W. Ward, G. W. Prothero, and Stanley Leathes. (Cambridge, University Press.)

THE merits and defects of what may be called co-operative history are alike obvious in this bulky volume, of over 1,000 pages, on the age of Cavour, Napoleon III., and Bismarck. A score of historians of various Western nationalities contribute chapters or sections, to say nothing of other writers who give compact summaries of the literary history of Europe between 1840 and 1870. It is fair to say that the book as a whole contains far more information about the period than any other English work. The smaller States receive adequate treatment: Prof. Oechsli's chapter on 'The Achievement of Swiss Federal Unity' is a first-rate piece of writing, clear in statement and free from unworthy bias. The relations of Europe with the Far East (1815-71) are excellently sketched by Sir E. M. Satow; and there is a judicious and authoritative chapter on India and Afghanistan (1815-69) by Sir W. Lee-Warner. As for the Great Powers, there are two brilliant chapters on the Second Empire by M. Albert Thomas; five sound and competently written chapters on Germany by Dr. Ward, Profs. Meinecke and Friedjung, and Dr. G. Roloff, whose sketch of Bismarck's achievements is specially good; and three sober chapters on the liberation of Italy by the late Prof. E. Masi. Major F. Maurice makes an heroic attempt to give a lucid account of the Franco-German War in under forty pages; and Mr. G. Fawkes contributes a thoughtful chapter on the Papacy under Pius IX. up to the Vatican Council.

Where the book fails to satisfy is in its lack of general views of international diplomacy, and, secondly, in its manifest inequalities of treatment. The first fault is inherent in the plan of the work, but is none the less to be regretted. In the period under consideration the interaction of national sentiments and policies is unquestionably more remarkable than the development of any single nation. A tidal wave of revolution swept over Europe in 1848; it is impossible to realize its full significance when it is only described piecemeal in scattered chapters on the several nations. Prof. Bourgeois's reference to the Committee of Public Safety set up in Paris on the fall of Louis Philippe, as having been "created with the view of imposing the Republic and social reforms upon the whole of Europe," seems more fantastic than it really is, because the French Revolution is treated as if it had occurred in the middle of the Sahara. The Chartist movement is merely touched on by Prof. Clapham in a brief chapter on 'Great Britain and Free Trade.' The effect of the Paris outburst on Western Germany, the spread of revolution thence to Vienna, and the fact that the Viennese rising provoked the insurrection of the "Five Days" in Milan are well described in various places; but we look in vain for a connected account of the most notable democratic movement of the nineteenth century. This, surely, is a serious omission in a book of such ample proportions as 'The Cambridge Modern History.'

A similar complaint may be made as to the treatment of the Danish and the Polish questions, which vexed diplomatists greatly during the fifties and early sixties. Prof. Meinecke's account of the absorption of Cracow by Austria in 1846 is adequate, so far as it concerned Austria and Prussia, though he overlooks Metternich's failure to fulfil his promise to modify the tariff so as to let Prussia keep some part of her valuable trade through Silesia with the little republic—an incident which strengthened popular ill-will in Prussia towards Austria. But Russia's motives for accelerating the sorry business are not well brought out. The strength of public sympathy in the West with the Poles, then and later, is almost ignored, though it was an important factor in international relations during the period, and was skilfully used by Bismarck in securing the friendship of the Tsar.

It is curious and regrettable that the book contains no clear account of the negotiations for an anti-Prussian alliance between France, Austria, and Italy before the war of 1870. The matter is mentioned in three different places by as many authors, but none of the three is satisfactory. M. Thomas says (p. 496) that in July, 1870, "France had received nothing more than vague assurances from Austria and Italy." Masi says (pp. 543-4) that the secret dealings on foot since Mentana "consisted only in an exchange of letters addressed by the several sovereigns one to another, and in negotiations couched in language so general as in no way to commit their States." Major Maurice says (p. 577) that in 1870 Austria "returned vague replies to the overtures from Paris." Yet it has been repeatedly shown in The Athenæum that there was a great deal more in the Austro-French negotiations than would appear from these hesitating statements, as may be seen in the memoirs of King Charles of Roumania and La Marmora. Some day the truth about the Austro-French military convention for an attack on Prussia in 1871 will be fully revealed and recognized.

We are not disposed to make too much of the inequalities of style and treatment that are obvious to a careful reader. With so large a team to drive, the editors are perhaps rather to be commended on securing so high an average of writing in their contributors. Still, it is a pity that England should not fare better. Prof. Clapham seems to have been given too little space and to have felt his limitations keenly: at any rate, his opening chapter (1841-52) is a disappointment. The late Sir Spencer Walpole wrote the two chapters on our history from 1856 to 1868; but these, again, are not at all in his best manner, and needed more revision than Sir Alfred Lyall has given them. Lord John Russell's dubious resignation in face of Roebuck's motion for a Crimean inquiry is far too kindly treated (p. 320), for instance, and there is a confusion of the dates of Gladstone's Budgets (p. 335); while the so-called "Manchester martyrs," hanged for the Fenian outrage in 1867, are overlooked (p. 344). As to France, Prof. Bourgeois's two chapters on the close of Louis Philippe's reign and the Revolution of 1848 compare unfavourably with M. Thomas's excellent study of the Second Empire. The Professor's rhetorical style has suffered much at the hands of his translator, and many sentences remain obscure. Thus a passage on the National Guard concludes with this remark: "But this did not in its eyes diminish the guilt of the Government, responsible as it was, alike for its outward behaviour and its underlying intentions." The "Aberdeen" Cabinet was not in office in 1845 (p. 36). There is no cedilla in the name Macon (p. 40). It is strange to say of the Orleanist Monarchy that "a doubtful point of law had presided over its origin, and was now to preside over its end"; we can guess what the Professor wrote, but this is not English. Even if the chapters were retranslated, as they ought to be, they could hardly be regarded as an adequate account of an interesting period in French history. Prof. Bourgeois lacks humour; we notice in his chapter on French literature that he deliberately omits 'Candide' from a select list of eighteenth-century fiction possessing "any real literary value." He would never permit himself the ironical comments with which M. Thomas enlivens his chapters, such as, "The Orleanist Doctrinaires...between 1852 and 1860 had only been able to mourn over the unhappy times in letters to their friends—often very beautiful compositions" (p. 475), which hits off the Orleanist to a nicety.

It remains to add a word of praise for the brief but useful chapter on the British Colonies, in which Mr. H. W. V. Temperley deals with Colonial policy, while Dr. S. J. Reid, Mr. Colquhoun, and Mr. J. D. Rogers consider Canada, South Africa, and Australia respectively. Mr. Drage's chapters on Russia are interesting, but too much condensed; and Mr. E. C. Blech's informing pages on Turkish affairs are all too few. The minor European States are, on the whole, fairly well treated: Mr. Fitzmaurice-Kelly's chapter on Spain is the most readable.

The chapters and sections of literary history are, it must be confessed, uninspiring, but may be of some value for reference. The volume includes the usual lengthy bibliographies, filling 116 pages; it is to be regretted that the items are not annotated, for many of the books named are of little account. The chronological table and the full index are to be noted also; and we can only regret that the luminous half-dozen pages of introduction to the period were not much longer, thus atoning for the lack of broad surveys of Europe as a whole.

Richard Jefferies: his Life and Work.
By Edward Thomas. (Hutchinson & Co.)

MR. THOMAS, considering that Sir Walter Besant's "eulogy" of Jefferies was "unsympathetic and incomplete," and finding no other book dealing with his subject, has set out to "give a fuller account of the life and writings" of the naturalist than has yet appeared. At the outset we must acknowledge the care and interest which he has given to his study, which make it what it claims to be in fullness and sympathy. Mr. Thomas says he has known the Jefferies country, which is to say Wiltshire, for twenty years, and that is in itself an excellent preparation for his task. Moreover, he has the various books of his author at his fingertips, and can quote as pat as you please. Indeed, a great part of the volume is taken up with lengthy quotations, often running into pages. This plan was no doubt adopted with the idea of letting Jefferies illustrate himself, but the wisdom of its continuance throughout a long book is open to question, as it gives a patchy appearance to a critical biography. We have also to demur to the physiological and exact details of Jefferies's illnesses which can serve no good purpose, as, for example, when we are informed that Jefferies

"died of exhaustion and chronic fibroid phthisis, a modified form, in which the tissue resists the bacilli by a fibrous hardening of the lungs."

This is only worthy of a medical treatise.

Mr. Thomas's work, in fact, errs on the side of excess. It is open to question whether there was need for another life and appreciation of Jefferies. He was an effective but not a great writer, and not a great observer in the way in which Gilbert White and Waterton were before him. His life is mainly interesting, not on account of his performances, but because of his failures. Jefferies came of yeoman stock, and, like many of that class, developed into a neurotic artistry which is, or ought to be, incongruous with that stock. A doctor, according to Mr. Thomas, described him as an hysterical case, which is only to say, we suppose, that he was extremely highly strung. His work as well as his life demonstrates this. Here is a description of him, as garnered by Mr. Thomas:—

"In appearance he was 'long, languid, and loitering,' whether he sat or moved across a room; 'a long man from head to foot; his legs long, his arms long—somewhat drooping eyelids, softly drooping mouth'; his expression sensuous, tender, 'silent and aware.'"

His sensuousness was evidently a side of that keenly romantic temperament which inspired much of his writing, though not necessarily his best work. It is interesting to read that he "was staying at Hastings partly because the Prince Imperial was there"; and he believed that he had "brought about the dismissal of some traitorous equerries who called the Empress 'the Spanish cow.'"

Jefferies's best work was undoubtedly written after he came to London. Like so many provincials, he wrote well of London; and he got remunerative journalistic work there. We gather that Mr. Thomas prefers 'Round about a Great Estate' among his earlier books, and 'The Story of my Heart' among the later. In his criticism of 'The Story' our author allows himself the latitude of a certain mysticism in which we cannot follow him. The most popular of Jefferies's books are and, we think, will remain 'Bevis' and 'Wood Magic,' and that for the very good reason that they make a perpetual appeal to youth. Out of all the pain and failure of this imperfect man's life emerges a certain steadfast faith, and a bravery in holding it which is astonishing. He refused help from the Royal Literary Fund because he despised the era of patrons and patronage. Mr. Thomas draws attention justly to Jefferies's "power of using words." He had an excellent style, which was sincere, passionate, and varied. Mr. Thomas has evidently a deep appreciation of this, as one would expect from a writer who is himself particular. Indeed, his fault is preciosity, and a somewhat exaggerated notion of the importance of his theme. However, this conduces to thoroughness, and we should not complain. Altogether this biography is a conscientious, painstaking piece of work.

The Oxyrhynchus Papyri. Edited by B. P. Grenfell and A. S. Hunt. Part VI. (Egypt Exploration Fund.)

THE new instalment of the huge collection of papyri discovered and preserved from destruction by these two indefatigable scholars is of equally good quality with the rest of their work. Eulogies of this series are now wholly superfluous. The editors have indeed, as they deplore in their Preface, lost the help of Prof. Blass, whose learning and acumen were probably greater than those of any now living scholar. But they have got other and admirable advisers, both German and English, and the new texts of interest in this volume are handled with all the skill which modern scholarship can supply. That of the highest importance is of course the remains of Euripides's 'Hypsipyle,' and next, longo intervallo, some commentaries on Aristophanes and Thucydides which show us the sort of exegesis that was current in the second and third centuries of our era. These are, as usual, most disappointing. Like the extensive commentary on Plato published recently by Berlin scholars, these notes make us proud of the superiority of our modern criticism. The student of the 'Acharnians' or the second book of Thucydides will not find here anything that is not obvious; but he will learn that the views of commentators, and their treatment of idioms grammatically, do not materially differ from those of modern average scholarship.

The private papers in the volume are also numerous, and include a marriage contract, a will, and many other contracts from late Roman Egypt. Such documents are only of interest to a few specialists, and rather encumber the volume for the general reader. But here, too, there is something to learn. Thus the formula of the will is no longer that well known from the Petrie papyri as the Greek form. It is quite different, and said by the editors to be the Roman form adopted in Greek Egypt. So also we find the formulæ used in every polite letter from an inferior to a superior in the earlier days ignored in a letter of the second century. The writer puts his own name first, and uses ἐρωσσο at the end.

We turn back to the fragments of the 'Hypsipyle' of Euripides, which, like those of the 'Antiope' published in 1890, have made a great sensation in the classical world. The new fragments are far more considerable, but they are less interesting in this, that the 'Antiope' text was very old, and palæographically extremely precious, whereas the present papyrus seems not earlier than the second century. There are accents and other clear marks of this later date. The editors justly complain that for the number of the fragments the result has not been fortunate. A vast number of mere words or syllables are all that Nos. 66–113 contain. These were hardly worth printing, for the shape of the scrap of papyrus which contains them, and the possibility of fitting it to another, are the only chance of further reconstruction, and this is lost in the mere recording of the letters preserved. The gaps in the plot are still considerable, and particularly puzzling in that the course of the play seems to vary considerably from the allusions to the mythical story unearthed by the editors from obscure sources. The part played by the twin sons of Hypsipyle—who certainly intervene to save, or to help to save, their mother, much as Amphion and Zethus intervene to save Antiope—is very obscure. Their appearance as travellers in search of their mother is placed by the editors at the opening of the play. It would be far more dramatic after the episode with Amphiarus was over and he had gone away, having apparently pacified the enraged mother of the infant Archemorus, who has been killed through Hypsipyle's negligence. And if it were true, as the papyrus plainly tells us, that they had once gone to the Colchian land, their adventures would be still more puzzling. Dr. Mahaffy's emendation "the Land of Iolcus" brings sense into this line, though, of course, there is a German savant who imagines some new form of legend to account for it as it stands.

The frequent allusions of Aristophanes in 'The Frogs' to this play as recent and popular make us sure that it was one of Euripides's latest plays, and this is further corroborated by internal evidences. There is a great deal of action; there is the utmost number of actors that Greek tragedy permitted, and we note the prominence of those lyrical monodies which Aristophanes disliked as more a musical than a dramatic performance. Nor is there any single passage of surpassing excellence preserved. Nevertheless every scholar will read with the keenest interest this newly recovered specimen of a master's work. The further discovery of even a short passage, or a sketch of the plot, like the outline of the 'Dionys-Alexandros' of Cratinus in a previous volume of these papyri, may tell us what we require, and put the fragments of the 'Hypsipyle' in a clearer light. She was indeed an exceptional heroine, affording materials for several tragedies—first her saving of her father in the great massacre of the males at Lemnos, which affords Horace so fine a passage in his Odes; then the episode of her love and desertion by Jason, which has furnished Ovid with the subject of an Epistle; then the present afterlude during her exile in slavery at Nemea in the Argolid.

There is also in the present volume a scene, which the editors refer to Menander, in which a slave is about to be burnt alive by his master for some dishonesty. Both they and their readers must be shocked at such an atrocity being put on the polite stage of Menander, even though we assume that the slave escapes. Had the recent Cairo papyrus, with its long passages from Menander, not shown us the triviality of that poet—in fact, had we still to judge him by his old reputation—our astonishment would have been greater. But no other Greek poet has been so much lowered in the classical world by closer acquaintance, and whereas we thought in our youth that a whole play of Menander was the most precious thing we could recover, no searcher for papyri would now make this the acme of his hopes. Nevertheless, let us be thankful even for small mercies in the midst of all the rich material provided for us by the Oxford masters of papyrology.

An Oxford Tutor: the Life of the Rev. Thomas Short of Trinity College, Oxford.
By C. E. H. Edwards. (Elliot Stock.)

THIS little book—a magazine article, rather, in guise of a book—is the votive offering of a great-niece, letting fall on her ancestor's ashes the tributary tear which Horace craved of his friend Septimius. The Rev. Thomas (better known of old and still as "Tommy") Short was conspicuous as one of a small but brilliant company, flourishing at Oxford during the earlier half of the last century. They were mostly College Tutors, scholars of an old-fashioned type, knowing their classics intimately: of Oriel Tyler it was said that he could construe Thucydides "through a deal board"; of Short, that he lectured on Tacitus without an open book before him. Far above the lazy, prejudiced, and sometimes vicious tribe of Dons lashed in The Oxford Spy and George Cox's mordant satire, they stood aloof from both the sets which successively dominated University thought. Honouring the intellectual prowess of the Noetics, they lacked interest in a Common Room where neither whist was played nor vintages discussed: on the lymphatic asceticism of the young Tractarians they threw, in Short's own words, "not cold but dirty water." For their view of life was humanist: Oriel might be virtuous, but there were still cakes and ale; accepting the Augustan maxim that to water-drinkers the gods make life burdensome, they rose clearheaded from their "modici munera Liberi," cheerily to win or lose an equally moderate stake at whist. The present writer recalls the advice given to him with much solemnity by one of them at the beginning of his settled University career: "Young man, begin at once, if even in small quantities, to lay down port wine annually"; and Mr. Woodgate in his recent amusing 'Reminiscences' tells how Short refused his vote to a distinguished candidate for a Trinity Fellowship until he was satisfied not only that he was a good whist-player, but also that he could be trusted "not to play Whitechapel," to lead, that is, from a single card of a suit, then a recent heresy which might have vitiated the timehonoured tradition of the Common Room game.

It must not, however, be supposed that the genius of these jovial bachelors was restricted to the mahogany and the green cloth. Travelled and well read, they knew and could cite their Dante, Cervantes, and Molière no less than their Pope and Shakespeare; they cherished and conserved the art of talk; of epigram, impromptu, anecdote; of crisp expression, light pleasantry, and ready give-and-take. We feel to them as Mrs. Primrose felt towards Lady Blarney; the Coplestons and Whatelys we admire and reverence; but our "warm heart" goes out to the Lancelot Lees and Chafferses, the Kit Erles, the Osborne Gordons, and the Tommy Shorts.

Of this band of brothers Short was the last survivor, resident long after the rest had settled on their lees in country livings. Witty and vivacious to the end, by his pointed speech and stories not always refined or always new, but in their freedom from verbiage, hesitations, and irrelevancies, models of what anecdotes should be, he read a lesson on cultured social converse to a generation already beginning to be swamped by "shop." It is said that in a MS. book entitled 'Breviarium,' or "'Short' Stories,' compiled by his friend and pupil Dr. Plummer, specimens of his talk are preserved; if so, it is a pity that they should not see the light.

His life outside Oxford seems to have been scantily known to his University friends, and this want his niece endeavours to supply. He sprang from progenitors long settled in Solihull, a rural village once remote from Birmingham, entangled now in one of its far-reaching suburban tentacles. His father was a surgeon, his mother an heiress of the Holbech family, himself the youngest of twelve children. Born in 1789, he went through Rugby with distinction, obtained a scholarship at Trinity, took a Third Class, travelled on the Continent, spent nearly seven years at his old school as assistant master, and returned to Trinity in 1816 to be Tutor during forty years. In 1827 he stood for the Head-Mastership of Rugby: local influence seemed to make his election so certain that Arnold, also a candidate, withdrew. Whately interposed; induced Sir Henry Halford, one of the Governors, to impress on his colleagues the duty of determining their choice solely by the testimonials offered: Arnold renewed his application, and was successful. "I have been everything at Rugby except Head-Master and gate-keeper," Short was, according to our author, wont to say. Blindness overtook him latterly, and he withdrew to his Solihull home, where he died in 1879.

One or two slight errors might be removed if opportunity should offer. There is a misprint in the Latin on p. 13; the Greek word on p. 30 should be written continuously, and the accent shifted to the antepenultimate syllable. For "Aldwychian," p. 26, read Aldrichian. "Melita" on p. 46 is pointless unless the second syllable is marked long; nor is the verse quoted quite correctly. Of three portraits inserted, the profile drawing is good; the other two fail in rendering the strong, shrewd, cynical, yet humorous and kindly features of the well-beloved veteran.

Ladies Fair and Frail: Sketches of the Demi-monde during the Eighteenth Century. By Horace Bleackley. (John Lane.)

DESPITE its somewhat meretricious title, this careful book is a genuine contribution to scrious biography. The author has treated his subject as history with excellent taste and much precision—the reigns of his "queens" of the demi-monde are exactly delimited—though an austere moralist might take exception occasionally to an apparent over-tenderness of tone.

Two of the six adventuresses here handled have found a place in the 'Dictionary of National Biography'; and two more had at least a plausible claim to inclusion. Of Catherine Maria, commonly called "Kitty," Fisher, Joseph Knight truly observed that her chief claim to recognition was the fact that Sir Joshua more than once—five times according to Mr. Bleackley—painted her portrait. The 'Cleopatra' picture, a fine example of his work, has been selected for the frontispiece. The author's research has done something to supplement Knight's article, and on one point to correct it. The unfortunate Kitty was the first, and not the second, wife of John Norris, the second being a certain Mrs. Catherine Knight, a divorced wife, but daughter of a dean. Reynolds's subject twice in one year went through the ceremony with Norris, the first Scotch marriage failing to satisfy the bridegroom's family. A few months later the bride of twenty-eight died in the odour of sanctity at Bath, and was buried at Benenden in Kent. The author is informed that her memory is still cherished at the latter place, where her kindness to the poor had made her as well known as her dashing horsemanship. Poor Kitty was no common courtesan, and Mr. Bleackley's anxiety to controvert Tom Taylor's statement that at one time she had lived in close contiguity to Reynolds appears a rather superfluous care for the great painter's reputation. The author records Miss Fisher's meeting in her unregenerate days with Casanova, and retails the anecdote of her mischievous presentation, with the connivance of George II., to the elder Pitt; but he makes no mention of her fruitless call upon Dr. Johnson, or of her having been the original of a leading character in 'The Belle's Stratagem.'

Grace Dalrymple Elliott (or Eliot, as Mr. Bleackley spells her name), who has also obtained official record, has had her tall person preserved for posterity by Gainsborough, who painted her twice. The portrait reproduced in the present work was hung in the Academy of 1778. She was a lady by birth and education, but a courtesan by nature, with boundless courage, the most extravagant tastes, and no sense of veracity. She flew at high game, having at times been the mistress of both the Comte d'Artois (Charles X.) and his cousin of Orleans (Philippe Égalité), besides claiming that the father of her daughter (subsequently Lady Charles Bentinck) was the so-called First Gentleman of Europe. All that can be said for her is that her early training was bad, and that she was married very young to a man twice her age who seems to have neglected her. Mr. Bleackley puts the lady's birth four years earlier than did the late Mr. Alger, and gives good reason for spelling her name differently, though he admits that she herself wrote it as given in the 'Dictionary of National Biography.' He makes no attempt to defend the veracity of the 'Journal of my Life during the French Revolution,' though he agrees with other readers of it that the work possesses some literary merit, and seems disposed to attach some value to its writer's view of the character of the Duc d'Orléans. It appears that this lady was "always most particular with regard to her female associates" (they included the future Mrs. Charles James Fox), and was one of the first among demi-mondaines to have her own box at the Opera. She was "eminently practical" in all her liaisons after the first, and tried hard to get Lord Cholmondeley to marry her after her divorce from Sir John Eliot. Her last years were spent in France, where she seems to have died in distressed circumstances at a mature age.

Fanny Murray, who "reigned" from 1746 to 1754, has but little title to remembrance, though in early life she lived with Beau Nash, and afterwards had the notorious 'Essay on Woman' dedicated to her. She was never pre-eminently vicious, and fully expiated her sins as the faithful and long-suffering wife of the dissipated actor David Ross. With regard to the authorship of the attack on the last-named in 'The Edinburgh Rosciad' Mr. Bleackley seems to be in two minds. He misquotes slightly the celebrated sentence from 'The Beggar's Opera' about Jemmy Twitcher.

The story of her life as a whole, with the evidence of her beautiful face as revealed in Gainsborough's canvas, induces the reader to give credit to the author's statement that Nancy Parsons was "a refined and modest woman." The early career of the Duke of Grafton's mistress is obscure: she claimed to be the grass widow of a West Indian planter named Haughton. The Prime Minister might have done worse than marry her, for, in spite of Junius's scathing comments on the connexion, she undoubtedly had a good influence over him. Before her marriage with Lord Maynard, Miss Parsons lived for some time under the protection of another noble, the third Duke of Dorset; and she had the reputation of being as faithful a mistress as a wife. Another Premier, Shelburne, is also said to have shown "a great partiality" for her company. But with all this the beautiful Nancy had a harder fight than Emma, Lady Hamilton, in her efforts to get social recognition at the Neapolitan Court, Sir William himself being for a long time one of poor Lady Maynard's chief opponents. "Is there no room for penitence?" she is said on one occasion to have asked pathetically. Later she seems to have taken in hand the education of the shy young (fifth) Duke of Bedford; and though the biographer holds the singular ménage à trois to have been blameless, he calls Nancy "a worldly-wise, combative, unscrupulous lady," and quotes a contemporary remark that "her sayings and deep understandings are dangerous." She lived to an advanced age, and died in France, having earned a reputation for piety and good works. Walpole's slighting reference to her is sufficiently explained by the author, who also discredits the stories spread by her enemies as to the lady's misuse of her influence over Grafton.

Kitty Kennedy is perhaps the least notable of Mr. Bleackley's subjects. She had the misfortune to be confused with two namesakes of lower rank in her profession, but came to be known as "the celebrated Miss Kennedy," of Newman Street. She looked down upon the mistresses of clergymen and actors. Lord Robert Spencer, and John Saint John, brother of Lord Bolingbroke, were her almost constant admirers. The most noticeable, and indeed creditable, fact in her career was the successful exertion of her charms over these two in the cause of her two brothers, who had been condemned for murder as the result of a drunken brawl. The matter made a great noise at the time. Miss Kennedy attained marriage with one Byron, or Byram, who, however, seems to have died or disappeared after a few years.

The last of these fair ladies, Gertrude Mahon (née Tilson), is not the least remarkable. Like her friend Mrs. Elliott, she was a lady born and had a bad upbringing. At a very early age she eloped to the Continent with a penniless Irishman, who deserted her after her family had refused to receive him as her husband. After her mother's death she broke all bounds and began to figure in loose company at masquerades. She became known as the "Bird of Paradise" by reason of her small stature and love of bright colours. Her costumes, however, are said to have been "artistic." She was fond of the balloon-hat (it was the period of Lunardi's ascents) and originated an Irish headgear, described as being "of the composite order, partaking of the gipsy, the Lavinia, and the Parachute." Her "small whole-length phaeton" also attained celebrity, and the London coachmen knew her as "Lady Hard and Soft."

Mrs. Mahon had musical tastes and a good voice, and was for long "first favourite with writers of the press"; many curious specimens of effusions relating to her doings are culled by Mr. Bleackley. She made a few appearances on the stage. The first, which took place at Covent Garden in 'The Spanish Friar,' occasioned a dramatic scene. Her reply to Father Dominic's question, "Have you forgot your marriage vow?" "No, I have too much reason to remember it," was so suggestive of the actress's relations with her husband at the time that the house rose at her. She had some success during a short season at Dublin in 1785, and eight years later is said to have won the favour of an audience at Margate in the part of Lady Teazle. The poem 'Bagnigge Wells' which contains a pathetic passage relating to "M-h-n, sweetest Bird of Paradise," could not, for that reason, remarks the author, have been the work of Churchill, for he died when the lady was but twelve years old.

The results of Mr. Bleackley's careful research are recorded in pleasant style, but a few slips in names and spelling need attention, such as "rent-role" and "taken council." He cannot decide between "syren" and "siren." "J. Britton and E. W. Bradley" should be "J. Britton and E. W. Brayley" in the last of the Bibliographies which add to the value of the book.

NEW NOVELS.

Magnificat. By Vincent Brown. (Chapman & Hall.)

So far as plot is concerned Mr. Brown's latest story reminds us of the play by Mr. Jerome which shows the working of a Christ-like influence in a Bloomsbury lodging-house; but for the rest the author has not looked far beyond his own previous work, and his characters, in spite of their new names, strike us as familiar—too familiar, we think. His method is to take a number of aggressively heathenish modern folk, and bring them into contact with one or two examples of his chosen type of modern Christian. The type is clearly much admired by its creator; but we do not find it so admirable. Its representatives not only show verbose self-righteousness, but also assume the airs of the superior person. They have too much contempt for the majority of their fellow-creatures for our taste, and they are certainly too oracular to be entertaining. Some of the heathen are amusing, however, and would have redeemed this book if the author had given them the space occupied by his own moralizings and laboured phrases. A marked vein of emotional religiosity pervades Mr. Brown's recent work.

Uncle Gregory. By George Sandeman. (Heinemann.)

THE author's work clearly owes much to the artistic method of Mr. Henry James. Mr. Sandeman propounds a riddle of personality which his characters attempt to solve. Gregory Rowley, whose death has occurred before the story opens, was a giant of finance and so-called philanthropy. His will lays upon his relatives the responsibility of continuing his public benefactions and writing his "life." Unfortunately for their peace, the would-be biographers aim at a presentation of the real as distinct from the famous. At one time Rowley has the aspect of a good man devoid of charm; then he figures as an ideal brother, and anon his love for humanity affords him a halo. Finally, a real Rowley emerges from sundry documents as a rogue who, with less adroitness than he possessed, might have forfeited both liberty and reputation. Mr. Sandeman skilfully sketches the effect which the study of the dead man has upon the narrator and his sister and brother-in-law.

The Grip of Fear. By Maurice Level. (Grant Richards.)

MR. LEVEL's story reminds us in its main idea of a younger son introduced to us by the brothers Grimm, who travelled to learn what shivering meant. The present hero is a Parisian journalist who, desirous of demonstrating the obtuseness of the police and experiencing the enchantment of fear, deliberately manufactures circumstantial evidence which leads to his condemnation as a murderer. The story has the merit of shapeliness; it is, however, lacking in intellectuality and inventiveness, the happy ending being deplorably weak.

The Heart of a Gypsy. By Rosamond Napier. (Duckworth & Co.)

THE underlying motive of this clever, but unequal story is the conflict in the heroine's heart between her love for a man and the great beech-tree which is the only real parent she knows, having been abandoned by her Romany mother in the cradle of its mossy roots, to be rescued and reared in a Devonshire parsonage. She is a true child of nature, wayward, but fascinating. Falling head-over-ears in love with a rising London surgeon, holiday-making on Exmoor, she is transplanted to the uncongenial atmosphere of smart West End society, to be trained for her new position by his stepmother and sister, to say nothing of his former chère amie. The situation thus created is similar to that in 'A Princess of Thule.' The passionate Meridiana cannot endure her isolation in these unaccustomed surroundings, and finally breaks away from her too pre-occupied and somewhat dictatorial adorer, and returns to her beech-tree. The descriptions of Devonshire scenery are always vividly, and often brilliantly, done; and the author's power of character-drawing is distinctly above the average. The middle-aged surgeon with his "booming" laugh, as a hero, now and then verges perilously on the ludicrous; and Meridiana's adopted sister would have been equally attractive, and less tiresome, without her appalling slanginess and too insistent stammer. Meridiana herself is something new to the hardened novel-reader.

The Lure of Eve. By Edith Mary Moore. (Cassell & Co.)

THIS story—the work of a new writer—is too slender and episodic to be effective, though it contains much that is thoughtful and well expressed. A young novelist, of whom great things are expected by his friends, marries a beautiful but commonplace girl, whose selfishness goes far towards spoiling his career. The narrative is wanting in directness, and the characterization in intimacy. Though the spirit of friendship that animates the men in the book—Laine the writer, Westmore the dramatist, and Deane the artist—is admirably caught, the men themselves are drawn with too slight and uncertain a touch to have an air of reality. Their talk, often clever and epigrammatic, lacks naturalness and ease. The book is, however, marked by sincerity of purpose, a keen but sympathetic outlook on life, and a certain distinction of style.

The Sin of the Duchess. By Houghton Townley. (Greening & Co.)

IN the central figure of this sensational tale—a woman who is wrongly convicted of the murder of a duke—a distant relative of the Count of Monte Cristo may be found. A miraculous escape from prison is promptly followed by the acquisition of untold riches, which she uses relentlessly to bring ruin upon the numerous persons who, knowing that the unhappy Duke was slain by his own wife, allowed her to suffer in the Duchess's stead. To increase the sensation the author has caused the story to be narrated by a bank clerk whose "clairvoyant faculties" enable him to describe events before they really occur. Mr. Townley does the thing handsomely. There is a thoroughness about his disregard of the probabilities of life, a lavishness about the incidents through which he hurries his boldly fashioned figures, from which it is difficult to withhold a tribute. But the whole has, for a book of its class, a vital defect—there is no well-kept secret to make one eager for the end.

The Broken Snare. By Ludwig Lewisohn. (Stanley Paul & Co.)

MR. LEWISOHN has written a vivid story. It tells of an attractive girl embittered by a poverty-stricken and sordid home. Her father, a medical man, is a failure in his profession without knowing it, and her mother is always depressed and sad. The girl has a mad desire to escape from the trammels of her life, and art becomes her refuge. In this frame of mind she meets a literary man and acquaintance of her father, who holds heterodox views concerning marriage. He soon dominates her, and at last she leaves home, and lives with him—without the marriage bond. The attempt thus to realize the ideal life proves a failure, and the girl, disillusioned, returns home. But between the two there is real affection, and after much tribulation they come together again and marry. Mr. Lewisohn is a realist. Some may object that certain parts of his book are too real; certainly there is much to shock the conventional. We are inclined, however, to regard the volume as the product of an earnest man who desires to point a moral. The characters are well drawn, and the plot is plausibly arranged.

The Priest of the High Fjelds. By Ingeborg Maria Sick. Translated from the Danish by Tyra Engdahl and Jessie Rew. (Utrecht, H. Honig.)

THIS excellent translation deserves a cordial welcome from English readers, for it will enable them to make acquaintance with a writer of unusual charm and distinction. The materials out of which the story is constructed are simple, but the volume possesses in an eminent degree individuality, sincerity, and artistic restraint, and these qualities make it a vivid and moving piece of work. The two chief characters, a Norwegian clergyman and a young Danish girl, with their high passion and deep sense of the obligations of life, are thoroughly human, and the problem of their relations to each other and to God is of more than superficial interest; it is solved by one of them in a spirit of sacrifice that may be regarded as unduly strained, yet the reader is made to understand and sympathize, even if he may not wholly approve. The novel is striking and provocative of thought from beginning to end.

SOCIAL PROBLEMS.

IN Towards Social Reform (Fisher Unwin) Canon and Mrs. Barnett have collected a number of short papers written during the last ten or twelve years. In dealing with unemployment the goal at which all aim is the increased industrial efficiency of the worker; the immediate facts are the demoralizing influence of periods of enforced idleness, and the no less injurious consequences which attend the artificial provision of work for all who apply. The experience of the Unemployed Workmen's Act leads Canon Barnett to enunciate the rule "give as much employment as possible, but do not employ the unemployed." On this, as on other questions, the tendency of Canon Barnett's views is towards the school generally associated with the term "Progressive," but his papers are marked by a rare sense of proportion.

In Mrs. Barnett's essays the personal note predominates, and her wealth of experience and reminiscence lends a peculiar charm to her papers on the principles of recreation and the Children's Country Holiday Fund. Occasionally, perhaps, her sympathy leads her astray. However real may be the evils of the Poor Law schools, it does not follow that the system is wholly wrong.

Underlying the treatment of specific problems, and forming itself the main subject of several papers, is the broad question of the relations between the rich and poor.

"The working-man does not want to heave half a brick at the aristocrat; his attitude is less brutal, but, so far as the aristocrat is concerned, more dangerous. He despises the ways of smart people, their love of jewels and dress, the triviality of their pleasures."

Such is Canon Barnett's summing-up of the situation. Whether this attitude is justifiable or not, the responsibility for its existence rests on the shoulders of those who pass their lives where they need neither know, nor be known by, the poor, and who are not concerned if the upper classes are an object for the contempt of the working-man. Can anything be done to break down the barriers which separate the rich and the poor? Well-meaning efforts are often made to arouse the sympathy of the one by depicting the misery and vice of the other; the immediate result is generally a subscription which only serves to stereotype the distinction between him that gives and him that takes. Canon and Mrs. Barnett have been pioneers in an enterprise where such sentiments find no place. Their book is a record of liberal-minded achievement.

Mr. Thomas Holmes is an able writer, and his 'Pictures and Problems from London Police Courts' revealed him as a wise and farseeing man. During the summer of 1904 he resigned his position as Police Court Missionary after twenty-one years' service, and in Known to the Police (Arnold) he records some of his experiences in Police Courts and "the great Underworld of London." It is refreshing to note that, after a vast experience of the darker side of life, he is "more hopeful of humanity's ultimate good than ever." Mr. Holmes's optimism makes his book pleasant reading. He sees in the Police Court of to-day great improvement; all the arrangements are more humane than they were. He speaks highly of the magistrates.

"The legal profession, too, has changed. Where are the greasy, drunken old solicitors that haunted the precincts of Police Courts twenty-five years ago? Gone!... Bullying, drunken, and stupid solicitors have no chance to-day."

There is also improvement in the appearance of the prisoners. There is, however, one ominous conclusion. Mr. Holmes declares that whilst there is less brutality, debauchery, and drinking to-day, there is a national degeneration in the direction of dishonesty. He sees in the spread of such faults a greater evil than intemperance or gambling. The volume contains excellent chapters on 'The Black List and Inebriates,' 'Police Court Marriages,' and 'Extraordinary Sentences.' In the first Mr. Holmes points out the worthlessness of some recent legislation; in the next he protests against hurried marriages arranged in Police Courts, often hailed with praise by a sentimental press, but ending in disaster; whilst in the last he shows the inequalities of sentences meted out to prisoners.

Not the least interesting section of the book deals with 'Discharged Prisoners.' Here is a most difficult problem:—

"Prisoners' Aid Societies are powerless with them. Church Army and Salvation Army and all the Labour Homes combined can do nothing with them or for them; for Prison life is easier than wood-chopping, and the comforts of Prison are superior to those of a Labour Home."

Mr. Holmes shows that there are thousands of young men with no settled place of abode, no technical skill, no great physical strength, no capabilities, and no desire for continuous honest employment. No one wants them, and there is no place for them in industrial life. They are content to live in cheap lodging-houses or in prison. Mr. Holmes says:—

"Some people are advocating conscription. Well, here is a chance. Form a regiment, or two regiments, of young men who have been three times in prison. Give them ten years of thorough discipline and sound manual and technical training. Under discipline they will be obedient, and at the worst they will be as good men as those that manned Nelson's ships, and would prove quite as good as those that fought at Waterloo or captured India for the East India Company."

Mr. Holmes's scheme is beset with difficulty, like all that have been offered.

The closing chapters deal with experiences amongst the poorest classes in London. We have never read a more striking record of the heroism of the sweated and overcrowded inhabitants of the slums. Chap. xiii. on 'Jonathan Pinchbeck, the Slum Autolyceus,' would alone make the volume noteworthy. Mr. Holmes has rendered great service by the publication of his book.

OUR LIBRARY TABLE.

The Immortals' Great Quest, by James W. Barlow (Smith, Elder & Co.), is a reissue of a skit written long since by a distinguished scholar of Trinity, Dublin. It is a work of the imagination, excellently written in a simple style which involves (and conceals) the highest art, and with such a fund of humour and good sense that the reader is charmed out of all desire to be critical. The book is in the form of a diary, written by a Dutch surgeon who contrived in the eighteenth century to visit the planet Venus. That the influence of 'Gulliver's Travels' has been prominent in the author's mind is plain enough, but he indulges in little or none of the satire without which Swift's imagination was never at its normal temperature. The satire of Dr. Barlow, when we get a glimpse of it, is reminiscent of 'Friendship's Garland' rather than 'Gulliver'; but it is no part of his purpose to construct an elaborate caricature or to preach at us through a parable. Van Varken, the Dutch doctor is not unlike Teufelsdröckh, albeit he is no philosopher: the account of his early education, and his lecture to the Hesperians on the religions of the earth, is a convincing instance of humour which is independent of mere turns of phrase or quaint conceits.

Seventeenth Century Men of Latitude. By Edward A. George. (Fisher Unwin.)—The liberal thinkers of the seventeenth century are only gradually coming into their own, and the process is not without interruption and reaction. Inquiring readers, hunting about among old books, think either that every one will be as surprised as they are to find that English clergymen in the seventeenth century were not all bigots or fanatics, or that they have discovered in the past an anticipation of what is still, among religious thinkers, in the far future. It is just what happened in Germany with regard to Erasmus: impetuous people burst out with the declaration that he was a sort of Harnack. It needs only an acquaintance with his works to refute the idea. Erasmus was a cultivated Catholic scholar, not a concealed Wycliffite. In the same way no one who really knows the English literature of the seventeenth century is the least surprised at what was said by the Cambridge Platonists, by John Hales, or Chillingworth; still less is he surprised to find that these men were the friends of Archbishop Laud, if he has read what the archbishop wrote, and not taken his view of him from Macaulay or Carlyle.

At the same time, it is a pleasant thing to have an enthusiastic appreciation of some of our great and half-forgotten writers from the pen of a leisurely American. Mr. George has made an agreeable study of writers who deserve not to be forgotten. He sketches the career of each with a certain freshness, and he appends a few extracts that are not ill, if not always characteristically, chosen. He writes as an amateur, but it does not seriously matter to his conclusions that he is sometimes mixed in his dates, and not always sound in his historical statements. He thinks, for example, that insistence on episcopal ordination was new in Baxter's day (a view which it needs little knowledge of history to refute), and that the Long Parliament did not adjourn from 1640 to the Restoration. Baxter was never chaplain to Cromwell's regiment: he refused to be. The number of the non-episcopal clergy deprived on St. Bartholomew's Day is still uncertain, but it undoubtedly was not "more than two thousand." He puts Laud's execution in 1644 (whereas it was, according to our reckoning, in 1645), and thus gets rather confused when he tries to make a list of events that happened to his heroes "in the year of Laud's execution." It was, for example, in 1644 that Jeremy Taylor lost the living of Uppingham, and Whichcote became Provost of King's, and on the 11th of June of that year Smith was transferred, as an M.A., to Queens' College. Baxter became an army chaplain, on the other hand, in 1645, not 1644; and so on.

Mr. George recalls many wise sayings. Thus we find Chillingworth's "The difference between a Papist and a Protestant is this, that the one judges his guide to be infallible, the other his way to be manifest." Whichcote says:—

"There is light enough of God in the world, if the eye of our minds were but fitted to receive it and let it in. It is the incapacity of the subject, where God is not; for nothing in the world is more knowable than God. God is only absent to them that are indisposed and disaffected."

Jeremy Taylor's remark "No man is an heretic against his will" reminds us of a corresponding statement of Cassiodorus. Sir Thomas Browne says of the Romanists—"We have reformed from them, not against them."

Truly the company whom Mr. George has collected is worth knowing. But they deserve his title of "men of latitude" only in a restricted sense, and some indeed—such as Baxter, we are inclined to say, when we remember his picture of the floor of hell—do not deserve it at all. They were, however, as good as he thinks, and almost as liberal. They were even more closely connected with the Primate than he knows—take More, for example, at Ragley, which had several links with Laud's Oxford college. Hammond (whom he mentions only in a disparaging quotation) had elaborated a more convincing theory and claim for toleration than any of them.

IN Songs of Love and Praise (Dent & Co.) Miss Annie Matheson has prepared a pleasant little anthology of devotional verse which should meet with a good reception. The volume is issued in a dainty form, with decorations, both tasteful and appropriate, by Mr. Charles Robinson, and comprises, in addition to well-remembered hymns of childhood and the now familiar 'Crossing the Bar' and 'Recessional,' a discerning and comprehensive selection from writers new and old, from Phineas Fletcher and Dr. Watts to Anne Brontë and Bishop Stubbs.

Scandinavian Britain. By W. G. Collingwood. With Chapters by F. York Powell. (S.P.C.K.)—This little work comes as a useful companion volume to the earlier ones on Celtic, Roman, Anglo-Saxon, and Norman Britain published by the same Society. It consists of some forty pages by the late Prof. York Powell, and over two hundred of more special matter by Prof. Collingwood. In the three introductory chapters a brief account is given of the causes and character of the Viking Age, to which the Scandinavian invasions of Britain were due. These pages will be useful for those to whom the subject is entirely new, but such readers may well be puzzled by the way in which the poetic maxims on pp. 22-5 are printed, and by such hybrid forms of names as Hrodwolf Crace, Anlaf Tryggwason, Throwends, Neamdale, &c. Happily these monstrosities do not appear in the main part of the book, which falls into three divisions—the earliest raids, the Danelaw, and the Norse settlements. Each of these subjects is dealt with in a systematic and careful manner, and though the details are necessarily limited, the reader will obtain a very fair idea of the extent to which England, Scotland, and Wales were affected by the Northern invaders. As a rule Prof. Collingwood has treated the various questions in a critical spirit, though here and there the tendency to force mere probabilities to the uttermost asserts itself, as it has often done in this department of historical study. A good example of this occurs on p. 201, where Völuspá is supposed to come from the Hebrides, and to supply a theme to a Yorkshire artist carving a stone on the shores of Morecambe Bay. Yet the writer is well aware of this tendency and its results in the past, and confesses that "perhaps we have not even yet escaped all the illusions of the forest of error." In cases where closer argument is essayed the method is not always convincing, as in the attempt to date the Cumbrian settlement by means of the word bekkr.

Perhaps the least satisfactory parts of the book are those which deal with place-names, such as pp. 193-5, 211-5; many of the examples given there and elsewhere would bear careful revision with closer attention to the facts of English and Scandinavian philology and grammar. Danish place-names at Reading border on the incredible; nor is it clear why thing should appear as Ting- in Bucks and Bedfordshire. That East Anglian "names in -wich, -haven, and Naze have a Northern origin" is a statement for which some proof would not be superfluous. The Scandinavian names and words cited in this part of the work are on the whole correctly given, but a few slips occur, such as "suð" for súð, "Tjúguskeggi" for -skegg, and "lagslíð" as a rendering of Old English lahslit. On p. 156 'Skjöldunga saga' is cited in place of 'Knyttlinga': the former no longer exists. That dordum, disturbance, represents an Old Norse dura-dómr is one of those old guesses which might with advantage have been quietly suppressed. In spite of this doubtful material, however, the general impression conveyed by the book, as to the historical and topographical bearings of the Scandinavian invasions, is sufficiently clear and correct to make it a useful addition to the series to which it belongs.

Zur Betonung der lateinisch-romanischen Wörter im Neuenglischen. Mit besonderer Berücksichtigung der Zeit von ca. 1560 bis 1660. Von Ernst Metzger. (Heidelberg, Winter.)—The subject of this dissertation is one on which it is hardly possible to make any very valuable contribution to knowledge, and it is not the author's fault that he has been able to do little more than set forth in a methodical form facts that are already well known. Most of the words which he enumerates as having different accentuations assigned to them in modern dictionaries belong (as he duly recognizes) to the purely literary vocabulary, and are seldom pronounced at all. When an Englishman finds himself under the necessity of pronouncing one of these, he has usually no oral tradition to guide him, so that he has to fall back on the analogy of some more familiar word of similar formation; and as the analogies are often conflicting, the same word will not seldom be pronounced variously by different people, or even by the same person at different times. The pronouncing dictionaries are far from adequately representing the amount of diversity that actually exists in the oral rendering of such words among people of the highest education. Some of the instances which the author gives of dialectal misplacement of accent suggest a doubt whether the indications of the 'English Dialect Dictionary' on this point are always trustworthy. For example, the word outdacious, and several words ending in -ation, are marked in that work as having the accent on the first syllable, no alternative notation being given. These accentuations may exist, but they are certainly foreign to some of the dialects in which the words are current. Of greater interest are the quotations from poetry of the Tudor and Stuart periods, intended to show that certain words were stressed otherwise than they are at the present day. The list of words exemplifying this kind of change might be greatly enlarged by more extensive research, but, so far as he has gone, the author has on the whole appreciated the metrical evidence at its true value. Unlike Messrs. van Dam and Stoffel, he makes reasonable allowance for poetic licence. The suggestion that Ben Jonson may have stressed inhumanely on the first syllable is inadmissible, the alleged parallels (impious, infamous, infinite) being for various reasons not relevant. Altogether this essay is a scholarly and accurate summary of what is known on the subject, and its collection of illustrative examples is useful.

THE fifty volumes just added to "Everyman's Library" (Dent) maintain the interest and enterprise of a scheme which has long passed the average bounds of the popular library. The Letters of Charles Lamb, 2 vols., is, says E. R. in the Introduction, "based upon the text prepared for the 'Works of Charles Lamb' by Mr. William Macdonald, who spared no pains or enthusiasm for his work." We have, in fact, Mr. Macdonald's notes, which should have been credited to him, and charming illustrations by Mr. Herbert Railton. Some letters since the original edition have had to disappear in consequence of a legal decision, but even so the volumes remain a wonderful bargain for the bookbuyer. Frere's translation of The Achæans, The Knights, and The Birds is already popular in a cheap form, nevertheless we welcome its reappearance. We find also Cicero's Select Letters and Orations, with a note by De Quincey. There is much fiction added of a sort generally known and praised, such as 'Les Misérables,' in two volumes, translated by Mr. C. E. Wilbour. Prof. Saintsbury introduces something more novel in a volume of Balzac's At the Sign of the Cat and Racket, and other Stories, which includes the general introduction to 'The Human Comedy,' a document of great interest. An early English version or paraphrase of 'Le Bal de Sceaux' is mentioned. The story reminds us of "the mysterious, philosophical, romantic, metaphysical Sparkins" in 'Sketches by Boz,' who was suddenly converted into the assistant at a "cheap shop." Mr. Llewelyn Williams, M.P., writes with discernment on Froude's Henry VIII., 3 vols., and Edward VI., 1 vol., which are masterpieces of narrative. Milman's History of the Jews, introduced by Dr. Hartwell Jones; Rodwell's translation of the Koran, by the Rev. G. Margoliouth, and Boswell's Tour in the Hebrides with Dr. Johnson are additions to the Library at which no man can cavil. The 'Tour' in particular is not so well known as it should be. Young people have an excellent and well-illustrated volume in Annals of Fairyland: The Reign of King Oberon; while The Secret of the Island, by Jules Verne, is among the classics of adventure. Everyman, with other Moralities and Three Miracle Plays, opens up a world of early drama known hitherto only to specialists. To Marlowe's Plays Mr. Edward Thomas writes a preface of just appreciation, though he rates the general intelligence of readers too high in supposing that they can rearrange blank verse. We think we should have said more of Shakespeare's debt to Marlowe. If the introductions to this admirable Library are to be of real value, they should be written with more attention to the popular buyer and the extent of his knowledge. Since the issue of the earlier volumes the critics employed have improved in this respect, but some still indulge in needless pedantry, and write as if all the world knew as much as they did.

Geneva. Described by Francis Gribble. Painted by J. and M. Hardwicke Lewis. (A. & C. Black.)—No place in the world, perhaps, can boast of a more superb setting than Geneva. But, from the picturesque point of view, she has paid the price of rapid expansion and modern reconstruction. Mr. Gribble wastes few words in describing the town, and none upon the democratic institutions of Swiss municipalities. He skims with the lightest of touches over the incidents in the history of the Genevan Reformation, the Genevan Revival, and Genevan Revolutions. His chief interest evidently lies in the great men of letters of Geneva. In dealing with the Reformation era, he quotes a curious account of the "dolorous departure" of the nuns from the Convent of Sainte-Claire, from the pen of one of the sisters. Some of them had spent all their lives in the cloister:—

"The fresh air was too much for them. They fainted away; when they saw the beasts of the fields they were terrified, thinking that the cows were bears, and that the sheep were ravening wolves."

Reading this, one is no longer surprised that only one sister was converted by the arguments of the Reformers who had visited the convent and preached in favour of marriage, much to the disappointment of some three hundred expectant spouses, who waited confidently outside the gate.

It is a curious coincidence that the same district should have been the home of Calvin, the Protestant Reformer, and of Voltaire, the iconoclast, who delighted in civilizing the Allobroges, and making "play-actors of the sons of syndics," as well as the birth-place of Rousseau, whose influence, if it inspired the worst excesses of the French Revolution, was also responsible for the revival of religion and the Catholic Restoration. Mr. Gribble might profitably have paused to trace the influence of Calvinist, Republican Geneva upon the writings of Rousseau, but this he does not seem to recognize. Geneva, we think, can claim a much greater share in the work of her "austere citizen" than he seems willing to admit (p. 91). The story of Calvin, and of Calvin's régime, which seemed to John Knox to make Geneva "the most perfect School of Christ that ever was in the earth since the days of the Apostles," Mr. Gribble tells with much spirit, as also that of Calvin's successor, Beza, the strong and eloquent, under whom occurred the episode of the "Escalade," famous in Genevan annals. To the Sage of Ferney and his Genevan theatre he devotes three chapters, but has a less hackneyed theme when he treats of "the illustrious de Saussure" as the typical figure in the Golden Age of Geneva. To this philosopher, who was a geologist also, and a stylist, the first man to write well about the mountains, and, if not quite the first man to ascend Mont Blanc, the first man to believe that the ascent was possible, Mr. Gribble devotes a delightful little essay, and does full justice to the mind and heart of the professor.

Of the two artists who illustrate the book in colour with pictures of the district, those of May Hardwicke Lewis are amateurish; those of J. Hardwicke Lewis are more worthy of reproduction.

Rothenburg on the Tauber. By Hermann Uhde-Bernays. (H. Grevel.)—Rothenburg has long been known to the connoisseur as "the gem of mediævalism" that Mr. Headlam has termed it. It is curious that no satisfactory monograph has been written about it; probably the reason is that the same cause which has preserved it intact, or almost intact, throughout the troubled times of German history, keeps it now but little visited by tourists, and there is little prospect of reward for the historian's toil. For, unlike her neighbour Nuremberg, Rothenburg lies off the main route of commerce, and the result is reflected in her history, as in her surviving walls and buildings. Politically, in the Middle Ages, a Nuremberg in miniature, Rothenburg remains a mediæval chrysalis, whose development was retarded by her position and the commercial jealousy of her more powerful and fortunate neighbours, such as Würzburg, Bamberg, and Nuremberg. As Herr Uhde-Bernays well remarks in this little sketch of the town, which is evidently inspired by a genuine love of the place,

"what Rothenburg offers us, is the picture of a well-preserved town and nothing else. It has produced no great artists, like Nürnberg, and Bamberg, Augsburg, and Regensburg, whose works are an honour to the town and have made its name famous everywhere. It is a strange characteristic of Rothenburg, that with a single exception—the town surveyor Leonhard Weidmann—no real artist dwelt within its walls."

When the need of a craftsman, or of an architect to build the famous Town Hall, was felt, he was summoned from some neighbouring city. This fact again, we would suggest, is due to the position and comparative poverty of Rothenburg. In days when painters and craftsmen were vagabond artists, they flocked to Courts and cash as bees to honey. The Vischers and Dürers were drawn to Nuremberg—as Shakspeare was drawn to London, and Leonardo to Milan—by the need of money, the hope of employment. Rothenburg attracted them not, and now the cult of no artist draws us to Rothenburg—only the charm of the sixteenth-century buildings which, in spite of fire and pillage, have been wonderfully preserved from the spoiling hand of Time and the restorer. Herr Uhde-Bernays's little volume, pleasantly illustrated by the drawings of Maria Ressel, will serve to suggest the charm and spirit of the place till a more thorough and better-written work is produced. Historically, it adds nothing to the labours of Bensen and Weigel, and the author remarks: "It appeared unwise to omit, as many might have been [sic] expected, the short historical sketch and refer the readers to the above-mentioned works." It is interesting to note how the patriotic versions of the Rothenburg chroniclers differ in their accounts of such important events as the siege and capture of the town by the Nuremberg troops; but those who are acquainted with the history of the latter town will be struck by the frequent repetition of incidents, circumstances, nomenclature, and legends connected with that old "White City." The book deserved better translation; much of it will be unintelligible, or appear odd, to the reader who has no German. And the punctuation is as strange as the style.

Statutes and Ordinances and Acts of the Parliament of Ireland: King John to Henry V. Edited by Henry F. Berry. (Stationery Office.)—Among the many expensive schemes of the Record Commission of the early years of the nineteenth century was a complete edition of the Statutes of Ireland. For this object transcripts were made and much money lavished, but in 1824 the project was "suspended," and, though "revived" more than once by modern Keepers of the Dublin archives, it has only been carried through, some ninety years after the "preliminary steps" had been taken, by the issue of the present volume. The limit of time chosen for ending this instalment is the end of the reign of Henry V., and the reason for this line of demarcation rests on the circumstance that the series of Irish statute rolls begin with the reign of Henry VI. While subsequent editors of Irish statutes will have the easier task of transcribing the statute rolls, Mr. Berry has in this volume been compelled to collect his material from very varied sources. In Ireland he has found texts for many laws in the Red Book of the Irish Exchequer, a compilation of the reign of Edward I. He has published the greater part of the text of that Book in this work; but he has had to seek for other documents much further afield. A special difficulty arose from the fact that John had ordered that all English laws should be observed in Ireland, and a large proportion of the ordinances contained in this book were not special enactments of any Irish body, but simply English laws transmitted under seal to the Irish Chancery with letters patent or close directing their observance and enrolment in the dependent country.

To the English student, then, much of the volume will have a familiar air, and he will wonder at the extent to which it was in practice possible to transfer bodily a series of laws from one country to another. The plan of the publication includes English translations of both the Latin and the French texts, but the editor has saved space by giving English versions only of English statutes thus transmitted, and these in smaller type. Nothing but the documents found in Irish records or such as were previously unpublished is given in the original. We note that the appearance of "record type" shows how much more conservative are the ways of the Irish than those of the English Record Office, and we are not sure that public money is wisely spent in printing so much translation, especially of documents such as the "Great Charter of Ireland," which merely differs in minute details from the English Great Charter. But the editor deserves praise for avoiding some of the gross errors of the old translations of French laws to be read in 'Statutes of the Realm,' some of the worst of which Stubbs unfortunately incorporated in his 'Select Charters.' Mr. Berry has also published some ninety documents, whereas the Record Commissioners had only transcribed twenty-six for this period. In a useful and unpretentious Preface attention is drawn to the sources from which the volume is derived, and to the bearing of some of the more important documents on history. By this work an important step forward has been made in opening out the sources of mediæval Anglo-Irish history.

CAMBRIDGE NOTES.

I WAS once discussing with a pupil the difference between an essay and an answer to examination questions, and the best explanation I was able to give him was that in answering a question the main object should be to give many facts in the smallest possible compass, whereas an essay was set in order to see who could write most upon the subject he knew least. I feel that this letter is of the nature of an essay; for were I to be asked what happened during the past term, I could, if I considered it a question, reply on half a sheet of note-paper as easily as a statesman could sketch his policy.

I have, however, first to announce an important discovery. I have been long perplexed why it is that Oxford wants the Working-Man. I have read the proposals with amazement, and marvelled at the project of settling the said toiler with wife and baby in an academic quad. Like most of the world, I attributed this burning desire to bring our future rulers to Oxford, that they may learn how to govern the Empire, to a strong, if not very rational sentiment of Socialism. Long I wondered, and felt, much as I suppose other men feel, somewhat bewildered. Suddenly I found light! In the list of Oxford representatives for the athletic contest with us I read of Mr. L. C. Hull (Michigan), and Mr. Woodrow (Drake University, U.S.A.). I looked no further, for I had my clue. If Michigan, Drake University, Kansas, Princeton, &c., contribute Rhodes Scholars to enable Oxford to beat Cambridge in athletics, why not the Working-Man of England? Why should not Aston Villa or Bromwich Albion supply footballers?—for, for aught I know, these may be educational establishments. If Rhodes's millions can furnish his University with such athletes as Mr. Hull, why be content with going so far afield, when there is such material near to hand? Blind that I have been to accuse men like Mr. William Temple and his friends of being visionary Socialists, instead of recognizing that they were farseeing sportsmen.

We have a difficulty with us far exceeding that of the admission of the Working-Man. As a matter of fact, that exemplary creature never had, I believe, and never will have, any existence in fact; and any man, from whatever class he may spring, who comes to the old Universities and behaves as a reasonable being, and not as a type, is sure of a welcome and a judgment in accordance with his individual merits. Our trouble is with the native of India, who is multiplying, and with whom the University authorities confess themselves unable to deal to their satisfaction. The question is really one of great gravity. The colleges in many cases hesitate to take natives of India, and therefore the latter tend to go in numbers to those which receive them. When there, they do not associate with the other men, but form coteries of their own, and appear to gain little or nothing of the spirit of the University. At first they did not isolate themselves so much, and the movement seemed a success: now every one is disposed to admit that it is a failure. There seems an impression abroad that we do not get the right sort of man, and that the best Indian natives are deterred from coming in consequence. That many who do come return with no friendly feelings to this country is certain. Nor can one withhold sympathy for the men themselves. They have little understanding of the conditions of University life. They have nowhere to go to in vacation, and many, I fancy, come to England with inadequate means. Lord Morley spoke to college tutors and others on the subject, and the Bishop of Ely had a conference to discuss it; but as yet no real solution is at hand. I incline to believe that if the Indian Government could see its way to have an authorized representative to look after natives of India at the English Universities, and see that they were provided for in vacation, a great deal might be done. Much care should be taken to inquire into the antecedents and means of those who desire to study in England, and, as an equivalent for these services, the colleges should be under an obligation to take a certain limited number. The whole business is at present an awkward one, and cannot be settled in the ordinary British fashion of allowing the difficulty to be muddled through somehow.

Certain schemes of University reform are afloat; but they do not seem to me of a specially practical character, nor are minor changes particularly necessary. One important improvement in the Poll Examination has been quietly made. The "General," which tends to be a mere repetition of the Little-go, and consists in the main of the old subjects men have failed to acquire as boys, is to be optional, and, as an alternative for it and the special, two specials may be selected from different "groups." By this means a man may choose two subjects likely to interest him, instead of going once more over the dreary routine of his schoolwork in order to gain a Poll degree. The reform has been carried through in the ordinary business way, but is none the less a serious blow to compulsory Greek. The complaints of those disciples of Demetrius of Ephesus who say, whenever an educational reform is proposed, "Sirs, by this craft we have our wealth," passed unheeded on this occasion. I am told that the Historical and Theological Boards are revising their examinations; but for what other purpose do Boards exist?

The resignation by Dr. Cunningham of the Vicarage of St. Mary the Great, the University church, gave Trinity College no easy task in finding a worthy successor. Dr. Cunningham's twenty-years' incumbency has been memorable, as his preaching has maintained a high level, and has attracted some of the most thoughtful men in the University. It may be said that an "Amurath to Amurath succeeds" in so far as Mr. Boughey, the new Vicar, is, like Dr. Cunningham, a Fellow of Trinity. An intelligent appreciation appeared in The Cambridge Review, the justice of which was generally admitted. Whilst on the subject of the Church I may remark that the Hulsean Lectures of Dr. Figgis caused no ordinary interest. As a rule, the lecturer speaks to a few bored Heads and Doctors, to a Vice-Chancellor and proctors who must come, and to some scattered M.A.s and undergraduates. When Dr. Figgis delivered his lectures, the church was crowded to excess, and one would have thought that the Bishop of London or one of our leading theologians and thinkers was occupying the pulpit. Dr. Figgis has lately joined the Community of the Resurrection at Mirfield, and the earnestness of his preaching was as marked as the eloquence and scholarship which characterized his powerful defence of the teaching of the Church Catholic. It is no exaggeration to say that his lectures are epochmaking.

It is perhaps indiscreet to refer to an unpleasant and forgotten controversy like the question, Who ought to stroke the Cambridge eight? and I only do so in order to bring forward my view of the necessity of giving the young man who happens to be President of the C.U.B.C. a free hand. One of the main uses of athletics is to teach men how to manage others, and when a captain of any club is chosen, he ought to be allowed to exercise his own judgment and feel the weight of the responsibility of his position. But at present our contests are made affairs almost of national importance, and everybody but the President seems to have a say in the matter. Now that the decision is made, I think all who know will own that Mr. Stuart had a very hard task to perform and that he has done it very well. Not having seen the crew of late, I am unable to give an opinion; but it really seems as though he had selected one of unusual merit, and the way in which he showed his willingness to row in any place the coaches thought best for the boat, and to give up the prospect of stroking four times in succession to victory, must win general approval. There were some rumours that the winning Varsity crew was to challenge the Belgians to row about Easter after the boatrace, but happily they have not been justified. The evil of overdoing athletics is one which must be jealously watched.

Two remarkable men have been appointed to the Doctorate this term. Prof. Ridgeway has honoured the degree of D.Sc. by taking it; and Mr. R. A. Nicholson of Trinity, a great Persian scholar, and one of the best linguists in Cambridge, has become a Litt.D. As it is now rather a distinction not to be a doctor of anything in Cambridge, it is satisfactory that gentlemen of such eminence have seen fit to offer themselves as candidates for the degrees in question.

The gaiety of Cambridge has been appreciably lightened by a little brochure of Mr. Heitland called 'A Letter to a Lady; or, A Word with the Female Anti-Suffragists,' to which the lady has replied. Like James I., who is said always to have found it easy to make up his mind when he had heard only one side of the question, I thought Mr. Heitland had made an excellent case till I read the lady's reply. Both are exquisitely polite; but Mr. Heitland for a moment forgot himself and descended to four or five words of political claptrap, and the lady took due advantage, and had him at her mercy.

I must conclude with a word of sadness. The loss of Canon Appleton, Master of Selwyn, is a grief to many. We were all glad to see him again in Cambridge, and the way he undertook his new duties promised well for the future of the college—one of the most difficult institutions in Cambridge to work successfully. He had begun the building of a new hall, to which he contributed liberally, and his influence was making itself felt in the college. His sudden illness and death is a sad blow to his friends and to the society with which he had identified himself; and his place will not easily be filled. J.

F. G. FLEAY.

To other of your readers, as to myself, the announcement in your issue of the 20th inst. that Mr. Frederick Gard Fleay had passed away ten days previously, must have been the first intimation of his death. Mr. Fleay had long lived in retirement, and probably, at all events since the time, now many years ago, when he relinquished an educational post in the North for a purely literary life, he had not been in the habit of frequent intercourse with many personal friends. On the other hand, the lore which he had often accumulated with infinite labour was always at the service of those in whose wish to use it fairly as well as freely he confided; nor did he resent criticism, so long as—unlike much that was inflicted on him—it was in intention just.

I am writing under very great pressure of business; and, should I be fortunate enough to find an opportunity of paying a not wholly unworthy tribute to the services rendered by Mr. Fleay to English literature, and to English dramatic literature in particular, that opportunity must be taken at a later date. I trust, however, that his death will not pass unnoticed, or his deserts remain unacknowledged, by those who are best fitted to appreciate the value of his work, however much they may disagree with some of his results. Beyond all doubt, conjecture and conclusion jostled each other in some of his writings; and not a little that he at one time pronounced to be settled he was himself at another time ready to resettle. But the debt which is permanently due to him from students of the Elizabethan drama, and of Shakespeare in especial, is not only on account of the methods of inquiry which, though not actually originated by him, he elaborated with extraordinary acumen and unsurpassed patience in fields so different as that of metrical criticism and that of stage history. His 'Life of Shakespeare,' his 'Chronicle of the English Stage,' and his 'Biographical Chronicle of the English Drama' are monuments of a literary and historical learning both rare and minute, as well as of a courage in investigation hardly possible except to a mind gifted—I am not afraid of using the word—with genuine imaginative power.

Mr. Fleay, I believe, of late years carried the exercise of his rare faculties into other fields of research; but of his work in these I know nothing. There was, in any case, nothing pedantic or narrow about his tastes and pursuits. Had the personal ambition which he at one time cherished of becoming a teacher of English literature in one of our Universities or University Colleges been gratified, he might have been revered by generations of students; but, even as it is, he has, with true academical generosity, taught many of us much, and has not passed away unhonoured in the world of letters.

A. W. WARD.

'DORANDO: A SPANISH TALE,' BY JAMES BOSWELL.

NEARLY thirteen years ago a poem of James Boswell's, 'No Abolition of Slavery; or, The Universal Empire of Love,' was discovered in a second-hand bookshop in London (Athenæum, May 9th, 1896). An earlier work, 'Dorando: a Spanish Tale,' a skit on the famous Douglas Cause which led to the prosecution of certain Edinburgh booksellers and newspaper proprietors for contempt of court, has hitherto eluded all the book-hunters. It is a pleasure to announce that there is a copy in the Sir William Hamilton Collection in the University Library, Glasgow. It is bound with other pamphlets in a duodecimo volume entitled 'Morality,' the press-mark of which is B.C. 24, e. 13. The margins have been badly cropped by the binder; in other respects it is perfect. There are two title-pages: the first or sub-title, "Dorando | a | Spanish Tale. | Lydorum quidquid Etruscos | Incoluit fines, memo generosior est te | Hor. | (Price one shilling.)"; the second or title proper, "Dorando | a | Spanish Tale"; a long motto in French from Cochin; "second edition"; and the imprint: "London | printed for J. Wilkie at the Bible in St. Pauls | Church Yard. Sold also by J. Dodsley in | Pall Mall, T. Davies in Russell Street | Covent Garden | and by the Booksellers of Scotland. | MDCCLXVII." The tale itself extends to 46 pages (5-50). The authorship is well established by the letters to Temple.

In Sir Leslie Stephen's memoir of Boswell, in the 'D.N.B.' 'Dorando' is confounded with a political poem 'Rodondo; or, The State Jugglers,' published anonymously in London in 1763, a work of Hugh Dalrymple, a Scottish advocate; and unfortunately the mistake is repeated in the reissue of the 'Dictionary.' Dalrymple's pasquinado may have suggested the name Dorando to the biographer: most likely it did.

Boswell's relation to the famous Douglas Cause has been much discussed by his biographers. In the 'Letters of James Boswell addressed to W. J. Temple,' published in 1857—one of the worst-edited volumes in the language—the editor sneeringly remarks "that it gratified Boswell's feeling of self-importance to be, or to be supposed to be, mixed up in the Douglas Cause"; and more recently Mr. Percy Fitzgerald and Mr. W. K. Leask have said pretty much the same thing. The sneer is quite uncalled for. Neither Temple nor Johnson can have been under any misapprehension about his position in the case, for the communications to these friends are frank and explicit. But the recently discovered "Consultation Book" of the biographer, written in his own hand, now in the Advocates' Library, Edinburgh, shows that when the judgment of the House of Lords came to be applied by the Court of Session in 1769, the young advocate was of counsel "in causâ Douglas v. the Duke of Hamilton," receiving with his brief 10*l.* 10*s.*, a large fee for a junior in those days. When, therefore, he wrote his autobiography in 1791, he might have claimed, had he cared to do so, more than merely to have been a "generous volunteer" in the celebrated case.

J. T. T. BROWN.

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

ENGLISH.

Theology.

- Blatchford (A. N.), Church Councils and their Decrees, 2/ net. The book does not discuss the application of the terms "General" or "Œcumenical" to any of the Councils of the Christian Church.
- Clarke (W. N.), The Christian Doctrine of God, 10/6. Aims at a presentation of the conception of God that is characteristic of the Christian religion.
- Geden (A. S.), Outlines of Introduction to the Hebrew Bible, 8/6 net. The volume has formed the basis of a series of lectures introductory to the study of the Old Testament, which for several years have been delivered at the Wesleyan College, Richmond. Contains 14 illustrations.
- Hall (Rev. F. J.), The Being and Attributes of God, 6/ net. The third of a series of ten single-volume treatises, each complete in itself, the series to constitute a systematic work on Christian doctrine.
- Harris (J. Rendel), Side-Lights on New Testament Research, 6/. Seven lectures delivered in 1908 at Regent's Park College.
- Hutton (J. E.), A History of the Moravian Church. Second Edition, revised and enlarged.
- Jeffs (H.), The Art of Sermon Illustration, 3/6 net.
- Mallock (W. H.), Doctrine and Doctrinal Disruption, 3/6 net. An examination of the intellectual position of the Church of England.
- Moule (Handley C. G.), Faith, its Nature and its Work, 3/6 net. Natural Religion; or, the Secret of all the Creeds, by F. J. B., 2/. The translator presents an abbreviated rendering of a few pages from the work of Dupuis entitled 'Origin of All Worship; or, Universal Religion.'
- Reid (J.), The First Things of Jesus, 3/6 net. A study of the sayings of our Lord.
- Scott (R.), The Pauline Epistles: a Critical Study, 6/ net. The purpose of the volume is twofold—to indicate the teaching of the Pauline Epistles, and to set forth a theory of authorship based on characteristics of thought and style.
- Seton (W.), Chalmers of New Guinea, the Martyr Missionary, 1/. With portrait and illustrations.

Law.

- Greenwood (J. H.), Amount of Compensation and Review of Weekly Payments under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 2/6 net.
- Holdsworth (W. S.), A History of English Law, Vols. II. and III., 10/6 net. These volumes deal with the Anglo-Saxon period, the mediæval period, and the later history of some few parts of Common Law doctrine which attained in substance their final form in the mediæval period.

Fine Art and Archaeology.

- Antiquary, Vol. XLIV., January-December, 1908, 7/6
- Boston Museum of Fine-Arts, Thirty-Third Annual Report, for the Year 1908.
- British Museum: A Guide to the Egyptian Galleries (Sculpture), 1/6. With 39 plates, and 46 illustrations in the text.
- Great English Portrait Painters of the Eighteenth Century: Reynolds, Gainsborough, Romney, 5/ net.
- Gribble (F.), Lausanne, 7/6 net. Contains 20 full-page illustrations in colour painted by J. H. and M. H. Lewis.
- Heart of Scotland, painted by Sutton Palmer, described by A. R. Hope Moncrief, 7/6 net.
- Johnson (A. E.), Tom Brown, R.I., 3/6 net. Contains 57 examples of the artist's work with brush, pen, and pencil.
- Konody (P. G.), Brockwell (M. W.), and Lippmann (F. W.), The National Gallery, Vol. I., 10/6 net. Edited by T. Leman Hare.—Part X., 1/ net. For notice of earlier parts see Athen., March 13, p. 322.

- Leaders of the English Pre-Raphaelites: Holman Hunt, Rossetti, Millais, 5/ net.
- National Art-Collections Fund, Fifth Annual Report, 1903. Raphael, 5/ net.
- Simpson (F. M.), A History of Architectural Development: Vol. II., Mediæval, 21/ net. The aim of this volume in the Architects' Library, like that of the first, is to trace the development of architecture through the planning, construction, materials, and principles of design in the buildings described.
- Three Great Florentine Painters: Fra Angelico, Leonardo da Vinci, Botticelli, 5/ net.
- Three Great Portrait Painters of the Seventeenth Century: Rembrandt, Hals, Velazquez, 5/ net.

Poetry and Drama.

- Ballads of Brave Women, by A. H. Miles and other writers, 1/6. Records of the heroic in thought, action, and endurance.
- Frampton (R. G. D.), Nora and the Shepherd, and other Poems, 3/6 net. Includes a number of Occasional Verses.
- Lilies and Lavender, by Ronald, 1/. A collection of love-verses.
- Mackaye (P.), Ode on the Centenary of Abraham Lincoln, 3/ net. Mostly in unrhymed verse, and daring in its use of the vernacular.
- Maeterlinck (M.), The Blue Bird, 3/6 net. A fairy play in five acts, translated by A. T. de Mattos.

Music.

- Lightfoot (J.), The Theory of Music for Students and Teachers, 2/ net. Comprises the elements of music in both notations and elementary harmony, together with a short exposition of the principles of voice production and voice training.
- Scarlatti (Alessandro), Parts IV. and V., 5/ net. Edited by J. S. Shedlock. For notice of Parts II. and III. see Athen., Jan. 30, p. 142.

Bibliography.

- Establishment of Public Libraries, 6*d.* net. Some notes for the guidance of Library Committees, issued by the Library Association.
- John Rylands Library, Manchester: Catalogue of an Exhibition of the Works of Dante Alighieri shown in the Main Library from March to October, MCMIX., 6*d.*

Philosophy.

- Murray (W. C.), From One to Twenty-One, 1/ net. Studies in mental growth.

Political Economy.

- Jevons (W. S.), Investigations in Currency and Finance, 10/ net. Illustrated by 18 diagrams, and edited, with an introduction, by H. S. Foxwell. New abridged edition, with preface by H. S. Jevons.

History and Biography.

- Bottomley (H.), Bottomley's Book, 1/ net. An account of the author's experiences as newspaper proprietor, M.P., &c.
- Buxton (C. R.), Turkey in Revolution, 7/6 net. With 33 illustrations and a map.
- Douglas Cause, 5/ net. Edited by A. Francis Steuart. One of the Notable Scottish Trials Series.
- Dunn-Pattison (R. P.), Napoleon's Marshals, 12/6 net. Contains 20 illustrations.
- Elias (F.), The Right Hon. H. H. Asquith, M.P., 3/6 net. A biography and appreciation.
- FitzGerald (Edward), 1809-1909, 2/6 net. Centenary souvenir, illustrated.
- Fox (W. Lancelot), The Complete Life Pilgrimage of William of Wykeham, Bishop of Winchester, Part I., 2/. Includes two lives of him by his contemporaries, and other original records translated from the Latin.
- Fry (W. H.), New Hampshire as a Royal Province, 16/ Vol. XXIX., No. 2 of the Columbia University Studies in History.
- Grierson (F.), The Valley of Shadows, 6/ net. Deals with the days in Illinois before the Civil War when the people were preparing to elect Abraham Lincoln to the Presidency.
- Lepelletier (E.), Paul Verlaine: his Life—his Work, 21/ net. Translated by E. M. Lang, illustrated. See review of the original French in Athen., May 25, 1907, p. 629.
- Love Letters of Thomas Carlyle and Jane Welsh, 2 vols., 25/ net. Edited by Alexander Carlyle, with numerous illustrations, including two in colours.
- Madras Government, Dutch Records: No. 2, Memoir written in the Year 1781 by A. Moens, 4/9; No. 3, Memoir of Commander Fredrik Cunes, 1/; No. 4, Memoir of Johan Gerard van Angelbeek, 6*d.*; No. 5, Historical Account of Nawab Hyder Ali Khan, 9*d.* All edited by P. Groot.
- Putnam (B. H.), The Enforcement of the Statutes of Labourers during the First Decade after the Black Death, 1349-59, 16/. Vol. XXXII. of the Columbia University Studies.
- Ray (P. O.), The Repeal of the Missouri Compromise, its Origin and Authorship, 3 dols. 50 net.
- Simon (Helene), William Godwin and Mary Wollstonecraft. A German study containing 3 portraits.
- Story, Robert Herbert, D.D., Memoir, by his Daughters, 10/6 net. Illustrated.
- Tanner (E. P.), The Province of New Jersey, 1664-1738, 12/. Vol. XXX. of the Columbia University Studies.
- Thompson (F.), Shelley, 2/6 net. The remarkable article which appeared in The Dublin Review, with an introduction by George Wyndham.
- Transactions of the Royal Society of Literature, Vol. XXVIII., Second Series.
- Travis-Cook (J.), Notes on the Origin of Kingston-upon-Hull, 2/ net. Treats also of the port of Hull, the Camin Charter, and the Meaux Register (including the "old" river Hull tradition).

Geography and Travel.

- Dutt (W. A.), Norfolk and Suffolk, 1/6 each. In the Cambridge County Geographies, with maps, diagrams, and illustrations.
- Gordon (D. J.), Handbook of South Australia. Issued by the Government of South Australia, with over 250 illustrations.

Mate's Illustrated Colchester, by C. E. Benham, 6d. net. Official Guide of the Colchester Town Council.
Stawell (Mrs. R.), Motor Tours in Yorkshire, 6/ net. With photographs by R. de S. Stawell.
Walters (J. Cuming), The Lost Land of King Arthur, 3/6 net. With 16 illustrations of Tintagel, Glastonbury, &c.

Sports and Pastimes.

Brewer (R. W. A.), The Motor-Car, 5/ net. A practical manual. Illustrated.
Ruff's Guide to the Turf, Spring Edition, 1909, 7/6

Education.

Mackenzie (Millicent), Hegel's Educational Theory and Practice, 3/ net.

School-Books.

Chamisso's Die Geschichte von Peter Schlemihl, 1/. Adapted by R. C. Perry.
Covenon (Miss E. E.), The Teaching of English Composition, 1/6 net. Dent's Modern Language Series.
Hannan (Rev. E. C. W.), The Acts of the Apostles, 1/6 net. With introduction, maps, text and notes, glossaries, examination questions, and index, specially adapted for the Oxford and Cambridge Local Examinations.
Rippmann (W.), A First Book of German Poetry, 1/4. Also in Dent's Modern Language Series.

Science.

Cooper (C. S.) and Westell (W. P.), Trees and Shrubs of the British Isles, Native and Acclimatised, Part II., 1/ net. Contains full-page coloured plates, and full-page black-and-white plates drawn direct from nature by C. F. Newall.
Directory of Shipowners, Shipbuilders, and Marine Engineers, 1909, compiled chiefly from Original Sources, 10/. An edition brought up to date.
Finn (F.), Wild Beasts of the World, Part XII., 1/ net. With illustrations in colour by L. Sargent, C. E. Swan, and W. Austen.
Hands (A.), Lightning and the Churches, 1/ net. An account of churches injured by lightning, with suggestions for guarding against the danger.
Hastie (J. S.), Under the Blue Dome: Open-Air Studies with Young Folk, 3/6
Lodge (Sir O.), Life and Matter, 6d. net. An exposition of part of the philosophy of science, with special references to the influence of Prof. Haeckel. Second Edition, with an appendix of definitions and explanations.
Medical Annual: a Year-Book of Treatment and Practitioner's Index, 1909, 8/6 net.
Parry (L.), Systematic Treatment of Metalliferous Waste, 5/ net.
Potter (W. J.), Concurrent Practical and Theoretical Geometry, 3/ net. Contains the substance of Euclid, Books I.-XI., treated both experimentally and formally.
Saint Bartholomew's Hospital Reports, Vol. XLIV., 8/6 net. Edited by H. M. Fletcher and W. McAdam Eccles. Illustrated.
Sindall (R. W.), The Manufacture of Paper, 6/ net. With illustrations, and a bibliography of works relating to cellulose and paper-making.
Soap-Makers' Directory, 1909, 2/6 net.
Starling (E. H.), Mercers' Company Lectures on the Fluids of the Body, 6/ net.
Stonham (C.), The Birds of the British Islands, Part XIII., 7/6 net. With illustrations by Lilian M. Medland.
Wright (H. J. and W. P.), Beautiful Flowers and How to Grow Them, Part XI., 1/ net. With illustrations in colour.

Juvenile Books.

Buley (E. C.), The Hero of India, 6d. net. The story of Clive, with illustrations in colour by Bertram Gilbert. —Into the Polar Seas, 6d. net. The story of Sir John Franklin, with illustrations in colour by John Campbell.
Mundell (F.), The Man who Freed the Slaves, 6d. net. The Story of Abraham Lincoln, with illustrations by John Campbell.
Williams (Constance), The Adventures of a Lady Traveller, 6d. net. The story of Isabella Bird Bishop, with illustrations in colour by Watson Charlton.

Fiction.

Agnus (Orme), Sarah Tuldon's Lovers, 6/. Further information with regard to Sarah Tuldon, who was the subject of a novel published by the author some years back. Illustrated.
Braddon (M. E.), Our Adversary, 6/. A preacher loses his position because he denies the existence of a personal devil, and is then troubled by an actress whom he has sought to befriend.
Burgin (G. B.), The Trickster, 6/. The matrimonial adventures of Lady Selina Archdayne, who, in a fit of pique, marries the trickster, who has schemed to that end, though she loves another.
Cave (J.), Who shall have Her? 6/. A novel strong in incident.
Cole (S.), Arrows from the Dark, 6/. Tells of the obstacles encountered by true lovers.
Davis (J. A.), A Forsaken Garden, 6/. The story of a girl who, from respect for her father's prejudices, allows her chances of happiness to slip away from her.
Duffy (R.), An Adventure in Exile, 6/. A love adventure which takes the reader into rural France.
Eliot (George), Silas Marner, and Scenes of Clerical Life, 2/6 net. New Edition, with illustrations. In the Crown Classics.
Fitzgerald (C.), Ikona Camp, 3/6. A humorous tale of an up-river boating haunt.
Hamilton (C.), The End and the Beginning, 3/6. A love story.
Hueffer (F. M.), The Half Moon, 6/. A romance of the Old World and the New.
Hutten (Baroness von), Kingsmead, 6/. Tells the story of a young man's first love—Tommy, Earl of Kingsmead, who was the little brother of the heroine of Baroness von Hutten's story 'The Halo.'
Lee (A.), A King's Treachery, 3/6. A romance of the Huguenot persecution, with 6 illustrations by Watson Charlton.

Mathews (F. A.), The Flame Dancer, 6/. A story of mystery and magic and stolen jewels.
Onions (Oliver), Little Devil Doubt, 6/
Orcutt (W. Dana), The Spell, 6/. Has a young Harvard scholar for hero, and is illustrated by G. D. Hammond.
Richardson (F.), More Bunkum, 6/. A series of humorous short stories.
Sidgwick (F.), Love and Battles, 6/. A comedy of youth and love.
Thorne (Guy), The Socialist, 6/. The subject is indicated by the title.
Twenty-Five Tales of the Turf, 1/ net. New Edition.
Watt (L. Maclean), Morna of Kildally, 6/. The story of a drunken horse-doctor and his daughter Elsie. The scene is laid in a Border town.

General Literature.

Caird (E.), Essays on Literature, 5/ net. New Edition. Includes articles on 'Goethe and Philosophy,' 'Rousseau,' 'Wordsworth,' and 'The Genius of Carlyle.'
Crockford's Clerical Directory for 1909, 20/. The forty-first issue.
Emery (H. C.), Company Agreement, 5/ net. A manual for the daily use of directors, secretaries, and others.
Gulick (L. H.), Mind and Work, 3/6 net. Essays on 'The Habit of Success,' 'Resolutions, Good and Bad,' 'Fatigue and Character,' &c.
How to Get Married, by the Author of 'How to be Happy though Married,' 1/ net. A volume of practical hints concerning marriage.
Ker (W. P.), Romance, 6d. A lecture delivered to the members of the English Association in January last.
Official Report of the Seventeenth Universal Congress of Peace, held at Caxton Hall, Westminster, July 27th to August 1st, 1908, 5/ net. Illustrated.
Russell (H.), A.B.C. of the Royal Navy, 1/ net. A little handbook with a foreword by Admiral W. H. Henderson.

Pamphlets.

Buss (Septimus), Sir Christopher Wren's Church of St. Anne and St. Agnes, Gresham Street. A lecture by the Rector of the united parishes.
Plea for Real Representation, 1d. Issued by the Proportional Representation Society.
Recantation, by J. M. A supplement to a book entitled 'Shakespeare Self-Revealed.'
Some Common Objections: II. The Etymological Argument. Issued by the Simplified Spelling Society.

FOREIGN.

Poetry and the Drama.

Sannia (E.), Il Conico, l'Umorismo, e la Satira nella Divina Commedia, 2 vols., 10 lire. Has a preface by Francesco d' Ovidio.

History and Biography.

Daudet (E.), L'Exil et la Mort du Général Moreau, 3fr. 50.
Philology.
Hecht (H.), Thomas Percy and William Shenstone: ein Briefwechsel aus der Entstehungszeit der 'Reliques of Ancient English Poetry,' 5m.

Science.

Bohn (G.), La Naissance de l'Intelligence, 3fr. 50.
Observatoire de Zi-ka Wei: Calendrier-Annuaire pour 1909, 1½ dol. An astronomical volume from Shanghai.

Fiction.

Bazin (R.), Le Mariage de Mademoiselle Gimel, 3fr. 50.

* * All Books received at the Office up to Wednesday Morning will be included in this List unless previously noted. Publishers are requested to state prices when sending Books.

Literary Gossip.

IN a few days Messrs. Longman will issue, under the title 'The Gospel and Human Needs,' the Hulsean Lectures of Dr. J. N. Figgis, which we refer to elsewhere to-day. Dr. Figgis has added to the volume four sermons which develop at length points discussed in the Lectures.

SIR HENRY BRACKENBURY'S 'Reminiscences' in the April Blackwood deal with Paris in the eighties—Prince Napoleon, the Waddington family, Gambetta, De Lesseps, Canrobert—Ireland, and the Gordon Relief Campaign. An article on Indian reforms by Sir Charles Crosthwaite further examines the proposals of Lord Morley. Mr. Arthur E. P. Weigall describes a visit to the Hills of Smoke in the Eastern Egyptian desert and the Imperial porphyry quarries of the Romans. The number includes also a poem 'Actæon,' by Mr. Alfred Noyes; and articles on Lady Louisa Stuart, 'The Seaman,' by Mr. David Hannay, and 'The Literary Side of the Law Reports.'

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & Co.'s April list includes Mr. A. C. Bradley's 'Oxford Lectures on Poetry,' and Mr. Edward Wilberforce's translation into English verse of the 'Inferno,' the 'Purgatorio,' and the 'Paradiso' of Dante, in three volumes.

MR. MARION CRAWFORD'S new novel 'The White Sister,' a story of Rome, and 'Gervase,' the life-history of an idealist, by Mrs. Percy Dearmer, will be published shortly by the same firm.

MR. ARTHUR DILLON is preparing for the press a volume in which he will break new ground. Mr. Elkin Mathews will bring it out in the course of the year.

'PÆSTUM, AND OTHER POEMS,' is the title of a volume which Mr. A. Blair Thaw is about to publish with Messrs. Kegan Paul. One of the longer poems is addressed 'To Keats and Shelley in Rome'—a city in which Mr. Thaw lately occupied the Villa Aurora, made glorious by Guercino. The volume includes also 'The Inauguration Ode,' familiar in the United States at the beginning of the Roosevelt Presidency.

MR. FRANCIS GRIBBLE'S study of Chateaubriand, which has been appearing in The Fortnightly Review, will be published by Messrs. Chapman & Hall in the autumn, under the title 'Chateaubriand and his Court of Women.'

THE CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS will publish towards the end of April the second part of the larger Cambridge edition of the Septuagint, consisting of Exodus and Leviticus. The text of this edition—which is being edited by Mr. A. E. Brooke and Mr. Norman McLean—is that of the Codex Vaticanus, but the variations given, which in Dr. Swete's manual edition were confined to a few of the most important uncial codices, extend to all the uncial MSS., select cursive MSS., and the more important versions, and quotations of the earlier ecclesiastical writers. Vol. I., the Octateuch, will be completed in two further parts—one to contain Numbers and Deuteronomy, and the other Joshua, Judges, and Ruth.

MR. C. H. CHOMLEY AND MR. R. L. OUTHWAITE have collaborated in writing a book on the taxation of land values, to be published early in April by Messrs. Sidgwick & Jackson, under the title of 'The Essential Reform.' The book will be issued at a popular price, and deals also with the allied problems of unemployment and low wages.

THE obituary of the week includes the names of two well-known Biblical scholars—Dr. H. M. Luckock, Dean of Lichfield, and Dr. Charles H. H. Wright. The former, educated at Shrewsbury and Jesus College, Cambridge, was a sound divine and Church historian, and a strong advocate of prayers for the dead, as may be seen from his book 'After Death.' He was the first Principal of Ely Theological College.

DR. WRIGHT had a brilliant career at Trinity College, Dublin, and was an excellent Hebrew scholar. His works on the Old Testament, beginning with an edition of Genesis in Hebrew in 1859, are numerous and valuable. His Bampton Lectures dealt with Zechariah, and in 1906 he published two books on Daniel and one of Isaiah, defending positions now generally abandoned, e.g., the unity of the Isaianic prophecies. His 'Introduction to the Old Testament' reached a fourth edition in 1898. He also wrote two books on St. Patrick. His 'Roman Catholicism in the Light of Scripture' (third edition, 1903) represents his strong views as clerical superintendent of the Protestant Reformation Society, a post in which he proved himself a formidable controversialist.

A BIOGRAPHY of the late Dr. John Kells Ingram, who is perhaps best known to the world by his early poem "Who fears to speak of '98?" is being prepared by Mr. T. W. Lyster, Librarian of the National Library of Ireland.

MR. ELLIOT STOCK'S spring announcements in theology include 'Messages from the Epistle to the Hebrews,' by the Bishop of Durham; 'Light for Lesser Days,' by Canon H. F. Tucker of Melbourne; and 'The Two Resurrections: What They consist of: How They differ in Time, in Place, and in Character,' by the Rev. W. S. Standen.

THE forthcoming double section of 'The Oxford English Dictionary,' which is by Dr. Craigie, contains the words from "ribaldric" to "romanite," 3,161 in number. Of these words, 2,747 are illustrated by quotations, no fewer than 17,677 quotations being included. This instalment will be followed by a portion of S by Dr. Bradley.

WE regret to notice the death on Friday week last, in his eighty-ninth year, of Dr. James Hutchison Stirling. Educated at the University of Glasgow and in France and Germany, he practised as a doctor till his father's death in 1851. He published a number of philosophical works, of which the best known, perhaps, is 'The Secret of Hegel' (1865), which reached a new edition in 1893. His translation of Schwegler's 'History of Philosophy' achieved a twelfth edition in the same year. He delivered the first Gifford Lectures at Edinburgh (1888-90), on 'Philosophy and Theology.'

THE UNIVERSITY OF GLASGOW is to confer the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws upon Mr. James Gairdner, C.B., editor of the 'Calendar of State Papers of Henry VIII.'; Mr. William H. Maw, joint-editor of Engineering; and Mr. C. S. Sherrington, Professor of Physiology in Liverpool University.

SIR ROWLAND BLENNERHASSETT, who died on Monday last, was well known as a writer, especially on foreign politics. An Irish landowner, he was educated at Downside, Stonyhurst, and Christchurch, and also obtained a Doctor's degree at Louvain. He took a great interest in Irish education, being an Inspector of Schools in that country, 1890-97, and President of Queen's College, Cork, 1897-1904.

'STUDIES IN MYSTICAL RELIGION,' by Mr. Rufus M. Jones, deals with the mystics from the days of primitive Christianity to the end of the English Commonwealth. The book is intended to be an introduction to a series of historical volumes, written without sectarian cast or bias. Messrs. Macmillan & Co. are the publishers.

THE same firm have nearly ready 'The Struggle for Imperial Unity,' by Col. G. T. Denison, a well-known Canadian soldier, who recounts his political recollections as distinguished from his military experiences, which have already been published. The book begins with the period before Confederation, and extends to events of recent date.

THE SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING CHRISTIAN KNOWLEDGE has in hand for publication in May 'Ordination Problems,' by the Bishop of Salisbury; 'The Philosophy of the Fourth Gospel: a Study of the Logos Doctrine, its Sources and its Significance,' by the Rev. J. S. Johnson; in "Typical English Churchmen," 'Stephen Gardiner' by Dr. James Gairdner, 'William of Wykeham' by Dr. W. A. Spooner, 'Cardinal Beaufort' by the Rev. L. B. Radford, and 'John Wycliffe' by Dr. J. N. Figgis; and 'Socialism and Christianity,' by Archdeacon Cunningham.

THE READERS' DINNER on Saturday last was a success. The Lord Mayor of London proved an able and sympathetic chairman, and Mr. G. W. Forrest, in replying for "Literature," introduced some excellent reminiscences of great figures of the past. The subscriptions towards the fifth Readers' Pension amounted to 180*l*.

AMONG Messrs. Putnam's spring announcements are 'Beverages Past and Present,' an historical sketch by Mr. E. R. Emerson; 'Characters and Events of Roman History,' American lectures by that brilliant scholar Prof. Ferrero; and 'Shelburne Essays: Sixth Series,' by Mr. Paul Elmer More.

THIS week Messrs. Sands & Co. are moving to larger premises at 15, King Street, Covent Garden.

THE two new French Academicians, in succession to Émile Gebhart and Ludovic Halévy, are M. Raymond Poincaré and M. Eugène Brieux. The former is a distinguished lawyer who has given several proofs of literary ability. M. Brieux is the author of numerous successful dramas. He had two serious rivals, M. Georges de Porto-Riche and M. Alfred Capus, and it was not until the seventh ballot that he won the coveted place.

A NEW novel from the pen of Mr. C. E. Lawrence, entitled 'Much Ado about Something,' will be published by Mr. Murray immediately after Easter. The scene is laid in London, and the treatment is modern; but the story is not built on conventional lines.

THE Revue Germanique for March-April maintains its reputation for research in many quarters. The leading article deals with an unprinted correspondence of the Hellenist Villoison with a Dowager Duchess of Saxe-Weimar. The third of the Latin lines given on p. 140 does not scan; possibly a "si" has dropped out after "Felix." Some more Latin (p. 157) is spoilt by dislocation of words, though it is founded on a familiar classical line. The other chief article is concerned with political allusions in Tieck. There are, as usual, some competent reviews of books, and an interesting 'Revue Annuelle' of contemporary English fiction.

THE author and critic Dr. Rudolf von Gottschall, whose death is announced from Leipsic, was born at Breslau in 1823. The lively interest he took as a student in the liberal movements of the time led to his publishing two volumes of verse before he was twenty, and the warmth of his sympathies resulted in his expulsion from the University of Breslau, where he was studying law. He was, however, allowed to complete his studies at Berlin and Königsberg, and he then devoted himself to literature.

DR. RICHARD MAHRENHOLTZ, whose death in his sixtieth year took place recently at Dresden, was the author of several works, dealing chiefly with French literature and history. Among them are 'Molière's Leben und Werke,' 'Voltaire,' 'Rousseau,' 'Geschichte der französischen Revolution,' and 'Jeanne d'Arc.'

THE death at the age of fifty-one is announced from Jena of Frieda, Baroness von Bülow. She was educated in Germany and England, and spent many years in German East Africa, where she helped to arrange the first hospitals. On her return to Germany she devoted herself to literature, and was the first writer to introduce descriptions of colonial life into the German novel. Her tales 'Tropenkoller' and 'Im Lande der Verheissung' attracted much attention at the time of their appearance. Her later works dealt mainly with the problems of women's life. Among these were 'Allein ich will,' 'Hüter der Schwelle,' 'Wir von heute,' and 'Einsame Frauen.'

MESSRS. MUDIE are now holding their annual sale of books, which will continue till April 3rd. No fewer than 100,000—new, second-hand, and rebound—are being offered.

At the monthly meeting of the Board of Directors of the Booksellers' Provident Institution held on Thursday, the 18th inst., 120*l*. was granted towards the relief of members.

AMONG recent Parliamentary Papers we note an interesting Report by Mr. R. H. Rew on Agricultural Statistics, Part I., Acreage and Live Stock Returns of Great Britain (6*d*.); Ecclesiastical Commissioners' Report for 1908 (6*d*.); Tables of Expenditure for Agricultural Education (2*d*.); Statutes made by Trinity College, Cambridge (1*d*.); Report of the Board of Education for 1907-8 (7*d*.); and Minute continuing the Operation of the Scotch Education Code, 1908 (½*d*.).

NEXT week we shall pay special attention to books of travel.

SCIENCE

RESEARCH NOTES.

LORD RAYLEIGH'S anniversary address to the Royal Society, published in full in the February number of the Proceedings, is more interesting than usual, if only from its allusion to what he called "unnecessary changes in mathematical nomenclature." There is, indeed, in some scientific circles a tendency to make certain mathematical phrases and turns of expressions a kind of shibboleth which everybody must pronounce on pain of being considered an ignoramus or a fossil, and Lord Rayleigh's protest included an expression of his "misgivings" as to the suitability of the highly specialized mathematics of the present day for a general intellectual training. An appendix to his address contains a body of suggestions as to the use of symbols in printed papers which have been drawn up by a British Association Committee, and require careful consideration. The proposal that centimetres, kilogrammes, and the like should in future be referred to as "cm.," "kgm.," &c., instead of "cms." and "kgms.," is sound, but may be awkward for foreigners. The last—particularly the French—have been quick to adopt the use of the solidus or slanting line instead of the horizontal bar in writing fractions, which is here recommended as obviating the necessity of what printers call "justification." As Lord Rayleigh says, the summoning of an international conference on the subject would have doubtful results; but in the mean time every one can do something towards uniformity by being more careful in the preparation of his own papers.

Among the other subjects touched upon in the same address was the observation by Prof. G. E. Hale of the Zeeman effect in sunspots, which, according to the speaker, tends to show that the spots are fields of intense magnetic force. As is explained in the communications made by the observer to The Astrophysical Journal, it was by spectroheliograms taken in hydrogen that he first became aware of the fact that there are vortices surrounding sunspots, which he believes to be whirls of electrically charged particles. A useful summary of Prof. Hale's papers will be found in Science Abstracts for January. Lord Rayleigh also touched upon the question of human flight, especially in connexion with the work of the brothers Wright. He says that since he became acquainted with the work of Penaud and Wenham on the subject he has thought that human flight was possible as a tour de force, but quotes with approval Prof. Simon Newcomb's dictum that, on the principle of dynamic similarity, the difficulties must increase with the size of the machines, and that the extensive use of them is therefore improbable. Against this comes the news that Count Zeppelin has succeeded in demonstrating experimentally that an airship carrying twenty-six passengers is practicable.

Prof. Silvanus Thompson has lately called attention in a contemporary to experiments showing that the possession of momentum by electricity, or, perhaps one should say, by electrically charged particles possessing no appreciable mass, is now no longer a theory, but a demonstrable fact. Prof. Nipher of St. Louis and Dr. Mathias Cantor of Wurzburg, working apparently in ignorance of each other's researches, have shown that if an electric charge, pursuing its way along a conductor, is suddenly diverted by the bending at a sharp angle of the conductor, some of the electrons will project themselves into the air rather than pursue the new course thus given to them. Such electrons, according to Prof. Nipher, produce a radiation akin to the X rays, and capable of penetrating a plate of ebonite three-tenths of an inch thick. Prof. Nipher's experiments were made with conducting substances in rod or wire form, while Dr. Cantor used thin gold or platinum films deposited on glass, the detection of the radiation being in both cases accomplished by photography. The German scholar also used a battery, while the American employed a Wimshurst machine as his source of electricity. It is proposed to repeat the experiments—which seem to be a development of the action of points in electricity—in a vacuum, in the hope that the effect may then be visible to the eye. Prof. Nipher's experiments were described before the American Philosophical Society at Philadelphia, and published later in Science; while Dr. Cantor's were communicated to the Naturforscherversammlung at Cologne, and reported in the Physikalische Zeitschrift for December last.

An explanation of phosphorescence has been given by MM. L. and E. Bloch in communications recently made to the Académie des Sciences, and well summarized in the Revue Scientifique for the 13th inst. It has long been known that phosphorus will not become luminescent in pure oxygen, hydrogen, or nitrogen; while since the discovery of the X rays it has been shown by Dr. Le Bon and others that the vapour of phosphorus produces ionization of the surrounding air with the formation of ozone. The experiments of MM. Bloch go to show that the phosphorescence, the ionization, and the formation of ozone are all due not to the oxidation of the phosphorus, as was originally thought, but to an emanation produced by it. This they think to be phosphorous anhydride (P_2O_3 ?), the oxidation of which is, according to them, a rapid combustion, which gives them the opportunity of comparing the ions thus produced with those occurring in flames. M. Jungfleisch seems to have come to this conclusion, so far as the oxidation of phosphorous anhydride is concerned, some three years ago; and if MM. Bloch's other deductions bear further investigation, the problem of phosphorescence would seem to be solved. Their application to other questions, such as that of the production of light by glowworms, deep-sea fishes, and other animals, will be awaited with interest.

Mr. A. E. Garrett repeated to the Physical Society at their last meeting some experiments that he has lately made as to the nature of the brush discharge from the positive terminal of a Wimshurst machine or an induction coil. Following up the experiments of Prof. Willows and Mr. Peck on the effect of the neighbourhood of radium upon such a discharge, he showed that the brush could be stopped by the Beta rays of radium. A microscopic examination of the brush showed that this was composed of many small stems like tree-trunks, which under the mutual repulsions set up by the current terminate in separate ramifications, and the discharge was intermittent, or, as he says, oscillating. A magnetic field, when applied without the radium, had no effect on the brush; but the sensitiveness varied with the substance used for the anode, copper, zinc, iron, and carbon giving the best results in about the order named. The period of the discharge required to produce a sensitive brush must, according to him, be very long, or, more specifically, double that of a vacuum tube containing hydrogen and excited by an induction coil, the interrupter of which is a tuning-fork making eighty-six vibrations per second. From these experiments Mr. Garrett concludes that the brush owes its sensitiveness to the oscillatory nature of the discharge, and that the action of the Beta rays is possibly due to the silent side discharges which they set up. The paper will probably be published in The Philosophical Magazine.

The March number of the Proceedings of the Royal Society contains the result of an inquiry by Mr. J. A. Crowther into the phenomena attending the passage of the X rays through gases like ethyl bromide, which were found by a previous inquiry of his to emit in these circumstances a quantity of secondary radiations "greater out of all proportion than what would be expected from their density." As it was found at the same time that the secondary rays from gases of high atomic weight were less penetrating than those from lighter ones, and that a third class of gases, typified by stannic chloride and methyl iodide, gave off secondary rays as hard as the primary, an attempt was made to measure these secondary radiations, together with the absorption of the primary rays by the gas, and the ionization produced in it by the X rays. The result showed that while the absorption varied with the pressure according to an exponential law, the total ionization varied with the hardness of the rays, while the amount of secondary radiation emitted is largely independent of it. The author considers, therefore, that ionization and the secondary radiation "are properties of the atoms themselves, and that an explanation must be sought in their atomic structure."

In the same number Mr. Kleeman studies the velocities of the cathode rays produced by substances exposed to the Gamma rays of radium, and finds that they can be divided into very soft rays capable of absorption in one or two cm. of air, and harder ones which nevertheless possess different velocities, their penetrating power decreasing in inverse ratio to the absorbability of the Gamma radiation producing them. The velocity of the secondary rays taken as a whole is, he thinks, about equal to that of the Beta rays from radium; and the soft radiation from the Beta and Gamma rays mixed is more penetrating than that produced by the Gamma rays alone. He notes that the secondary radiation is softer on the side where the Gamma rays emerge than on that where they enter, and that it is virtually independent of the nature of the radiator. The experiments seem to have been conducted at the Cavendish Laboratory at Cambridge, and some of the questions arising from the suppositions lately advanced as to the nature and charges of the Gamma rays were raised, but not solved, in the course of them. In an attempt to calculate the thickness of a Gamma-ray pulse on Sir Joseph Thomson's theory, the author came to the conclusion that it was about the thousandth part of the wavelength of ultra-violet light, or, in other words, equal to the diameter of a molecule.

A careful and very clear article on 'The Transport of Ions' appears in this month's Journal of the Röntgen Society, and turns out to be an account of the system of treatment by "cataphoresis"—the administration of drugs through the unbroken skin—often alluded to in these Notes. According to the author, all or nearly all the chemical, toxic, antiseptic, and medicinal actions of substances acting as electrolytes depend on the process here involved, and he gives some curious instances, of which there can only be mentioned the fact that while all the phosphides are poisonous, the phosphates are not. As a proof of the penetration of drugs into the deep tissues of the body when thus administered, he quotes an experiment in which a pad of cotton wool is soaked in sulphate of strychnine and applied to the skin of a live rabbit without ill effect. The same result follows if the pad is made the cathode of a battery and a current passed through the animal. When, however, the pad is connected with the anode, the animal is seized with convulsions directly the current ceases, and finally dies. When, as a control, potassium cyanide is substituted for the strychnine, and the pad is made the cathode instead of the anode, death from tonic convulsions also results.

Dr. Joseph Rieder of Berlin appears to have invented an apparatus which, unlike the ordinary telephone, causes an alternating current to act directly on the human ear without being first converted into mechanical movements. It seems in effect to be a tiny Leyden jar without external coating, which is connected with one terminal of an equally small induction coil. If the jar is held in the hand, and the charging rod pressed against the ear, nothing is heard; but when the other terminal of the coil is touched with the other hand, a sensation like a loud noise is felt, and a similar sensation of less intensity when the same terminal is connected with the earth. If Dr. Rieder is right in the theory which he gives of the working of his apparatus, it can be adapted to telephonic purposes. It seems, too, as if it could be used by deaf persons with advantage, and would be free from the buzzing sounds constantly heard in existing telephones. The apparatus is described in the number of the Revue Scientifique quoted above.

An application of the X rays as a means of obtaining evidence of "viability" in cases of infanticide is described in the current number of the Archives of the Röntgen Ray. It depends on the fact (first, apparently, observed by Bordas) that the X rays pass through a lung which has once breathed, while one that has never breathed is opaque to them.

F. L.

SOCIETIES.

BRITISH ACADEMY.—March 17.—Lord Reay in the chair.—The Dean of Westminster, Fellow of the Academy, communicated a paper, written by the Rev. R. B. Rackham, on 'The Building of the Nave of Westminster.' The paper was based upon a study of the fabric rolls of the building of the nave from 1387 to 1534. The history is fairly well known up to the time of Henry V. The new gain is more particular information as to the course of events after his reign, and the fixing of dates, e.g., of the roofing, vaulting, flying buttresses, west window, the glazing of the windows, and the paving. The rolls give a picture of the working of the "office" of the Novum opus. The convent assigned certain properties or revenues to the work of building, called the Novum opus. Thus was formed a special office, under the control of a warden, who administered the funds, and was responsible for the building. These properties were the rectory of Longdon in Worcestershire; houses in King Street and Tothill Street, Westminster; the manors of Hyde and Knightsbridge and of Paddington; and, later, lands, &c., in Westbourne and Kensington. By 1460 the income of the Novum opus was about 100*l.* a year. The rolls also make clear the finances of the work, and indicate the respective shares of convent and kings. Three kings helped: Richard II. gave about 1,450*l.*, Henry V. 4,300*l.*, and Edward IV. and his family 580*l.* This help was considerable; but it was the last great abbots—Millyng, Esteney, and Islip—who carried the work to its conclusion.

The inception of the work was due to Cardinal Simon Langham; at his instigation and with his help Abbot Nicholas Litlington laid the foundation stone on March 3rd, 1376. The old Norman nave was pulled down, and Peter Combe (warden 1387-99) with Richard II.'s help set up the marble pillars. Under Henry IV. the work ceased altogether. Henry V. made up for this by undertaking it himself. He gave 1,000 marks a year, and appointed as his commissioners the famous Londoner Richard Whittington, and Richard Harweden, who became abbot in 1420. Unfortunately, Henry V. died in 1422; but the triforium was then completed, the aisles roofed, and the clerestory well advanced. Henry VI. did nothing for the Abbey, and the work languished. It was much hindered by such circumstances as the burning of the dormitory in 1447, and the restoration of the rose window in the south transept in 1460-62. A revolution in the convent brought about the deposition of Abbot George Norwych in 1467; and Millyng, who came into power, resumed the building of the nave with vigour. His work was maintained and carried to its completion by his successors, who were both abbots and wardens at the same time. Millyng himself roofed one bay in 1468-70. Then occurred the flight of Edward IV., and Millyng, now Abbot, received Queen Elizabeth Woodville into sanctuary, and stood godfather to Edward V., who was born in his house. After Edward IV.'s return the royal family showed their gratitude in contributions to the work. A little later Millyng was made Bishop of Hereford, and Esteney, who had been warden since 1471, succeeded him.

John Esteney deserves most credit of all the builders of the nave—except perhaps Henry V.: he virtually completed the fabric. In his long wardenship (1471-98) he roofed the nave (1472-8); built the flying buttresses (1480-82) and battlements (1491-2); vaulted five bays of the nave (1482-90) and the side aisle (from 1490 onwards); and finished the great west window (1491-3) with the gable end (1494-6). George Fasset, his successor (1498-1500), made a present to the work of 600*l.* John Islip, the last great abbot, finished it. He completed what Esteney had left incomplete, i.e., two bays of the vaulting and the joining of the roof and the west end (1500-6). Then he glazed the windows (1507-10), paved the floor (1510-17), and erected some stone screens at the west end (1524-8), so that we may date the completion of the nave in 1528. Besides this Islip built part of the present Deanery, and the Jesus Chapel; he also rebuilt the chancel of St. Margaret's. This abbot shared the confidence of Henry VII., who had done nothing for the Abbey in Esteney's time, but in 1503 began the great Lady Chapel which bears his name; and Islip put Henry's badges on his new vaulting. The abbot was at work for the western towers when he died in 1532, and his death was virtually the end of the Novum opus as of the monastery itself. The latest roll is for 1533-4; and almost the last item of work was the preparation of the church and sanctuary for the coronation of Queen Anne Boleyn on Whitsunday, 1533.

A discussion followed, in which Mr. St. John Hope, the Rev. Dr. W. Cunningham, Mr. Francis Bond, and Mr. Comper took part.

GEOLOGICAL.—March 10.—Prof. W. J. Sollas, President, in the chair.—The Rev. R. S. Edwards and Messrs. H. Fidler, C. H. Roberts, and Stanley Smith were elected Fellows.—The following communications were read: 'Some Notes on the Neighbourhood of the Victoria Falls, Rhodesia,' by Mr. T. Codrington, and 'A Contribution to the Petrography of the New Red Sandstone in the West of England,' by Mr. H. H. Thomas.

SOCIETY OF ANTIQUARIES.—March 4.—Sir Edward Brabrook, V.P., in the chair.—The death was announced of Mr. E. C. Ireland, who from 1853 to 1895 had faithfully and efficiently filled the post of clerk to the Society, and a resolution of regret, and of condolence with his relatives, was passed.—This being an evening appointed for the election of Fellows, no papers were read. Mr. C. E. Keyser exhibited a fine series of some 160 large photographs of Norman doorways in Gloucestershire, which had recently been taken under his direction.—After the ballot, the following were declared duly elected Fellows: Messrs. E. Seymour Forster, G. Augustus Auden, M.D., W. Thorpe Jones, A. W. Oke, and H. Avray Tipping.

March 11.—Sir Edward Brabrook, V.P., in the chair.—Mr. Carlyon-Britton, Director of the British Numismatic Society, read a paper on a penny of St. Æthelberht, King of East Anglia, which was found by a peasant in the summer of 1908 near the foundations of the Villa d'Este at Tivoli, the Tibur of the ancients. This interesting and extremely rare coin is in excellent preservation, and bears on the obverse the draped and diademed bust of the King to right, with his name EDILBERHT, followed by the name of the moneyer (representing Lul) in Runic characters. On the reverse is the title REX, and the well-known Roman type of the wolf, standing to left, suckling the twins Romulus and Remus, within a quadrilateral compartment. The weight of the coin is 18.8 grains. Mr. Carlyon-Britton gave the history of the only other known specimen, acquired by the British Museum in 1803, and illustrated in the 'Catalogue of English Coins,' vol. i. pl. xiv. 2. This specimen had been considered by Hawkins and some other Early Victorian numismatists, chiefly on account of its unusual type, to be a forgery; but doubts as to its authenticity no longer exist. The obverse of Mr. Carlyon-Britton's specimen is from the same die as that in the national collection, but the reverse is from a different, though nearly similar die. The workmanship is manifestly the same, but some apparent differences are due to the circumstance of the reverse of the Museum specimen being double-struck, thereby causing a blurred and confused representation of some details of the design. The lecturer traced the types of both obverse and reverse, and compared them with those appearing on coins of Offa, King of Mercia, of Cynethryth, his queen, and of Coenwulf, his successor. He also cited instances of earlier and later adaptations of Anglo-Saxon coin-types from Roman prototypes, and amply illustrated his remarks and arguments by means of lantern-slides.

In conclusion he gave his reasons for assigning the coins in question to Æthelberht of East Anglia, rather than to the nearly contemporary kings of the same name of Sussex and Kent respectively, and cited extracts from the 'Anglo-Saxon Chronicle,' Florence of Worcester, and Matthew of Westminster in regard to the parentage, reign, and ultimate murder of St. Æthelberht by Offa, King of Mercia, at the instigation of Queen Cynethryth, on the occasion of his visit to them in 794 to arrange for his marriage to their daughter Ælfthryth.

Mr. R. G. Rice exhibited portions of two small monumental brasses: one from Buxted, Sussex.—Mr. C. R. Peers exhibited a brick with the numerals 1393 from a demolished cottage at Ditchingham, Norfolk, but of too modern a character to be of the fourteenth century.

ROYAL NUMISMATIC.—March 18.—Sir Henry H. Howorth, President, in the chair.—H.S.H. Prince Louis of Battenberg and Mr. Wayte Raymond were elected Fellows.—The President moved a vote of condolence with the widow and family of Mr. F. G. Hilton Price, a lately deceased Fellow, who was also President of the Egypt Exploration Fund and Director of the Society of Antiquaries.—The following coins were exhibited: Mr. Bernard Roth, two ancient British staters of Addedomaros and a forgery of the same series with the legend CVNO for "Cunobelinus"; Mr. H. W. Monckton, a small silver coin of Louis XV. of France, dated 1716, overstruck on a similar coin of Louis XIV., but of 1715, both dates being clear on the coin; Mr. L. A. Lawrence, a noble of the fourth issue (1351-1360) of Edward III. with Roman M's and open c's and e's, and with the legend on the reverse beginning IHE for IHES.—Mr. F. A. Walters read the first portion of a paper on the coinage of Edward IV. After a short sketch of the history of the king's reign so far as it is reflected on the coinage, a description was supplied of the heavy pieces, which must be placed first in the series. These consisted of the noble in gold and of the groat to the farthing in silver. In many respects these coins resembled in their types and special marks those of the last issue of the previous reign. Of the gold only two examples are known, these being in the collection of the late Sir John Evans. This coinage was followed by an issue which bore for mint-mark a rose, and which extended down to 1465, when radical changes were made, not only in some of the types, but also in the weights of the individual denominations. Some of the early coins bear special privy marks, such as the annulet and the crescent, both of which appear to have some historical significance. In connexion with the paper Mr. Bernard Roth exhibited a heavy half-groat and penny of London, and Mr. Walters a series of similar coins of York as well as of London. The remaining portion of the paper, which will deal with the light coinage of Edward IV. down to 1470, will be read at the next meeting of the Society on April 15th.

LINNEAN.—March 18.—Dr. D. H. Scott, President, in the chair.—Mr. W. H. Mullens and Mr. Gurney Wilson were admitted Fellows.—Mr. A. Kames Gibson, Mr. E. J. Salisbury, and Miss M. C. Carmichael Stopes, D.Sc., were elected Fellows.—Mr. C. E. Salmon exhibited specimens of Euphrasia minima from Somerset, and remarked upon the geographical range of the species. Mr. F. N. Williams contributed further remarks, and pointed out the strong probability that E. minima was the type of E. officinalis, Linn.

Miss Sibyl Longman then gave the substance of her paper, communicated by Prof. F. Keeble, entitled 'The "Dry-Rot" of Potatoes,' illustrating her account by diagrams. She pointed out, as the result of her researches, that the disease of the potato tuber known as "dry-rot"—due to the fungus Fusarium solani—is not necessarily preceded by "wet-rot," but may be set up in sound tubers by inoculation with spores or mycelium of Fusarium solani, a species which is not a parasite of the resting tuber only: it may also attack and kill the shoots of potato plants. The fungus, which probably exists as a widely distributed saprophyte in the soil, infects the growing potato plant via the root; it also spreads from tuber to tuber during storage, and diseased tubers may produce diseased plants. Heat sterilization of the resting potato tuber, with respect to Fusarium solani, is impracticable, for the death-temperature of the fungus is higher than that of the potato. An animated discussion followed, in which Mr. G. Massee stated that various forms were usually found in conjunction with the fungus described, and alluded to Bernard's theory of tuberculation being always dependent upon some species of Fusarium. The debate was continued by Mr. A. D. Cotton; by Prof. Keeble, who mentioned that Miss Longman's cultures had been derived from a single spore, from a hanging drop, and upon material sterilized according to modern bacteriological methods; and by Mr. A. W. Sutton, who invited Prof. Keeble and the author of the paper to determine specially healthy potato plants in the Reading trial grounds, so that their tubers might give rise to an immune race.

The second paper, by Mr. A. S. Horne, 'On the Structure and Affinities of Davidia involucreata, Baill.,' was, in the absence of the author, explained by Dr. Otto Stapf. The discussion which followed was engaged in by Prof. F. W. Oliver, the General Secretary, Mr. R. Morton Middleton, and the President.

ZOOLOGICAL.—March 16.—Mr. F. Gillett, V.P., in the chair.—The Secretary read a report on the additions to the menagerie during February.—The Secretary exhibited, on behalf of Mr. E. C. Chubb, the skins and skulls of two foetal lions which had been presented to the Rhodesia Museum, Bulawayo, by Mr. A. Giese. They had been taken from a lioness which Mr. Giese shot last November at Deka, about 50 miles south of the Victoria Falls.—The Secretary exhibited a photograph of a young American tapir, and called attention to the remarkable resemblance between that and the young Malayan tapir, a photograph of which was reproduced in the Society's Proceedings, 1908, p. 786. The longitudinal light stripes on the flanks of the body, the spots on the legs, and the white tips to the ears were present in both. He also called attention to an interesting paper by C. Onelli in the Revista del Jardín Zoológico de Buenos Aires, 1908, p. 207, in which the author described a general correspondence between the number of vertebrae and the number of stripes or rows of spots in many mammals.—The Secretary exhibited a photograph of a small herd of mountain zebras (Equus zebra) in the possession of a dealer at Port Elizabeth, South Africa; and a photograph of a female giraffe captured in the West Soudan, east of Timbuctoo, and showing a general resemblance with Giraffa camelopardalis typica.—Dr. F. A. Bather exhibited a fossil echinoid, Scutellina patella, from the Eocene? (Barwonian) of Nelson, Glenelg River, Victoria, showing a marsupium for the young, as described by T. S. Hall (Proc. Roy. Soc. Victoria, n.s. xx. 140, 1908).—Dr. A. E. Shipley communicated the following Reports of the Grouse Disease Committee: (a) The Ecto-parasites of the Grouse; (b) The Thread-Worms (Nematoda) of the Red Grouse (Tetrao scoticus); (c) The Tape-Worms (Cestoda) of the Grouse.—Appendix: Parasites of Birds allied to the Grouse. He gave a general description of the work of the Committee, and explained the results of the examination of the parasites of the grouse, exhibiting drawings and specimens to illustrate his remarks.—Mr. W. P. Pyecraft presented an account of the fossilized remains of a small Passerine bird, from the Lower Pliocene of Gabbro, near Leghorn, which most nearly resembled those of the living species known as Berthelot's pipit (Anthus bertheloti).—A paper was read by Messrs. Oldfield Thomas and R. C. Wroughton, 'On a Collection of Mammals from Western Java, presented to the National Museum by Mr. W. E. Balston.' Thanks to the generosity of Mr. Balston, a very fine collection had been made in the island by Mr. G. C. Shortridge, and presented to the National Museum. It consisted in all of over 1,500 specimens, belonging to 74 species, of which 6 were new.

METEOROLOGICAL.—March 17.—Mr. H. Mellish, President, in the chair.—A lecture was given by Dr. Vaughan Cornish on 'Wind-Waves in Water, Sand, and Snow.' Dealing first with waves of the sea, Dr. Cornish described the gradual evolution of large sea waves during the passage of a cyclone or other depression across the Atlantic. The action of the wind to drift dry sand in a procession of regular waves was studied in the Egyptian deserts. As the sand-waves are unable to travel by gravitation, as do the waves of the sea, their movements are entirely controlled by the wind, and are therefore much simpler and more regular in form and movement than ocean waves. When they grow to great size, as in the desert sand-dunes, which attain a height of several hundred feet, the forms become more complicated owing to the partial consolidation of the lower layers of sand by pressure. Nevertheless the characteristic wave-form can still be distinguished. Mackerel-sky (a rippled form of cloud) is produced by the formation of an undulating surface where a lighter layer of air flows over a heavier one. For the purpose of studying snow-waves Dr. Cornish traversed Canada twice during winter, and found the phenomenon best developed on the prairies near Winnipeg, when the temperature was below zero, and the snow had lost the adhesive character which it retains in warmer weather. The lecture was illustrated by numerous photographs taken by Dr. Cornish.

ROYAL HISTORICAL.—March 18.—Archdeacon Cunningham in the chair.—A paper was read by Mr. H. W. V. Temperley on 'The War of Jenkins's Ear.' It was pointed out that the diplomatic correspondence tended to show that the war would have been avoided if the Opposition in Parliament had not intervened to encourage the popular clamour, so that Newcastle was alarmed, and gave orders to the fleet which almost forced the wavering Spanish Court to hold by the earliest of the Pactes de Famille, and break off negotiations with England.

FOLK-LORE.—March 17.—Miss C. S. Burne, President, in the chair.—Mr. A. R. Brown read a paper entitled 'Myth, Magic, and Ceremonial of the Andaman Islanders.' Mr. Brown, who is the first holder of the Anthony Wilkin Studentship, and was sent out to the Andaman Islands in August, 1906, by the Board of Anthropological Studies in Cambridge, has made a thorough investigation into the sociology and religion of the Great Andamans, and is able to confirm Mr. E. H. Man on many points, though differing from him in some of his conclusions. Mr. Brown has proved the Andamanese to be a most homogeneous race, showing less variation than any other group of people; and he regards them, with the possible exception of the Bushmen and the Semangs, as being the most primitive race of mankind with respect both to their sociology and their religion. His paper dealt chiefly with their religious beliefs. He rejects Mr. Man's theory of an All-Father, and identifies Biliku, who is held responsible for most of the misfortunes which happen on the islands, with the north-western monsoon. He also referred to tabus which are in vogue at various times of the year, the breaking of which was thought to bring stormy weather, and explained these to have their origin in natural causes. Many of Mr. Brown's points were illustrated by folk-tales.

In the discussion which followed, Mr. W. W. Skeat drew attention to similar myths and customs in Japan and the Malay regions. Dr. Seligmann questioned the primitive nature of the religion, and gave some custom parallels from New Guinea. Mr. Nutt suggested that foreign elements might be present in the religion, especially with reference to the myth on the origin of fire. Dr. Haddon spoke at length of the valuable and thorough work done by Mr. Brown. He supported him in his conclusions, and considered the primitive nature of the Andamans proved.—Before the paper was read Dr. Haddon exhibited two "St. Bridgit" crosses from Ireland, and gave an interesting account of their meaning and origin.

PHYSICAL.—March 12.—Dr. C. Chree, President, in the chair.—The following were elected Fellows: Prof. P. V. Bevan, J. W. Bispham, L. Blaikie, Prof. E. G. Coker, A. Eagle, Sir R. A. Hadfield, F. J. Harlow, C. F. Hogley, B. M. Narbeth, T. Smith, and Prof. the Hon. R. J. Strutt.—Mr. A. E. Garrett read a paper on 'The Effect of Radiations on the Brush Discharge.'—Mr. A. E. Snow read a paper on 'Pirani's Method of Measuring the Self-Inductance of a Coil.'—Mr. W. S. Tucker read a paper entitled 'Exhibition of a High-Potential Primary Battery.'—A paper 'On the Least Moment of Inertia of an Angle-Bar Section' was read by Mr. H. S. Rowell.

MEETINGS NEXT WEEK.

- Mon. Institute of Actuaries, 5.—'On the Annuity Business of British Offices and the Valuation Thereof,' Mr. H. J. P. Oakley.
— Surveyors' Institution, 7.—Junior Meeting.
— Institute of British Architects, 8.—'Buildings for Higher Technical Education,' Sir Aston Webb.
— Society of Arts, 8.—'Steam Turbines,' Lecture II., Mr. G. G. Stoney. (Cantor Lecture.)
- Tues. Royal Institution, 3.—'The Evolution of the Brain as an Organ of Mind,' Lecture VI., Prof. F. W. Mott.
— Asiatic, 4.—'Explorations, Archaeological and Geographical, in Eastern Turkistan and Western China,' Dr. M. A. Stein.
— Faraday, 8.—'The Electro-Analysis of Mercury Compounds with a Gold Cathode,' Dr. F. Mollwo Perkin; 'The Relation between Composition and Conductivity in Solutions of Meta- and Ortho-Phosphoric Acids,' Dr. E. B. R. Prideaux; 'A New Electrical Hardening Furnace,' Messrs. E. Sabersky and E. Adler; 'Experiments on the Current- and Energy-Efficiencies of the Finlay Alkali Chlorine Cell,' Dr. F. G. Donnan.
— Institution of Civil Engineers, 8.—Discussion on 'Construction and Wear of Roads.'
- Wed. Society of Arts, 8.—'The Island of St. Helena,' Mr. J. C. Melliss.
- Thurs. Royal Institution, 3.—'Aerial Flight in Theory and Practice,' Lecture II., Prof. G. H. Bryan.
— Institution of Electrical Engineers, 8.—Adjourned Discussion on 'The Electrical System of the L.C.C. Tramways,' or a Paper by Mr. H. S. Hall on 'The Theory and Application of Motor Converters.'
— Linnean, 8.—'The Amphipoda Hyperidæ of the Sealark Expedition to the Indian Ocean,' Mr. A. O. Walker; 'The Marine Mollusca from the same Expedition,' Mr. J. Cosmo Melville; 'The Land and Freshwater Mollusca of the Seychelles Archipelago,' Mr. E. R. Sykes; 'On a Blind Prawn from the Sea of Galilee, Typhlocaris galilea, g. et sp. n.,' Dr. W. T. Calman.
— Chemical, 8.30.—'The Affinity Values of Certain Alkaloids,' Mr. V. H. Veley; 'The Preparation and Properties of the n-Tribromo Substituted Hydrazines usually styled the Diazobromides,' Mr. F. D. Chattaway; and other Papers.
— Society of Antiquaries, 8.30.
— Institution of Civil Engineers, 8.—'Reinforced Concrete on Railways,' Mr. W. E. R. Gurney. (Students' Meeting.)
— Philological, 8.—'On the S Words Iam Editing for the Society's Oxford Dictionary,' Dr. H. Bradley.
— Royal Institution, 9.—'Electrical Striations,' Prof. Sir J. J. Thomson.
- Sat. Royal Institution, 3.—'Properties of Matter,' Lecture VI., Prof. Sir J. J. Thomson.

Science Gossip.

IN the April number of Science Progress Prof. W. J. Sollas concludes his series of articles on Palæolithic man. A short paper by Mr. Murray gives a pleasant account of the relations of Charles Darwin with his publisher; while the progress of modern medicine in the vaccine treatment of disease, the investigation of Sleeping Sickness, and the administration of chloroform are also considered.

THE S.P.C.K. is publishing in May a book by Prof. H. F. Newall on 'The Spectroscope and its Work.'

THE ELEVENTH INTERNATIONAL OPHTHALMIC CONGRESS will be held in April at Naples in the buildings of the University, and expeditions to Capri and Pompeii have been arranged for the visitors.

MR. HEINEMANN will publish in the autumn Lieut. Shackleton's book on the Nimrod Antarctic Expedition.

MR. JAMES BAKER writes concerning Stokeleigh Camp:—

"As my name is mentioned in the note last week upon the above matter, I may state that it was in the Council of the Bristol and Gloucestershire Archaeological Society that the year's arduous work was done of bringing societies together and arousing an interest in the Camp and its surroundings, and making clear its approaching destruction. The Bristol Kyrle Society were certainly the announcers of the fact that Mr. Wills would give the capital sum for the purchase, Miss Wills being the Hon. Secretary of that Society. The Kyrle Society has, however, not raised the fund for sustentation, as Mr. Wills is giving the whole of it, except the value of certain shares left to the Merchant Venturers of Bristol, which that society relinquishes for the upkeep of the Camp and woods. Mr. Wills hopes that these will be taken over by the National Trust, the income from the upkeep fund being administered by a local trust of members of the Archaeological Societies of Gloucestershire and Somerset, the Merchant Venturers, a member of the Kyrle Society, and others. It is only just to Mr. Wills the generous donor, and others who have worked to this end, that these facts should be accurately stated."

ANOTHER small planet was photographically discovered by Prof. Max Wolf at the Astrophysical Institute, Königstuhl, Heidelberg, on the 9th inst.

PROF. E. BECKER, Director during the last twenty-two years of the Royal University Observatory at Strassburg, has retired; his successor will be Prof. Bauschinger of the Royal Recheninstitut at Berlin, of which he has been Director during the last twelve years. Prof. Becker, who is now in the sixty-sixth year of his age, was Director of the Observatory at Gotha from 1883 until he was appointed to that at Strassburg in 1887.

THE Astronomische Rundschau was started by Herr Leo Brenner in 1899 to assist the funds for keeping up the Manora Observatory at Lussinpiccolo (on the Austrian island Lussini, near the coast of Istria), where, after superintending with great labour its erection and equipment, he devoted himself especially to the study and delineation of the physical features of the planets. The institution was the property of the Imperial Observatory at Vienna, and has now been sold, in consequence of which Herr Brenner closes his career as an astronomer, and the publication of the Rundschau will cease, the 103rd number issued for the present month, being the last.

FINE ARTS

OUR LIBRARY TABLE.

Stories of the English Artists from Vandyck to Turner. Selected and arranged by Randall Davies and Cecil Hunt. (Chatto & Windus.)—Allan Cunningham's 'Lives of the Most Eminent British Painters' for about three-quarters of a century held its own as a book of reference. Some thirty years ago Mrs. Heaton annotated the oldest biographies, and continued the work to 1879. This edition is still in print in "Bohn's Library," in three volumes, and is to be found in every library where there is a demand for books on art. Messrs. Randall Davies and Cecil Hunt now print twenty-four 'Lives' "from Cunningham and other sources." They explain that they have "adopted without scruple the actual language of Cunningham and several of the other writers to whom we are indebted," and that they "have done so without distracting the reader by an over-abundance of quotation marks." A book made up in this way can never rank as an authority. A good deal of important information, which never came under the notice of Cunningham, is scattered in various places concerning every one of the twenty-four artists dealt with in this volume, and it would have been possible to compile a very useful book out of these dissecta membra; but it would have required time to collect and skill to set out in an acceptable form.

Here nothing is said under Kneller of the historical series of Kit Cat portraits painted for Jacob Tonson, and still in the possession of a collateral descendant. Gainsborough's carrier-friend (p. 77) was not "Wiltshire," but Wiltshire; and his Gainsboroughs were sold at Messrs. Christie's in 1867, when the portrait of Orpin, the parish clerk, was secured for the National Gallery. Romney's birth (p. 87) is given as 1834! After leaving Dove Court, Romney had two other addresses before he settled in Great Newport Street. The family group (pp. 91-2) which provoked the sarcasm of Garrick was that of Mr. Leigh, his wife, and their six children; it was exhibited at the Free Society of Artists in 1768. Romney's own diaries, which have been printed in extenso, disprove Cunningham's statement that "much of the prime" of his life was squandered in designing and sketching historical works: these were in the main the recreations of his very early and very late career. The death of Reynolds in 1792 did not "quicken" the ambition of Romney, for he had long ceased to desire Academic honours.

We are told on p. 105 that Copley's fame reached England as early as 1760, when a painting of a 'Boy and a Tame Squirrel' was "sent from Boston... to one of the exhibitions of the Royal Academy." The first exhibition of the Royal Academy was opened in 1769: as a matter of fact, Copley's picture was exhibited at the Society of Artists in 1766; and so far from its being "sent from Boston without any letter or artist's name," both his name ("William" in error for "John") and his address are given in the catalogue. The statements that Miss Cottin, afterwards Lady De Tabley, posed for Hoppner's 'Sleeping Nymph,' and that the picture was sold on the death of Lord De Tabley, because that lady "disliked the idea of going down to posterity in such a very négligé attire," are inaccurate. The name of the model who posed for the picture was well known at the time, and the story was categorically contradicted in The Athenæum of November 17th, 1906; the model was Miss St. Clare.

Many more corrigenda might be added. Cunningham worked up his 'Lives' under great disadvantages, and was not particular about his statements. But that is no excuse for ignoring the mass of biographical literature concerning artists published during the last quarter of a century.

MR. VICTOR REYNOLDS'S Stories of the Flemish and Dutch Artists will have at least one advantage over Messrs. Davies and Hunt's book (both volumes appear in the new "Art and Letters Library"). The biographies will be fresh to the majority of English readers. Mr. Reynolds's compilation is chiefly based on M. Hymans's translation into French of Van Mander's great work on Dutch and Flemish artists (1856-63) and Michiels's 'Histoire de la Peinture flamande' (1865-78). Mr. Reynolds frankly declines, at the outset, to guarantee "the truth of many of the anecdotes," so that the book is one to be used with caution by English readers. With this reservation, the twenty odd lives make pleasant reading, if unsatisfying to the seeker after definite facts.

The earlier biographies—those of the Van Eycks, Hugo van der Goes, Vander Weyden, Hans Memline, and others—read like transcripts from Vasari, so largely blended are stories of fact and the marvellous. With the lives of Rubens and Van Dyck we pass out of the realms of fancy into regions where facts are found. Mr. Cust in his great book on Van Dyck tells us only part of the story about the portrait of Nicolas Lanier: not only did Lanier (or Lanier) sit for seven whole days to Van Dyck, but "tho' Mr. Lanier satt so often and so long for this picture... he was not permitted so much as once to see it, till he had perfectly finished the face to his own satisfaction." The two chapters on Rubens and Van Dyck, with those which follow on Jordaens, Rembrandt, Teniers and Brouwer, Franz Hals, and Steen, although written in harmony with the earlier portion of the book, are obviously compiled with care. Some of the Franz Hals stories will be new to English readers: we should like to believe most of them, particularly the one on p. 258.

It will be noticed that, both in the list of illustrations and on the plate itself, Mr. Reynolds calls the famous Rubens portrait in the National Gallery 'The Chapeau de Poil,' and not 'The Chapeau de Paille.' The title excited a good deal of controversy when the picture was brought to England in 1822. Chapeau de paille is doubtless a corruption of chapeau de poil (nap or beaver), for the hat is certainly not made of straw. We are glad to see that Mr. Reynolds states, at the foot of each illustration, the name of the gallery in which the original is to be found.

Some Sculptural Works of Nicholas Stone, Statuary, 1586-1647. By Albert Edward Bullock. (Batsford.)—It was well worth while to reprint from the pages of The Architectural Review this painstaking attempt to trace and describe the various works of Nicholas Stone. Owing to the preservation of the sculptor's diary in the Soane Museum, the task was rendered the easier; but the author has evidently visited the larger number of the works, and gives interesting descriptions of the monuments and particulars of the families commemorated. As it is known that Stone was frequently associated with Inigo Jones, acting as master mason or clerk of the works at the Banqueting House, Whitehall, and for the repairs to St. Paul's, we doubt if the author is justified in attributing to Stone's design such works as the Water Gate at York House, the gatepiers at Lindsey House, Lincoln's Inn Fields, and St. Mary's Porch at Oxford, though the last may have been his, as he designed the gateways of the Botanical Gardens there. The volume is freely illustrated with photographs and scale drawings, the latter of great service, though the powers of draughtsmanship displayed are hardly equal to portraying the figures.

There is a good Index, and we wish that the author had attempted a chronological list of Stone's work.

EARLY BRITISH MASTERS.

THE SPRING EXHIBITION at the gallery of Messrs. Shepherd Brothers is principally strong in portraits. The great names are absent, but there are a number of admirable examples by painters who, if less known, were evidently capable on occasion of very fine work. Their gathering in one room is an occasion for interesting comparisons. None of them offers the rather confusing spectacle of a genius of the first order putting forth his full strength, and thus proving an exception to every rule. Here are simply some half-dozen exceedingly good things representing as high a level of excellence as portrait painting can be expected to maintain, and affording by their variety of aim and evenness of quality a suitable opportunity for revising our opinion of what are intrinsically the most important qualities of the portrait painter's art.

The fact that this issue has been obscured, for most of the present generation of critics, by the accidental preponderance of brilliance of a special sort, becomes important when (in judging modern painters) such brilliant, but possibly mistaken work is set up as an arbitrary model, and those living artists are praised who most resemble that model—others derided because they frankly discard it. Nor is the error the less serious for being supported by human vanity and momentary fashion.

The Spanish Statesman (34), by an unknown Flemish artist, shows portraiture not quite emerged from the primitive state when the very limitations of the art imposed upon it a certain monumental quality. The draughtsmanship here is realistic enough; it is impossible to doubt its truth even down to the lack of symmetry which allows one eye to be much higher than the other. The realism of appearance, however, is not attempted in this picture. Its cogency depends on the logical, simple structure of its paint, not on any super-subtle representation of the logic of lighted planes. When later developments of painting permitted this realism of appearance to be attempted, we submit that it was allowed an importance unsuited to portraiture of serious historic purpose, so that few eighteenth-century portraits are as convincing as, or have that look suggesting a right to permanence which we see in the earlier work of which this is a fine example. A sympathetic Speaker Lenthall (A. Hanne-man, 51) has something of this quality, but has it already in decreasing measure; and when English portraiture flowered in the eighteenth century, it was for the most part in the hands of men who preferred evanescent charm to sobriety, and who used the magic of lighting not to emphasize character, but to evade the responsibilities of portraiture. Given equal endowment in the painters, the historian will suspect the records of eighteenth-century artists when compared with those of an earlier date.

In the present show the duel is carried on by seconds, but even here the balance of ability is rather on the side on which Gainsborough and (as a rule) Sir Joshua throw the crushing weight of their prestige. The pleasing mystery in which they wrapped their sitters—mystery which, yet, after all, is of a rather material nature, and prevents us, as it were, from quite seeing them—is finely exemplified in a portrait of Lady Neville (55) of about the period of Raeburn, to which, however, it is difficult confidently to attribute an author. Whistlerian in superficial subtlety, this is a very interesting canvas from a purely pictorial point of view. Nevertheless, if we compare it with the plain, unadorned statement of Peg Woffington (4) by a follower of Hogarth, Arthur Pond, it is difficult not to feel that this glamour is for the purpose of portraiture largely irrelevant—that it is but a favourite sauce with which the painter serves up his dish, and by so doing slightly blunts its native flavour. The Stothard (5), by John Jackson, hung just below the ‘Peg Woffington,’ was evidently begun as a portrait conceived in terms of conventional paint rather than of natural effect. In the coat and background, and the crisper forms of the actual features, we see this conception surviving, not in very distinguished fashion. In the flatter planes of a face verging towards profile, however, and in the extraordinarily subtle rendering of the hair, we see the painter feeling his way to some such filmy, mysterious technique as is found in the head of Philip IV. by Velasquez in the National Gallery. Even in that extraordinary piece of virtuosity we feel that this mystery of atmosphere is purchased at a price. Compared with the head of the ‘St. Margaret’ by Zurbaran near by, it definitely demands to be seen from the “picture distance,” because it depends so largely on illusion and resemblance, while the other has the concrete validity that comes of using paint in the strongest and simplest manner possible. Velasquez, painting his sitter less forcibly, paints also the intervening air; hence he achieves completer illusion if you look at his picture from the right point of view, but the Zurbaran remains magnificently legible at a distance at which the head of Philip becomes a vague smudge.

Portraits of public interest and destined for public buildings might reasonably be endowed with the more massive presence.

Portraits intended to outlast the centuries, moreover, should surely set down the essentials of character with a monumental simplicity which disengages fundamental facts from the accident of appearances. There is even something in a complex technique which seems unsuited to a high degree of permanence. For all the shallowness of his character, Lely (represented here by an obviously handsome portrait of Sir Edward Benson, 23) usefully carried on the tradition of such an art. Constitutionally he was perhaps ready enough to flatter; but his painting was not such as enabled him to flatter by evasion, by the judicious suppression of injudicious truth. When he flattered, he did so with a square lie that deceived no one, and he has thus the technical respectability which belongs to the lady who uses her powder and paints to produce a frank and defiant work of fiction: it is less insidiously corrupting than the more cautious forms of maquillage. If we were to continue establishing similar distinctions in dealing with the remaining portraits here, we might see in Pieter Nason's Portrait of a Nobleman (38) an artist accepting the elaborate rendering of the play of light on surfaces which is characteristic of the later school of portraiture, but trying still to build his design in the most forcible paint at his command. With a Dutchman's craftsmanship, he paints the curls of his sitter's hair in marvellous fashion, stirring his half-dry paint with a subtle imitation which is illusive, but he fails in sympathy with his sitter, and the incisive darks of the face are overemphasized. The Charles I. (45) (catalogued as by Henry Stone) has a head painted with more sympathy, but less dexterity. The ruff and other accessories (painted on to it smartly, but stupidly) are probably by a different hand.

Among the other pictures are a coldly brilliant still-life, In Memoriam: Van Tromp (35) of great technical merit, and an early Flemish ‘Adoration of the Magi,’ attributed to Hieronymus van Bosch, and alternatively to several other people. It is pleasantly balanced in colour, and decorative in aspect, but has not sufficient invention or personal character to make the question of its authorship important. Among the landscapes are an early Turner, Kilgarran Castle (66), which is not of specially fine quality; a Michel (46) with an inky sky, but a fine rendering of the trailing lines of distance; and a Conway Castle (17) by Barker of Bath, which suffers in composition by the awkward placing of a formless mass of round tower, which cuts harshly against the sky with no support of darker clouds to mitigate the contrast. Apart from this defect, however, it is a singularly beautiful piece of colour, the vista of sky and distance showing beneath the bridge being a gemlike passage worthy of Corot at his best.

OTHER EXHIBITIONS.

THE drawings of Mr. George Belcher at the Leicester Galleries show the power of seizing vividly the characteristics of a sitter. All the figures seem to have been drawn from life, and for the most part one at a time. Indeed, the scarcely visible perpendicular line which reveals some of the drawings as consisting of two sheets of paper carefully joined is but the occasional confession of a very general practice. Were they judged as so many single figures, we should admire the clever seizure of attitude, the sympathy with certain kinds of character (there is no example of humanity in its more graceful phases), and the occasionally remarkable intensity of realization (as in

No. 72). For journalistic purposes, however, as illustrations to jokes, these figures have to be arranged in groups of two or more; and while this grouping is in a sense very cleverly managed, so that at first sight we hardly suspect that we are witnessing a compilation of separate studies from life, yet the procedure does not lead to designs of the highest class. Figures rightly individualized as separate entities are over-developed for their place in the picture. The artist has, as it were, a standard way of doing a head, and does it so no matter what part it has to play in the general scheme of the drawing. Hence these drawings, so varied from the human point of view, are artistically monotonous. They are virtually a continuation of the later work of Phil May—Mr. Belcher has perhaps not the sense of style the latter occasionally displayed, but on the whole has the merits and defects of his master.

The Fourth Annual Exhibition of Flower Paintings at the Baillie Gallery shows how widely the subject divides the ranks of its practitioners. It is not merely that such subjects call for the most subtle execution: they call also for taste, tact, and audacity. If artists were content to paint flowers in the proportion of nature, as the relatively few bright passages which complete the design of the plant, we should perhaps have fewer failures. Flower painting, as it is usually understood, calls for decorative invention, and is generally pursued by artists with no pretension to any such quality. It is this, more than any imitative cleverness, which separates the better work here from the worse. Mr. Fred Mayor in Roses and Phlox (4) treats a grey but brilliant colour-scheme just pointed with vivid colour. Mr. C. W. Bunny in Marigolds and Geraniums (3) grapples with the full difficulties of the artificial flower-piece, and almost overcomes them. If he were to cut away all but the merest sliver of red tablecloth, the balance of colour would be better. Mr. Westley Manning, on the other hand, with a tendency to over-analyze colour till he sees intermediate greys everywhere, has swamped his picture Spring Flowers (8) with too much dull background, and would probably have gained by concentrating his attention on the more vivid passages. There is good work also here by Mr. Mann Livens (67), Miss K. Cameron (48), Miss Katherine Turner (white roses, uncatalogued), and Mrs. Mayor (78).

At the Fine-Art Society's Mr. Hodgson Liddell's pictures of China show a determination to make use of the brighter colours of the palette with too great exclusiveness for his pretensions to realism. He is thus most successful in subjects made up of water and sky, which give warrant for such treatment. One drawing (24) which is of this character, and in which he has consented to tinge with grey the colour of the boat, is brilliant and pleasing, as is also No. 74, in which for once the blues are mellowed to accord somewhat with the golden mass of shipping. The polychrome temples might seem at first sight to offer him a like opportunity; but there are always parts which should be relatively in monochrome, or there is foliage near by, and Mr. Liddell in neither case can resist “piling on” the colour.

THE BRITISH SCHOOL AT ROME.

At the second open meeting of the above-mentioned School, held in Rome on Friday, the 12th inst., a paper by Dr. Duncan Mackenzie, Hon. Student of the School, was read by the Director (Dr. Thomas Ashby) on ‘Nuraghi, Dolmens, and Tombs of the Giants in Sardinia,' in which the results of the School's campaign of exploration last autumn were described. Dr. Mackenzie reached the island at the end of September, and remained until the middle of November, being joined for the latter part of this visit by Mr. F. G. Newton, Student of the School, who was responsible for the plans and drawings necessary for the illustration of the monuments studied, and, for a shorter period, by the Director. The nature and object of the nuraghi of Sardinia were fully discussed in Dr. Mackenzie's previous paper on the results of his journey in the autumn of 1907 (see Athenæum, March 7, 1908, p. 297); but some interesting specimens of this class of monuments were examined, among them the nuraghe of Voes, in the midst of the Bitti uplands in the north central portion of the island. It is a massive triangular building, of a strongly fortified character, with the entrance on the south side. On the ground floor are four circular chambers with beehive roofs: that in the centre of the triangle is the usual central chamber of the nuraghe, while the other three are within the angles of the triangle, which have rounded external contours. On entering the portal one reaches first a small open court, with a doorway at each side leading to the chambers at the base of the triangle, and another doorway straight in front, by which the central chamber is entered; on the left of the entrance is the usual stairway to the (destroyed) upper story, and on the right the guardians' niche. But the most remarkable feature in this nuraghe is the existence of two long curving corridors in the thickness of the wall of the two sides of the triangle, which must have served as places of refuge in time of war: above these corridors are others of similar plan, and even less easily accessible; but both are sufficiently low for the roof of the upper one to be level with that of the beehive chambers on the ground floor. It is obvious that this complicated structure was built all at one time on a definite plan: other large nuraghe, such as that of S'Aspru further to the west, on the western side of the hills of Benetutti, are in origin simpler buildings, successively enlarged and strengthened by the addition of bastions and towers.

A hitherto unknown type of monument is supplied by the singular nuraghe fortress of Nossia, near the modern village of Paulilato, in the centre of the island. It lies in the midst of level country, and was the centre of a village of round huts, contemporary with the nuraghi. The building itself, however, is a strongly fortified quadrangular citadel of irregular rhomboidal shape, with a round tower at each corner; and the centre is not the main ground-floor beehive chamber which forms the true heart of every nuraghe, but an open quadrangle with stout walls. The strong towers of the corners are rather reminiscent of the nuraghe huts of a village than of the bastions of a nuraghe: they are entered from the interior of the courtyard, in each of the walls of which is a narrow doorway. The central space was partly filled with circular huts, of which some traces still exist. It would seem possible that this building was the citadel of an independent village or township, in contradistinction to the great nuraghi, which were probably the residences of chiefs dominating their neighbourhood, and which often shelter groups of nuraghe huts.

The regions explored were also found to contain some remarkable monuments of the dolmen class. The people of the nuraghi made use of a type of family sepulchre now known as the "tombs of the giants" (cf. Athenæum cited supra). Montelius and others attempted to prove that this type was derived from the more primitive dolmen; but up till now the evidence for this from Sardinia itself has been almost entirely lacking, the only dolmen known to exist in the island in a good state of preservation being one near the station of Birori, in the centre of the island, called Sa Perda e S'Altare. Dr. Mackenzie's explorations have added ten important series of others, illustrating successive phases in the transformation.

The first of these to be studied was the rock-cut tomb of Maone, near Benetutti, which, while it has the characteristic large cover-slab of the dolmen, consists of a rectangular chamber cut in the rock, the upper part only of the sides being constructed of rough-coursed masonry; whereas the sides of the normal dolmen are constructed of orthostatic slabs.

Some way further west, beyond Bultei, is the dolmen tomb of Su Coveccu, which is of a very advanced type, being, in fact, a dolmen on the point of becoming elongated into a "tomb of the giant." The large cover-slab is still present, though broken longitudinally; but a second one was probably present to cover the front of the cella. The slab was supported by orthostatic slabs at the sides and the back; and behind there are traces of an apselike wall of enclosure, which, carried along towards the front on either side of the walls of the cella, is a characteristic feature of the "tombs of the giants," but is also an intrinsic element in dolmens in localities where "tombs of the giants," do not exist, e.g., in Northern Corsica and in Ireland (Borlase, 'Dolmens of Ireland,' i. figs. 74, 75).

Within a minute of Su Coveccu are the two "giants' tombs" of Sas Prigionas, lying very close to one another. The larger and better preserved has several features of interest. The frontal semicircle was constructed of orthostatic slabs, with rough-coursed masonry above, and this was the case with the whole of the exterior, the sides and back of the mound being similarly faced. The internal walls of the cella, too, were constructed in the same manner, the courses of masonry gradually converging, so that the space to be roofed by the cover-slabs was less wide than it otherwise would have been. Another feature, hitherto unique, was the existence of a hidden entrance into the cella at one side, in addition to the usual small hole in the centre of the façade, the latter being probably used for libations and offerings.

A similar example on a smaller scale, but with a much better-preserved frontal semicircle, was found close to the east edge of the main line of railway through the centre of the island, between the stations of Bauladu and Paulilato. It bears the name of Muraguada. On the west side of the line is a small nuraghe, placed in a position of strategic importance, from which a commanding view can be obtained (whereas the tomb, though quite close by, has a comparatively limited outlook); and there are traces of the stone huts of a village.

These monuments much resemble an inverted boat, and suggest a comparison with the tombs of the Balearic Islands which bear the name Naveta or Nau. Even more like these last, though its sepulchral character cannot yet be regarded as certain, is a building near the pilgrimage church of S. Cristina, not very far from Muraguada, in the locality called Bilozzo, and close to the nuraghe of that name. It is an elliptical structure some fourteen yards long, with a door at one end; the roof is formed by the gradual inclination of the sides, which are of rough-coursed stonework.

Another noteworthy structure was the tomb at Mulafa, near Sassari (already visited by M. Préchac), in which all the characteristic features of the "tombs of the giants"—the frontal semicircles and the large roundheaded portal slab—are faithfully reproduced by cutting in a vertical face of limestone rock.

To the east of the Paulilato district, in the central mountain group of the island, is the village of Austis, and the tomb of Perdalunga near it furnished an interesting example of a dolmen, which, by the removal of its end slab on the east and the elongation of the cella, was actually enlarged into what looked like a rudimentary "giant's tomb," but without any traces of the frontal semicircle.

Some way further north, near the village of Olzai, are the ruined nuraghe of S'Enna sa Vacca and a dolmen tomb which bears the same name. The latter has a huge cover-slab, over four yards by three; the cella is elongated, and already like that of an ordinary "giant's tomb," its sides being constructed of orthostatic slabs below, and converging courses of masonry above. This is the only instance yet known in Sardinia of the close juxtaposition of a dolmen tomb and a nuraghe.

Finally, Dr. Mackenzie was successful in finding, not far from the dolmen of Sa Perda e S'Altare, near the railway station of Birori, in the centre of the island, another almost exactly similar to it.

The results of Dr. Mackenzie's researches will shortly be published in full, with plans and photographs, in the Papers of the British School at Rome; and it is to be hoped that funds will be forthcoming to permit the school to continue its work of exploration in Sardinia, which has already been so fruitful of important results.

SALE.

MESSRS. CHRISTIE sold on the 22nd inst. the following engraved portraits: Miss Powell, after C. Read, by R. Houston, 44/. Lady Kennaird, after Northcote, by H. Meyer, 27/. Hon. Miss O'Neill, after Peters, by J. R. Smith, 81/. Mrs. Payne Gallwey and Child, after Reynolds, by J. R. Smith, 315/. Almeida, by W. Ward, 59/. Cries of London: Old Chairs to Mend, after F. Wheatley, by Vendramini, 40/.; Turnips and Carrots, after Wheatley, by T. Gauguin, 141/. The Squire's Door, after Morland, by B. Duterrau, 43/. The Woodland Maid, after Lawrence, by W. Bond, 47/.

Fine-Art Gossip.

THREE painters were elected Associates of the Royal Scottish Academy last week: Mr. William M. Frazer and Mr. W. Marshall Brown of Edinburgh, and Mr. George Houston of Glasgow.

IN the current number of L'Arte Dr. Lionello Venturi, one of the most prominent among the younger generation of Italian art-critics, makes some interesting remarks about Dosso's so-called 'St. William' at Hampton Court, the original, as is well known, of some seven or eight copies. The 'St. William,' or more probably—as pointed out some years ago by Dr. Weizsäcker—'St. George,' is undoubtedly a portrait, and figures in four or five of the copies as Charles the Bold, but Dr. Venturi recognizes in the type the features of a prince of the House of Este. The same personage he believes to be represented in the portrait of a warrior by Savoldo in the Louvre, there erroneously designated a portrait of Gaston de Foix, and he further suggests that the Astolfo of the Borghese Gallery may have been inspired by the same type.

DR. GIULIO ZAPPA, also writing in L'Arte, reconstructs an altarpiece by Bergognone hitherto regarded as lost, i.e., 'The Blessed Virgin with the four Evangelists and four Doctors' mentioned in the MS. notes of Padre Matteo Valerio, the chronicler of the Certosa, and proves conclusively that all the portions composing this ancona are in existence. The four Evangelists and four Fathers of the Church are still in the Certosa, set in the upper tiers of two different altarpieces with which they had originally no connexion. The panel of the Madonna is in the Borromeo Collection at Milan, while a Christ in Benediction, also in that collection, seems to have belonged to the same polyptych.

THE connexion between some of these panels was suggested years ago by Senatore Beltrami, but to Dr. Zappa belongs the credit of having recognized in the Borromeo Madonna and Child the central panel of the missing altarpiece, and of having indicated the positions of the other component parts of the ancona.

THE Cicerone (Heft 5) mentions the discovery, by the Keeper of the Antwerp Museum, of a portrait by Abraham de Vries dated 1635, which had till then been regarded as a portrait of Simon de Vos by himself. The monogram of De Vries, which came to light after the picture was cleaned, has settled the question.

MADAME SIENTJE MESDAG (née Van Houten), whose death is announced, was the wife of H. W. Mesdag, one of the foremost sea painters of the day. Madame Mesdag, a native of Groningen, where she was born on December 23rd, 1834, was also a talented painter of still life, and a frequent exhibitor. She obtained a bronze medal at the Paris Exhibition of 1889. A representative selection of her work is to be seen at the Mesdag Museum at the Hague; and one of her pictures—gourds and melons—was purchased for the Rijks Museum at Amsterdam in 1900.

IN a monograph on Chardin published recently in Paris by M. Edmond Pilon the place of honour among the many plates of pictures is rightly assigned to the admirable pastel portrait of Chardin as he worked. The Groult Collection does not appear to be named, but we understand from the references to 'L'Homme aux Besicles,' or 'Portrait de Chardin à l'Abat-jour,' that the pastel, which Groult kept for years on a priceless chair at the entrance to his French Eighteenth-Century Room, because he "loved it too much to hang it on a wall," was presented by Madame Groult to the French nation.

THE publication of the will of Coquelin cadet reveals numerous bequests to various public institutions in France. His own portrait in oils by Friant and five pictures by Cazin go to the Louvre; his bust in cire perdue by Bourdelle is bequeathed to the Luxembourg. To the Library at Boulogne, his birthplace, he wills his bust by Falguière, a portrait, and a statuette in bronze. The remainder of his art collections are to be sold at auction, and the proceeds given to the poor of Boulogne.

THE death at the early age of forty-three is announced from Berlin of the sculptor Prof. Ferdinand Lepeke. Among his best-known creations are 'The Deluge Well' at Bromberg, and 'The Sculptor' and 'The Meeting,' which are in the National Gallery of Berlin.

MR. LIONEL B. MOZLEY writes:—

"Referring to your interesting article on Smith's 'Catalogue Raisonné' in your issue of March 6th, in which mention is made of George Stanley, I think it may not be out of place for me to mention that I have a sketch which belonged to that gentleman, and which I obtained from his son Mr. S. H. Stanley, also referred to in your article. It is a portrait of David Garrick in pen and ink, taken from life by Sir Joshua Reynolds, and has at the back the following inscription written by Mr. S. H. Stanley: 'This pen-and-ink sketch of Garrick was given by Sir Joshua Reynolds to Mr. Beauclerc, from whom it passed into the possession of St John the Author, and thence to the Father of the present owner, Mr. George Stanley, Editor of Bryan's "Dictionary."'

MR. MURRAY will publish next week Col. Conder's book on 'The City of Jerusalem,' which should be of interest to the archaeologist and historian.

MR. ST. CLAIR BADDELEY writes from Hotel Laurati, Rome:—

"I have read in your issue of March 13th, with some interest, the account of the Temple of the Syrian Gods by Prof. Lanciani, and found by M. Paul Gauckler, whom I had the good fortune to introduce to the locality—i.e., the Grove of Furrina, on account of his knowledge of Semitic Archaeology.

"There is one statement of a most positive nature to which exception must at once be taken—namely, to the effect that the bronze figure of a Divinity found here is a figure of Mithras Leonto-Kephalos, or a Mithras at all—which would lead readers to suppose the place to have been a Mithræum. Prof. Lanciani has overlooked the main fact that the group of gods worshipped here, whom in part he mentions, are Semitic, not Arian. The bronze figure is more probably the Dea Syra, or Atargatis, child of the Dragon, that coils around her in six folds, and whose crested head rests upon her forehead."

THE CLARENDON PRESS will shortly issue the first volume of 'Scripta Minoa: the Written Documents of Minoan Crete,' by Dr. Arthur J. Evans. It deals specially with the earlier pictographic and hieroglyphic script. The first part is of an introductory character, giving a general view of the progress of the discoveries, the successive types of script, and their relation to one another. The chronological limits of each class, and its respective place in the history of Minoan civilization, are indicated, and by means of numerous tables comparisons are instituted with the early scripts of Cyprus, Anatolia, and Phœnicia.

IN the second part the evolution of the hieroglyphic system of Crete is traced from the more primitive pictographs. Pictographic plates and copies are given of all the documents of this class, and a catalogue raisonné of all the characters yet discovered; and the various formulæ are critically examined.

EXHIBITIONS.

SAT. (March 27).—Mr. Herbert George's Paintings, 'Sussex and Picardy,' New Dudley Gallery.
—Ridley Art Club, Twenty-Third Exhibition, Grafton Galleries.
—Royal Society of British Artists, Private View, Suffolk Street.
—Mr. Arthur Streton's Pictures, principally of Venice, Alpine Club Gallery.

MUSIC

THE WEEK.

QUEEN'S HALL.—London Symphony Concert. New Symphony Orchestra. London Choral Society.

THE programme of the seventh London Symphony Concert on Monday evening included Sir Hubert Parry's ably written 'Variations on an Original Theme.' They were first produced at a Philharmonic Concert in 1897, and repeated at the first concert of the Bach Choir in the following year. It must be disheartening to composers to find, as so often happens, their works praised, and as regards these Variations, deservedly so, yet speedily laid aside. For their revival we are indebted to Dr. Hans Richter. Mr. Leonard Borwick played Mozart's G major Piano-forte Concerto, which was written in 1784. In a book in which Mozart noted down what he spent is an entry, not only of 34 kreutzers which he paid for a starling, but also in music notes of the theme of the sprightly Rondo of this Concerto as the bird had transcribed it into a mode of its own making, after listening to Mozart, in the act of composing. Mr. Borwick's rendering of this, and of the pianoforte part of Schumann's seldom-heard Introduction and Allegro (Op. 92), was neat and artistic. Brahms's C minor Symphony came at the end of the programme.

The second concert of the New Symphony Orchestra on Wednesday afternoon was of special interest. A Violin Concerto in D (Op. 17) by Mr. Hamilton Harty was performed for the first time in London, under his direction. It is an effectively scored work. The opening Allegro is based on good themes, but, though they are cleverly developed, one seemed to feel the want of some strong contrast. In the second section, a Molto Lento, the composer shows both emotion and spontaneity; while the Celtic-like Finale is bright and spirited. The solo part, well rendered by Mr. Szigeti, is showy without being in the least commonplace.

Sir Edward Elgar's Symphony in A flat again created a deep impression. It was really a vivid interpretation. The orchestra was in fine form, and Mr. Landon Ronald revealed to the full the beauty and emotional power of the music. Beethoven's 'Leonora' Overture No. 3 stood at the head of the programme.

A triple bill was presented at the fourth concert of the London Choral Society on the evening of the same day. First came a setting of Macaulay's 'The Battle of Lake Regillus,' by Mr. Charlton Speer, for chorus and orchestra. There is nothing novel or striking in the work; at the same time it is gratefully written for the voices. The mood of the poem is reflected, but there is a want of character and colour in the music; it has Mendelssohnian smoothness, and here and there a Hiawathian touch. A good rendering was given by the chorus, supported by the London Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Arthur Fagge had already performed the first part of Mr. Granville Bantock's 'Omar Khayyam.' At this concert he produced the second and far finer part, for the first time in London, and with well-deserved success. All three soloists—Miss Phyllis Lett and Messrs. John Coates and Thorpe Bates—deserve praise, and the choral singing was firm and impressive. 'Cleopatra,' the prize cantata, libretto by Mr. Gerald Cumberland, music by Mr. Julius Harrison, produced at the last Norwich Festival, was also included in the programme; but we see no reason to modify the opinion of the work we have already expressed.

OUR LIBRARY TABLE.

August Manns and the Saturday Concerts: a Memoir and a Retrospect. By H. Saxe Wyndham. (Walter Scott Publishing Co.)—The author in his Preface states that the story of Manns's life is neither romantic nor exciting, yet it is one which young musicians may read with profit. By patient study, hard work, and proper ambition, Manns rose from a humble sphere of life to the position of conductor of the Crystal Palace Concerts, which under his direction won worldwide renown. The early part of the memoir is taken from a document in Manns's own handwriting. The retrospect of the Palace Concerts is interesting. The Symphony, London Symphony, to say nothing of other numerous and important orchestral concerts taking place every season, are apt to deaden the memories of even those who can remember the Palace Concerts in their prime, while to the present generation they are little more than names. Mr. Saxe Wyndham notes some of the most interesting facts, laying special stress on the encouragement given by Manns to native art. Beethoven, as a writer of symphonies, was, by the way, first represented by No. 7, but only the second and third movements were given. Such a proceeding would now arouse a storm of indignation. Later, however, Wagner was offered to the public by Dr. Richter in a similarly cautious manner. The book affords pleasant reading, while as a work of reference it will be found useful. It contains portraits of Manns at various stages of his life.

Musical Gossip.

THREE performances of Strauss's 'Elektra' are to be given in London in the autumn, under the direction of the composer, with the Queen's Hall Symphony Orchestra. Strauss's Symphonic Poems have often been performed here, and the high merits of 'Tod und Verklärung' and 'Don Juan' have been duly appreciated; but his later works of the kind have not won equal favour. Many poetical songs of his, too, are heard at recitals. As a writer of operas, however, he has not hitherto been represented in London. The two early ones, 'Guntram' and 'Feuersnot,' seem to have attracted little attention even in Germany; and 'Salome' is not likely to be given here. It will therefore be interesting to hear his latest, and, in the opinion of some, ripest work for the stage.

DR. W. H. CUMMINGS read an interesting paper on Dr. John Blow at the meeting of the Musical Association at Messrs. Broadwood's last week. Dr. Cummings has discovered that Dr. Blow was born, not as stated in the dictionaries, in 1648, but in 1649.

LADY HALLÉ celebrates on Monday the seventieth anniversary of her birthday. Her first appearance in London was in 1849 at a Philharmonic Concert. The Athenæum of April 21st of that year mentions "two small Nerudas—prodigy players," probably Miss Neruda and her brother Franz.

THE HEREFORD MUSICAL FESTIVAL will be held on September 5th, 7th, 8th, 9th, and 10th, under the direction of Dr. G. Robertson Sinclair. Dr. Walford Davis and Mr. Granville Bantock are writing new works for the occasion; the former will contribute a work, 'Noble Numbers,' some sections of which are choral, some instrumental, the latter a new Orchestral Suite. Among other works included in the programme are Sir Hubert Parry's 'Job,' and Sir Edward Elgar's 'The Kingdom' and a flat Symphony. There are to be selections from Haydn's 'Creation,' Wagner's 'Parsifal,' and Schubert's 'Lazarus.' The last-named is of special interest. It is a great pity that the whole of what remains of Schubert's work is not to be performed. The sub-title is "Sacred Drama in three Acts," but only the first part and nearly the whole of the second have been preserved.

WE referred a fortnight ago to the vexed question of the date of Chopin's birth. Le Ménestrel of the 13th inst., quoting from the La Vie musicale of Lausanne, gives the two extracts from the church records of the birth (February 22nd, 1810) and baptism of Chopin, which to all appearance are genuine. The baptism (April 23rd), according to Catholic custom, was rather late, but the expression of the curé, "Ego qui supra supplevi ceremonias super infantem baptizatum ex aqua," is said to infer that there had been a previous baptism which was an empty ceremony.

PERFORMANCES NEXT WEEK.

SUN.	Concert, 3.30, Royal Albert Hall.
—	Sunday Society Concert, 3.30, Queen's Hall.
—	Sunday League Concert, 7, Queen's Hall.
MON.	Madame Kirkby Lunn's Vocal Recital, 8.30, Bechstein Hall.
TUES.	Miss Anita Rio's Song Recital, 3, Bechstein Hall.
—	Madame Marie Brema's Song Recital, 3, Æolian Hall.
—	Chamber Concert, 4.30, Leighton House.
—	Queen's Hall Choral Society, 8, Queen's Hall.
—	Miss Marie Motto's Concert, 8.30, Leighton House.
WED.	Madame Alice Esty's Song Recital, 8.15, Bechstein Hall.
—	Stock Exchange Orchestral Concert, 8.30, Queen's Hall.
THURS.	Operatic Performance by Students, 8, Royal Academy of Music.
—	Broadwood Concert, 8.30, Æolian Hall.
—	Strolling Players' Orchestral Concert, 8.30, Queen's Hall.
FRI.	Mr. Albert Garcia's Song Recital, 8.30, Bechstein Hall.
SAT.	Chappell's Ballad Concert, 2.30, Queen's Hall.
—	Esperanto Concert, 8, Queen's Hall.

DRAMA

THE WEEK.

KINGSWAY.—The Fifth Queen Crowned. Adapted from Mr. Ford Madox Hueffer's Novel by the Author and F. Norreys Connell.

THIS is an adaptation prepared by authors who lack the sense of the theatre. A fairly strong historical drama might have been shaped out of Mr. Hueffer's romance. Katherine Howard, as he presents her in his story—a creature of impulse and enthusiasms and fervid eloquence, anxious only to make her own promotion the means of reconciling her Church and King, full of a frank nobility of soul that renders her careless of attacks on her reputation and the plots of her enemies—might have become in the hands of a master of stage technique an effective heroine. But Mr. Hueffer and his colleague show no constructive ability, and instead of a play we were offered at Miss Ada Potter's matinée a series of scrappy episodes in which figures purporting to represent Henry VIII. and his fifth Queen and the sullen and defiant Princess Mary, and a set of intriguers that included Cranmer, made fitful appearances, and employed a pseudo-archaic diction. There was a lamentable crudeness about all the characterization, but, thanks to the skill of a couple of players, two of the characters left some impression on the audience. Modelling himself on the Holbein portraits, Mr. James Hearn suggested happily the genial trucu-lence and physical grossness of the King, and Miss Eily Malyon indicated no less cleverly the melancholy and the pride of the embittered Princess. Miss Potter herself made the Queen smile pleasantly and give other superficial signs of an amiable temper.

ROYALTY.—The Noble Spaniard: a Victorian Farce in Three Acts. Adapted from the French by W. Somerset Maugham.

MR. MAUGHAM has adapted an ordinary farce of earlier days for Mr. Charles Hawtrey's benefit, and some may regret that a playwright of such brilliance should have wasted his talent on material unworthy of it, instead of relying upon his own invention. This is not to say that if one is ready to accept the mechanical humours of this kind of play one cannot be amused by the Royalty piece. Its Spanish Don of many titles and imperturbable impudence, who insists on pushing his way into the society of the pretty young widow he adores, and is prepared, upon her pretending that she has a husband alive, to challenge every man he meets near her as her possible spouse, is droll enough in a certain fantastic way, and sets in motion a series of situations that any person who abrogates his common sense in the playhouse may find extremely diverting. But it is a farrago of nonsense, none the less, and it is not made the more plausible by Mr. Hawtrey's acting. A Spanish lover should at all events be ardent. This mercurial comedian substitutes persistence for ardour: he is earnest and audacious, not passionate. The only occasions on which he shows himself fervent are those on which the Don kisses his lady-love; then his behaviour is a trifle startling. Otherwise he is the glib, bland Hawtrey of so many farces, with the sole difference that he is rigged out in cape and sombrero. There are just two features of the production which render a visit to the Royalty well worth while. One is the Early Victorian setting and costumes of the piece. Here Mr. Maugham had an inspiration. It is delightful to see Miss Kate Cutler with side ringlets and in crinoline and flounces; thus equipped she makes the prettiest of pictures. It is a joy, too, to hear Miss Anne Cleaver travestying the drawing-room vocalism of the fifties, or to watch Mr. Lyall Swete made-up after the manner of Thackeray. The other great recommendation is the art of Miss Fanny Brough. To her falls the task of furnishing a burlesque picture of a woman of middle age and romantic nature who has fed her soul on Byron and Byronism. Never once does Miss Brough give way to extravagance, yet whether the poor lady is confessing to her husband a sin of which she is innocent, or making demure advances to the Don under the misapprehension that she has won his love, or demanding "Give me his blood!" when she discovers her error, she shows herself a past mistress of comedy.

OUR LIBRARY TABLE.

Dramas and Diversions. By W. L. Courtney. (Chapman & Hall.)—The critic who turns author has to take his courage in both hands. He gives hostages to the enemy—the army of the criticized—and offers sport to his rivals and colleagues. Nevertheless, it is good discipline for the reviewer to essay creative work, and especially for the play-reviewer. Because he has seen dramas innumerable, he is apt to pique himself on his technical knowledge of the craft he discusses. There is no more humbling proof of the difference that exists between theory and practice than an attempt to write a play. The art of elimination, the development of character through dialogue, the problem of keeping the action perpetually moving—these things are not easily learnt, and by the time such accomplishments are mastered the learner will confess to a new respect for the average craftsman, he will have begun to appreciate the difficulties of dramatic construction. Mr. Courtney has been reviewing plays for many years, and it is now a long time since his first stage work was produced. Perhaps it is his experience in combining the functions of playwright and judge of plays which is responsible for the moderation of tone and catholicity of appreciation that, apart from his academic touch—a relic of Oxford and its senior common-rooms—are the prevailing characteristics of his criticism. Mr. Courtney is certainly no novice as a playwright; he does not belong to the ranks of “the unacted.” Of the five longer pieces which constitute the bulk of his ‘Dramas and Diversions,’ four have obtained public representation of some sort or other. Even the exception, ‘Bridals of Blood,’ a romantic drama adapted from the German of Ludwig Fulda, and concerned with the same subject as Mr. Devereux’s ‘Henry of Navarre,’ was accepted by Sir Henry Irving and bequeathed by him to his sons. But the one-act play ‘Kit Marlowe’s Death’ was given by Mr. Alexander at the St. James’s; ‘Gaston Bonnier,’ a two-act drama of domestic sentiment, was staged by Prof. Herkomer at his theatre in Bushey; ‘On the side of the Angels,’ a full-sized problem-piece, was presented two years ago under the auspices of the Pioneers’ Society; and ‘Undine,’ a fable written under the influence, and somewhat in the manner, of M. Maeterlinck, has been played by Mrs. Patrick Campbell in its entirety in America, and, to the extent of one act, in London recently.

But the question for the public is not how many of Mr. Courtney’s plays have secured stage production, but how far their author gives evidence of being likely to prove a successful artist. For such a calculation three only of the seven works included in this volume require to be considered. ‘Bridals of Blood’ cannot be taken as Mr. Courtney’s own composition. ‘Gaston Bonnier’ is no more than an exercise in drama, pleasing, but slight and conventional. ‘Pericles and Aspasia’ is a skit on modern politics and modern persons of note, in which the allusions are half-concealed by the Greek names used, and can be caught only by the few. Another piece is merely a charade designed for children’s entertainment.

There remain ‘Kit Marlowe,’ ‘On the Side of the Angels,’ and ‘Undine.’ The first of these is a model specimen of a one-act play. Possibly its diction is here and there a little too formal; otherwise we get in it the right balance of literary and dramatic qualities, and at the same time the tone of thought and feeling, the habits and customs of the period, are suggested without causing any delay in the action. Obviously Mr. Courtney can compass the shorter flights of drama. To pass to his more ambitious works, it must be confessed that the one play of his which handles modern life and character is written round too painful a subject (the drug habit), and, almost necessarily, in too sombre a key, to please the general public. Its hero is a victim of cocaine, who, in so far as he avoids or gives way to his weakness, is alternately attracted by a nurse who is his good angel and by a woman of the world whose influence is harmful. The playwright’s study of the injurious effects produced by the drug not only on the man’s moral fibre, but also on his manners, is admirably done; and there is one scene in the play—that in which the hero outrages every notion of propriety in a drawing-room, and explains before several guests the reasons that prompt him to marry his host’s sister—which demonstrates beyond dispute Mr. Courtney’s possession of a sense of drama. Still, it is the particular scene rather than the play as a whole which leaves any vivid impression. Of ‘Undine,’ on the other hand, it is possible to speak without reservations. Its heroine is an exquisite creation, full of mystery and fascination; there are lyrics of real beauty scattered through the text; and the entire play, which is both dainty and tender, has “atmosphere,” fancy, and poetic feeling. But the very ingenuousness of the treatment, which of course the author has deliberately adopted, would hamper its chances with any but a special or a youthful audience. Mr. Courtney, in fact, is apt to be too eclectic in his choice of themes; and if he proposes to make of play-writing something more than a “diversion,” he will have to resist this tendency.

A Shakespeare Word-Book. By John Foster. (Routledge & Sons.)—In compiling this ‘Word-Book’ the author has endeavoured to bring into a concise form as much authoritative information regarding the employment of words by Shakespeare as is possible, and to furnish the student with a readily accessible means to fix upon the precise meaning of the dramatist’s diverse and often puzzling use of them. In addition to explanations and illustrations of the more archaic forms of expression, many words are included which are sometimes employed by Shakespeare in a manner unfamiliar to modern ideas. With a guide of this description ready to hand, the reader should have no difficulty in recognizing the meaning which the dramatist intended to convey. In order to give point to the argument concerning the necessity of a work of this kind the author in the Preface says:—

“To express his thoughts Shakespeare seldom employed an inapt or inadequate term, but, like a master-magician, he summons words at will, ranges into ready submission existing forms of speech, turns to his own purposes the flexibility of the language, and easily adapts it to his various requirements. The universality of his sympathies, the intensity of his conceptions of nature and life, the wealth and variety of his picturesque metaphors, necessitate for his use a correspondingly wide range of expression. While his vocabulary is reputed to be the largest of all the vocabularies of an English classic, the concordances flash upon one’s notice several interesting facts, e.g., that many of his words are used by him only once, and others very seldom, while some again occur very frequently, and are registered in whole columns or even pages; on the other hand, words now very common, so common indeed that we can scarcely conceive how Shakespeare and his contemporaries could manage to do without them, do not find a place in the text.”

The author does not concern himself greatly with the vagaries of Shakespeare’s grammatical forms, and wisely avoids the controversy which has raged in the past over the textual side of the dramatist’s works. Arguments regarding the most authoritative versions of disputed passages are left severely alone.

It is as a general guide for the ordinary student that this compilation should be regarded, rather than as a dogmatic contribution to the already congested mass of Shakespearean literature. In this character the volume will be welcomed by those to whom a clear-sighted and common-sense study of Shakespeare is the chief desideratum, although they may feel that the distinctions of meanings discovered in the use of some familiar words are overdone.

Mr. Foster states that the task of collecting and arranging the material for this work has occupied the best part of his spare moments for nearly sixteen years; that being so, and with the excellent and useful result now lying before us, it may perhaps seem somewhat ungracious to pick holes in what must have been a labour of love. But, truth to tell, although we find that in many cases, as we have previously pointed out, words which are now in everyday use are shown here in the divergent senses in which Shakespeare employed them; yet many are included which bear the same meaning that they have nowadays, and consequently there can be no valid reason for their inclusion. To take an example at random, we have the word “loneliness”; in neither of the excerpts quoted is there discernible any variation from the meaning usual at the present day. Again, the six examples illustrating the word “proud” yield the same result. There are many similar instances. By the judicious excision of words of this description the 735 pages in this volume would have been reduced to more reasonable proportions. It is only fair to add that much of the work would have been impossible without the help of the many who have gone before. Of these Schmidt is the most exhaustive and laborious, but his work is expensive, and has not been submitted to us for many years.

Proserpine: a Masque. By Maurice Baring. (Oxford, Blackwell; London, Simpkin & Marshall.)—This is more of a poetic drama than a masque, despite its choric interludes and its processions, and a very charming piece of fantasy it is. According to the classic legend, Proserpine was permitted by her lord of the under-world to return to her beloved earth in the spring, but was bound to rejoin him in the days of harvest and the falling leaf. It is in her double capacity of goddess of spring and queen of the dead that she is made to figure in Mr. Baring’s masque, the scene of which is laid in the Sicily of an undefined age. Thither she comes in the springtime, disguised as the maiden Rosemary, who acts as a kind of priestess in the goddess’s ruined temple; and there she meets a young prince who is out of love with life, and longs to escape to the “endless dream” of death. Death, however, as Proserpine reminds him, is for most of the dead a state of infinite heartache for the earth and earthly pleasures they can never again enjoy. The prince is on his way to wed the beautiful daughter of the king of the land, but it is the disguised goddess who wins his affections, and she promises him, if he can conquer Death in the lists, that he shall enjoy the vague privilege of being without regret in the world of shades and dwelling there for ever contented in the dream of her, though far removed from her throne; and with this fate, which is supposed to bring some sort of happiness to Proserpine, the dreamy, melancholy lad professes himself satisfied.

London: GEORGE BELL & SONS,
York House, Portugal Street, W.C.

W. BLACKWOOD & SONS

BOOKS UNIVERSALLY WELCOMED.

THE SHORT CUT TO INDIA.

The Record of a Journey along the Route of the Baghdad Railway.

By DAVID FRASER, Author of 'A Modern Campaign' and 'The Marches of Hindustan.'

With 83 Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

"A most readable book, full of apposite information, and relating experiences of no ordinary kind."—Times."The book can be recommended for the admirable observation, the unflagging spirit, and the political judgment shown by the author, and it should be read widely."—Morning Post."It is safe to say that Mr. David Fraser's story of his travels will be read as widely as any book of the kind that has been published for a long time. The narrative of his encounter with a brigand, and of his journey down the Tigris on a 'kelek,' is not less than thrilling. The frequent photographs are excellent, and we heartily recommend this book."—Spectator."Of the manner in which Mr. Fraser has carried out his task it were difficult to speak too highly. One of the most interesting volumes of modern travel. The book is finely printed and copiously illustrated."—Daily Chronicle."This is a very delightful book of travel and observation—full of interest, full of information, told so simply and agreeably that one reads on and on, absorbed as in the thrill of an exciting novel."—Observer."Every chapter is full of adventure, now humorous and now tragic, but whether humorous or tragic always carried through by the traveller with a spirit which, even when precipitated into cold print, captivates the reader."—Daily News.LEAVES FROM THE DIARY OF A COUNTRY CRICKETER.

By W. E. W. COLLINS. 6s.

"Mr. Collins is good—so good, indeed, as to make entertaining reading for a man who does not know what to do with a short-pitched ball on the 'Off' when he gets one. And that is high praise.... He has made a better book about the spirit and 'camaraderie' and humours of cricket than any that one can remember.... He wrote his book for fun, and it is very good fun too."—Spectator."Anecdotes of the tented field practically unrivalled for their interest and variety."—Daily Telegraph."Full of good stories capitally told."—Glasgow Herald.SOME EIGHTEENTH CENTURY BYWAYS AND OTHER ESSAYS.

By JOHN BUCHAN. 7s. 6d. net.

"The author has a wide range of interests and of reading, and his style possesses that impalpable quality of distinction which is born and not acquired."—Spectator."A masterpiece not only of literary but social criticism."—Glasgow Herald.LIGHT AND SHADE, AND OTHER POEMS.

By R. C. LEHMANN, M.P., Author of 'Anni Fugaces,' 'Crumbs of Pity,' &c.

Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

"The book abounds in passages that will delight lovers of children; and lovers of dogs always know that Mr. Lehmann is second to no contemporary in his sympathy with four-footed friends.... This fresh and wholesome little volume."—Daily Chronicle.THE ROMAN BREVIARY.

Translated out of Latin into English by JOHN, MARQUESS OF BUTE, K.T.

A New Edition for use in England. In 4 vols. 2l. 2s. net.

NOVELS.THE NEW JUNE.

By HENRY NEWBOLT, Author of 'Admirals All,' 'The Old Country,' &c.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

NOTE.—The First large Edition of this book was sold out two days after publication. SECOND EDITION NOW READY."Mr. Newbolt has written an historical novel in which the characters are real human beings, and talk as such.... It is one of the most interesting novels of its class that I have ever read."—Daily Mail."It is a fine, subtle, thoughtful book, written with a charm of style and a simplicity which suggest more than the words say. Mr. Newbolt knows how to hold our attention and lure us into the atmosphere of his story."—Daily News."The 'New June' gains an honourable and notable victory.... He lets the spirit which inspires his noble narrative express itself through the medium of his creation.... It is extremely interesting.... There can be no doubt about Mr. Newbolt's success."—Morning Post."The pages of 'The New June' are shifting, radiant pictures from the past, full of gracious and gallant memories, warmed through with the sunlight of past days, cold and sweet with the dew of nights long done. There is youth and joy and tragedy in the book."—Daily Chronicle."A really beautiful book."—Daily Telegraph."Invested with tenderness and charm."—Scotsman."His new book will endorse his already established reputation.... Singularly appealing."—Manchester Guardian."A beautiful book."—Liverpool Daily Post and Mercury."A fine novel."—Liverpool Daily Courier.WINGED DREAMS.

By HELEN COLEBROOKE. 6s.

"A modern society story, written by an author who really knows the world she is describing."—Spectator."Diana is a heroine worthy of George Eliot.... A charming and even brilliant story, and one that bids fair for the future work of the author."—Glasgow Herald."A story of excellent promise."—Globe.GLENTYRE.

By EDMUND SELLAR, Author of 'Muggins of the Modern Side,' 6s.

"A capital piece of work, which the reader will never think of putting down till finished."—Birmingham Post.BLACKWOODS'

Forthcoming Publications.

SOME MEMORIES OF MY SPARE TIME. 1856-85. By General the Right Hon. Sir HENRY BRACKENBURY, G.C.B. 7s. 6d. net.FIFTY YEARS OF IT. The Experiences and Struggles of a Volunteer of 1859. By the Right Hon. LORD KINGSBURGH, K.C.B., Lord Justice Clerk. 7s. 6d. net.THE ENGLISHWOMAN IN INDIA. By MAUD DIVER, Author of 'Captain Desmond, V.C.' 5s. net.SIDE TRACKS AND BRIDLE PATHS. By LIONEL JAMES ('The Intelligence Officer'), Author of 'On the Heels of De Wet.' 6s.

Mr. James has used his wide travels to the best advantage. In this book he covers ground in Persia, India, Russia, South Africa, Germany, Turkey, and England.

TRAVELS IN THE UPPE EGYPTIAN DESERTS. By ARTHUR E. P. WEIGALL, Chief Inspector of the Department of Antiquities, Upper Egypt. Illustrated. 7s. 6d. net.THE WORK AND PLAY OF A GOVERNMENT INSPECTOR. By H. PRESTON-THOMAS, C.B. With Preface by the Right Hon. JOHN BURNS, M.P., President of the Local Government Board. 10s. 6d. net.Forthcoming Novels.*MARCIA. By MARGUERITE CURTIS.THE GREEN CURVE. By "OLE-LUK-OIE."CECILIA KIRKHAM'S SON.

By Mrs. KENNETH COMBE.

BLACKWOOD

FOR APRIL CONTAINS:

Unemployment: Its Cause and Cure.

By Sir NATHANIEL DUNLOP.

To the Hills of Smoke and the Imperial Porphyry Quarries of the Romans.

By ARTHUR E. P. WEIGALL.

Memories of My Spare Time.

By General the Right Hon. Sir HENRY BRACKENBURY.

The Literary Side of the Law Reports.The Cockney Bounder.

By SIDNEY LOW.

The Seaman.

By DAVID HANNAY.

A Fight in the Bush.Breaching the Bureaucracy.

By Sir C. H. T. CROSTHWAITE, K.C.S.I.

Bluff in the Balkans.Actaeon.

By ALFRED NOYES.

Urgent Private Affairs.

By GRANGATLI.

Lady Louisa Stuart.

By FLORENCE MCCUNN.

Musings without Method.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS, Edinburgh and London.

DAVID NUTT,

57-59, LONG ACRE.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE FOLK-LORE SOCIETY.

NO. LXIII.: EXAMPLES OF PRINTED FOLK-LORE CONCERNING LINCOLNSHIRE COLLECTED BY MRS. GUTCH AND MABEL PEACOCK ('COUNTY FOLK-LORE,' VOL. V.) DEMY 8vo, XXIV. 437 PP. CLOTH.

Being the Society's Extra Volume for the year 1908.

Will be sent immediately to all Members of the Society who have paid their Subscription for 1908. And will be on sale to the Public afterwards at 15s. net.

To be issued Immediately.

FOLK-LORE.

TRANSACTIONS OF THE FOLK-LORE SOCIETY.

A Quarterly Review of Myth, Tradition, Institution, and Custom.

(Incorporating the Archæological Review and the Folk-Lore Journal).

Vol. XX. No. 1. MARCH 30, 1909. 5s. net.

Contents.

THE THIRTY-FIRST ANNUAL MEETING. January 20, 1909.

THE THIRTY-FIRST ANNUAL REPORT OF THE COUNCIL. January 20, 1909.

TREASURER'S CASH ACCOUNT AND BALANCE SHEET.

PRESIDENTIAL ADDRESS.

NOTES ON SOME CUSTOMS OF THE LOWER CONGO PEOPLE. The Rev. JOHN H. WEEKS.

COLLECTANEA:—Superstitions and Survivals amongst Shepherds (with Plates I. and II.). E. LOVETT.—Amulets from Costers' Barrows in London, Rome, and Naples (with Plate III.). E. LOVETT.—Folk-lore Scraps from Several Localities. ALICE B. GOMME.—A Milano Tale (Sarawak). A. E. LAWRENCE.

CORRESPONDENCE:—"The Bitter-Withy" Ballad. A. LANG.—Burial of Suicides at Cross-Roads. W. CROOKE.—The Burry-Man. A. LANG and R. C. MACLAGAN.—Copper Rod Currency of the Balemba. A. C. HADDON.—The Death Customs of the Aborigines of Western Australia, and the Spirits. J. CEREDIG-DAVIES.—Distribution of Race and Language in Australia. A. LANG.—Lucky Horse-shoes. J. CEREDIG-DAVIES.—"Sympathetic" Magic. W. HANNA.

REVIEWS:—Cecil J. Sharp, 'English Folk-Song. Some Conclusions.' C. S. MYERS.—W. Johnson, 'Folk-Memory; or, The Continuity of British Archæology.' W. CROOKE.—Juul Dieserud, 'The Scope and Content of the Science of Anthropology.' A. C. HADDON.—Arthur J. Evans, &c., 'Anthropology and the Classics.' W. CROOKE.—A. W. Mair, 'Hesiod.' ALFRED NUTT.—C. S. Boswell, 'An Irish Precursor of Dante.' ELEANOR HULL.—J. Gwenogvryn Evans, 'The Text of the Black Book of Carmarthen.' ALFRED NUTT.—J. Verdam, 'Fergut.' JESSIE L. WESTON.—Killis Campbell, 'The Seven Sages of Rome.' W. P. KER.—Edith F. Carey, 'A Link with the Past' ('Souvenir Normand'). L. E. BROADWOOD.—'Fra Dansk Folkemindesamling, Meddelelser og Spørgsmål.' B. M. CRASTER.—R. Wessmann, 'The Bawenda of the Spelonken (Transvaal).' E. SIDNEY HARTLAND.—Mervyn W. H. Beech, 'The Tidong Dialects of Borneo.' A. C. HADDON.—Emmanuel Cosquin, 'Le Lait de la Mère et le Coffre Flottant.' A. R. WRIGHT.—C. Strehlow, 'Veröffentlichungen aus dem Städtischen Völker-Museum Frankfurt am Main.' N. W. THOMAS.—SHORT NOTICES:—William Wells Newell, 'Isolt's Return.'—Mrs. E. J. Bourhill and Mrs. J. B. Drake, 'Fairy Tales from South Africa.' E. SIDNEY HARTLAND.—Edward Wilmot Blyden, 'African Life and Customs.'

To be issued Immediately.

TUDOR TRANSLATIONS.

Edited by W. E. HENLEY.

Vols. XLI.—XLIV.

THE DECAMERON
OF BOCCACCIO.

Translated anno 1620. In 4 vols. With an Introduction by EDWARD HUTTON. Vols. I., II.

* * Immediately after the issue of Vols. I., II., the Subscription price of 2l. 8s. net will lapse, and the price of the Set will be raised to 3l. net.

Vols. III., IV. will be delivered to Subscribers before May 30.

BIBLIOGRAPHY OF
THE RIGHT HON. W. E. GLADSTONE.
NOTES AND QUERIES
for DECEMBER 10 and 24, 1892, and JANUARY 7 and 21, 1893
CONTAINS A BIBLIOGRAPHY OF MR. GLADSTONE.
Price of the Four Numbers, 1s. 4d.; or free by post, 1s. 6d.
JOHN O. FRANCIS and J. EDWARD FRANCIS
Notes and Queries Office, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

For Acidity of the Stomach.

For Heartburn and Headache.

For Gout and Indigestion.

DINNEFORD'S

MAGNESIA.

For Sour Eructations and Bilious Affections.

A Safe and most effective Aperient for regular use.

Shipping.

P. & O.

PLEASURE CRUISES FROM MARSEILLES.

(Rail and Steamship connexions from London.)

No. 3.—April 22 to May 20.

VENICE, DALMATIA,
CORFU, NAPLES,
SICILY, VILLEFRANCHE, &c.
Fares from 30 Guineas.

No. 4.—May 21 to June 12.

NAPLES, ALGIERS, LISBON, AND LONDON.

Fares from 20 Guineas.

Special Terms for Cruises 3 & 4 in conjunction.

From London and Leith.

No. 5.—July 1 to July 27.

SPITZBERGEN, NORWAY, &c.
Fares from 30 Guineas.

No. 6.—July 29 to August 11.

No. 7.—August 13 to August 26.
THE NORWEGIAN FJORDS.
Fares from 12 Guineas.

S.Y.
VECTIS

BY

P. & O.

CRUISING YACHT VECTIS,
6,000 tons, 6,000 h.p.

For Passage, Illustrated Handbooks, and all information, apply Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company, Northumberland Avenue, W.C., or 122, Leadenhall Street, E.C., London.

H. GREVEL & CO.'S PUBLICATIONS

JUST PUBLISHED.

RICHARD TO MINNA WAGNER

270 LETTERS TO HIS FIRST WIFE

Translated by WM. ASHTON ELLIS. With 2 Portraits.

2 vols. demy 8vo, cloth, 1l. 4s. net.

'Wagner's Letters to Minna,' have created a profound sensation in Germany, and will be welcomed throughout the whole world as a human document of the first magnitude.

These remarkable letters far surpass in interest even the 'Letters to Mathilde Wesendonck,' and generally tend to correct the fallacies current concerning the relations which prevailed between the master and his first wife.

33, KING STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON, W.C.

YOUR BIRTHRIGHT IS HEALTH.

THE SCIENCE IN A NUTSHELL.

'Health is a Man's Birthright. It is as natural to be well as to be born. All pathological conditions, all diseases, and all tendencies to disease are the result of the transgression of physiologic and hygienic law. This is the science of health in a nutshell.'—DENSMORE.

Eno's

Fruit

Salt

IS NATURE'S ANTIDOTE FOR HUMAN ILLS
arising from the neglect or violation of her laws.

'Our Acts, our angels are, for good or ill, our fatal shadows that walk by us still.'

'And such is life, so gliding on, it glimmers like a meteor, and is gone.'

CAUTION.—Examine the capsule, and see that it is marked ENO'S 'FRUIT SALT.' Without it you have the sincerest form of flattery—IMITATION.

Prepared only by J. C. ENO (Limited), 'FRUIT SALT' WORKS, LONDON, S.E.

LOVELL REEVE & CO.'S

NEW AND STANDARD WORKS.

"THE WORLD-RENOWNED"

BOTANICAL MAGAZINE.

FOURTH SERIES, No. 52. APRIL, 1909.

Hand-Coloured Plates, with Historical and Structural Descriptions and Hints for Culture of New and Rare Flowering Plants, suitable for the Garden, Stove, or Conservatory.

Edited by Lieut.-Col. D. PRIN, C.I.E. LL.D. F.R.S., Director of the Royal Botanic Gardens, Kew.

Contents.

IMPATIENS HAWKERI. Eastern New Guinea. Double Plate.	STROPHANTHUS PREUSSII. West Africa.
MICROLOMA TENUIFOLIUM. South Africa.	ANTHURIUM TRINERVE. Brazil and Guiana.
ARBUTUS MENZIESII. Western North America.
3s. 6d. Monthly. Annual Subscription, 42s.

Vol. IV. Section I. Part VI. 13s. 6d.

Vol. IV. Section I. Complete, 52s.

FLORA CAPENSIS: a Systematic Description of the Plants of the Cape Colony, Caffraria, and Port Natal. Vols. I.-III. By W. H. HARVEY and O. W. SONDER. 20s. each. The CONTINUATION, Edited by Sir W. T. THISELTON-DYER, F.R.S. Vol. IV. Section II. 24s. Vol. V. Part I. 9s. Vol. VI. 24s. Vol. VII. 33s. Published under the authority of the Governments of the Cape of Good Hope, Natal, and Transvaal.

Vol. VI. Part I. 8s.

FLORA OF TROPICAL AFRICA. By D. OLIVER, F.R.S. Vols. I.-III. 20s. each. The CONTINUATION, Edited by Sir W. T. THISELTON-DYER, F.R.S. Vol. IV. Section I. 30s. Section II. 27s. Vol. V. 25s. 6d. Vol. VII. 27s. 6d. Vol. VIII. 25s. 6d. Published under the authority of the Secretary of State for the Colonies.

NEW AND COMPLETE INDEX TO THE BOTANICAL MAGAZINE. Vols. I.-CXXX. comprising the First, Second, and Third Series, to which is prefixed a History of the Magazine by W. B. HEMSLEY, F.L.S. 21s.

MONOGRAPHS FROM THE THIRD SERIES OF THE BOTANICAL MAGAZINE, bringing together in One Wrapper the Plates and the Structural and Historical Descriptions, illustrating each of the 1,457 Genera, which may be had separately. Prices from 1s. to 15s. List of Genera on application.

FLORA OF BRITISH INDIA. By Sir J. D. HOOKER, C.B. G.C.S.I. F.R.S., &c., assisted by various Botanists. 7 vols. 12l.

HANDBOOK OF THE NEW ZEALAND FLORA. A Systematic Description of the Native Plants of New Zealand and the Chatham, Kermadec's, Lord Auckland's, Campbell's, and Macquarrie's Islands. By Sir J. D. HOOKER, G.C.S.I. F.R.S. 42s.

FLORA AUSTRALIENSIS: a Description of the Plants of the Australian Territory. By GEORGE BENTHAM, F.R.S., assisted by FERDINAND MUELLER, F.R.S. 7 vols. 7l. 4s.

FLORA OF THE BRITISH WEST INDIA ISLANDS. By Dr. GRISEBACH, F.L.S. 1 vol. 42s.

THE NARCISSUS: its History and Culture. By F. W. BURBIDGE, F.L.S. With a Scientific Review of the entire Genus by J. G. BAKER, F.R.S. F.L.S. With 48 beautifully Coloured Plates. 30s.

MATERIALS FOR A FLORA OF THE MALAYAN PENINSULA. By H. N. RIDLEY, M.A. F.R.S., Director of Botanic Gardens, Singapore. Complete in Three Parts. 30s.

CATALOGUE OF THE PLANTS OF KUMAON AND OF THE ADJACENT PORTIONS OF GARHWAL AND TIBET. By Lieut.-General Sir RICHARD STRACHEY and J. F. DUTHIE. 5s.

THE HEPATICÆ OF THE BRITISH Isles: Figures and Descriptions of all known British Species. By W. H. PEARSON. 2 vols. 22s. Plates, 5l. 5s. Plain; 7l. 10s. Coloured.

NOW READY, Part 77, 15s.

Dedicated by special permission to Her late most gracious Majesty Queen Victoria, Empress of India.

LEPIDOPTERA INDICA. By F. MOORE, F.Z.S. F.E.S. Vols. I.-VI. with 560 Coloured Plates, 9l. 5s. each. Parts 73-76, 15s. each.

THE LEPIDOPTERA OF THE BRITISH Islands. By C. G. BARRETT. Complete in 11 vols, 6l. 12s. Large-Paper Edition, with 504 Coloured Plates, 33l. 15s. Alphabetical List of Species contained in the work, 1s. 6d. Large-Paper Edition, 2s.

THE LEPIDOPTERA OF CEYLON. By F. MOORE, F.Z.S. 3 vols. medium 4to, 215 Coloured Plates, cloth, gilt tops, 21l. 12s. Published under the auspices of the Government of Ceylon.

THE LARVÆ OF THE BRITISH Lepidoptera and their Food Plants. By OWEN S. WILSON. With Life-Sized Figures Drawn and Coloured from Nature by ELEANORA WILSON. 40 Coloured Plates, 63s.

THE COLEOPTERA OF THE BRITISH Islands. By the Rev. CANON FOWLER, M.A. F.L.S. Complete in 5 vols. with 2 Structural Plates, 4l. Large Edition, with 180 Coloured Plates, 14l.

THE BUTTERFLIES OF EUROPE. Described and Figured by H. C. LANG, M.D. F.L.S. With 82 Coloured Plates, containing upwards of 900 Figures. 2 vols. 3l. 18s.

MONOGRAPH OF THE MEMBRACIDÆ. By GEORGE BOWDLER BUCKTON, F.R.S. F.L.S. F.E.S., to which is added a Paper entitled 'Suggestions as to the Meaning of the Shapes and Colours of the Membracidae in the Struggle for Existence,' by EDWARD B. POULTON, D.Sc. M.A. F.R.S. Hope Professor of Zoology in the University of Oxford. Complete in 1 vol. 4to. With 2 Structural and 60 Coloured Plates, cloth, gilt top, 6l. 15s.

THE HYMENOPTERA ACULEATA OF the British Islands. By EDWARD SAUNDERS, F.L.S. Complete, with 3 Plates, 16s. Large-Paper Edition, with 51 Coloured Plates, 68s.

THE HEMIPTERA HETEROPTERA OF the British Islands. By EDWARD SAUNDERS, F.L.S. Complete, with a Structural Plate, 14s. Large Edition, with 31 Coloured Plates, 48s.

THE HEMIPTERA HOMOPTERA OF the British Islands. By JAMES EDWARDS, F.E.S. Complete, with 2 Structural Plates, 12s. Large Edition, with 28 Coloured Plates, 43s.

FOREIGN FINCHES IN CAPTIVITY. By ARTHUR G. BUTLER, Ph.D. F.L.S. F.Z.S. F.E.S. With 60 Plates beautifully Coloured by Hand. Royal 4to, cloth, 4l. 14s. 6d.

ELEMENTS OF CONCHOLOGY: an Introduction to the Natural History of Shells and of the Animals which form them. By LOVELL REEVE, F.L.S. 62 Coloured Plates. 2 vols. 2l. 16s.

CONCHOLOGIA ICONICA: or Figures and Descriptions of the Shells of Mollusks, with Remarks on their Affinities, Synonymy, and Geographical Distribution. By LOVELL REEVE, F.L.S., and G. B. SOWERBY, F.L.S. With 2,727 Coloured Plates, Complete in 20 vols. 4to, half-calf, 178l.

A Detailed List of Monographs and Volumes may be had.

MR. MURRAY'S NEW BOOKS.

GENTLEMEN ERRANT.

The Travels and Adventures of Four Noblemen in Europe in the Fifteenth and Sixteenth Centuries. By Mrs. HENRY CUST. With Maps and Portraits. Demy 8vo, 12s. net.

"Too high praise could hardly be given to the manner in which Mrs. Cust has executed her task—to the richness of the material, both in text and notes, and the vigour and brilliancy of the style."

Scotsman.

TWO ADMIRALS.

SIR FAIRFAX MORESBY, G.C.B. (1786-1877), AND HIS SON, JOHN MORESBY. A Record of Life and Service in the British Navy for a Hundred Years. By Admiral JOHN MORESBY. With Portraits and Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 14s. net. [Ready next week.]

"Here come I, Little Devil Doubt—

If you don't give me money I'll sweep you all out ! Money I want and money I crave—

If you don't give me money I'll sweep you to the grave !"

LITTLE DEVIL DOUBT.

By OLIVER ONIONS, Author of 'The Compleat Bachelor,' 'The Odd Job Man.' 6s.

NEW NOVEL BY MISS R. MACAULAY. THE SECRET RIVER.

By the Author of 'The Furnace,' 'Abbots Verney.' 2s. 6d. net.

HORACE A. VACHELL'S NEW NOVEL. THE IMPENDING SWORD.

By the Author of 'Brothers,' 'The Hill,' 'Her Son.' 2s. 6d. net. [Ready April 21.]

THE CITY OF JERUSALEM.

By Col. C. R. CONDER, LL.D., Author of 'The Rise of Man.' With Maps, Diagrams, and Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 12s. net. [Ready next week.]

In this volume Col. Conder treats the history of Jerusalem for some 4,000 years, down to the present day. The work is founded on contemporary accounts, monuments, and results of excavations, including the most recent discoveries. It is popular in character, and will be fully illustrated, and it is hoped that it will be specially useful for visitors to the Holy City.

JOHN MURRAY, Albemarle Street.

London: LOVELL REEVE & CO., LIMITED, Publishers to the Home, Colonial, and Indian Governments, 6, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, W.C.

MR. JOHN LONG'S NEW BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

BRITTANY TO WHITEHALL: Life of Louise Renée de Kéroualle, Duchess of Portsmouth.

By Mrs. COLQUHOUN GRANT, Author of 'French Noblesse of the Eighteenth Century,' 'Mother of Czars,' 'Queen and Cardinal,' 'Quaker and Courtier.' With Photogravure Portrait and other rare Portraits and Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. net. [Just out.]

This is the life of Charles the Second's famous mistress, Louise Renée de Kéroualle, whom he created Duchess of Portsmouth, and who has left a long line of descendants in England to the present day. She was not merely a beautiful woman, but was a distinct influence on the history of her time. She came from the Court of Versailles, to rule, for several years, that of Whitehall, and she swayed Charles to suit the plans of the astute Louis XIV. Illustrated Prospectus post free.

THE MAGIC OF SPORT: Mainly Autobiographical. By NAT GOULD. With Photogravure

Portrait and over 50 Illustrations of notable Sportsmen, Horses, and Places. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. net. [Just out.]

This is the autobiography of "The Prince of Sporting Writers," as Mr. Nat Gould has justly been called. The countless multitudes of readers who have followed him in the field of romance will now see something of the actual life, strenuous and brimful of happenings, of a man of letters who is also a man of action. Mr. Nat Gould has written freely of all that he has seen, and about men, horses, and subjects from first-hand knowledge, and nothing from hearsay. Illustrated Prospectus post free.

THE GILDED BEAUTIES OF THE SECOND EMPIRE. By FREDERIC LOLIEE. English Version by

BRYAN O'DONNELL. With 34 Portraits. Demy 8vo, price 15s. net. Illustrated Prospectus in preparation.

THE REAL FRANCIS JOSEPH. The Private Life of the Emperor of Austria. By HENRI DE WEINDEL.

English Version by PHILIP W. SERGEANT. With numerous Portraits. Demy 8vo, price 15s. net. Illustrated Prospectus in preparation.

THE SECRET HISTORY OF THE COURT OF SPAIN, 1802-1906. By RACHAEL CHALLICE, Author of 'Vexed Questions,' &c. Compiler of 'Spanish Protestants in the Sixteenth Century,' 'Mystic Links of Life,' &c., and collaborator in 'The Historian's History of the World.' Illustrations by JUAN COMBA, Artist by appointment to the Court of Spain. Demy 8vo, price 15s. Illustrated Prospectus in preparation.

JOHN LONG'S POPULAR NOVELS.

MR. JOHN LONG would draw particular attention to the following brilliant array of New Novels. Several are already in a Second Edition, two in a Third Edition, and one in a Fifth Edition.

SIX SHILLINGS EACH.

POMP AND CIRCUMSTANCE. By DOROTHEA GERARD, Author of 'Restitution,' 'Itinerant Daughters,' &c.

NOBLESSE OBLIGE. By M. E. FRANCIS (Mrs. Francis Blundell), Author of 'Hardy on the Hill,' &c.

THE GREATER POWER. By HAROLD BINDLOSS, Author of 'Alton of Somasco,' 'Thrice Armed,' &c.

THE MEMBER FOR EASTERBY. By JAMES BLYTH, Author of 'Amazement,' 'Rubina.'

HILARY THORNTON. By HUBERT WALES, Author of 'Mr. and Mrs. Villiers,' 'Cynthia in the Wilderness,' &c.

A FORSAKEN GARDEN. By JESSIE AINSWORTH DAVIS, Author of 'When Half Gods Go.'

THE THRESHOLD. By WINEFRIDE TRAFFORD-TAUNTON, Author of 'Silent Dominion,' &c.

WHO SHALL HAVE HER? By JOHN CAVE, Author of 'The Wiles of a Wife.'

GOD'S GOOD WOMAN. By ELEANORE S. TERRY, Author of 'The New Delilah.'

THE COMBAT. By ARTHUR CAMPBELL. (A New Author.)

THE QUENCHLESS FLAME. By VIOLET TWEEDALE, Author of 'Mrs. Barrington's Atonement,' &c.

THE FAULT. By C. T. PODMORE, Author of 'A Cynic's Conscience,' &c.

LINKS IN THE CHAIN. By HEADON HILL, Author of 'The Hidden Victim,' &c.

THE OTHER SARA. By CURTIS YORKE, Author of 'Their Marriage,' 'Only Betty,' 'The Girl and the Man,' &c.

THE THUNDER OF THE HOOFS. By WILLIAM HENRY LANG. (A New Author.)

THE WHIPS OF TIME. By ARABELLA KENEALY, Author of 'An American Duchess,' &c.

LADY LETTY BRANDON. By ANNIE E. HOLDSWORTH, Author of 'Joanna Traill, Spinster,' &c.

HARRY OF ATHOL. By R. H. FORSTER, Author of 'A Jacobite Admiral,' &c.

THE CASE OF SIR GEOFFREY. By FLORENCE WARDEN, Author of 'A Devil's Bargain,' &c.

THE TESTAMENT OF JUDAS. By HENRY BYATT, Author of 'Land o' Gold,' &c.

IDOLS OF FLESH. By PAUL CRESWICK, Author of 'The Temple of Folly,' &c.

A SOUL'S AWAKENING. By W. TEIGNMOUTH SHORE, Author of 'Egomet,' 'The Pest,' &c.

THE GIRL FROM GATFORD. By OLIVIA RAMSEY, Author of 'The Marriage of Lionel Glyde.'

FATALITY. By G. G. CHATTERTON, Author of 'The Dictionary of Fools,' &c.

THE COURTSHIP OF SYBIL. By L. T. MEADE, Author of 'Little Josephine,' &c.

FLOWER OF THE WORLD. By Mrs. HENRY TIPPETT. (A New Author.)

THE WORLD, THE FLESH, AND THE CASINO. By GERTRUDE WARDEN, Author of 'The Millionaire and the Lady,' &c.

JOHN LONG, 12, 13, 14, Norris Street, Haymarket, London.

THE ATHENÆUM

Journal of English and Foreign Literature, Science, the Fine Arts, Music and the Drama.

No. 4249.

SATURDAY, APRIL 3, 1909.

PRICE
THREEPENCE.
REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

Exhibitions.

EARLY BRITISH SCHOOL.—SHEPHERD'S
SPRING EXHIBITION OF PORTRAITS and LANDSCAPES by EARLY BRITISH and FOREIGN MASTERS is NOW OPEN.
SHEPHERD'S GALLERY, 27, King Street, St. James's.

Provident Institutions.

THE BOOKSELLERS' PROVIDENT
INSTITUTION.

Founded 1837.
Patron—HER MAJESTY QUEEN ALEXANDRA.

Invested Capital, 30,000*l*.

A UNIQUE INVESTMENT

Offered to London Booksellers and their Assistants.

A young man or woman of twenty-five can invest the sum of Twenty Guineas (or its equivalent by instalments), and obtain the right to participate in the following advantages:—

FIRST. Freedom from want in time of Adversity as long as need exists.

SECOND. Permanent Relief in Old Age.

THIRD. Medical Advice by eminent Physicians and Surgeons.

FOURTH. A Cottage in the Country (Abbots Langley, Hertfordshire) for aged Members, with garden produce, coal, and medical attendance free, in addition to an annuity.

FIFTH. A furnished house in the same Retreat at Abbots Langley for the use of Members and their families for holidays or during convalescence.

SIXTH. A contribution towards Funeral expenses when it is needed.

SEVENTH. All these are available not for Members only, but also for their wives or widows and young children.

EIGHTH. The payment of the subscriptions confers an absolute right to these benefits in all cases of need.

For further information apply to the Secretary MR. GEORGE LARNER, 28, Paternoster Row E.C.

Educational.

SOMERVILLE COLLEGE, OXFORD.—

RESEARCH FELLOWSHIP.—An ELECTION will be held THIS SUMMER to a RESEARCH FELLOWSHIP of the annual value of 120*l*. for Three Years. Candidates must send their Names, Three References and a statement of their proposed Research before MAY 15, to Miss H. DARBISHIRE, Somerville College. The Fellowship is open to all Women who (i), have resided two years in Oxford and obtained Honours in some University Examination by October 1 next, or (ii), have taken Honours at Cambridge or Trinity College, Dublin.—Further conditions can be learnt on application to Miss DARBISHIRE.

ROYAL AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE,
CIRENCESTER. (Founded 1845. Reorganized 1908.)

Patron—H.M. KING EDWARD VII.

Chairman—LORD MORETON.

For Landowners, Land Agents, Surveyors, Agriculturists,

Intending Colonists, &c.

FARMING AND COLONIAL BRANCH.

ESTATE MANAGEMENT AND FORESTRY BRANCH.
For Prospectus of Curriculum, Fees, Entrance Exhibitions, Scholarships, Diplomas, &c., apply to THE PRINCIPAL.

NEXT TERM BEGINS TUESDAY, May 18.

CHRIST'S COLLEGE, BLACKHEATH, S.E.

F. W. AVELING, M.A. B.Sc.

Preparation for Universities and Professions.

Stress on Modern Languages and Science.

LYCEUM ALPNUM IN ZUOZ,

LUPPER ENGADINE, SWITZERLAND. 5,700 ft. above sea level.
First-class BOARDING-SCHOOL for Forty-five Boys. Age of entry, 11-16. Excellent, bracing, health resort. Classical and Modern Section. Workshop, Gymnasium, Laboratory. Preparation for the Zürich Polytechnic and for Matriculation. Staff of Thirteen Masters, including Eight Graduates.

Four Diligence Services Daily to and from St. Moritz and Bevers (nearest Railway Station).

WINTER TERM BEGINS on JANUARY 4.

French or German Prospectus and Curriculum post free on application to THE SECRETARY.

Education.

Parents or Guardians desiring accurate information relative to the CHOICE of SCHOOLS for BOYS or GIRLS or

TUTORS in England or Abroad are invited to call upon or send fully detailed particulars to

MESSRS. GABBITAS, THRING & CO.,

who for more than thirty years have been closely in touch with the leading Educational Establishments.

Advice, free of charge, is given by Mr. THRING, Nephew of the late Head Master of Uppingham, 36, Sackville Street, London, W.

LEATHERHEAD COURT, SURREY.

A London School in the Country for 45 Girls (Residents).

Principal—Miss TULLIS.

The School aims at an intellectual training suited to the individual physical development on safe lines, and the cultivation of generous thoughts and pleasant manners.

Situations Vacant.

THE UNIVERSITY OF LIVERPOOL.

CHAIR OF LATIN.

The COUNCIL invite applications for the CHAIR OF LATIN. The Salary is fixed at not less than 600*l*. per annum. The successful Candidate will be required to enter upon his duties on OCTOBER 5, 1909.

Applications, together with the names of not less than three persons to whom reference may be made, and (if the Candidate so desires) twelve copies of Testimonials, should be in the hands of the undersigned on or before MAY 15, 1909.

Further particulars may be obtained from

P. HEBBLETHWAITE, Registrar.

THE UNIVERSITY OF SHEFFIELD.

PROFESSORSHIP OF ECONOMICS.

The COUNCIL will shortly proceed to the ELECTION of a PROFESSOR OF ECONOMICS in the UNIVERSITY.—Applications must reach the Registrar, from whom further particulars may be obtained, not later than MAY 12, 1909.

W. M. GIBBONS, Registrar.

UNIVERSITY OF BIRMINGHAM.
(FACULTY OF ARTS.)

PROFESSORSHIP OF FRENCH LANGUAGE AND LITERATURE.

The COUNCIL invites applications for the CHAIR OF FRENCH LANGUAGE AND LITERATURE. Stipend 500*l*. per annum. The successful Candidate will be required to enter on his duties on OCTOBER 1, 1909.

Applications, accompanied by not less than three References, should be sent to the undersigned on or before MAY 8. Sixty-five copies should be sent.

Testimonials are not required.

Further particulars may be obtained from

GEO. H. MORLEY, Secretary.

UNIVERSITY OF BIRMINGHAM.
(FACULTY OF SCIENCE.)

PROFESSORSHIP OF BOTANY AND VEGETABLE PHYSIOLOGY.

The COUNCIL invites applications for the CHAIR OF BOTANY AND VEGETABLE PHYSIOLOGY. Stipend 500*l*. per annum. The successful Candidate will be required to enter on his duties on OCTOBER 1, 1909.

Applications, accompanied by not less than three References, should be sent to the undersigned on or before MAY 1. Sixty-five copies should be sent.

Testimonials are not required.

Further particulars may be obtained from

GEO. H. MORLEY, Secretary.

UNIVERSITY OF MANCHESTER.

PROFESSORSHIP OF FRENCH.

The COUNCIL is about to appoint a PROFESSOR of FRENCH. Salary, 600*l*. per annum.

Applications should be sent not later than MAY 22 to the REGISTRAR, from whom further particulars may be obtained.

UNIVERSITY OF MANCHESTER.

The COUNCIL is about to appoint an ASSISTANT LECTURER in BOTANY. A knowledge of Vegetable Physiology will be required.—For further particulars apply to THE REGISTRAR.

LINDSEY COUNTY COUNCIL EDUCATION COMMITTEE.

SCUNTHORPE HIGHER ELEMENTARY SCHOOL AND PUPIL-TEACHERS' CENTRE.

WANTED, after MIDSUMMER, a HEAD MASTER for a MIXED HIGHER ELEMENTARY SCHOOL and PUPIL-TEACHERS' CENTRE (MIXED).

Accommodation for 240 Children and 72 Pupil-Teachers and Preparatory Students. New Buildings with Laboratories. Workshop, and Rooms for Domestic Subjects.

Applicants must have had some experience in Schools other than Elementary. Salary 250*l*. per annum.

Forms of Application from THE SECRETARY, 286, High Street, Lincoln, to whom they must be returned on or before APRIL 30.

COUNTY BOROUGH OF SUNDERLAND.

BEDE COLLEGIATE SCHOOL.

WANTED, for September 14, CLASSICAL MISTRESS for GIRLS' SECTION of SCHOOL. Disciplinarian. Honours in Classics at Oxford or Cambridge and some teaching experience in a good Secondary School indispensable. Salary according to Scale, but not less than 130*l*. to begin with.

Application Form and Scale of Salaries obtainable on sending stamped addressed envelope to the undersigned, who will receive applications up to MAY 9.

T. W. BRYERS, Education Secretary,
15, John Street, Sunderland.

BATLEY (BOYS) GRAMMAR SCHOOL.

Head Master—N. L. FRAZER, M.A.

ASSISTANT MASTER REQUIRED for SEPTEMBER, Graduate preferably, with experience in teaching Young Boys. Strong qualifications in English; Class Singing and Nature Study recommendations. Games. Salary 140*l*. per annum.—Application Forms, which must be returned to me not later than MAY 15, 1909, may be obtained from

G. R. H. DANBY, M.A. Oxon., Secretary to the Governors.

Education Offices, Batley.

ART MASTER.—The COUNCIL of the REDRUTH SCHOOL OF ART invite applications for the position of ART MASTER.

Candidates are desired to forward particulars of their qualifications, together with copies of recent Testimonials, to the Secretary, from whom further information may be obtained, not later than APRIL 14.

JAMES A. WINN, Secretary.

March 26, 1909.

SCHOLASTIC.—AFTER-EASTER VACANCIES.

(a) Graduate (Oxford, Cambridge, or London) for Math. to Lond. Matric., and some general subjects. Salary 90*l*. res. rising. (b) Math. and Engl. chiefly. 120*l*. res. Preparatory School. (c) History and some Classics. Sal. not less than 150*l*. Publ. Sec. School. (d) Organ, Singing, and some Form work. 100*l*. res. Prep. School.—Further particulars of the above and of many other vacancies, Senior and Junior, from BIVER & CO., 122, Regent Street, W. (est. 1858).

ASSISTANTS REQUIRED to WORK on a
NEW DICTIONARY.—Reply, giving particulars of experience, to Box 1582, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, E.C.

Yearly Subscription, free by post, Inland, 15s. 3d.; Foreign, 18s. Entered at the New York Post Office as Second Class matter.

NOTICE.—FRIDAY NEXT being GOOD FRIDAY, the ATHENÆUM will be published on WEDNESDAY Afternoon at 2 o'clock.—ADVERTISEMENTS should be at the Office not later than 5 o'clock on TUESDAY Evening.

COUNTY OF LONDON.

A LADY TEACHER is REQUIRED for the WOMEN'S LIFE CLASSES at the L.C.C. HAMMERSMITH SCHOOL of ARTS and CRAFTS, LIME GROVE, SHEPHERD'S BUSH, W., on One Afternoon and Two Evening Attendances a Week at a fee of 10s. 6d. an attendance of about Three Hours. Applications should be made on the Official Form, to be obtained from the EDUCATION OFFICER, London County Council, Victoria Embankment, W.C., to whom they must be returned not later than 11 A.M., on April 10, 1909, accompanied by copies of three Testimonials of recent date. All communications on the subject must be endorsed T.1, and a stamped addressed foolscap envelope must be enclosed. Canvassing either directly or indirectly will be held to be a disqualification for employment.

G. L. GOMME, Clerk of the London County Council.

Education Offices, Victoria Embankment, W.C.,

March 31, 1909.

Situations Wanted.

STUDIOUS YOUNG LADY (21), desires POST as SECRETARIAL COMPANION to Literary or Scientific Lady or Gentleman. Drawing ability; taste for Natural History. A year's experience as confidential clerk.—Box 1583, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

Miscellaneous.

JOURNALISM.—A splendid OPENING occurs for a YOUNG GENTLEMAN with Literary taste to take over an undertaking quite ready to place upon the market. Immediate success absolutely assured. Capital required about 500*l*. Such an opportunity rarely occurs, as the scheme is a self-capitalizing one. Only Principals dealt with.—Address SMART, care of Fulbroke, Arnott & Co., Solicitors, 99, Cannon Street, London, E.C.

UNIONIST M.P.s, JOURNALISTS,
AUTHORS.—Competent STENOGRAPHER, with literary ability, SEEKS WORK. Useful knowledge matters Journalistic. German and French Languages. Own Remington.—Letters to SIGNET, 55, Chancery Lane.

TRANSLATIONS INTO ENGLISH from French, Italian, Spanish, Portuguese, German, Dutch, Danon-Norwegian, and Swedish.—W. T. CURTIS, 10, Haringey Park, Crouch End, N.

RESEARCH WORK at the British Museum and Translations UNDERTAKEN. Experienced.—Miss KENNEDY, 54, Grove End Road, London, N.W.

REGINALD GLENCROSS, M.A. LL.B. Cantab., undertakes GENEALOGICAL and RESEARCH WORK. Three years' experience in Ulster's Office, Dublin. Highest references. Terms moderate.—3, Chaloners Street, West Kensington.

LITERARY RESEARCH undertaken at the British Museum and elsewhere on moderate terms. Excellent Testimonials.—A. B., Box 1062, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

PUBLIC-HOUSE REFORM.—The People's Refreshment House Association, Ltd., founded by the Bishop of Chester, manages 63 Licensed Inns. Ask for List and Report. APPLY FOR 1*l*. SHARES. 5 per cent paid since 1899. P.R.H.A., Broadway Chambers, Westminster.

FOR SALE, 169 vols. SCRIPTORES LATINI in USUM DELPHINI, 12*l*.; 56 vols. POETAE BUCOLICI et DIDACTICI, 16*l*. All above handsomely bound, in calf. Almost new condition.—ACTON, Kilmacurragh, Rathdrum.

Type-Writers, &c.

TYPE-WRITING.—AUTHORS' MSS., &c., accurately and intelligently COPIED. 9d. 1,000 words; with Carbon Copy 1s. Letters Duplicated, 2s. 100.—Miss ARCHER, 14, St. Andrew's Chambers, Wells Street, Oxford Street.

TYPE-WRITING OF EVERY DESCRIPTION
by EXPERT, 8d. per 1,000 words. Clear Carbon Copies, 3d. per 1,000 words. Accuracy and prompt return guaranteed. Reliable References.—NORA DICKINSON, 1, Sackville Gardens, Ilford.

TYPE-WRITER.
KINDLY NOTE CHANGE OF ADDRESS.

MISS E. M. TIGAR.

19, MAITLAND PARK VILLAS, Haverstock Hill, N.W.

TYPE-WRITING.—The WEST KENSINGTON OFFICES. Authors' MSS., Translations, &c. Legal and General Copying. Private Dictation Room. Circulars, &c. Duplicated. Usual Terms. References. Established sixteen years.—SIKES & SIKES, 223A, Hammersmith Road, London, W.

AUTHORS' MSS. TYPED from 6d. 1,000 words; Scientific from 9d. Accuracy guaranteed. Specimens sent.—Miss HABERSTON, LL.A., St. Andrew's (Hons. Science and Language), 101, Palmerston Road, Southsea.

AUTHORS' MSS., NOVELS, STORIES, PLAYS, ESSAYS TYPE-WRITTEN with complete accuracy, 9d. per 1,000 words. Clear Carbon Copies guaranteed. References to well-known Writers.—M. STUART, Allendale, Kymberley Road, Harrow.

TYPE-WRITING, 9d. per 1,000 words. All kinds of MSS. accurately typed. Clear Carbon Copies, 3d. per 1,000. References to well-known Authors. Oxford Higher Local. Tel. 1272, Richmond P.O.—M. KING, 24, Forest Road, Kew Gardens, S.W.

AUTHORS' MSS., 9d. per 1,000 words. Sermons, Plays, and all kinds of TYPE-WRITING carefully done at home (Remington). Good paper. Orders promptly executed. Duplicating from 3s. 6d. per 100.—M. L. L., 18, Edgeley Road, Clapham, S.W.

TYPE-WRITING 9d. per 1,000 words; Carbons 3d. French and German Type-writing 1s. per 1,000. Translations. Duplicating 3s. 100 Copies (quarto), 15s. per 1,000. Best work, accuracy, and promptitude.—G. WALKER, 14, Park Road, New Cross, S.E.

TYPE-WRITING undertaken by highly educated Women (Classical Tripos; Cambridge Higher Local; Modern Languages). Research, Revision, Translation, Shorthand, Dictation Room.—THE CAMBRIDGE TYPE-WRITING AGENCY, 10, Duke Street, Adelphi, W.C.

Catalogues.

BERTRAM DOBELL, SECOND-HAND BOOKSELLER and PUBLISHER, 77, Charing Cross Road, London, W.C. A large Stock of Old and Rare Books in English Literature, including Poetry and the Drama—Shakespeareana—First Editions of Famous Authors—Manuscripts—Illustrated Books, &c. CATALOGUES free on application.

ANCIENT and MODERN COINS.—Collectors and Antiquarians are invited to apply to SPINK & SON, Limited, for Specimen Copy (gratis) of their NUMISMATIC CIRCULAR. The finest Greek, Roman, and English Coins on View and for Sale at Moderate Prices.—SPINK & SON, Limited, Experts, Valuers, and Cataloguers, 16, 17, and 18, Piccadilly, London, W. Established upwards of a Century.

CATALOGUE No. 50.—Drawings by Turner, Prout, Ruskin, &c.—Turner's Liber Studiorum and other Engravings—Proofs touched by Turner—Constable's English Landscape—Etchings by Whistler—Japanese Colour Prints—Illustrated Books. Post free, Sixpence.—WM. WARD, 2, Church Terrace, Richmond, Surrey.

JUST PUBLISHED. CATALOGUE of BOOKS, including interesting Items relating to Africa, America, Angling, Arctic, Australia, the Drama, Hunting, Sport, Travels, &c.—Post free of JAMES RIMELL & SON, 53, Shaftesbury Avenue, London, W. Books and Engravings Bought.

GLAISHER'S REMAINDER BOOK CATALOGUE For MARCH (No. 363). NOW READY, and will be forwarded on application. It comprises a specially attractive Selection of Publishers' Remainder including many Good Bargains. WILLIAM GLAISHER, LTD., Booksellers, 265, HIGH HOLBORN, LONDON.

MAGGS BROS., 109, Strand, London, W.C. DEALERS IN RARE and VALUABLE BOOKS, PRINTS, and AUTOGRAPHS. CATALOGUES sent post free to all parts of the World. Export Orders Solicited. Telegraphic and Cable Address: "Bibliolite, London." Telephone: "Gerrard 4664."

BOOKS.—ALL OUT-OF-PRINT and RARE BOOKS on any subject SUPPLIED. The most expert Bookfinder extant. Please state wants and ask for CATALOGUE. I make a special feature of exchanging any Saleable Books for others selected from my various Lists. Special List of 2,000 Books I particularly want post free.—EDW. BAKER'S Great Bookshop, 14-16, John Bright Street, Birmingham.—Yellow Book, 13 vols. 2l. 10s.; Trigg's Art Garden Design, Italy, 3l. guineas for 2ls.; E. Fitzgerald's Works, 7 vols. 3l. 3s.

THE following CATALOGUES of portions of E. H. BLACKWELL'S Stock are in active preparation, and will be issued shortly:—

CXXXII. EUROPEAN PHILOLOGY, including ANGLO-SAXON—Gothic—Old, Middle, and New English—British Dialects—Romance Languages, &c.

CXXXIII. HISTORY and LITERATURE OF INDIA and the FAR EAST, including interesting Items from the LIBRARY of the late CUTHBERT SHIELDS, M.A. Oxon; Duplicates from an important Oriental Library, &c.

CXXXIV. BRITISH TOPOGRAPHY and LOCAL HISTORY, containing about 2,000 Items, many of exceptional interest.

50 and 51, BROAD STREET, OXFORD.

CATALOGUE, 1909, No. 2, Art, Beardsley, Chess, Drama, Judaica, Napoleon, Wilde, and other interesting items. Free on application.—NEUMAIER & GODWIN, 75, Charing Cross Road, London, W.C.

Authors' Agents.

TO AUTHORS.—LITERARY AGENT has opportunity of INTRODUCING THEOLOGICAL WORKS to a high-class FIRM of PUBLISHERS. No fees.—Write A. E. C., Box 5105, Willings, 125, Strand, W.C.

THE AUTHOR'S AGENCY.—Established 1879. The interests of Authors capably represented. Agreements for Publishing arranged. MSS. placed with Publishers.—Terms and Testimonials on application to Mr. A. M. BURGHES, 24, Paternoster Row.

MR. GEORGE LARNER, Accountant and Licensed Valuer to the Bookselling, Publishing, Newspaper, Printing, and Stationery Trades. Partnerships Arranged. Balance Sheets and Trading Accounts Prepared and Audited. All Business carried out under Mr. Lerner's personal supervision.—28, 29, and 30, Paternoster Row, E.C., Secretary to the Booksellers' Provident Institution.

Printers.

FAMILY RECORDS, PEDIGREES, MEMOIRS, &c., PRINTED under Expert Supervision, and Searches made where MS. is incomplete. Write for Estimates and all Particulars.—GERRARDS, LTD. (The Westminster Press), Producers of Printing of Distinction, at 411A, Harrow Road, London, W.

Sales by Auction.

Books and Manuscripts.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on TUESDAY, April 6, at 1 o'clock precisely, BOOKS and MANUSCRIPTS, including the Property of Sir ROBERT EDGUMBE; the Property of E. BERNARD, Esq.; the LIBRARY of the late W. MITCHELL, Esq., of Grosvenor Street, W. (sold by order of the Executors); and other Properties, comprising Biographical and Historical Works—Topography and Archaeology—Natural History and Botany—French and English Illustrated Books—Scientific Publications—Transactions of Learned Societies—Poetical Works—Books Illustrated by Cruikshank, "Phiz," and others—Law Reports in all the Courts, with Statutes, 1865 to 1908, 348 vols.—Law Reports, an extensive Collection in 294 vols.—Linnean Society's Transactions—Ackermann's Colleges of Winchester, &c., in the Original Numbers—Blomefield's History of Norfolk, 5 vols., 1739-75, &c. May be viewed. Catalogues may be had.

A Valuable Collection of Greek Coins and the Numismatic Library of an American Collector.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on TUESDAY, April 20, at 1 o'clock precisely, a valuable Collection of GREEK COINS in Gold, Electrum, Silver, and Copper, chiefly selected for their artistic merit, and the NUMISMATIC LIBRARY of an AMERICAN COLLECTOR. Among the most noteworthy examples of ancient Greek monetary art represented in this Collection are the following Coins:—Lot 8, Litra of Aetna—13, Electrum of Assos—20, Archaic Stater of Corinth—28, Stater of Elis, with eagle's head (the finest known specimen of this artistic type)—30, Stater of Elis, with noble head of Hera—48, Stater of Rhodes, of very fine style—49, Litra of Segesta—50, Tetradrachm of Selinus—53-70, a fine Series of Syracusan Tetradrachms of the transitional and best art periods, some with Artists' Signatures—71, Dekadrachm of Syracuse, by Euainetos—85-97, a beautiful Series of Thurian Distaters and Staters—and a choice Selection of Copper Coins, chiefly with fine Patina, including an excellent Portrait Coin of the famous Cleopatra, &c. May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

A Selection of Greek Coins in Gold, Silver, and Copper from a well-known Cabinet.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on WEDNESDAY, April 21, at 1 o'clock precisely, a selection of GREEK COINS in Gold, Silver, and Copper, from a well-known Cabinet. Among the noteworthy Coins in this Collection are:—Lot 13, Tetradrachm of Mausolus—19, Tetradrachm of Cnossus—32, Stater of Elis—53, Dekadrachm of Syracuse, with Artist's Signature, &c. May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

The valuable Collection of Greek Coins the Property of Prof. L. WHITE-KING, C.S.I. LL.D. F.S.A.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on THURSDAY, April 22, and Following Day, at 1 o'clock precisely, the valuable COLLECTION of GREEK COINS in Gold, Electrum, Silver, and Copper, the Property of Prof. L. WHITE-KING, C.S.I. LL.D. F.S.A. May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

The valuable Collection of Japanese Colour Prints, Illustrated Books, and a few Kakemono, the Property of JOHN STEWART HAPPER, Esq., of New York City, U.S.A.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on MONDAY, April 26, and Three Following Days, at 1 o'clock precisely, the valuable COLLECTION of JAPANESE COLOUR PRINTS, ILLUSTRATED BOOKS, and a few KAKEMONO, the Property of JOHN STEWART HAPPER, Esq., of New York City, U.S.A. May be viewed on April 22, 23, and 24. Catalogues may be had, price 1s. each, or, with Illustrations, 5s. each.

Japanese Colour Prints and Surimono, comprising the Collections of LAWRENCE T. W. SALT, Esq., A. G. WEBSTER, Esq., and Capt. V. J. SCANTLEBURY.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on FRIDAY, April 30, at 1 o'clock precisely, JAPANESE COLOUR PRINTS and SURIMONO, comprising the COLLECTIONS of LAWRENCE T. W. SALT, Esq., of Egerton Terrace, S.W., A. G. WEBSTER, Esq., of Lincoln, and Capt. V. J. SCANTLEBURY. May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

MESSRS. CHRISTIE, MANSON & WOODS respectfully give notice that they will hold the following SALES by AUCTION at their Great Rooms, King Street, St. James's Square, the Sales commencing at 1 o'clock precisely:

On MONDAY, April 5, ANCIENT and MODERN PICTURES and DRAWINGS.

On TUESDAY, April 6, the COLLECTION of OLD ENGLISH POTTERY and PORCELAIN of the late J. E. WILKINSON, Esq.; Porcelain and Old English Furniture from various sources.

The Library of the late JOHN BRUNSKILL, Esq., removed from Gaisgill, Elstree, Herts (by order of the Executors).

MESSRS. HODGSON & CO. will SELL by AUCTION at their Rooms, 115, Chancery Lane, W.C., on TUESDAY, April 6, and Following Day, at 1 o'clock, the above LIBRARY, comprising fine Library Editions of Chaucer, Spenser, Marlowe, Shakespeare, Sir T. Browne, Fielding, Gibbon, Hallam, and others—a Set of the English Historical Review, from the commencement to 1909—Higgins's Anacalypsis, &c., 3 vols.—Bruce's Roman Wall, Best Edition—a few Rare Editions of the Writings of Giordano Bruno, including the Acrotismus, of 1588, with a Presentation Inscription in the Author's Hand—Books relating to America and Canada—Editions of the Classics, including Modern Critical Texts, and Standard Works in General Literature. To which are added other Properties, comprising Thackeray's Works, Library Edition, 22 vols.—Combe's Napoleon, 1815, and other Books with Coloured Plates—Landor's Poems, First Edition, 1795—Presentation Copies from Lewis Carroll and other esteemed Writers—also Modern Philosophical Works from the Library of the late HERBERT SPENCER, Esq. (sold by order of the Trustee), &c. To be viewed and Catalogues had.

A Collection of Books Relating to America—also a Selection from the Library of a Nobleman.

MESSRS. HODGSON & CO. will SELL by AUCTION at their Rooms, 115, Chancery Lane, W.C., on THURSDAY, April 29, at 1 o'clock a COLLECTION of BOOKS RELATING TO AMERICA, comprising Early Voyages and Books on Navigation—Works relating to the First Settlements of the Colonies and to the American Indians—Tracts and Pamphlets on the Revolution—Histories of the States and Counties—Travels in Canada and Hudson's Bay—Books on Central and South America, and the West Indies—American Printed Books, &c., mostly in old calf bindings or in the original boards, also an Early Mezzotint Portrait of George Washington—to which is added a SELECTION FROM THE LIBRARY OF A NOBLEMAN, comprising Buck's Views in Great Britain, 4 vols.—the Works of Piranesi (Early Impressions), and other Architectural Books—Early Works on Gardening—Folio Volumes with Engravings—Old Atlases—Tracts relating to the Popish Plot—Le Sacre de Louis XV., in morocco by Padeloup—La Galerie du Palais Royal, in old French morocco—Albums of Original Water-Colour Drawings, &c. Catalogues on application.

Valuable Books and Original Drawings from the Collection of the late T. C. BLOFELD, Esq., formerly Chancellor of the Diocese of Norwich (by Order of the Executors).

MESSRS. HODGSON & CO. will SELL by AUCTION at their Rooms, 115, Chancery Lane, W.C., on FRIDAY, April 30th, at 1 o'clock, VALUABLE BOOKS from the above LIBRARY, comprising Topographical and Antiquarian Works—Early Printed and Black Letter Books—an Illuminated Horæ on Vellum—Rare Books in Seventeenth-Century Literature—MSS. &c.; also Original Water-Colour Drawings and Engravings from the same Collection. Catalogues on application.

STEVENS'S AUCTION ROOMS, Established 1760.

TUESDAY NEXT at half-past 12 o'clock.

GENERAL NATURAL HISTORY SPECIMENS, including Heads and Horns of Animals—Eggs and Skins of Birds—British and Exotic Lepidoptera—Land and Freshwater Shells—Birds and Animals beautifully mounted in Glass Cases—Cabinets of various sizes—and other Accessories relating to Natural History.

Mr. J. C. STEVENS will SELL the above Property by AUCTION at his Rooms, 38, King Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C. On view day prior 10 to 4 and morning of Sale. Catalogues on application.

Books and Manuscripts.

MESSRS. PUTTICK & SIMPSON will SELL by AUCTION at their Galleries, 47, Leicester Square, W.C., on WEDNESDAY, APRIL 21, and Following Day, at ten minutes past 1 o'clock precisely, the LIBRARY of the late EDWARD CHAPLIN, Esq., of Hamburg, removed from that city, and other Properties, including First Editions of the Works of Dickens, Thackeray, A. Beckett, Lever, &c., in the Original Parts—Books with Coloured Plates by Rowlandson, Cruikshank, and Leech—a Collection of Works relating to the County of Notts—Books on the Fine Arts—Ackermann's Microcosm of London, Original Edition—Redford's Art Sales—Burlington Fine Arts Club Exhibition Catalogues—Sporting Books with Coloured Plates by Alken—Thornton's Tour—a long run of the Sporting Magazine—a Collection of Autograph Letters, Engravings, &c. Catalogue in preparation.

Valuable Books.

HAMPTON & SONS will SELL by AUCTION at 30, Pembroke Square, Notting Hill Gate, on APRIL 21 and 22, at 1 o'clock, the valuable COLLECTION of BOOKS formed by the late DAVID MURRAY, Esq. (by order of the Executors), amongst which will be found Burton's Arabian Nights, with Supplement—Smith's British Mezzotint Portraits—Walpole's Anecdotes of Painting—Jackson's Wood Engraving—Bartsch, Le Peinture Graveur—Hamerton's Etching and Etchers—National Portrait Gallery—Ruskin's Modern Painters, Stones of Venice, Seven Lamps, Arrows of the Chase, &c.—Bewick's Quadrupeds—Crowe and Cavalcaselle's Lives of Titian and Raphael—Froude's History of England—Grote's History of Greece—Burton's Pilgrimage to El Medinah—Shakespeare's Works, 12 vols.—Billing's Baronial and Ecclesiastical Antiquities of Scotland—Buller's Birds of New Zealand—Dürer, La Vie de Sainte Vierge—Ottley's History of Engraving—Survey of Western Palestine—L'Art 49 vols.—Ruins of Palmyra and Balbec—Gillray Caricatures and Suppressed Plates and Vol. of Text—Holbein's Portraits of Illustrious Personages—Rembrandt, L'Œuvre, with the Volume of Free Subjects. Catalogues of the AUCTIONEERS, 2 and 3, Cockspur Street, S.W.

AT THE CONDUIT STREET AUCTION GALLERIES, On MONDAY and TUESDAY NEXT, April 5 and 6,

By Order of a Nobleman, an Early Italian Plaque of the Della Robbia School—a Sixteenth-Century Majolica Plaque—Pictures of the Early English School (by order of a Lady), including several Portraits—a Collection of Bronzes—Old Brussels Tapestry—a fine Violin by Gaspar da Salo—a Pair of Hepplewhite Caned Settees—Miniatures—Old Clocks—Antique Furniture, &c.—TO BE SOLD by AUCTION by MESSRS.

KNIGHT, FRANK & RUTLEY, at their Galleries, 9, Conduit Street, and 23A, Maddox Street, as above, at 1 o'clock precisely each day. Now on view. Catalogues free.

Executors, Solicitors, and Owners please note that these GALLERIES are OPEN DAILY to receive small or large parcels of JEWELLERY, SILVER, PICTURES, FURNITURE, BOOKS, CHINA, ANTIQUES and other Property for EARLY SALE BY AUCTION.

For Magazines, &c., see p. 423.

KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRÜBNER & CO., LIMITED.

DUBLIN CASTLE AND THE IRISH PEOPLE. By R. BARRY O'BRIEN. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

FRANCIA'S MASTERPIECE. By MONTGOMERY CARMICHAEL. Illustrated. Imperial 16mo, 5s. net.

THE STORY OF THE JEWISH PEOPLE. By JACK M. MYERS. With a Prefatory Note by the Very Rev. the CHIEF RABBI. In 2 vols. Crown 8vo, 1s. 6d. net each.

HISTORY OF THE GERMAN PEOPLE AT THE CLOSE OF THE MIDDLE AGES. By JOHANNES JANSSEN. Translated by A. M. CHRISTIE. Vols. XIII. and XIV. in the Press. 14 vols. 8vo, 1l. 5s. per 2 vols.

LANGUAGE AND CHARACTER OF THE ROMAN PEOPLE. Translated from the German of OSCAR WEISE, with Additional Notes and References for English Readers by Prof. H. A. STRONG, M.A. LL.D., and A. Y. CAMPBELL, B.A. Demy 8vo, 6s. net.

A GERMAN STAFF OFFICER IN INDIA. By COUNT HANS VON KOENIGSMARCK. With Illustrations and a Map. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

THE ELEMENTS OF DUTCH. By Dr. J. M. HOOGVLIET. Seventh Edition. Thoroughly Revised and Enlarged from Dr. F. AHN'S Concise Grammar of the Dutch Language. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

HUNGARIAN GRAMMAR. By C. ARTHUR and ILONA GINEVER. Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

THE TURKISH VADE-MECUM OF OTTOMAN COLLOQUIAL LANGUAGE. Containing a Concise Ottoman Grammar; a carefully selected Vocabulary, Alphabetically arranged, in Two Parts—English and Turkish, and Turkish and English; also a few Familiar Dialogues and Naval and Military Terms. The whole in English Characters, the Pronunciation being fully indicated. By J. W. REDHOUSE, M.R.A.S. Fourth Edition, Revised. 32mo, bound in limp leather, suitable for the pocket, 6s.

MILITARY HANDBOOKS FOR OFFICERS & N.C.O.'s. NEW VOLUME.

WHAT TO APPLY IN TACTICAL PROBLEMS. By Capt. A. F. BECKE, late R.F.A., Joint Author of 'Military History applied to Modern Warfare.' With numerous Diagrams and Sketches. Small crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

PLEA FOR A SIMPLER FAITH. By G. S. KEITH. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

NEW CATHOLIC PUBLICATIONS.

CHOICE MORSELS OF THE BREAD OF LIFE; or Select Readings from the Old Testament. Compiled by CHARLES COPPENS, S.J. The Douay Version and Notes. Pott 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d. net; leather, 3s. 6d. net.

THE PROBLEM OF EVOLUTION. By Rev. ERIC WASMANN, S.J. Demy 8vo, 6s. net.

NEW VOLUMES IN

THE INTERNATIONAL CATHOLIC LIBRARY. HEORTOLOGY. A History of the Christian Festivals from their Origin to the Present Day. By Dr. K. A. HEINRICH KELLNER, Professor of Catholic Theology at the University of Bonn, translated from the Second (corrected and enlarged) Edition with the Author's permission, by a Priest of the Diocese of Westminster. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d.

THE DOCTRINE OF THE ATONEMENT An Historical Study. By J. RIVIÈRE. Translated by LUIGI CAPPADelta. Prefaced by Letter of Approval from Cardinal Merry del Val. General Index, Scripture Index, Conspectus Patrum. In 2 vols. demy 8vo, each 7s. 6d.

BOOKS ON EGYPT AND CHALDÆA. NEW VOLUMES.

THE BOOK OF THE KINGS OF EGYPT. By E. A. WALLIS BUDGE, M.A. LL.D. In 2 vols. crown 8vo, 12s. net.

THE LITURGY OF FUNERARY OFFERINGS. By Dr. E. A. WALLIS BUDGE, M.A. LL.D. Crown 8vo, 6s. net.

THE BOOK OF THE DEAD. Text. By Dr. E. A. WALLIS BUDGE, M.A. LL.D. In 3 vols. crown 8vo, 6s. net each.

THE BOOK OF OPENING THE MOUTH. By Dr. E. A. WALLIS BUDGE. In 2 vols. crown 8vo, 6s. net each.

NEW VOLUMES OF

THE INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES.

THE TRANSFORMATIONS OF THE ANIMAL WORLD. By M. CHARLES DÉPERET, Corresponding Member of the Institut de France, and Dean of the Faculty of Science at the Université de Lyon. Crown 8vo, 5s.

HUMAN SPEECH: its Physical Basis. By N. C. MACNAMARA, F.R.C.S. Crown 8vo, 5s.

MUSIC: its Laws and Evolution. By JULES COMBARIEU. Lecturer at the Collège de France. Translated by JOSEPH SKELLON. Crown 8vo, 5s. [In the press.]

PERIODIC LAW. By A. E. GARRETT, Crown 8vo, 5s. [In the press.]

THE MORAL IDEAL: an Historic Study New and Revised Edition. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

THE LITTLE FLOWERS OF ST. FRANCIS OF ASSISI. With Frontispiece in Photogravure. Pott 8vo, cloth, 1s. 6d.; leather, 2s. net.

BARNES.—A SELECTION FROM THE POEMS OF RURAL LIFE IN THE DORSET DIALECT. By WILLIAM BARNES. Edited by his Son. Copyright Edition. Pott 8vo, cloth, 1s. 6d. net; leather, 2s. net.

MODERN SPIRITISM. A Critical Examination of its Phenomena, Character and Teaching, in the Light of the Known Facts. By J. GODFREY RAUPERT. Second Edition. Crown 8vo, 6s. net.

THE LIFE OF JEHOSHUA, the Prophet of Nazareth. An Occult Study and a Key to the Bible. Containing the History of an Initiate. By FRANZ HARTMANN, M.D., Author of 'Magic, Black and White,' 'Paracelsus,' &c. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d.

THE KEY OF SOLOMON THE KING (Clavicula Salomonis). Translated and Edited from Ancient MSS. in the British Museum. By S. LIDDELL MACGREGOR MATHERS, Author of 'The Kabbalah Unveiled,' 'The Tarot,' &c. With Plates. Crown 4to, cloth, 10s. 6d. net.

RESURRECTIO CHRISTI. By ANONYMOUS. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

This work is an attempt to reconsider the evidence for the Resurrection in the light of Psychical Research. The author claims to find support for his conclusions in early documents, the value of which has been hitherto unrecognized.

THE ÆNEID OF VIRGIL. Books VII.-XII. Translated into Blank Verse by HENRY SMITH WRIGHT, B.A. Vol. II., completing the Æneid. Fcap. 8vo, 5s. net. "Mr. Wright's scholarly translation into blank verse places this old-world classic within the mental grasp of the masses, and in doing this he has done a service to the literature of the day for which the public are very much indebted to him."—United Service Gazette.

WRITE FOR OUR SPRING LIST.

DRYDEN HOUSE, GERRARD STREET, LONDON, W.

MR. HEINEMANN'S NEW BOOKS.WE TWO IN WEST AFRICA.

By DECIMA MOORE and Major F. GORDON
GUGGISBERG, C.M.G. R.E.

With Map and many Illustrations from Photographs and Drawings, 1 vol. demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

"The book is extremely well written; it is full of light and shade, of humour and bright word pictures, and at the same time of valuable information."—Standard.

CONQUERING THE ARCTIC ICE.

By EJNAR MIKKELSEN.

Profusely illustrated. Demy 8vo, 20s. net.

"Few books in the now imposing mass of Arctic literature contain more varied matter; none certainly are written with more modesty, or with a greater gift of relating adventure in simple yet graphic fashion."—Athenæum.

RECOLLECTIONS OF BARON DE FRÉNILLY, PEER OF FRANCE (1768-1828).

With a Portrait. Demy 8vo, 10s. net.

"It is the testimony of an eye-witness to great happenings—full of vivacity, brilliant characterization, extraordinarily alive."—Nation.

WILD FLOWERS OF THE BRITISH ISLES.

Illustrated and Written by H. ISABEL ADAMS, F.L.S.

With 75 Coloured Plates. 1 vol. 30s. net.

"She has pictured her examples with delicacy and grace, also with due regard to detail. The plates show not only the flower but also the leaf and stem, and often the root."—Athenæum.

NEW SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.AN INCOMPLEAT ETONIAN.

By FRANK DANBY,

Author of 'Pigs in Clover,' 'The Heart of a Child,' &c.

FRATERNITY.

By JOHN GALSWORTHY, [2nd Imp.]

Author of 'The Man of Property' and 'The Country House.'

"There are many things in this book that are unforgettable; there are whole chapters that are masterpieces of delicate and restrained workmanship."—Standard.

RACHEL LORIAN.

By Mrs. HENRY DUDENEY,

Author of 'Folly Corner,' &c. [2nd Imp.]

"It is the real thing."—Daily Telegraph.

UNCLE GREGORY.

By GEORGE SANDEMAN.

"Wholly delicious. The characters stand out in clear-cut individuality and most convincing vitality."—Outlook.

SYRINX.

By LAURENCE NORTH.

"It is seldom indeed that one meets a book at once so virile and so excellent in manner and matter."—Sketch.

MAURICE GUEST.

By H. H. RICHARDSON. [2nd Imp.]

"One of the most remarkable novels ever written."—Evening Standard.

THE CLIMBER.

By E. F. BENSON, Author of 'Sheaves,' &c.

"The heroine may be likened to the immortal figure of Becky Sharp. It must be acknowledged that Mr. Benson's study is eminently successful."—Spectator.

A PRINCE OF DREAMERS.

By FLORA ANNIE STEEL,
Author of 'On the Face of the Waters.'

"Mrs. Steel has before now expressed in fiction the glamour of the Empire of India as few, if any, other English novelists have succeeded in doing. Yet in her latest novel she has perhaps surpassed in that respect even her most remarkable book, 'On the Face of the Waters.'"—Morning Post.

WM. HEINEMANN, 21, Bedford Street, W.C.

ALCIDE PICARD

PUBLISHER

18 and 20, rue Soufflot, PARIS

On Sale at all Booksellers'

SALOMON REINACH ORPHEUS

HISTOIRE GENERALE DES RELIGIONS

650 pages, fcap. 8vo, with an extensive Bibliography and Index, printed in large type on specially made "Bible" paper, with a Frontispiece from Raphaël

FULL LAMBSKIN, PRICE NET

Fcs. 6; 4/10; $1.20 cts.

Bibliothèque de l'Enseignement
des Beaux-Arts

The most complete Fine - Art Series ever published. Patronized by the Ministère des Beaux-Arts. Edited by the best authorities on each subject.

Extra crown 8vo

Price of Volume: Paper, fcs. 4; 3/3; 80 cts.
Cloth, fcs. 5; 4/-; $1

THE SIXTIETH VOLUME.

JUST ISSUED.

LA SCULPTURE ESPAGNOLE

By M. PAUL LAFOND,

Conservateur du Musée de Pau.

In the same Series, published within two years:—

PRECIS
D'HISTOIRE DE L'ART

By M. BAYET,

Directeur de l'Enseignement supérieur au
Ministère de l'Instruction publique.

ARCHEOLOGIE EGYPTIENNE

By M. MASPERO,

Membre de l'Institut, Directeur du Service
des antiquités au Caire, Professeur au Collège de France.

ARCHEOLOGIE GRECQUE

By M. MAX. COLLIGNON,

Membre de l'Institut, Professeur d'Archéologie à la Faculté des Lettres de Paris.

All Books sent post free on receipt of Catalogue price. Our COMPLETE
CATALOGUE sent free on application.

Swan Sonnenschein & Co.,
LTD.*SOME WORKS ON PHILOSOPHY.*NEW VOLUME OF THE LIBRARY OF PHILOSOPHY.
VALUATION:

ITS NATURE AND LAWS.

By Prof. URBAN. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

Other Volumes of the Library of Philosophy.

THE HISTORY OF PHILOSOPHY.

By Dr. J. E. ERDMANN. 3 vols. 42s.

PHILOSOPHY AND POLITICAL ECONOMY.

By Dr. J. BONAR. 10s. 6d. net.

THE HISTORY OF ÆSTHETIC.

By Dr. BERNARD BOSANQUET. 10s. 6d. net.

APPEARANCE AND REALITY.

By F. H. BRADLEY. Third Edition. 12s. net.

THE DEVELOPMENT OF THEOLOGY
SINCE KANT.

By OTTO PFLEIDERER. 10s. 6d. net.

ANALYTICAL PSYCHOLOGY.

By J. F. STOUT. 2 vols. 10s. 6d. net each.

SIGWART'S LOGIC.

Translated by Mrs. B. BOSANQUET. 2 vols.
10s. 6d. net each.

NATURAL RIGHTS.

By D. G. RITCHIE. 10s. 6d. net.

HISTORY OF ENGLISH UTILITARIANISM.

By ERNEST ALBEE. 10s. 6d. net.

THOUGHT AND THINGS.

By Prof. MARK BALDWIN.

Vol. I. EXPERIMENTAL LOGIC. 10s. 6d. net.

Vol. II. REAL LOGIC. 10s. 6d. net.

Vol. III. (Ready shortly.)

ATTENTION.

By W. B. PILLSBURY. 10s. 6d. net.

MENTAL PATHOLOGY.

By G. STORRING, Ph.D. Translated by
Prof. LOVEDAY. 10s. 6d.

THE MIND OF MAN.

By G. SPILLER. 5s. net.

THE OUTLINES OF PSYCHOLOGY.

By O. KÜLPE, Ph.D. Translated by Prof.
E. B. TITCHENER. 10s. 6d.

INTRODUCTION TO THE STUDY OF PHILOSOPHY.

By O. KÜLPE, Ph.D. Translated by Prof.
E. B. TITCHENER. 6s.

PHYSIOLOGICAL PSYCHOLOGY.

By W. WUNDT. Vol. I. 12s.; Vols. II. and III. in preparation.

ETHICS.

By W. WUNDT.

Vol. I. THE FACTS OF THE MORAL LIFE.
7s. 6d.

Vol. II. ETHICAL SYSTEMS. 6s.

Vol. III. THE PRINCIPLES OF MORALITY.
7s. 6d.

LECTURES ON HUMAN AND ANIMAL PSYCHOLOGY.

By W. WUNDT. Translated by Profs.
CREIGHTON and TITCHENER. 10s. 6d.

SWAN SONNENSCHN & CO., LTD.,
25, High Street, London, W.C.

FITZGERALD CENTENARY

LETTERS OF EDWARD FITZGERALD. Edited by W. ALDIS WRIGHT. 2 vols. Globe 8vo, 8s. net. [Eversley Series.]

MORE LETTERS OF EDWARD FITZGERALD. Edited by W. ALDIS WRIGHT. Globe 8vo, 4s. net. [Eversley Series.]

LETTERS OF EDWARD FITZGERALD TO FANNY KEMBLE, 1871-1883. Edited by W. A. WRIGHT. Globe 8vo, 4s. net. [Eversley Series.]

EUPHRANOR AND OTHER MISCELLANIES. Pott 8vo, 2s. 6d. net. [Golden Treasury Series.]

RUBAIYAT OF OMAR KHAYYAM. Rendered into English Verse. 8vo, parchment binding, 10s. 6d.
Also in pott 8vo, 2s. 6d. net. Also cloth elegant, gilt top, 2s. 6d. net, and limp leather, gilt edges, 3s. 6d. net. [Golden Treasury Series.]

RUBAIYAT OF OMAR KHAYYAM. Texts of the Four Editions. With the Original Prefaces and Notes. Extra crown 8vo, 8s. 6d. net.

RUBAIYAT OF OMAR KHAYYAM. Reprints of the First, Second, Third, and Fourth Editions. Demy 16mo, 6d. net each.
The 4 volumes in a box, 2s. 6d. net.

LIFE OF EDWARD FITZGERALD. By A. C. BENSON. Crown 8vo, 2s. net. [English Men of Letters.]

CONCORDANCE TO FITZGERALD'S OMAR KHAYYAM. By J. R. TUTIN. Crown 8vo, 8s. 6d. net.

EIGHT DRAMAS OF CALDERON. Translated by EDWARD FITZGERALD. Globe 8vo, 4s. net. [Eversley Series.]

EASTER HOLIDAYS. MACMILLAN'S GUIDE-BOOKS

GREECE. THE ARCHIPELAGO, CONSTANTINOPLE, THE COASTS OF ASIA MINOR, CRETE, AND CYPRUS. Being a New and thoroughly Revised Edition of the Guide to the Eastern Mediterranean. With 13 Maps and 23 Plans, and a New Chapter on Greek Art by Prof. ERNEST GARDNER. 9s. net.

ITALY AND SICILY. Fifth Edition, with 55 Maps and Plans. 10s. net.

ANCIENT ATHENS. By Ernest ARTHUR GARDNER. With Illustrations, Maps, and Plans. 8vo, 21s. net.

LIFE IN ANCIENT ATHENS: the Social and Public Life of a Classical Athenian from Day to Day. By Prof. T. G. TUCKER, Litt.D. (Camb.). Illustrated. Extra crown 8vo, 5s.

THE ACROPOLIS OF ATHENS. By Prof. MARTIN L. D'OOGHE. Illustrated. 8vo, 17s. net.

RAMBLES AND STUDIES IN GREECE. By the Rev. J. P. MAHAFFY, C.V.O. D.D. Fifth, thoroughly Revised, and Cheaper Edition. Globe 8vo, 5s. net.

MACMILLAN & CO., LTD., London.

VOL. 2, No. 1.

MONTHLY, 2/6

ENGLISH REVIEW

FOR APRIL

will contain Contributions by Thomas Hardy.

Arnold Bennett.
Edward Hutton.
Joseph Conrad.
Baron Ignatz von
Aschendorf.

Stephen Reynolds.
Edward Garnett.
Edward Thomas.
Edgar Jepson.
Dr. Levin Schücking.

The Editorial will deal with National Armament, and there will be a Special Article by the celebrated International Criminologist, Dr. SIMON, on

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT IN FRANCE

Owing to the exigencies of the American Copyright Act, President Taft's article on his judicial decisions and on his election cannot appear until the June Number; but he is contributing to the May Number of the ENGLISH REVIEW an article on the PANAMA CANAL.

Contributors to the preceding Numbers have included Messrs. THOMAS HARDY, HENRY JAMES, JOSEPH CONRAD, GEO. MEREDITH, T. WATTS-DUNTON, JOHN GALSWORTHY, VIOLET HUNT, COUNT TOLSTOI, ANATOLE FRANCE, EMILE VERHAEREN, D. G. ROSSETTI, GERHARDT HAUPTMANN, W. B. YEATS, GRANVILLE BARKER, H. G. WELLS; and among the Contributors to the early Numbers of Vol. II. will be found M. CAMILLE PELLETAN and THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

It will be obvious to the reader who has glanced through this list of names that, in subscribing to the ENGLISH REVIEW, he will be supporting a periodical that does not compete with any Review now existing. On the contrary, the ENGLISH REVIEW is the supplement to all its contemporaries—a supplement almost indispensable to intelligent men and women. Forming, as it does, a speaking-place for the best imaginative writers of Europe, the ENGLISH REVIEW gives its readers not the chronicles and dissertations upon current political facts that will be found in its contemporaries, but the more intimate thoughts or brilliant imaginations of English and foreign writers of excellent ability.

In supporting the ENGLISH REVIEW—the Proprietors have no diffidence in saying it, since in the present state of public taste the Review cannot be expected to make any wide popular appeal—the reader will be not so much supporting a commercial undertaking as performing a duty, since he will be aiding in presenting to the world some of its most valuable thought.

He will also aid in removing from this country the stigma of having it said that such an undertaking is too good to find intelligent support.

DUCKWORTH & CO. Henrietta Street, W.C.

Messrs. Longmans & Co.'s LIST.

The FIELD says that 'POLLY WINFORD' is "One of the best sporting novels which has been published for some time."

Polly Winford. By EYRE HUSSEY, Author of 'Miss Badsworth, M.F.H.' Crown 8vo, 6s.
"Polly Winford is a delightful girl."—Daily Telegraph.
"A pleasant, breezy little story."—Times.
"A delightfully open-air novel."—Yorkshire Post.

THE ARCHITECTS' LIBRARY.

A History of Architectural Development. (IN THREE VOLUMES.)
Vol. II. MEDIEVAL. By F. M. SIMPSON, Professor of Architecture, University of London. With 257 Illustrations. Medium 8vo, 21s. net. (Inland postage 6d.)

SECOND IMPRESSION.

Historical and Political Essays.
By WILLIAM EDWARD HARTPOLE LECKY. 8vo, 10s. 6d. net. (Inland postage 5d.)

Sir George Mackenzie, King's Advocate, of Rosehaugh: His Life and Times, 1636(?) - 1691.
By ANDREW LANG. 8vo, 15s. net. (Inland postage 5d.)
"Mr. Lang has had one aim, and one aim only, to get at the facts about a very difficult character. The result is a complete portrait of Mackenzie, a criticism based upon a true understanding."—Blackwood's Magazine.

The Springs of Helicon: a Study in the Progress of English Poetry from Chaucer to Milton.
By J. W. MACKAIL, M.A. LL.D., Professor of Poetry in the University of Oxford. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d. net. (Inland postage 4d.)

The Dawn of the Catholic Revival in England, 1781-1803.
By the Right Rev. Monsignor BERNARD WARD, President of St. Edmund's College. With Portraits and other Illustrations. 2 vols. 8vo, 25s. net. (Inland postage 6d.)

Ecclesia Discens: the Church's Lesson from the Age.
By the Rev. JAMES H. F. PEILE, M.A. Crown 8vo, 5s. net. (Inland postage 4d.)
"A collection of essays and sermons which have all the charm and discursiveness of the writer's 'Reproach of the Gospel.' No one can lay down this book without admiration for the literary gifts of the author and his manliness in facing hard questions."—Church of Ireland Gazette.

Memoir of George Howard Wilkinson, Bishop of St. Andrews, formerly Bishop of Truro, and Vicar of St. Peter's, Eaton Square. By ARTHUR JAMES MASON, D.D., One of his Chaplains. With Illustrations. 2 vols. 8vo, 28s. net. (Inland postage 6d.)

The Gospel and Human Needs: being the Hulsean Lectures for 1908-9. With Additions. By JOHN NEVILLE FIGGIS, Litt.D., of the Community of the Resurrection, Mirfield. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d. net. (Inland postage 4d.)
In these Lectures Dr. Figgis took certain aspects of the attack on orthodox Christianity, and endeavoured to show how many elements, such as the miraculous, the mysterious, the historical elements in the Faith, which were the greatest stumbling-block to the theorist, were its real attraction to the man in the street, so far as he is religious.

Rosemary: a Volume of Poems.
By FREDERICK ARTHUR. Crown 8vo, 4s. net. (Inland postage 3d.)

Studies in the Teaching of Religion.
By WILLIAM SCOTT PALMER. Crown 8vo, 1s. net. (Inland postage 2d.)

The Curious Case of Lady Purbeck: a Scandal of the XVIIth Century.
By the Author of 'The Life of Sir Kenelm Digby,' 'The Life of a Prig,' &c. 8vo, 6s. net. (Inland postage 4d.)
"A racy account of the scandal and trial of the daughter of Sir Edward Coke, who married Sir John Villiers, created Lord Purbeck."—Times.

LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.
39, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON, E.C.

MACMILLAN'S NEW BOOKS.

Social Life at Rome in the Age of Cicero.

By W. WARDE FOWLER, M.A., Author of 'The Roman Festivals of the Period of the Republic,' &c. With Map and Plans. 8vo, 10s. net.

Monuments of Christian Rome

from Constantine to the Renaissance. By ARTHUR L. FROTHINGHAM, Ph.D., Professor of Archaeology and Ancient History at Princeton University. Illustrated. Extra crown 8vo, 10s. 6d. [Handbooks of Archaeology and Antiquities.]

The Ancient Greek Historians

(Harvard Lectures). By J. B. BURY, Litt.D. LL.D., Regius Professor of Modern History in the University of Cambridge. 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

The Struggle for Imperial Unity.

Recollections and Experiences. By Col. GEORGE T. DENISON, President of the British Empire League in Canada. With Portrait. Extra crown 8vo, 8s. 6d. net.

Dante's Inferno, Purgatorio, and Paradiso.

Translated by EDWARD WILBERFORCE. 3 vols. Globe 8vo, 10s. 6d. net. [Wednesday.]

The Novels of Henry James.

Edition de Luxe. In 24 vols. 8vo, 8s. 6d. net each.

Vol. XIV. LADY BARBARINA; THE SIEGE OF LONDON; AN INTERNATIONAL EPI-SODE; and other Tales.

NEW 6/- NOVELS.

SECOND IMPRESSION.

Tono-Bungay. By H. G. WELLS.

SECOND IMPRESSION.

One Immortality. By H. FIELDING HALL.

"A dainty masterpiece."

JIMBO. A Fantasy.

By ALGERNON BLACKWOOD,

Author of 'John Silence,' &c. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

Daily Telegraph.—"A singularly powerful piece of psychological analysis... The thing is wonderfully well done, and will evoke an eerie feeling in the least imaginative nature."

Morning Post.—"It is a powerful piece of work, very closely thought out and knit."

Standard.—"It is entirely original, both in treatment and idea. Mr. Blackwood has a wonderful realization of the immediate proximity of fact and fancy. The thinnest of veils divides them, and, without any straining of probability or violent heightening of colour, he is entirely convincing. A remarkable book."

POCKET EDITION OF THE ENGLISH MEN OF LETTERS.

Edited by JOHN MORLEY.

POCKET EDITION. Special Cover Design, 1s. net each.

ADDISON. By W. J. COURTHOPE.

BACON. By DEAN CHURCH.

BENTLEY. By Sir RICHARD JEBB.

BUNYAN. By J. A. FROUDE.

BURKE. By JOHN MORLEY.

Others to follow.

MACMILLAN & CO., LTD., London.

WITHERBY & CO.'S TRAVEL BOOKS.

SUNSET PLAYGROUNDS.

Impressions of Sport and Scenery, and Men and Cities, in Canada and California. By F. G. AFLALO. Many Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

READY APRIL 15.

THE FRONTIERS OF BALUCHISTAN.

Travels on the Borders of India, Persia, and Afghanistan. By G. P. TATE, F.R.G.S. M.R.A.S., of the Indian Surveys. Introduction by Col. Sir A. HENRY McMAHON. Coloured Frontispiece, 36 Plates, and 2 Maps. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

THROUGH SOUTHERN MEXICO.

By HANS GADOW, M.A. Ph.D. F.R.S. Demy 8vo. Over 500 pages. 200 Illustrations. 18s. net.

"One of the most attractive stories of travel ever published."—Manchester Courier.

RECENT HUNTING TRIPS IN BRITISH NORTH AMERICA.

By F. C. SELOUS. Demy 8vo. 65 Plates. 16s. net. Popular Edition, 6s. net.

THREE VOYAGES OF A NATURALIST.

By M. J. NICOLL, M.B.O.U. Introduction by the Rt. Hon. THE EARL OF CRAWFORD. 56 Full-Page Illustrations. Demy 8vo, cloth gilt, 7s. 6d. net.

THE FAR EAST REVISITED.

By A. GORTON ANGIER, with a Preface by Sir ROBERT HART, Bart. G.C.M.G. Describing Political, Commercial, Social, and General Conditions in Malaya, China, Korea, and Japan. 32 Plates. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

"There need be no hesitation in recommending this book to all who are interested in the affairs of the Far East."—SIR ROBERT HART.

TRAVEL AND EXPLORATION

A New Monthly Magazine devoted to Travel in all its aspects. 1s. net.

EVERY ARTICLE HAS BRILLIANT ILLUSTRATIONS FROM BEAUTIFUL PHOTOGRAPHS.

Contents of APRIL (No. 4).

THE EVOLUTION OF THE MODERN AEROPLANE. By Sir Hiram S. Maxim. 5 Illustrations.

PIONEERING IN THE SIERRA LEONE HINTERLAND. By T. J. Alldridge, I.S.O. Map and 6 Illustrations.

THROUGH QUEENSLAND IN A MOTOR CAR. By Hon. J. W. Blair, Attorney-General and Secretary for Mines, Queensland. Map and 4 Illustrations.

THE MERGUI ARCHIPELAGO. By R. N. Rudmose Brown. Map and 4 Illustrations.

LIFE IN NORTHERNMOST FINLAND. By Knud Rasmussen.

THE BRITISH EMIGRANT IN QUEENSLAND. I. THE DARK SIDE. By A. D. Chalmers. 4 Illustrations.

SIDE LIGHTS ON THE RUSSO-JAPANESE WAR. By Lieut.-Col. A. C. Yate. 3 Illustrations.

Tourist Travel—Travel Literature—The Exploring World—Aerial Flight—Motor Travel.

WITHERBY & CO. 326, High Holborn, London.

ESSEX HOUSE PRESS, CAMPDEN, GLOS.

MEDIÆVAL SINHALESE ART.

BY

A. K. COOMARASWAMY, D.Sc.

A Monograph of Mediæval Sinhalese Arts and Crafts, mainly as surviving in the Eighteenth Century, together with an Account of the Structure of Society, and of the position of the Craftsmen.

Illustrated by 52 Coloured and Collotype
Plates, and over 140 Text Figures.

14 by 10½ ins. pp. 340, 400 copies,
3l. 3s. net.

25 on hand-made paper, 5l. 5s. net.

Times Literary Supplement.—"The book is written in an easy and pleasant style, and a keen artistic sense, coupled with an eye for harmony, is apparent throughout. The author has found in idealism and abstraction the soul of Ceylon art, and has grasped its true objective."

Manchester Guardian.—"We are given an intimate and elaborate view of the problem (the protection of native art) by one who is himself a native of the country of whose art, now hastening into decline, this beautiful volume seeks to set up a standard record and a memorial. And as we turn over its pages and mark the social and industrial conditions under which the decorative arts of Ceylon flourished until less than a century ago, we are struck by the extraordinary similarity between the 'mysteries' and guilds of these Far Eastern workers in wood, metal, and textiles, and those which William Morris's fervent advocacy of mediæval craftsmanship has made familiar to us."

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

THE AIMS OF INDIAN ART.

With a Photogravure of the Bronze Dancing
Siva in Madras Museum.

225 copies, 2s. 6d. net, 50 on hand-made paper, 5s. net.

THE EDICTS OF ASOKA.

EDITED BY

VINCENT A. SMITH.

4to, pp. xx-77, 100 copies on hand-made paper, Kelmscott boards, 1l. 1s.

Apply SECRETARY, Essex House Press.

SATURDAY, APRIL 3, 1909.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE
PROF. WESTERMARCK ON MORAL IDEAS	399
FIFTEENTH-CENTURY BOOKS IN THE BRITISH MUSEUM	400
SERA'S ON THE TRACKS OF LIFE	401
THE RELIGION OF BABYLONIA AND ASSYRIA	402
NEW NOVELS (The New June; The Firing Line; The Bishop and the Bogie-Man; My Lady of Shadows; The Yellow God; The Secret River; Within Four Walls)	403-404
BOOKS OF TRAVEL	404
OUR LIBRARY TABLE (Faith; Buddhist Essays; The Woman and the Car; S.P.C.K. African Publications; Crockford's Clerical Directory)	406-407
APPROPRIATING TITLES; BOSWELL'S 'DORANDO'	407
LIST OF NEW BOOKS	407
LITERARY GOSSIP	408
SCIENCE—LIFE OF ADMIRAL SIR LEOPOLD MCCLINTOCK; THE FIJIAN; THE ECHALAZ COLLECTION AT LIVERPOOL; EVELYN'S SYLVIA; HOLLY, YEW, AND BOX; SCOTTISH GARDENS; SYSTEMATIC ANATOMY OF THE DICOTYLEDONS; THE INDIAN SANITARY REPORT; SOCIETIES; MEETINGS NEXT WEEK; GOSSIP	410-413
FINE ARTS—PROF. HOLMES ON THE SCIENCE OF PICTURE-MAKING; THE LOEB COLLECTION OF ARRETINE POTTERY; SIR CHRISTOPHER WREN; THE ART TREASURES OF LONDON—PAINTING; THE ROYAL SOCIETY OF BRITISH ARTISTS; PAINTINGS BY MR. ARTHUR STREETON; JAPANESE COLOUR-PRINTS AND SIR CHARLES HOLROYD'S ETCHINGS; THE RIDLEY ART CLUB; SALE; GOSSIP	414-418
MUSIC—SYMPHONY CONCERTS; QUEEN'S HALL CHORAL SOCIETY; BACH'S MASS IN B MINOR; SANTLEY'S REMINISCENCES; GOSSIP; PERFORMANCES NEXT WEEK	419-420
DRAMA—IBSEN'S 'MASTER-BUILDER'; GOSSIP	420
INDEX TO ADVERTISERS	420

LITERATURE

The Origin and Development of the Moral Ideas. By E. Westermarck. Vol. II. (Macmillan & Co.)

PROF. WESTERMARCK'S indefatigable labours in the field of comparative ethics have at length drawn to a successful close, and it is possible to frame a general estimate of the value of his work. Perhaps one's first impression is of sheer massiveness. The bare titles of the authorities quoted cover 78 pages. We undergo the sensations described by Anatole France in a recent famous preface; whole libraries descend in an avalanche upon our heads. Now this power of encyclopædic research is given to few. Amongst English-speaking authors Prof. Westermarck need fear no rival unless it be Dr. J. G. Frazer. Until some millionaire endows a scheme for excerpting the whole of the good first-hand evidence relating to primitive man, and publishing it in a huge ethnographic dictionary with double columns and numbered lines, the ordinary student of limited range must be in the main content to work over selected portions of the ground surveyed by one or another of these rare purveyors of the wholesale. No doubt by thus concentrating on a section it is possible to improve details. The encyclopædist is bound to trust to his notebook overmuch. To lack of control on the part of the live memory is chiefly due that special fallacy of the compiler, ignoratio contextus. Facts are unwittingly divorced from their literary context, or, more fatal still, from their sociological context. Even Prof. Westermarck, we believe, who strives so hard to be critical in his use of his authorities, has occasionally included spurious, or at any rate wrongly labelled, specimens in his vast museum of anthropological materials.

But this drawback is as nothing when compared with what appears on the credit side of the account. These feats of synthesis inspire the next generation of inquirers as no amount of minutely elaborated special studies can do. They kindle the imagination; they breathe the larger hope. Take, for example, Herbert Spencer's work in comparative ethics and sociology. Its quality was bad, for Spencer, unlike Prof. Westermarck, was building upon data which he had not himself checked. Even so he was invaluable as a pioneer. Like Columbus, he disclosed, even if he did not in strictness discover, a new world. Prof. Westermarck, on the other hand, fired, no doubt, by the example of his predecessor, has actually reached the promised land—nay, has crossed it from end to end. In his train, let us hope, other explorers will follow, and they can hardly help finding not a little that has escaped his careful scrutiny. But they will forge ahead, thanks to the constant use of a map, and the map will be the book before us.

To speak of Spencer in this context is all the more natural as Prof. Westermarck's outlook upon the history of human morals is primarily that of the biologist. Whenever he proceeds beyond description to explanation, it is to postulate the workings of an instinct. For him the moral ideas are little more than the direct outcome of certain emotions, and these, in their turn, of instinctive tendencies due to natural selection. It would seem to be at bottom the same line of thought as that which Mr. McDougall has recently worked out with so much subtlety and skill in his 'Introduction to Social Psychology.' The broad effect of such a method of interpretation is rather curious. Despite the evolutionary interest that is paramount throughout, there is a conspicuous lack of dynamic movement. Instincts, be it remembered, do not change rapidly. Indeed, with the growth of civilization, and the consequent sheltering of the individual from the incidence of natural selection behind the bulwark of his social inheritance, instincts are likely to fluctuate rather than to develop in a definite direction. Thus one rises from a perusal of Prof. Westermarck's two immense volumes with the reflection that, in its moral aspect at least, human nature is human nature from China to Peru, with perhaps a tendency to vary for the worse in the case of the less fortunately placed amongst the denizens of civilized society.

Yet is this truly so? After all, behaviour, not feeling, is the touchstone of morals. Perhaps in a given situation—and there is a strong family likeness between vital situations the whole world over—all men tend to display the same automatic response of emotion. But the real question for morals is: Do they yield to their emotion in the same way? Granted that the civilized man, considered in abstraction from his social inheritance—in a word, from his education—is the natural man or worse, does it follow that, when the results of the socializing process have been counted in, there will remain any fundamental similarity in respect to ethics as tried by the test of conduct? It was Darwin himself who said that the difference between savage and civilized man is the difference between a wild and a tame animal. Had he laid greater emphasis on the part played in the moral life by social tradition, Prof. Westermarck might, we think, have done more to bring this difference out. We venture to suggest to him that he should some day compose a supplementary study with the object of showing how, under the influence of social forces such as law, religion, and philosophy, the moral ideas have become organized into systems, and, by such participation in a higher unity, have been radically transformed. With his vast knowledge of the facts he could not fail to do justice to a side of the subject on which his present method, which treats of the history of this and that virtue taken separately, is bound to show weakness.

It is impossible to attempt to examine here the specific findings of twenty-five full chapters. The earlier sections carry on from the first volume the account of the altruistic feelings. Prof. Westermarck is able to show that it is in extension rather than intension that primitive morality fails. It is true enough, as the traveller is fond of reporting, that savages are apt to be thievish, lying, and ungrateful in all that concerns the traveller in question. Amongst themselves, however, they behave otherwise. In treating of patriotism and cosmopolitanism the author shows that a curious contraction has taken place in the range of European morality within comparatively modern times. Nationalism may make for survival, or it may not, but it certainly narrows the sympathies:—

"But at the same time opposite ideals are at work. The fervour of nineteenth-century nationalism has not been able to quench the cosmopolitan spirit. In spite of loud appeals made to social instincts and the sense of national solidarity, the idea is daily gaining ground that the aims of a nation must not conflict with the interests of humanity at large; that our love of country should be controlled by other countries' right to prosper and to develop their own individuality; and that the oppression of weaker nationalities inside the State and aggressiveness towards foreign nations, being mainly the outcome of vainglory and greed, are inconsistent with the aspirations of a good patriot, as well as of a good man."

It will not, we hope, seem an impertinence to say that these dignified words carry all the more weight as coming from one who is himself both cosmopolitan and a true patriot.

Passing on to the self-regarding side of conduct—on which side, however, as it is justly argued, it remains none the less subject to moral praise and blame—we come first to the remarkably interesting topic of suicide, and then proceed to consider idleness, gluttony, uncleanness and their opposites. Next follows a review of the phenomena connected with the play of the sexual instinct. Here Prof. Westermarck is on familiar ground.

It is to be noticed that he consistently reaffirms the main contentions of his well-known 'History of Human Marriage.' Lastly, we are reminded that respect for one's neighbour and oneself is not the final word in morality. There is regard for the lower animals, regard for the dead, and, most important of all, for "gods" defined as supernatural beings with whom relations of a more or less permanent character are established. Prof. Westermarck's treatment of religion is, perhaps, somewhat coloured by his firsthand experience of its workings in Morocco. For instance, he is evidently impressed with the importance of l'âr, the conditional curse putting constraint on a man or a god, and would suspect something analogous to be at the back of many forms of primitive rite. This has still to be proved, and we wish he would set himself systematically to determine the range of this motif. For the rest, he seems a little heavy-handed in his treatment of matters full of infinite variety. But, if subtlety be not always apparent, there is at any rate never-failing strength. By dint of a singular combination of virile qualities—pluck, resolution, and common sense—Prof. Westermarck has accomplished a monumental work that places him in the first rank of living anthropologists.

Catalogue of Books printed in the Fifteenth Century now in the British Museum.
Part I. (British Museum.)

FROM time to time we have had occasion to call attention to the publications of the British Museum—sometimes intended for the general public, as, for example, the series of handbooks by which the Exhibition Galleries are explained and made interesting; sometimes for the librarian and journalist, as in the invaluable 'Subject Index,' which shows at a glance every important book in any language published on any subject for the last twenty-five years; sometimes for the student of art, history, or archaeology—of every one of the many branches of learning its collections illustrate. Students of literature throughout the world, and bibliographers in especial, are dependent on the great Catalogue of its Library; and the Trustees have now added to this debt by the issue of the volume before us, the first of six, describing with laudable completeness the incunabula or fifteenth-century books in the British Museum Library.

The difference between this Catalogue, dealing solely with blockbooks and the productions of the printers of four German towns, and such well-known works as Dibdin's, marks the growth of bibliography from a recreation of dilettanti to a science. It is a difference not only of end, but also of means: exact description, attention to minute points of detail, knowledge of methods of manufacture, are all pressed into service. The history of this progress is briefly told in the Introduction, and readers of this journal will not need to be reminded that much of it is due to the extraordinary ability of Robert Proctor. His 'Index to the Early Printed Books at the British Museum, with Notes of Those in the Bodleian Library,' deals with close on 10,000 books. Now it is estimated that forty-five of every hundred fifteenth-century books bear no mark of place or printer, yet single-handed, after his day's work was over, he was able to classify these by country, city, printer, type, and date with such success that 955 books out of every 1,000 were attributed either to a named printer or a well-defined group. The mere recital of this achievement marks its importance; it revolutionized the methods of students of early printing, and the work of which this is the first part is a direct consequence of it—an examination, correction, and expansion.

The number of books printed before the year 1501 at present described seems to be about 25,000; and Mr. Peddie, in the exhaustive Author-Index to them he is now publishing in The Library World, seems likely to increase that number considerably. Dr. Fortescue estimates the final number as about 30,000, which we consider too low; and of these the British Museum possesses, excluding duplicates, over 9,000. Fortunately these include the greater part of the most desirable books of the period, and such a gap in its collection as that caused by the absence of any work of the first printer at Bamberg, Albrecht Pfister, is rare. Law books—a noteworthy proportion of early printing—do not seem to have attracted the attention of those who formed the collections of which our National Library is composed. In any case, before we can arrive at an accurate idea of the total volume of early printing, we must not only assign to every printer the known books he issued, but we must also be able to arrange these in the order in which they appeared, and thus get an approximate idea of his limit of production. It is in this direction that this Catalogue marks the highest point yet reached in bibliographical research. All known methods have been employed and focussed on each point as it came up for discussion, and the result is one of which all connected with it may well be proud.

Mr. Pollard's Introduction is not only a clear and ably written statement of the most advanced methods of modern bibliography, but also a fascinating account of the mechanism, materials, and difficulties of the primitive printer, and the means by which he overcame the last. Early printing presses were able to print only one page at a time, and as presswork was necessarily very slow as compared with composition, it was usual when a large work was being printed to have five or six presses at work on it. It thus became a matter of great importance to make each section of "copy" exactly fill a quire. In the case of the 42-line Bible an extra leaf was required in no fewer than seven of the quires, while smaller adjustments were made by increasing or diminishing the number of lines on a page, or the use of contractions.

But the difficulty of adjustment in works like the Bible, service books, Psalters, &c., seems to have been much increased in the case of secular books. Mr. Pollard quotes one case where

"at the end of four quires he [the printer] has to use extra lines, and the number of contractions to a page rises from 70 to 300. At the end of another quire contractions are used only when needed for spacing individual lines; and finally there is a blank half-page, and the first words of the next quire are printed as a catchword to show there is no omission—'sequitur scipio quoque.'"

One reason for this may have been that the "copy" for a Bible or service book would probably have been an old vellum MS. in which the writing and use of contractions would be fairly uniform, while a paper MS. would be written in a rougher and less regular hand, and be more difficult to estimate. As printers grew more expert, and no doubt as the use of something approaching the "galley" was introduced, these clumsy methods tended to disappear; but there is abundant evidence that down to the end of the century the comfort of having printed "copy" was appreciated, and "even when the original make-up was clumsy and complicated, it was slavishly followed." We learn to notice the adoption of improved methods—the increase of printed matter on the page, the introduction of printed signatures and guide-letters, the reduction in the number of pinholes used to fix the position of the print on the paper, and office usages like two compositors setting alternate pages; and we are warned against assuming, in the case of reprints, that the more correct is obviously the later in date.

After dealing with the methods of early printers we are led to consider the evidence obtained from their materials—paper, type, and ink. The last of these does not help us—we have no printed book in which printer's ink is not as good as it is to-day; but paper and type have their story to tell. M. Briquet's researches on watermarks were published too recently to be utilized throughout this book, but it is not without significance that the compiler of this Catalogue—one of the half-dozen leading bibliographers of the world—has adopted his system for the dating of some quartos. Type holds, of course, the first place among our means of identifying the work of different printers; and that it does so, owing to the amazing diversity of forms used by them, is to our mind absolute corroboration of the theory that the use of steel punches for preparing the matrices from which type was cast was not introduced till printing was comparatively well known. We must first congratulate the British Museum on its adoption of a natural classification of types. At present, if any one speaks, say, of Caxton's Type 6, it is impossible to know which type is meant unless the system the speaker has in mind is known, and any classification is liable to be thrown into disorder by the discovery of a new dated fragment. Mr. Pollard classifies type according to the measure of 20 lines of unlead type. Thus "Eggestein 126" is a type in which 20 lines are 126 mm. deep. At the same time Proctor's classification is given in brackets for the sake of identification. This is a step in the right direction, which we hope will be universally followed, though 20 lines give a certain opportunity for error of measurement when it has to be calculated from a line or two, as in the case of larger types. The methods of early printers in dealing with the very soft types they used are extremely various. Some clung to the type as long as it could be used; others recast it frequently, from time to time using fresh bodies; others again, as the supply of any particular letter ran short, replenished it by castings from other matrices, till at last the whole character of the type was altered. Observations of this sort are employed for dating many Cologne books from 1470 to 1480, among which may be placed the 'Bartholomæus' on which Caxton learnt printing. The use of blocks and woodcuts in dating books is also exemplified. The collations of the books may be expected to stand on record as models for future work of this kind, and bibliographers will find much to study in the exposition of the reasons for adopting the forms employed.

The non-bibliographical reader may ask, What of the books themselves? The list contains the most venerable monuments of printing. The present reviewer has no doubt that the art found its birthplace in the Low Countries; the invention of printer's ink, which is an oil paint at bottom, seems to make it certain; but till a dated book is found earlier than 1454, Mayence holds pride of place. We have here books from the libraries of the Tudor, Stuart, and Hanoverian kings, and of those benefactors whose names will be preserved as long as England remains—Grenville, Cracherode, and the rest. Among them is Henry VIII.'s copy of the 'Summa de Potestate Ecclesiastica' with his annotations, one of them against the discussion whether a dispensation could be given for having several wives at once. The author remarks that polygamy in the patriarchs was not against the law of nature, on which the King comments, "Ergo nec in nobis." The choice of subjects partakes of the German character, solid, serious, improving, but wanting in the lighter graces. Grammars, histories, theology, divinity, law, are all represented, but literature is at a discount; it hardly exists. Fifteenth-century Germany was not in the Middle Ages, but in the Dark Age, as far as any question of culture was concerned.

In conclusion we may mention one or two unimportant matters that have struck us. For example, "Hain 2142?" demands a little fuller explanation; the advertisement on p. 54 is surely written by the printer, and should appear under his name; on p. 6 of the list of facsimiles there is a wrong reference to I.C. 537. A temporary author-index would have aided beginners. Trifles like these do not, however, detract from the value of the most important contribution to bibliography since the death of Robert Proctor.

On the Tracks of Life. By Leo G. Sera. Translated by J. M. Kennedy. With an Introduction by Dr. Oscar Levy. (John Lane.)

SIGNOR SERA, like Prof. Westernmark, deals with moral ideas, but in a very different spirit. He is an up-to-date theorist who speaks with scant respect of sociology and sociologists, though the burden of his book is a theory of society. The theory takes its character from the well-defined bias, rather literary than philosophical, of the so-called immoralist writers, and seems a blend of the Nietzschean revolt from respectability and the Stendhalian preoccupation with sex. Recognizing two human types in eternal opposition—the strong and the weak, the rapacious and the submissive, the Aristocrat and the Plebeian—our author sees the second as eternally ruled, tasked, and exploited by the first. This, to be sure, is not very new, either in sociology or out of it. The secular conflict between the two races of mankind was clearly perceived long ago by an observer named Elia, who, quite in the spirit of modern thought, declared an immoral preference for the prevailing Bigod. What is new is that Signor Sera would have us believe that his Aristocrats are the depositories of race-fecundity as well as the spenders of other people's money. This is because perfect vitality—the mark of the organic Aristocrat—is associated with high sexuality, rapacity, and projectiveness. To begin with, indeed, he explains that there are Aristocrats in every class. That definition, however, is but waveringly maintained throughout the discourse, the general effect of which is to affirm that, but for the existence of ruling and indolent classes, aided by some auxiliaries from below, the great reproductive movement (slightly to adapt Arnold) would cease to go on. It would cease to go on because the majority of men in civilized society are condemned to work; and because work, being a deviation from the interests of "pure animalness," and therefore a violence done to the organism, deforms, devitalizes, and ultimately sterilizes the generations engaged in it. It is a resourceful enemy, this same work, and brings down with the javelin those who escape the sword. The javelin is morality (here enters Nietzsche), a projection of work which unmans those smitten by it as though the point were poisoned. The hopes of Nature, therefore, are finally staked upon that eternal individualist, the organic Aristocrat—who is known by his superiority to morals (so called) as well as to his fellow-men. By no means l'homme moyen, he is emphatically l'homme sensuel. He seems, indeed, a kind of human Bagheera in a perpetual love-mood, and a good many passages of the book appear to justify the surmise that his happiest hunting-grounds are among Italian myrtles. It is true that not all members of the "parasitic" groups are worthy to be likened to Bagheera. Unto too many of them morality cleaves like the shirt of Nessus (only freezing instead of frizzling), so that toil could not make them tamer. But the favoured situation of such groups makes for the chances of physiological storage and recovery, and so ensures the production of true Aristocrats from time to time. Nevertheless, the process of moralization outstrips the rate of recovery (or return to natural integrity) so surely that "the human race is slowly and with fatal progress withdrawing itself from the direct line of pure animalness, and from conditions of balance, to assume a position of relative non-balance."

In these words we have the author's final formulation of what, he assures us gravely, is a "true law"; nor do we believe that any one who has thoughtfully read his way as far as p. 298 will refuse his assent to at least part of it. Unfortunately, a theory of society is judged not by its final formula (which may be as ultimate and privileged as anything in metaphysics or theology), but by the amount of truth concerning man and the world which is taken up in its principles, and the method of applying these. Upon the whole, we have seldom read any writer who, with such a range of opinion and assertion, contrived to take up so little of the truth concerning most subjects of his discourse as Signor Sera does. One would think he had a special faculty of fragmentary perception, and could only catch sight of the edge of reality when he had passed the main bulk of it by. The lesser reason, or the remoter one, appears to attract him, though his preference seems sometimes given to the one which is no reason at all. For instance, the prevalence of "sport" among the English and other Northern peoples is explained as being due to the haunting power of the idea of work, and exists because these Northern peoples were, in the beginning, the groups of weak men who were driven into regions where only by work could a subsistence be wrested from the earth. The Latins, having escaped that evil lot, have not these cravings for exhaustion. Take, as another example, the reason why Germany is to-day "the most military nation." Some would opine that it is because Germany is stamped with the impress of Prussia, a Power which was created by a martinet and an army, and seems indeed, so military are its connotations, the name of a regiment rather than a country. Others, pointing to the map, would say off-hand that the German Empire, if it would hold together between the upper and the nether millstones of Russian encroachment and French revanche, has need to be as strong as steel. For such explanations Signor Sera has no use. The Germans are to-day "the most military nation" because they were formerly the most intellectual nation. That is to say, having (as a Northern people) gone through the discipline of work, and having produced the fruits of that mortification of the flesh in an efflorescence of ratiocination and sentiment, they are now passing into "the second stage of the social rhythm," and reaching that fullness of life in which man is objective, aggressive, and diffusely preoccupied with sex. Our author seems to view the change as partly the reward of virtue and partly a repentance for sin, but many will be apt to regard the second state of that people as worse than the first.

The leading topics of the book, giving its chapter-headings, are Love, the Origin of Society, Work and Morals, North and South (the characteristics of peoples), Social Rhythms, the Creation of Genius, a Conception of Civilization, two disquisitions on Aristocracies, and a chapter each on Stendhal and Nietzsche. Upon hardly one of these themes has the author a thesis to advance which seems more integral or "originary" (to use one of the queer words with which the pages are strewn), or more satisfying, than the samples we have quoted. Yet we would not say that he is unworthy of critical notice. Despite his unfortunate immoralism, his dogmatism (as of a man who is unaccustomed to address his equals, or has a feud with them all), and the prolixity and confusion of his book, we neither dislike Signor Sera nor despair of him. We should expect him to have something to say yet, or at any rate a personality to express. He has gifts as a writer, though he wastes them through unrestraint from page to page. He also has a mind, if he could make it up; but the form he at present affects seems to us to forbid cohesion. He is not without imagination, nor (pace the Nietzschean plea) without sympathy for the suffering underworld of workers. To them, indeed, he traces all the intellectual, moral, and spiritual gains of humanity: elements which (we divine rather than learn) he wages war with only in so far as the forms which they create confine and kill. The chapters on Stendhal and Nietzsche, inconclusive as they are, display what is, upon the whole, his best qualification for literature: a considerable power of psychological analysis, and an intuition of mental states which are perhaps not of the healthiest kind. It is here that we arrive at the source of all the mischief. Signor Sera is an "immoralist," and only becomes a sociologist by the transference of his immoralist quarrel to a systematic theme with which he is not, we think, at present equal to deal.

The Religion of Babylonia and Assyria.

By Robert William Rogers. (Luzac & Co.)

THIS book, which is a reprint of a set of lectures delivered by Prof. Rogers to Harvard University, is, it seems to us, a fair sample of much American scholarship. Carefully and laboriously written, with a manifest desire to follow the lead of what appears to be the best accredited school of European thought, it lacks something of originality, and appears to owe little to independent research. Yet Prof. Rogers has in most instances attained the not very high ideal he has set before himself; and it is probable that his view of the religious beliefs of the Babylonians and Assyrians is on the whole that which would be gathered by most moderate men from an unprejudiced study of the available evidence. For this reason we choose his book as a sound and not too technical exposition of the latest developments in this branch of learning.

Prof. Rogers begins his book with a history of cuneiform decipherment and of the excavations in Western Asia which have led to our recovery of the few documents of the Babylonian and Assyrian religions. Over this we need not linger, but may say that the authors on whom he principally relies are Prof. Sayce, Prof. Jastrow, and Mr. L. W. King, and that, in this respect, we have no quarrel with his choice of guides. Like them, he opines that the Babylonians worshipped a supreme triad consisting of the gods of the heaven, of the earth, and of the waters below the earth, under the respective names of Anu, Bel, and Ea, together with a secondary triad composed of Shamash the sun-god, Sin the moon-god, and Ishtar the goddess of the planet Venus. But even this amount of order was only brought into the popular creed as the result, according to Prof. Rogers, of "theological speculation"; and as each of the male gods of these triads was thought to be accompanied by a female consort, while Nebo and Adad (the Biblical "Rimmon") were sometimes represented as at least equal in power to the rest of the pantheon, it is plain that the "great gods" of Babylonia may just as well be described as a "company" of twelve as one of three or six. As to the Assyrians, all that we hear from Prof. Rogers of their deities is that Nebo, although originally a Babylonian god, was even more highly esteemed in Assyria than in his own country; and the same remark is made a little later about Nergal, the god of the planet Saturn, and Ninib, the god of Mars, as well as about Ishtar. Perhaps in this the author rather slurs over the predominant position that the Assyrian kings ascribed to their city-god Ashur, although some remarks of his in another passage show him to be by no means ignorant of it.

Having thus given his hearers some small insight into the form of the religions of Babylonia and Assyria, Prof. Rogers passes on to the obligation of the Hebrews to this source for what may be called the historical or mythological part of their beliefs. Thus he tells us that "the Babylonian and Assyrian gods, from Anu, Bel, and Ea on down through the long list, have passed away from among men, and nowhere in all the world do men revere these names. But there was one divine name in Babylonia which has survived the crash of time, and as the climax of all this study of the names of the gods we must give due heed to it."

He then goes on to discuss the discovery by Prof. Sayce of the name Ja-u-um-ilu in a cuneiform text of the British Museum, and the use made of it by Prof. Delitzsch in what is generally known as the 'Bibel und Babel' controversy, and sums up the affair thus:—

"The matter has finally sifted down to very narrow limits of doubt indeed. There can be no doubt that Ja-u-um-ilu is to be read 'Jau is god'; it is exactly the equivalent of the Biblical name Joel. It may still be granted that a slight doubt exists about the first two of these names [!]. It has been attempted on several sides to show that the first half of these names may be a verb form, and the words therefore are interpreted as meaning 'God exists,' or 'God lives.' But there is no such personal name anywhere to be found among the northern Semites, and the explanation is without other support. By far the more natural explanation is that the name is to be interpreted as 'Jahweh is god.' Here, then, is the name Jahweh in use among the Babylonians, at the Hammurabi period, two thousand years before Christ."

In like manner, when he comes to compare the Babylonian and the Biblical account of the Creation, Prof. Rogers says:—

"How great are these resemblances! It is quite impossible to suppose that they are due to chance. These two stories did not arise separately in Babylonia and in Israel. The Babylonian story is older by centuries, and upon it the Hebrew story was founded. When the Babylonian narrative passed over to the Hebrews it is no longer possible to determine, but it was surely soon after the invasion of Canaan or earlier."

And in regard to the Babylonian story of the Flood:—

"What now is the relationship of these two narratives [i.e., the Babylonian epic and Genesis]? It seems to me quite clear that the material of the Hebrew narrative goes back undoubtedly to this Babylonian original."

This, with a kind of apologia to which we will return later, brings Prof. Rogers to the new theory excogitated by Prof. Hugo Winckler (of Berlin University), and made popular by Dr. Alfred Jeremias, "pastor of the great Luther-Church in Leipzig, and a Privat-Dozent in the University of Leipzig," which is generally known as the "Astrallehre" theory or Panbabylonism. This postulates that

"the Babylonians conceived of the cosmos as divided primarily into a heavenly and an earthly world, each of which is further subdivided into three parts. The heavenly world consists of (a) the northern heaven, (b) the zodiac, and (c) the heavenly ocean; while the earthly world consists of (a) the heaven, that is the air above the earth, (b) the earth itself, and (c) the waters beneath the earth...."

The rest of the Astrallehre theory Prof. Rogers sums up by saying that in it the Supreme Triad of Anu, Bel, and Ea rule, in that order, the three divisions of heaven and earth set out above, and that "everything which has happened is only an earthly copy of a heavenly original, and there it is still writ above, and still there to be read." He also holds that,

"according to Winckler, all the myths and all the legends of the ancient world are hereby [i.e., by this theory] to be interpreted. Nothing even in history, properly so called, is to be understood otherwise....astrology is the last word of science in antiquity. There is no view of myth or legend of history to be taken without it. But it sweeps out far beyond Babylonia and Assyria. All peoples of antiquity come within its scope.The entire literature of Israel, all her history, all her theology, all her thinking, are, so this theory would have it, but the working of the Babylonian idea. Everything in Israel is Babylon, and Babylon is everything."

This theory—which, although he does not say so, in no way differs from the Cabala of the Middle Ages and the Renaissance—he rejects, because he says he can find no evidence for it among the original texts, and the arguments by which it is urged are inconsistent with one another; and in this we are inclined to agree with him.

We return to the apologia before mentioned, by which Prof. Rogers seeks to explain away the awkward fact that the Hebrew legends, hitherto thought by most European peoples to be in some sort "sacred," are copied from older and heathen ones which are not sacred at all. This he gets over in the only way, perhaps, open to him, by asserting that although what we have called the historical or mythological part of the Hebrew religion is derived from Babylonia, its ethics are its own. He tells us that "the religion of Israel is not developed out of Babylonian polytheism....In Israel alone ethical monotheism arose, spread its wings, and took its flight over all the world. The religion borrowed indeed material things.Whatever Israel took it transformed."

This defence, several times repeated, is applied to all the legends before quoted in turn, and the author contrasts in several places the inbred polytheism and gross materialism of the Babylonian conception of the universe with what he considers the lofty and spiritual ideas of Hebrew theology. This is in some sort forced upon him by the conviction, which can be traced throughout the lectures, that the Bible is a necessary part of Christian belief, or that, in his own words, a religion may endure without a priest, but history affords no instance of a religion without a sacred book. A sceptic might reply that monotheism was not in itself a more lofty conception than polytheism, and that the monotheistic cosmology of the Hebrews only came to them in accordance with the Aristotelian maxim about religion, after they had learnt to crouch under the heel of a single master; while their ethics were, on their own showing, neither better nor worse than that of the nations around them. With such questions we have here nothing to do; but it would be impossible to give a fair account of the book without setting out what is avowedly the intention with which it was written.

It remains to be said that, in spite of his pains, Prof. Rogers has not always been able to avoid stating disputed points in Assyriology as if they were facts. It does not seem to us at all certain that Bel of Nippur was "lord of the underworld" instead of lord of the air, that the legendary Oannes was really Ea, and that Adad was an importation from the Semites of Syria. In these matters he perhaps follows too closely Prof. Sayce, whose imagination is apt to run away with him, and the fact may give the measure of his critical faculty when he finds another author going the same way as himself. Nevertheless, the book is, as we have said, a clear and sound exposition of the moderate point of view in such matters, and therefore one to be commended. We can only wish in conclusion that the author could have seen his way to avoid such expressions as "Nobody will soon again be able," "glory" (for glorification), and "when so," besides those that appear sufficiently in the quotations given above. Other divergences from the English style of writing now seem too settled—for good or bad—to need comment.

NEW NOVELS.

The New June. By Henry Newbolt. (Blackwood & Sons.)

THE difficulties in the way of realizing a distant historical period have often been remarked; but Mr. Newbolt believes that there is very little difference in essentials between modern times and mediæval. No doubt if we are concerned with fundamental instincts this is true; but life is largely a matter of how these instincts are embroidered and exhibited. Certainly it is rash to assume that the fourteenth century spoke and acted and thought like the twentieth. Yet Mr. Newbolt makes it do these things. His system involves the use of modern colloquialisms, such as "before the row begins" in the reign of Richard II. This is free translation with a vengeance. In his gay preface Mr. Newbolt makes a spirited plea for his method, which, however, hardly convinces us. Human passions moved these people of Richard II.'s Court as they move people to-day, but it does not add verisimilitude to paint them in modern dress, any more than it added verisimilitude to the religious pictures of the Middle Ages that the characters should be invested with contemporary garments. Apart from this, Mr. Newbolt's slice from history is astonishingly virile and imaginative. It is full of knowledge of the times, and (Mr. Newbolt claims) contains only one invented character. Of the other characters we may say that they have been handsomely and vividly reinstated, if with rather a modern air. But the dominant feature of a strongly individual book is its vitality.

The Firing Line. By Robert W. Chambers. (Appleton & Co.)

MR. CHAMBERS performs in fiction the office that Mr. Dana Gibson performed with pen and pencil: he renders charming and entertaining pictures of smart American society as it would like to believe itself. People in American society do not probably talk so gaily or brightly as Mr. Chambers's people do, any more than American men and women all look like Mr. Gibson's drawings; but the practical idealism has made both popular. This book of just 500 pages is a long-drawn-out account of an unhappy love-affair. We confess to being soon out of patience with the heroine and her follies and whims, which seem likely to ruin two men's lives, and do ruin one. The crux of the story is one which would not have troubled a true American for more than a few weeks. The real interest of the book lies in its atmosphere of brightness, of felicity, sunshine, pretty frocks, and "a good time." Mr. Chambers also is one of the few novelists who can render love-making interesting; and so he is sure of a large public. We make a mild protest against his habit of depicting Englishmen as either imbecile or bad

The Bishop and the Bogie-Man. By Joel Chandler Harris. Illustrated by C. Harding. (John Murray.)

JOEL CHANDLER HARRIS had the gift of writing about children with much the same freshness and charm that he displayed when writing for them; while his sympathetic character-drawing of those who remain young at heart in spite of the passage of years was admirable. The scene of this story is laid in Georgia, in an old-fashioned country town, and opens with the arrival of a little orphan girl at her elderly bachelor uncle's home. She is an imaginative, sensitive child, who enlivens her comparative loneliness with an invisible playmate, called Cally-Lou. But another and a more efficient playmate is "the Bishop," whose ecclesiastical calling is as mythical as Cally-Lou's existence—a middle-aged, warm-hearted lover of children with an infectious sense of humour; while the Bogie-Man is an amiable negro. In course of time Adelaide, the little girl, grows up, and the kindly "Bishop" uses his tact and good influences to bring her simple love-story to a happy conclusion, as, in past years, he had helped her mother before her. The atmosphere of the story is delightful, while the characterization and the illustrations are adequate.

My Lady of Shadows. By John Oxenham. (Methuen & Co.)

THIS is a well-told tale, though the mental cloud that envelopes the gentle Mary Dustan, and necessitates three ceremonies before she can believe she is John Gilbert's wife, seems rather a stretch of probability. In each case it is the result of a shock connected with her sister's children, who are from time to time kidnapped by their rascally father or his representatives. The scene—laid partly in Devonshire and partly in Italy—is true to nature; the characterization is good, and there is a wealth of incident and action. The two pairs of children, and their friend the doctor, are particularly well drawn.

The Yellow God. By H. Rider Haggard.
With Illustrations by A. C. Michael.
(Cassell & Co.)

MR. RIDER HAGGARD is in his element in this African story. There is a fell priestess, beautiful as sin, who has the pleasant practice, handed down from days of old, of marrying successive consorts, and disposing of them, spider fashion; there is a soldier-traveller, who, having broken the meshes of a firm of company-promoters, travels to Asika's Court to obtain gold and earn a winsome English bride; there is above all an African servant, who, having retained the knowledge which makes him a sure guide in the wilderness, has acquired a measure of English idiom and metaphor which makes him a diverting companion.

The Secret River. By R. Macaulay.
(John Murray.)

In this fantasy an attempt is made to keep "facts, actions, happenings," in the subordinate position of shadows. The principal character is a "sacramentalist," a man acutely and habitually observant of the life about him, and able at his highest to apprehend substances as translucent veils. In normal health his eyes have the faculty ascribed by Kingsley to water-babies, and by the "secret river" he listens to elfin songs and endeavours to transcribe them. Infatuated with an obtuse girl, he affects to despise the "golden harmony" to which she is deaf; and when she has jilted him he destroys his manuscripts, and invites evil sprites to be his companions. Love and hate being both extinct, he enjoys a glimpse of the power of intangible beauty; then an impulse of heroic politeness induces him to respond favourably to the overture of his former sweetheart, whom he marries and gratifies by a pretence of love. Death restores to him the vision which failed him during his married life. Though this little book imparts no thoughts which will be new to speculative readers, its atmosphere and feeling commend it to the sympathies of those who are weary of conventional fiction.

Within Four Walls. By J. Bloundelle-Burton. (Milne.)

THIS sensational romance deals with French history after the death of Henry IV. A maid of honour to the ex-Queen, Margaret of Valois, has overheard a compromising conversation between the conspirators who instigated Ravallac to the murder of the King. Falling into the hands of D'Épernon, she after many wanderings is shut up "within four walls" in a castle near the Jura, whence she is rescued in a marvellous manner by the hero, who becomes her lover. Mr. Burton has seldom written a better piece of description than the descent of Adrienne and Lagarde down the chasm of the castle rock. The flight from Geneva in the snow, too, is well done. A liking for the "split infinitive" detracts, in our view, from the author's style.

BOOKS OF TRAVEL.

THOSE of our readers who are interested in sport and enjoy good descriptions of its field work, lightened by entertaining episodes told with much humour leavened with a little malice, will, recollecting 'Two Dianas in Somaliland' (Athen., Oct. 19, 1907), welcome Two Dianas in Alaska, by Agnes Herbert and a Shikári (John Lane). The lady writes:—

"Our little expedition to Alaska consisted at its onset of the cousin who shot over Somaliland with me, none the less a sportsman for all that she is a woman, and myself."

On the way thither they met, fortuitously or otherwise, a kinsman and his friend, and arranged matters:—

"We four would go together to Alaska, and yet not together.....Our camps should at times be one camp; at others, when it suited us, they should be distinct."

The kinsman's friend was elected commander-in-chief and Leader; and he, moreover, if we rightly understand, is the joint author of the present book—a sportsman of great repute.

As Miss Herbert's work, though freely mingled with chaff, has undoubted value for sportsmen, the battery selected is quoted: two small-bore magazine rifles, a .375, and a .256 Mannlicher; "our old 12-bores, a .35 Winchester, a .22 Winchester, and a .410-bore collector's gun." These were found sufficient for the game encountered, amongst which, bears, walrus, wild sheep, caribou, and the great Alaskan moose are mentioned.

The party chartered a schooner, the Lily, and sent her on to Kodiak, themselves following from Seattle by steamer. Their arrival, the Leader tells us, caused no small stir. The necessary arrangements having been made, and suitable garments having been procured, they set forth in search of bears, Ursus middendorffi, said to be the largest in the world, though there is little difference between them and Ursus dalli of the Alaskan peninsula. The ladies were successful; but correctly came to the conclusion that the beast, though colossal, was scarcely game.

Several chapters are contributed by the Leader, who has excellent descriptive powers, but, according to compact with his collaborator, is "excused from the recording of all sentimental episodes." His account of an expedition after walrus will be read with interest.

Miss Herbert describes the stalking of the wild sheep of Alaska, Ovis dalli; and graphically relates her descent of a cliff to recover a dead ram. Being the lightest of the party, she had to play the chief rôle. The rope available was too short, and another had to be got from camp after a weary wait in the cold.

"The rope came at last, and it was firmly knotted to our inadequate supply. Gummidge made a noose, and we adjusted it underneath my arms, gave the rope a turn round a convenient promontory, padding the parts where it rubbed; the two men and Cecily took hold of the line, taking up as firm positions as could be found, and with a tremor in my heart and a hope that it did not show outwardly, I crept to the edge of the crevasse, holding the rope in my hands. For a sickening second it seemed to me that I swung clear, the next I crept spider-wise against the face of the cliff, and all the while the rope paid out slowly and evenly. Not for nothing had I birds'-nested in the days of my youth on the great gaunt cliffs of Hall Caine's island."

The ram was reached, and brought to the top with undamaged horns.

In chap. xvii. the Leader gives a good description (though past and present seem somewhat mingled) of moose-hunting, the Alces gigas or Alaskan moose being as much finer an animal than A. americanus as that in turn is greater than the elk of Norway.

In short there is much in the volume to interest and amuse; there are many illustrations, mostly good; and the general appearance of the book leaves nothing to be desired.

Country Walks about Florence. By Edward Hutton. (Methuen & Co.)—People who believe that, when they have visited the Florentine churches and galleries, they must go as far afield as Prato to find fresh works of art worthy of their attention, should read this little book, and learn what jewels lie hidden in the villages within an easy ramble of Florence. If their enthusiasm for the Tuscan genius is a true sentiment, they will become painfully conscious of a world of unused opportunities, and know no peace till they have made good their neglect of the chapel of St. Catherine at Antella, the buildings at Campi, and the beautiful contents of Sant' Andrea in the little straw-plaiting town of Brozzi; till they have at least seen the Luca della Robbia at Peretola, and the Agnolo Gaddi at San Giorgio a Ruballa. On all these things Mr. Hutton writes well—with an occasional suggestion, indeed, of that too curious straining after variety of epithet in describing similar things which Schiller condemned as a weakness in the writer of prose, but, on the whole, with a simplicity often lacking in his more ambitious work. Some of his wayside musings have both charm and fine critical quality. We should have liked his book, for the writing of which no excuse was required, better without its self-conscious preface. The little volume is of the right size to slip easily into a knapsack or coat-pocket. As Mr. Hutton is careful in his topography, and has the good sense not to shrink from instructing weary pedestrians at what points they can take refuge in trams or road railways, it should be very useful as a guide.

The photographs of pictures are particularly good, and the thirty-two illustrations of scenes and buildings described in the text, reproduced from pencil drawings by Adelaide Marchi, add greatly to the book's attractiveness.

Venetia and Northern Italy, by Cecil Headlam (Dent & Co.), is the first volume of a new series of "Travel Books," which we are told is "to do for countries what the 'Mediaeval Town Series' has done for cities." Some of the members of that series contained good and sincere work, but so much cannot, we fear, be said for this. To begin with, the volume can hardly help being superficial, for it deals with a vast country which is just a geographical expression, the various dominions and cities of which have had nothing or very little in common. Mr. Headlam makes no claim to have written a book of literature, but thinks to show us "how the history of each town is illustrated by its art and architecture," and he hopes that his book may be "of use on the spot." In other words, he has set out to write a sort of historical guide-book.

All sorts of books have been written in English on Milan, and Venice, and Ferrara, and Ravenna, but on Rimini Mr. Headlam had a chance to break more or less new ground. Instead of taking advantage of this chance, he has merely given us a réchauffé of the inaccurate essay of J. A. Symonds. He tells us very little of the history of Rimini, but he selects for comment the two things in the story of the city most likely to interest the ordinary reader: the death of Paolo and Francesca and the life of Sigismondo Malatesta. Among other things he tells us that Paolo and Francesca were slain "in a house which was afterwards removed to make room for Sigismondo's castle." Hitherto no one has been able to decide where they were slain—whether in Rimini, or in Pesaro, or in S. Arcangelo. Nor is he more happy in dealing with Sigismondo. He tells us (1) that Sigismondo "murdered three wives in succession"; (2) that the church of S. Francesco was devoted to "the deification" of Sigismondo and his mistress Isotta; (3) that Alberti "dedicated a shrine Divæ Isottæ Sacrum"; (4) that there are certain chapels there in which "Sigismondo and Isotta are sanctified"; and lastly he suggests that the SI in Sigismondo's shield signifies Sigismondo-Isotta, talking of the "intertwined initials I and S." These five assertions repeat mistakes of J. A. Symonds. To begin with, Sigismondo could not have murdered three wives in succession, for he was married only thrice, and Isotta, his last wife, outlived him. If Mr. Headlam had consulted either Clemetini or Battaglini, he would have found that there is no evidence for any of these supposed murders beyond the assertions of Pio II., which one cannot admit. The tomb of Isotta bears the inscription "D'Isottæ sacrum," which means "Dominæ Isottæ sacrum." As to the intertwined initials I and S, they have nothing to do with Isotta. Sigismondo was christened Gismondo. It was the Emperor Sigismund who, passing through Rimini, knighted him, and gave him his name; and ever after, as we may suppose, though we know of no instance, at the moment, before 1445, Sigismondo, like his ancestors, placed the first two letters of his name in the second and third quarters of the family arms. S I, then, stands not for Sigismondo-Isotta, but for Sigismondo. More care and research are needed to make the volume satisfactory.

Mr. Gordon Home's twenty-five water-colours have been well reproduced, and, though far less happy than his drawings of Normandy, are better than most colour-prints of Italian cities and landscapes.

A Spanish Holiday. By Charles Marriott. (Methuen & Co.)—Chance rather than inclination took Mr. Marriott on a tour in Spain, but he made the most of his opportunities, and the result is an agreeable series of impressions. Like most writers on Spain, he cannot always resist the temptation to be humorous and to supply an imaginary demand for historical facts: the pranks of James are not amusing, and we seek elsewhere for information about the Cid and Edward I. at Burgos. This is not Mr. Marriott's calling: he is at his best on the road—describing a brush with a surly tramcar-conductor on the way to Portu-galete, an encounter with a delicate tramp at Amorebieta, a pelota match at Bilbao, a picturesque drive through the heart of the Basque country to Vitoria, and the streets of Madrid at dawn. These incidents and scenes are depicted with an unpretentious exactness which is very effective.

The Bridle Roads of Spain; or, Las Alforjas. By George J. Cayley. (Fisher Unwin.)—Lady Ritchie's pleasant sketch of Cayley's personality may easily lead readers to expect something more engaging than they will find in this reprint of travelling impressions, first published fifty-five years ago. The valetudinarian author visited Spain in the autumn of 1851, and from February to May, 1852, he rode about the country in company with a cousin, describing his experiences in the form of letters which make up the greater part of his book. As he met with no exciting adventures, he drew largely on his imagination, represented himself as having killed a rogue in Seville, and eked out a volume with similar inventions, to which he confessed good-humouredly enough later. These flights of fancy seem to have irritated some of his critics, but irritation is out of place. Cayley as a traveller in Spain is not to be taken seriously. He was barely eight months in the country, knew little of the language, and was therefore not in a position to understand the national characteristics. But he is well-meaning, kindly, and readable. "Bandelero" (p. 11) in the Introduction is probably an oversight; and some of the misprints in the text might have been corrected: "buenos tardes" (p. 72), "adelantes" (p. 75), "panno" (p. 76), "cigarillos" (p. 100), "bandarilleros" and "bandarillas" (p. 113), and so forth. A note on Muñoz (p. 297) and the Duque de R— (p. 298) would also have been acceptable.

Special interest—personal, geographical, and political—attaches to The Short Cut to India: the Record of a Journey along the Route of the Baghdad Railway, by Mr. David Fraser (Blackwood & Sons). Personal, because of the very unpleasant adventure (recollection of which is still fresh) which the author had in the desert between Haran and Ras el Ain, when he was severely wounded and robbed. "One corner of the palm of his left hand was pretty well smashed, and the forefinger severed. There was a big bullet-hole in the right forearm, and an exit-hole in the wrist just below the pulse, evidently a near shave of the main artery." The story is told, simply but graphically, in chap. xi.; and in the following chapters the appalling treatment the wounds received from Arab hakims, which resulted in blood-poisoning, and the pain of travelling over rough roads in a country cart to Urfa, where there is a German mission hospital, in which Mr. Fraser was kindly treated, are set forth. The geographical interest of the book is considerable, for less is known of those regions in Asia Minor or Turkey in Asia, east of Aleppo and forming the northern part of Mesopotamia, than of the more remote deserts of Chinese Turkistan; whilst the description of the country passed through bears witness alike to the power of observation possessed by the traveller and his capacity for recording its results.

As usual, the political and financial aspects of the undertaking known as the Baghdad Railway are by far the most interesting, and the reader may learn the ways of the Teuton with the simple Turk. They seem to be as effective as they are surprising; but the scheme, which involves international interests, appears to be at present at a deadlock.

The book is throughout pleasantly written, and there is evidence of experience, military and other, as was to be expected from the author of 'The Marches of Hindustan' and 'A Modern Campaign': it is amply illustrated from photographs by the author, and there is an excellent map; but there is no index.

Some African Highways. By Caroline Kirkland. (Duckworth & Co.)—Miss Kirkland visited Uganda with her mother in 1905, and spent some weeks at Entebbe with a married sister. On their return to Mombasa the ladies took the German steamer down the coast to Delagoa Bay, where they landed for a short stay with another relative at Johannesburg, and then returned, as they had come, viâ Beira, Mozambique, Dar es Salam, Zanzibar, and Tanga. The book is chiefly made up of contributions to The Chicago Tribune, but new matter has been added, and General Baden-Powell has contributed a Preface. There is nothing especially novel or striking in these pages, but they are pleasantly written, and will give the general reader, who has not devoted any special attention to the authoritative works on the subject, a fair idea of the countries dealt with. We must protest, however, against such assertions as that on p. 177 that there is in the natives of Africa "a certain profound racial hatred and antipathy" to Europeans as such. The remarks on Johannesburg life and society—coming, as they do, from an American—are well worth considering. Perhaps the most interesting passage in the book is chap. xvi., describing an eruption of Vesuvius.

Mr. Frank Roy Fraprie, an American writer, does not claim any originality for his Castles and Keeps of Scotland (Bell), though he is right in claiming to have furnished "a convenient collection of facts hitherto to be found only by much reading of books not easily accessible." There are naturally many omissions, for even in three trips the vigorous American cannot well cover all the ground that a more leisured historian would map out for himself. Several castles of notable interest (Drumlanrig for one) could be added to Mr. Fraprie's list; and in regard to some of those included, many outstanding events in their history are ignored. It is odd to read of Glamis Castle without coming upon a single reference to the "mystery." It is certainly startling to find certain castles, such as Dunnottar, on the southern side of the Dee, classed among those in the "Highlands." Surely Aberdeen is not in "the Highlands"! It would be unfair, however, to criticize a book of this kind in too much detail. It is avowedly a book for the tourist (chiefly the American tourist), and the best that can be said for it is that it is good and fairly trustworthy—as far as it goes. The illustrations reproduced from photographs are excellent; the same cannot be said for those in colour. The Index is remarkably complete, covering in all twenty-two pages.

The praise which we have always found to be due to Baddeley's "Thorough Guides" we are glad to be able to give to the new edition of his Scotland, Part I. (Nelson & Sons). This particular volume deals with Edinburgh, Glasgow, and Aberdeen, and with the Highlands as far north as Inverness, Gairloch, and Stornoway. It has been thoroughly revised by the Rev. A. E. Robertson of Rannoch, and is now as accurate as human fallibility can well make it. If we point out a few trifling slips, it is only because corrections are asked for by the publishers. The Aberdeen Post Office is not now in Market Street, but in the fine new building in Crown Street. "Last century," in reference to the Baird monument at Comrie (p. 81), should be eighteenth century. At p. 27 Fergusson the poet has his name wrongly spelt; and there is a bracketed reference to Byron on p. 104 which obviously needs correction. A Deeside village is at one place "Strahan," at another place "Strachan"; the former spelling represents more accurately the local pronunciation. We are inclined to question also the spelling of "Glentanner" (p. 107): the usual form is certainly "Glentanar." It seems curious to read of Walter Scott's creation as Abbotsford "House"; and as the restoration of the parish church of St. Andrews is expressly mentioned, we do not see why the more notable restoration of Dunkeld Cathedral should be ignored. Tomin-toul has not "several," but only two excellent hotels. In regard to the Innerpeffray Library (p. 81), was it not removed to Crieff some years ago? We may be wrong, but there was certainly a proposal to that effect. The bibliography of the Highlands (p. xix) is probably full enough for the tourist; but we doubt if the average person who is interested in Prince Charlie and his wanderings would not prefer Mr. Andrew Lang's book (unmentioned) to Mr. Blaikie's 'Itinerary.' The general accuracy and serviceableness of the book are unquestionable, and we have no hesitation in commending it as the best guide to the district which it covers.

South American Sketches. By W. H. Hudson. (Duckworth & Co.)—We are glad to welcome in more solid form a recast of the delightful little paper-backed book of South American stories by Mr. Hudson reviewed in these columns on May 17th, 1902, under the title of 'El Ombu.' As in the case of the original volume, the sketches are dedicated to Mr. R. B. Cunninghame Graham, who from his experiences of life among the horsemen of the Pampas, is said to be "alone" among European writers in having "rendered something of the vanishing colour of that remote life." Mr. Hudson is over-modest. There is finer stuff in his own writings of South America than we have found in any other work of the sort, though it may be less showy than some. His 'Green Mansions' was a wonderful study of wild life in South America; it was beautiful work rather than merely picturesque.

Mr. Harry de Windt has published many books in which his travels are recorded. In My Restless Life (Grant Richards) he gives us notes of his adventures at home and abroad, interspersed with anecdotes and reminiscences of various friends. The result is a bright and entertaining volume. Before he went to Cambridge and became an idle undergraduate our author had stayed in Sarawak, and his singularly varied life has been full of risks. His zeal for sport has introduced him to many amusing characters, as well as pleasant people of more distinction, such as Julius Beerholm. He has lectured a good deal, and tells how the astute Major Pond deliberately stole his MS. when he faced his first American audience.

An English Holiday with Car and Camera (Macmillan) is the latest of Mr. J. J. Hissey's books of travel in England, a pleasant, good-humoured record of a journey from Eastbourne to Nether Stowey, and thence through Bristol, Kidderminster, Abingdon, King's Lynn, Ipswich, St. Albans, and Dorking home. The route was more or less taken at random, and included many things worth seeing. It is somewhat surprising that a practised writer like Mr. Hissey should take so little trouble to find worthy information about the places he visits, and go on repeating casual conjectures, e.g., regarding "the Nunnery" at Dunster. There are two Sturminsters of interest near each other. His ideas of research are strange, as are some of his "discoveries." The book is not devoid of obvious "padding," including one of the oldest of old jokes from a "visitors' book." Mr. Hissey is too careless to please the real expert student of England, but we dare say his work is just what the ordinary public requires. The illustrations from photographs are good.

OUR LIBRARY TABLE.

IN connexion with the announcements of Mr. R. B. Cunninghame Graham's Faith (Duckworth & Co.) a good deal of publicity has been given to a quotation from an Athenæum review of much earlier work by the same author, but there is nothing to show that this quotation does not refer to the present volume. The passing of the years seems to exercise no influence upon the author's vivid impressionability. He cracks his whip and lashes out at civilization—"defiled by pestilential and beneficent progress"—with the same picturesque frenzy that he was wont to use a number of years ago; and if, in fact, any of his more or less quixotic ideals have staled at all, there is the more credit due to the masterly craftsmanship which gives them still such reckless, gallant, youthful, freshness for the public view. His writing shows the old carelessness of technical accuracy and strong charm of picturesqueness. It is literary and it is picturesque; though the philosophy it embodies is wrong-headed and illogical. If only the authors' sketches were informed by a more mellow spirit, they might rival Stevenson's in popularity. But their raillery always has bitterness in it; their picturesqueness holds too much carping and sneering. The author does not laugh at Society's inconsistencies. Rather, he stabs at them, and delivers all his indictments with a scowl. The present book contains eighteen descriptive sketches—stories is hardly the word—and a preface.

Buddhist Essays. By Paul Dahlke. Translated from the German by Bhikkhu Silācāra. (Macmillan & Co.)—This book, which is evidently, as we are told in the Preface, "the outcome, not only of the study of books, but also of personal intercourse with native scholars both in Ceylon and Burma," deals exclusively with the Hinayāna, often called Southern Buddhism, that form of the faith which is established in Ceylon, Burma, and Siam, and the canonical Scriptures of which have been preserved in the Pali language. It consists of a series of twenty essays, the first two of which deal with 'The Life of the Buddha' and 'The Leading Doctrines of Buddhism,' while the others are devoted to special topics of religious, philosophical, or historical interest. As each essay is complete in itself and independent of the rest, the plan of the volume involves a certain amount of reiteration and restatement, but the result is undoubtedly a great gain in clearness and precision. To use the apt simile of the author, the object is photographed from every possible point of view, and, if some overlapping is inevitable, an adequate comprehension of the whole is certainly thus secured.

Dr. Dahlke rightly insists that the whole creed of Buddhism is contained in the four "holy truths" preached by Buddha in his first sermon at Benares: (1) that all existence is transient, and therefore full of sorrow; (2) that the continuation of this existence through a perpetual series of birth and rebirth is due to the thirst for life; (3) that with the removal of this thirst the chain of causation is broken; and (4) that this removal is to be effected by right knowledge and right action. This earliest form of Buddhism is best understood as a reaction against Brahmanism only in so far as the latter involved a belief in the supernatural and the practice of asceticism and religious ceremonial. It was occupied with things as they are, or rather as they appear to be; and it had a purely practical end in view—release from the misery of existence. Metaphysical speculation no doubt played an important part in the subsequent history of the religion, and was the cause of numerous divisions in the Buddhist church; but it was alien to the spirit of the founder, who offered no solution to "the two riddles of the world—beginning and end," except in so far as these may be regarded relatively to the individual consciousness.

Dr. Dahlke's explanation of Buddhism, as thus conceived, is thoroughly well-informed; though whether the system itself is intellectually so satisfying as he contends may reasonably be questioned. The whole fabric of Buddhism rests on certain ideas which are specifically Indian, and not of universal acceptance—the belief in transmigration, and the doctrine of karma or retribution, which teaches that all existence is conditioned by the deeds performed in previous births, and that in like manner the deeds performed in the present will bear their fruits in future births. These ideas were common to the thought of India at the period when Buddhism arose in the sixth century B.C.; and it is therefore difficult to understand how Dr. Dahlke can maintain that Buddhism "stands as strenuously opposed to Brahmanism as it does, for example, to Christianity or to Islam, out of which two it might equally as well have sprung."—P. 329.

It is historically unthinkable that Buddhism should have sprung from Christianity or Mohammedanism. It was possible only because its roots were planted in the same soil as Brahmanism and Jainism.

The absence, or the comparative absence, of the supernatural element in Buddhism accounts, no doubt, in a great measure for its adaptability to varying circumstances, and consequently for its wide extension in the East. To the same result contributed also the tolerant spirit and the freedom from persecuting bias, which are in accordance with its definition of right action. Its "Middle Path" avoids all extremes, and is, in fact, the practical application of the sage's Μηδὲν ἄγαν.

Dr. Dahlke's 'Brief Survey of the Historical Development of Buddhism' (chap. xix.) includes an interesting account of the religion as it appears at the present day in the life of the people in Ceylon and Burma.

The English translation by Bhikkhu Silācāra is intelligent and readable. Occasionally it seems to reflect the style or phraseology of the original, and there are indications that the translator has learnt English as a foreign tongue. "View-point" (p. 52) we do not like, although its formation may be justified on the analogy of "standpoint." Forms like "amissing" and "awanting" (pp. 52, 132, &c.) are not supposed to be correct in modern English, nor is "contact" (pp. 43, &c.) properly used as a verb.

The Woman and the Car. By Dorothy Levitt. Edited with Introductory Articles by C. Byng-Hall. (John Lane.)—To-day the motor-car is a matter-of-course and serviceable convenience, an accepted addition to the comfort and pleasure of modern life. But motoring for women—for unaided and solitary woman—cannot as yet be said to have reached the smooth level of everyday practice. So there is justification for this little book by an expert lady motorist. Its tone all through strikes the male reader as belonging to about 1904, when motoring was still an adventurous business, and we took our seat at the wheel, not at all primarily because we wished to go to a certain place—it was as well not to think too much of reaching one's destination—but for the pleasure and romance of motoring. But this is a book for women readers, and it may be that many of these have still to reach the stage just mentioned, without a good many of the penalties; for nowadays manufacturers have come very near to the rudely expressed ideal embodied in the car they call "fool-proof." This is a practical little volume, yet not in the least degree technical. It might well be followed by an enlarged edition which should teach the lady aspirant a little more about different kinds of cars, and so forth. As Miss Levitt is described by her editor as being bashfully modest, she will probably find the "personal sketch" of herself rather painful reading. We doubt, further, if it will please the average reader.

SOME years ago Sir Harry Johnston (in 'The Uganda Protectorate') called attention to the peculiar and archaic character of the Bantu dialects spoken in the neighbourhood of Mount Elgon, some information as to which had been supplied to him by Mr. C. W. Hobley. The principal language of this district appears to be called Sokura, and is represented in Sir Harry Johnston's collection by vocabularies of two dialects: Gesu (or Gishu) and Masaba. Further work on the latter language was done by the Rev. W. A. Crabtree, whose translation of the Gospels was published by the British and Foreign Bible Society in 1904. Mr. Crabtree also made some grammatical notes which have been used by the Rev. J. B. Purvis, the author of A Manual of Lumasaba Grammar (S.P.C.K.). The special feature in Masaba which throws light on a hitherto obscure point in Bantu linguistics—the concords in gu, gi (e.g., in Luganda), with the first and second classes—is adverted to by Mr. Purvis on pp. 6-7, and had previously been discussed by Sir H. H. Johnston in the work above referred to. (We may add that Yao has preserved the gu- concord, in the form ju, in the mu-, or first class singular, and the gi- in the mi-, or second class plural.) The double system of possessive pronouns (the prefix agreeing with the thing possessed, the suffix with the possessor) is very fully worked out on p. 34. The class distinction in the second part of this pronoun has been lost sight of in some languages, but is kept up in Zulu, Luganda, Lunyoro, and other languages; perhaps also in some where it has not been noticed or recorded. The traditions mentioned by Mr. Purvis (p. 5) are interesting, especially in their reference to Lukidi and Kintu, the legendary heroes of Bunyoro and Buganda respectively.—Bikulomba ne tsinyimbo is the abbreviated title of a small book of prayers and hymns in this language.

THE S.P.C.K. sends several other volumes. The Rev. J. E. Beverley's Gogo Hymn-Book, noticed in these columns some years ago, has been issued in a revised and enlarged form. Ugogo is an inland district of German East Africa, about 200 miles west of Zanzibar. We have also received a Luganda version of St. Mark's Gospel with the notes of the "Cambridge Bible for Schools" (translated by the Rev. H. Clayton), and a Yalunka Reading-Book (Yalunka Kharan Fanyi Kitabuna), translated and compiled by H. Bowers, S. E. Marsh, and M. D. Showers, of the Church Missionary Society, Sierra Leone. Yalunka is a dialect of the important and widely-spread Mande or "Mandingo" language. The same Society has published Portions of the Prayer Book in two dialects of the Solomon Islands, Saa and Ulawa; and a similar book in Lengua, "spoken by a tribe of Indians in the Paraguayan Chaco." If this is really the name of the language, and not a current Spanish designation—Lengua (de los Indios), or the like—the coincidence is curious.

Crockford's Clerical Directory for 1909 (Horace Cox) is just out, and wins, as usual, our admiration by its completeness and accuracy. The editor in the Preface has to call attention to the delinquencies of some of the clergy who make unfounded claims to degrees or certificates. He also includes notes on Easter offerings and income tax, and the rating of churchyards—two subjects of considerable importance to the clergy.

APPROPRIATING TITLES.

1, Adelphi Terrace, W.C., March 24, 1909.

YOUR correspondence reminds me of two examples coming under my observation. In a recent issue I notice a review of a book entitled 'The End of the Middle Age,' by a lady; it is not many years since I published a book, also by a lady (Madame Duclaux), under practically the same title, 'The End of the Middle Ages.'

Then, again, a pamphlet has just been issued entitled 'The Hungry Forties.' Four years ago I published a book, when this now famous phrase was used for the first time as a title.

I am glad to note that a Government Copyright Commission has been appointed, and at least one publisher has been placed on that Commission. May I commend the subject of the duplication of titles as one worthy of consideration?

T. FISHER UNWIN.

Cuddesdon College, Wheatley, Oxon, March 29, 1909.

I AM sorry that Canon Vaughan should feel aggrieved at my choosing for a book the same title ('Life after Death') as one already borne by a work of his. Had he chosen some catch-title, and had I known of his book (which I did not) and chosen the title in order to profit by his success, he might have justly objected. But under the circumstances I do not think his objection is justified. Considering the multitude of books that have been written upon the subject, it would be difficult to select any title which had not been used before. I chose 'Life after Death' as being the most general title I could think of to describe the contents of the book. The name is so obviously one likely to be chosen that I have no doubt it has been given to many books: one at least is known to me, viz., Bishop Dahler's 'Life after Death,' which appeared in its English translation as far back as 1896. No one, I imagine, would quarrel with an author for calling his book, e.g., 'Inorganic Chemistry' or 'British Birds,' even if several books of the same title already existed. It is only when a title is peculiar that an author could be said to have a sort of moral "copyright" to it (there is no legal copyright in question). I do not think, then, that Canon Vaughan has sufficient ground to describe this accidental appropriation as "unfair" to himself. And surely the risk of annoyance to purchasers to which he alludes is very remote. Books are distinguished more by their authors than by their titles (particularly in a case like this, where the title is quite vague and non-characteristic), and a purchaser who does not know the name of the author cannot complain if he gets the wrong book.

S. C. GAYFORD.

'DORANDO: A SPANISH TALE,' BY JAMES BOSWELL.

3, Albany Road, Southport.

I HAVE read with much interest the letter of Mr. J. T. T. Brown on Boswell's anonymous novelette based on the Douglas Cause. The book is not quite so scarce as your correspondent supposes. Some years ago The Athenæum noted the discovery of a copy by that veteran and most skilful book-hunter Mr. Bertram Dobell. A copy was included in the Maidment Sale.

There is a copy of the first edition in the British Museum; there is also a copy of the third edition in the Manchester Reference-Library. As the Glasgow University copy, of which Mr. Brown sends the welcome particulars, is of the second edition, we have a record that public institutions are in possession of a copy of each of the editions that came out in the year 1767.

I may perhaps add that in an article which appeared in The Scottish Review for October, 1908, I gave an analysis of the little story in which Boswell forecasted the result of the Cause. My interest in 'Dorando' is not of yesterday. I first read it more than thirty years ago, and my type-written copy has memoranda of all the variations—not at all important—between the first and the third issues.

WILLIAM E. A. AXON.

MR. J. T. T. BROWN is mistaken in supposing that no copy of this work has hitherto been discovered. In The Athenæum for October 29th, 1898, is an account of one found by Mr. Bertram Dobell, described as being in quarto.

I have a cutting from a catalogue in which is a copy in 12mo offered at 18s. 6d. This was "Maidment's copy, sold at his sale for 3l. 15s." It was afterwards sold at Sotheby's on April 26th, 1899, for 4l. 5s. A similar copy is in the British Museum, and another is in my own possession.

C. D.

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

ENGLISH.

Theology.

- Beer (A.), Foreign Missions, 2/6 net.
- Butler (Samuel), God the Known and God the Unknown, 1/6 net. First appeared in The Examiner of 1879.
- Church Pulpit Commentary: Acts XI. to Romans, Corinthians to Ephesians, 7/6 each.
- Conybeare (F. C.), Myth, Magic, and Morals, 4/6 net. A study of Christian origins. Issued for the Rationalist Press Association.
- Driver (Rev. S. R.), Modern Research as illustrating the Bible, 3/ net. The Schweich Lectures for 1908.
- Ferreres (J. B.), The Decree on Daily Communion, 2/6 net.
- Hayes (Rev. J. W.), Tennyson and Scientific Theology, 2/ net.
- Oesterley (Rev. W. O. E.), Our Bible Text, 1/6 net. Treats of some recently discovered Biblical documents, with 3 plates.
- Palmer (W. S.), Studies in the Teaching of Religion, 1/ net.
- Records of the Commissions of the General Assemblies of the Church of Scotland holden in Edinburgh in 1650, in St. Andrews and Dundee in 1651, and in Edinburgh in 1652. Edited from the original manuscript by James Christie, with an introduction by Lord Guthrie.
- Report of the Nineteenth Eucharistic Congress, held at Westminster from 9th to 13th September, 1908, 5/ net. Includes papers in French and English.
- Thomas (J. Evans), The Old Testament in the Light of the Religion of Babylonia and Assyria, 3/6 net.
- True Christian Religion. Abridged from the Latin work of Emanuel Swedenborg, originally published in 1771.
- Wilkinson (G. H.), One by One, 2/6 net. Counsels in retreat for those in priestly or episcopal orders.

Law.

- Copyright Law of the United States of America, in force July, 1909.
- Evans (L. W.) and Cooper (F. S.), Notes on the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, with Forms, 12/ net.
- Law List, 1909, 10/6 net.

Fine Art and Archaeology.

- Bayley (Harold), A New Light on the Renaissance, displayed in Contemporary Emblems, 12/6 net.
- Calvert (Albert F.), Royal Palaces of Spain, 3/6 net. An historical and descriptive account of the seven principal palaces of the Spanish kings. Illustrated. In the Spanish Series.
- Classified Catalogue of the Works on Architecture and the Allied Arts in the Principal Libraries of Manchester and Salford, with Alphabetical Author List and Subject Index. Edited for the Joint Architectural Committee of Manchester by Henry Guppy and Guthrie Vine.
- Journal of the Royal Institute of British Architects, Vol. XVI, Third Series, 1/
- Parbury (Florence), The Emerald set with Pearls: being Reminiscences of the Beautiful Land of Kashmir, 21/ net. Illustrated from water-colour drawings.
- Selincourt (Basil de), William Blake, 7/6 net. With numerous illustrations after Blake's drawings.
- 'Studio' Year-Book of Decorative Art, 1909, 5/ net.
- Whithard (P.), Illuminating and Missal Painting, 4/ net.

Poetry and the Drama.

- Arthur (F.), Rosemary, 4/ net. A book of short poems.
- Campion (T.), Complete English Works, 2/6 net. Edited by A. H. Bullen. Pocket Edition.

Early Christian Hymns, 6/ net. Translations of the verses of the most notable Latin writers of the Early and Middle Ages, by Daniel Joseph Donahoe.
Fletcher (Giles and Phineas), Poetical Works, Vol. II., 4/6 net. Edited by F. S. Boas.
Hollins (D.), Poems, 2/6 net.
Lute of Jade, 2/ net. Selections from the classical poets of China, rendered with an introduction by L. Cranmer-Blyng. In the Wisdom of the East Series.
Tabor (R. Montagu), Odds and Ends, 5/. Miscellaneous verses.
Vie de Saint Patrice. Mystère Breton, en trois actes. Texte et traduction par J. Dunn, 5/ net.

Music.

Bath (H.), The Wedding of Shon Maclean, 2/6 net. A Scottish rhapsody for chorus, soli (soprano and baritone), and orchestra, poem by Robert Buchanan. In Chappell's Choral Library.
Gilman (L.), Edward Macdowell, a Study, 5/ net.
